C 070 N864.1 V.150

The North-China Herald

AND

SUPREME COURT & CONSULAR GAZETTE

A COMPLETE RECORD OF POLITICAL, FINANCIAL AND GENERAL NEWS IN CHINA

AND OF LAW CASES

IN THE

COURT OF CONSULS	U. S. COURT FOR CHINA
H.B.M. SUPREME COURT	THE CONSULAR COURTS
H.B.M. POLICE COURT	MIXED COURT, ETC.

Vol 150

Old Series: Vol. CLXVI. New Series: Vol. CL. Nos. 2943-2955

JANUARY 1 TO MARCH 31, 1924

SHANGHAI

Printed and Published at the Office of the NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS & HERALD, LTD.

1924

C

CONTENTS OF VOL. CLXVI

OF

"THE NORTH-CHINA HERALD AND SUPREME COURT AND CONSULAR GAZETTE."

VOL. CL NEW SERIES. JANUARY-MARCH 1924.

LEADING ARTICLES

A. D. C. and its Critics, The ... 3
Aerial Defence, Britain's ... 276
Afterward, The Birthday and ... 276
Allied War Debts 159
American Association of China 160
Anglo-French Entente, The ... 355
Apathy of the Electorate ... 355
Association, British Women's 435
Bank Meeting. The H. & S. ... 315
Bank, The C. P. O. Savings ... 397
Birthday and Afterward, The 276
Bonds of 1913 Loan, Russian ... 235
Brigandage and the Customs ... 39
Britain's Aerial Defence ... 276
British Chambers' Conference 235
British Ships and their Crews 396
British Women's Association ... 435
Business, Other People's ... 39
By-election, The Westminster 395
Cabinet, The First Labour ... 120
Caliph, The Deposition of the 356
Care of Things, On Taking ... 476
Cargo, The Pilferage of ... 236
Canton, The Controversy at ... 3
Chang Tso-lin and Chihli ... 436
Chamber of Commerce, Shanghai 395, 435
Chambers' Conference, British 235
Charity and Work 355
China and Its Constitution ... 119
China in 1923 79
China Tea 436
China, Suttee in 436
China's Supreme Court ... 475
China's Treaties 31
Chinese Trade Mark Law, The 316
Chinese, The Education of ... 475
Chihli, Chang Tso-lin and ... 436
Churchill, The Libel on Mr. ... 119
Collapse of the Franc, The ... 276
Commerce, Shanghai General Chamber of 395, 435
Conference, British Chambers' 235
Congestion in the Harbour ... 476
Conservancy in Kuangtung, River 355
Constitution, China and Its ... 119
Controversy at Canton. The ... 3
Cotton Surtax, Proposed 40, 159
Court, China's Supreme ... 475
C. P. O. Savings Bank, The ... 397
Crews, British Ships and their 396
Critics, The A.D.C. and its ... 3
Customs, Brigandage and the ... 39
Cycle, The New 39
Cycle of the Rate, The 199
Debts, Allied War 159
Defence, Britain's Aerial ... 276
Democracy, Experiments in ... 316
Deposition of the Caliph, The 356
Disbandment of Chinese Soldiers 40
Dog With The Bad Name, The 119
Dominions and Emigration, The 39
Education of Chinese, The ... 475
Electorate, Apathy of the ... 355
Elections, French Municipal ... 40
Emigration, The Dominions and 39
Entente, The Anglo-French ... 355
Experiments in Democracy ... 316
First Offenders 4
Fiume and Its Consequences ... 160
Franc, The Position of the ... 120
Franc, The Collapse of the ... 276
French Municipal Elections ... 40
German Politics To-day ... 236
Harbour, Congestion in the ... 476
Holiday Moods 3
Homeward Bound 435
Hongkong & Shanghai Bank Meeting 315
Identiacal Interests 315
Identical Interests 315
Japanese Wedding, The ... 121
Kuangtung, River Conservancy in 355
Labour Cabinet, The First ... 120
Labour in Office 81
Libel on Mr. Churchill, The ... 119
Loan, Russian Bonds of 1913 ... 235
Macleay's Reminder, Sir R. ... 275
Medical Association of China, National 199
Meeting, The Ratepayers' ... 476
Milk Supply, Shangghai's ... 160
Moods, Holiday 3
Moral Welfare in Shanghai ... 356
Motor-car Pilferage 275
Name, The Dog With the Bad 119
New Cycle, The 39
New Year, The World Looking to the 4
"North-China Daily News" Opening 237
Offenders, First 7
Officers and Pirates, Ships' ... 396
Other People's Business 39
Patrick's Day, St. 435
Physicians, Shanghai's Social Evil and the 235
Pilferage of Cargo, The ... 236
Pilferage, Motor-car 275
Pirates, Ships' Officers and ... 396
Postal Matters 357
Punishment, The Science of ... 159
Ratepayers' Meeting, The ... 476
Rat, The Cycle of the 199
Recognition of Russia, The ... 199
Reminder, Sir R. Macleay's ... 275
River Conservancy in Kuangtung 355
Russia, The Recognition of ... 199
Russian Bonds of 1913 Loan ... 235
Russian Deadlock, The Sino- ... 475
Russians Children and Others... 4
Savings Bank, The C. P. O. ... 397
Science of Punishment, The ... 159
Shanghai's Social Evil and the Physicians 235
Ships and their Crews, British 396
Ships' Officers and Pirates ... 396
Signs of the Times, Some ... 315
Sino-Russian Deadlock 475
Soldiers, Disbandment of Chinese 40
Spring War, The 200
St. Patrick's Day 435
Suttee in China 436
Supreme Court, China's ... 475
Surtax, Proposed Cotton 40, 159
Taking Care of Things, On ... 476
Tea, China 436
Telephones, Our 476
Those Who Went West ... 236
Times, Some Signs of the ... 315
Toc H in Shanghai? Why Not 395
Trade Mark Law, The Chinese 316
Trademark Danger, The ... 396
Treaties, China's 81
Unemployed, Why the World's 275
War Debts, Allied 159
War, The Spring 200
Wedding, The Japanese 121
Welfare in Shanghai, Moral ... 356
West, Those Who Went ... 236
Westminster By-election, The ... 395
World Looking to the New Year, The 4
World's Unemployed, Why the 275
Work, Charity and 355
Women's Association, British 435
Yangtze, The State of the ... 121

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Aerial Ambitions 477
Aeroplane, Dirigible v. 5
Air Power, Auxiliary 437
Air Services in China 237
Anglo-Persian Oil 200
Arctic Icefields, The 121
Art of Duelling, The 477
Awakening, China 317
Balance of Power, The 82
Base Scheme, The Singapore ... 397
Belgian Father's Death, A ... 277
Bessell Outrage, The 437
Bok Peace Prize 41
Britannia's Trident 357
British Chambers, The 237
Bullet Proof 5
Bund, Our Beautified 41
Bureau of Foreign Affairs ... 437
Caliph and China, The 397
Canton Compromise, The ... 41
Canton, Opium in 121
Cargo, The Pilferage of ... 277
Chain, The Good Luck 82
Chambers, The British 237
Children from the East ... 477
China Awakening 317
China, The Caliph and 397
Choutsun, The Fire at 437
Cigarette Tax, The 161
Civil Engineers, Chartered ... 200
Conservancy Success, A ... 41
Conservancy, Yangtze 357
Correspondent, Our Labour ... 82
Cotton Surtax, The 437
Ctse of Pirmasens, The 277
Custom House, The 397
Daily Round Indeed, A 437
Death, A Belgian Father's ... 277
Depot, The Dynamite 357
Dirigible v. Aeroplane 5
Discovering Shanghai 41
Dixmude, The Lost 41
Duelling, The Art of 477
Duty, The Tea 317
Dynamite Depot, The 357
Earthquake, The 82
East and West 41
East, Children from the ... 477
Economy Flourishes, Where ... 477
Egypt, Sovietism in 317
Elections, French 5
Elevators, Grain 237
Engineers, Chartered Civil ... 200
Extraordinary Meeting, The ... 200
Famine Fighting 121
Father's Death, A Belgian ... 277
Finger Prints 357
Fire at Choutsun, The ... 437
Food, Trademarks and 357
Foreign Affairs, Bureau of ... 437
French Elections 5
French Taxation 317
Funerals, Military 237
Genius and Longevity 41
Grain Elevators 237
Greek Dynasty, The 161
Gun, The Lewis 237
Harbin Rumours 477
Hongkong's Share Boom ... 82
Icefields, The Arctic 121
Indian Patriots 121
India's Opposite Phases ... 5
Japan's Labour Party 277
Keeping a War Going 357
Kreisler in China 357
Labour Corresyondent, Our ... 82
Labour in Office 397
Labour Party, Japan's ... 277
Lauder, Sir Harry 237
Levy, Protection or 161
Lewis Gun, The 237
Little's Reply, Mr. 161
Longevity, Genius and ... 41
Luck Chain, The Good 82
Ludendorff, A Job for a ... 200
Ludendorff's New Rôle ... 357
Macdonald, Mussolini and ... 161
Mackay Treaty, The 397
Meeting, The Extraordinary ... 200
Military Funerals 237
Money, True and False 161
Monopoly, Trademarks and ... 477
Museum, A Shanghai 437
Mussolini and Macdonald ... 161
Neutrality, Shanghai's 277
Oblivion, From Out of 357
Observaance, Treaty 477
Oil, Anglo-Persian 200
Opium in Canton 121
Panama's Vulnerability 161
Peace Prize, Bok 41
Pellé, The Late Gen. 437
People's Reputations 82
Philippines To-day, The ... 161
Pirates, South China 5
Piracy, The Latest 121
Pilferage of Cargo, The ... 277
Pirmasens, The Case of ... 277
Pro Patria 277
Protection or Levy 161
Power, The Balance of ... 82
Rebel Smasher, The 237
Recognition, Russian 200
Reputations, People's 82
Respect of Treaties 277
Revenue, Shanghai's 5
Round Indeed, A Daily 437
Rumours, Harbin... 5
Russian Recognition 200
Russian Ships at Woosung, The 82
Russia's Politics 5
Soochow Creek, The 5
Sovietism in Egypt 317
Singapore Base, The 397
Singapore Base, The 237
Shanghai, Discovering 41
Shanghai Museum, A 437
Shanghai, Swaraj in 477
Shanghai's Neutrality 277
Shanghai's Revenue 5
Share Boom, Hongkong's ... 82
Shell-shock Patient, The ... 161
Silver Interests U. S. 41
Snag, A 82
Stay-in Strike, The 277
Sterling, The Drop in 82
Strike, The Stay-in 277
Superstition, The Three-match 437
Surtax, The Cotton 437
Swaraj in Shanghai 477
Tax, The Cigarette 161
Taxation, French 317
Tea Duty, The 317
Terminological Changes ... 161
Tichbourne, A New 200
Trademarks and Food 357
Trademarks and Monopoly ... 477
Traffic, Tuchuns and 317
Treaties, Respect of 277
Treaty Observance 477
Treaty, The Mackay 397
Trident, Britannia's 357
Tuchuns and Traffic 317
U. S. Silver Interests 41
War Going, Keeping a 357
West, East and 41
Widler Still a Prisoner, Mr. ... 317
Yangtze Conservancy 357

CHINESE POLITICS

Administrative Area in Kiaochou 394, 434
Aglen, Wild Story about Sir F. 118
Armaments, Naval 314
America and the Canton Crux 1
Arms, The Italian 394
Bannermen, Peking's Unpaid and 37
Bonds, China's Treasury ... 274
Boxer Indemnity, Britain and the 354
Britain and the Boxer Indemnity 354
Cabinet Completed, The ... 117
Cabinet in Session, Peking's 234
Canton, Central Government and 213
Canton Crux, America and the 1
Canton Customs, Dr. Sun and the 1, 37, 118
Canton, Northern Campaign Against 394, 434
Canton's War Chest and Civic Bill 314
Canton, The Fighting at 2, 233
Chang Tso-lin, Peking's Overtures to 233
Chihli Troops, Expenses for ... 274
China and the Soviet ... 158, 234, 274, 353, 393, 433, 473
China, Germany and ... 197, 234, 273
China's Treasury Bonds ... 274
Cigarette Tax, The 313
Consolidated Loan Service ... 353
Convicts, Chinese... 314
Customs Conference, A ... 174, 394
Customs Returns, Chinese ... 2
Customs Surtax, The ...274, 353, 394, 434, 474
Customs Surplus, Domestic Loans and 1, 37
Domestic Loans and Customs Surplus 1, 37
East China, Peace Secure in ... 157
Extraterritoriality and Surtax 353
Feng and the Legation Police, Gen. 273
Feng's New Post, Gen. ... 314
Finance Commission, Peking's 313
Financial Difficulties, Peking's 158, 198
Finance Ministry, Peking's Fight for 117
Franc Controversy, The Gold 2, 78, 234, 274
France and Russo-Chinese Negotiations 474
Fukien, Kiangsi and 273
Fukien, The Spoils of 354
Fukien, Turn-over in 394
Germany and China 197, 234, 273
Gold Franc Controversy, The 2, 78, 234, 274
Government, Kuomintang Form of 273
Indemnity Payments, China's 2, 78, 234, 354
Industry and Unemployment, Chinese 234
Italian Arms, The 394
Japanese Minister and President 474
Kiangsi and Fukien 273
Kiaochou, Administrative Area in 394, 434
Kuangtung, A New Compaign in 233
Kueichow, Rival Generals of 394
Kuomintang Scheme of Government 273
League of Nations, China and the 314
Legation Police, Gen. Feng and the 273
Loan Service, Consolidated ... 353
Loans and Customs Surplus, Domestic 1, 37
Loans, China's Internal ... 198
Minister and President, Japanese 474
Ministry, Peking's Fight for Finance 117
Mohammedans and Parliament, Chinese 394
M. P.'s The Unpaid 78
Naval Armaments 314
Navy, The Friction in the Chinese ... 313, 354, 394, 474
Navy, Wu Pei-fu and Tsingtao 314
Northern Campaign Against Canton 394, 434
Peace Secure in East China ... 157
Peking Day by Day ... 158, 197
Peking, The Secret Hand in ... 78
Peking's Financial Difficulties 158, 198
Peking's Great Unpaid ... 2, 37, 78, 197, 394
Peking's Search for a Vice-President 234
Peking's Search for a Premier 2
Police, Gen. Feng and the Legation 273
Premier, Mr. Sun Pao-chi as 77, 117, 158
Premier's "Bad Press," The New 118
Premier, Peking's Search for a 2
Premier to Visit South China 158
President, Japanese Minister and 474
President Tsao's Health ... 354
Provincial Wars of China ... 233
Railway, Chinese Eastern ... 234
Railway Protection 234
Recruiting Troops in Shanghai 394
Revenue, Decrease in Salt ... 158
Russo-Chinese Negotiations, The 158, 234, 274, 353, 393, 433, 473
Salt Revenue, Decrease in ... 158
Secret Hand in Peking, The 78
Sino-German Agreement, A 197, 234, 273
Shanghai, Recruiting Troops in 394
Soviet, China and the ... 158, 234, 274, 353, 393, 433, 473
Sun and the Canton Customs, Dr. 1, 37, 118
Sun Pao-chi as Premier, Mr. 77, 117, 158
Surtax, Extraterritoriality and 353
Surtax, The Customs ... 274, 353, 394, 434, 474
Szechuan, The Northern Army in 434
Szechuan, The War in 394
Tax, The Cigarette 313
Trademark Law, The New Chinese ... 157, 197, 313, 354, 393
Treasury Bonds, China's ... 274
Tsao Jui Exiled from Peking ... 117
Tsao Jui's Post in Chihli ... 354
Tsao Kun's Health, President 354
Tsingtao Navy, Wu Pei-fu and 314
Tuan, Peking's Offer to Marshal 274
Vice-Presidency, The Fight for the 313
War, Sinews of a Local ... 233
War, The Rumours of 274
Wars of China, Provincial ... 233
Weihaiwei, The Rendition of ... 273
Wu Pei-fu and Tsingtao Navy 314
Wu Pei-fu's Demand for Funds 158, 197
Wu's Request for Relief of Command, Marshal 434

OUTPORT

Amoy 205, 401
Anking 167, 202, 318
Baguio 400
Berne 243
Canton ... 2, 37, 42, 43, 45, 83, 84, 89, 90, 127, 162, 165, 233, 240, 273, 278, 314, 324, 361, 400
Changsha 163, 321, 399
Changchow 128, 359
Chefoo ... 86, 126, 240, 362
Chêngtu ... 10, 84, 85, 124, 280, 320, 321, 322, 366, 399, 481
Chinkiang 404
Chikungshan 167
Chita ... 126, 242, 245, 361
Chungking ... 122, 164, 201, 323
Chowkiakow 480, 483
Fokow 123
Fakumen 86, 441
Fowchow 6
Hangchow ... 6, 8, 87, 89, 123, 164, 165, 166, 205, 284, 324, 398, 441, 482
Hankow ... 7, 84, 202, 241, 362
Haichow ... 88, 165, 203, 320
Harbin ... 84, 85, 86, 87, 90, 126, 202, 206, 278, 280, 281, 282, 283, 284, 319, 320, 354, 359, 361, 364, 319, 320, 354, 359, 361, 364, 365, 403, 445, 478, 461
Hinghua 238
Hongkong ... 6, 9, 10, 44, 47, 87, 122, 125, 162, 163, 204, 240, 278, 284, 319, 320, 361, 365, 401, 403, 480, 482
Hochow 242, 399
Huaiking 7, 358
Ichang ... 43, 44, 83, 86, 163, 205, 242, 359, 440, 483
Junghsien 280
Kaifeng ... 318, 358, 398, 401, 405, 444
Kanchow 45, 323
Kashing 202, 363
Kiangchow ... 87, 165, 279, ... 439
Kiating 439
Kienning 2, 279, 479
Kobe 77, 89
Kueichow 323
Kueihuiting 122
Kueiteh 480
361, 403, 480
Kueiyang 122
Lanchi 10
Lanchow 162, 443
Liuchow 398
London ... 1, 45, 49, 84, 89, 127, 204, 246, 273, 282, 314, 354, 459, 403, 438, 439, 473, 474, 479, 482
Luchow 163, 443
Lungchow 205
Manila ... 8, 9, 44, 46, 47, 49, 86, 88, 123, 128, 163, 164, 167, 206, 243, 246, 278, 399, 400, 401, 402, 403, 441, 442, 443, 480
Mienchow 321, 360
Mukden 204, 238, 398
Nanking ... 88, 201, 202, 206, 240, 241, 279, 361, 396
New York ... 128, 240, 246, 282, 403
Ningpo ... 8, 10, 44, 124, 245, 363
Osaka ... 10, 77, 89, 246
Pakhoi 438
Paris 474
Peking ... 6, 7, 37, 42, 43, 44, 45, 47, 78, 83, 84, 85, 86, 89, 90, 117, 118, 124, 127, 157, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 197, 198, 201, 202, 203, 206, 233, 239, 240, 241, 242, 243, 274, 240, 241, 242, 243, 273, 274, 278, 279, 280, 281, 282, 284, 313, 314, 318, 319, 320, 322, 324, 353, 554, 359, 360, 362, 363, 366, 393, 394, 400, 401, 436, 439, 441, 442, 443, 473, 474, 478, 479, 480, 482, 483
Pochow 42
Riga 393, 402
Sasebo 445
Sapporo 47
Shaohsing 43
Shaohsing 279, 360, 480
Sianfu 44, 365
Siangtan 238, 400
Sihuahsien 122
Socchow ... 128, 283, 321, 482, 483
Suchien ... 90, 128, 328, 445
Suiyuen 7
Tachienlu ... 8, 83, 125, 167, 283, 284
Taiku 123, 358
Taych 362
Tenghsien 205
Tientsin ... 201, 239, 318, 360, 362, 363, 439, 440, 482, 485
Tokio ... 9, 46, 47, 49, 87, 88, 89, 125, 126, 127, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, 169, 202, 204, 239, 241, 243, 245, 246, 274, 278, 279, 280, 282, 283, 284, 321, 323, 324, 359, 360, 363, 364, 365, 366, 403, 404, 405, 439, 442, 443, 444, 445, 479, 483, 485
Titao 239
Tsangchow 479
Tsinanfu ... 8, 122, 166, 283, 324, 399
Tsingkiangpu 6, 49

NATIONAL AGRICULTURAL LIBRARY

Shantung Railway Disaster ... 122
Shanghai, The Neutrality of ... 90
Shansi, High-souled Young ... 87
Shansi's Governor and Education 358
Share Boom in Hongkong, The 49
Shansi, Cattle Plague in ... 480
Shensi, Outbreak of War in East 398
Shensi Brigands Active... ... 403
Shensi Magistrate Taken to Task 365
Shensi's Masked Braves ... 44
Shipping Casualties, Holiday ... 240
Ships, Opium on Pacific ... 44
Siberian Intervention Expedition, Echo of 361
Siberia, New Silver Coinage in 166, 242
Siberia's Timber Markets ... 243
Silk Industry, Japan's Raw ... 240
Silver Coinage in Siberia. New 166, 242
Singapore Base, Japan and the 282
Slave Girls' Miseries, Chinese... 91
Sleeping Sickness in Harbin ... 280
Smuggled Morphia, The Trade in 6
Socialists' Burial Dishonoured ... 9
Soonen, Murder of Rev. Achille 7, 43
Soldiers and Labourers Too ... 165
Soldiers' Revenge 318
Soochow University 483
Soochow's Electricity Enterprise 482
Soochow's First Missionary ... 283
South, The Situation in the... 438
Southern University After the Fire 201
Soviet and the Refugees, ... 359
Soviet, China and the 83
Soviet Envoy to Mongolia, New 402
Soviet, Japan and the ... 279, 320, 400, 442
Strike, Ricsha Coolies' Lightning 321
Strauss Released by Bandits, Mr. F. 84
Suicide, Sequel to Daughter-in-law's 480
Sun Pao-chi and the Senate ... 158
Sun Pao-chi as Premier, Mr. ... 77
Sun to Mr. Ramsay MacDonald, Dr. 162
Sungari Closed to Russian Ships 281
Sun's Attack on the Customs, Dr. 118
Sun's Improved Position, Dr. ... 90
Sun's Northern Expedition, Dr. 42
Surtax, Chinese Customs 353, 394, 474
Surtax, Extraterritoriality and... 353
Swedish School on Chikungshan 167
Szechuan, Between Two Fires in 163
Szechuan, Northern Troops in... 6
Szechuan, Murdered Foreigners of 85
Szechuan, Poppy Growing in ... 280
Szechuan, River Journey through 232, 320, 360
Szechuan, The Civil War in 6, 85, 124, 163, 203, 280, 320, 324, 358, 366, 394, 399, 441, 443, 481
Szechuan, The Northern Cause in 163, 203
Tang Chi-yao Still in Yunnan... 127
Tariff Revision, Chinese... ... 454
Tax, The Tobacco ... 90, 401
Taxation, Canton's Iniquitous... 45
Taxes in Kuangtung, Levy of 127
Tayeh, The New 362
Thompson Captured by Bandits, Dr. 166, 205, 239
Thompson's Journey on the Tibetan Border, Dr. 244
Tibet, Moslem Kingdom in ... 162
Tibet, Traders in... 167
Tibetan Border, Fighting on the 283
Tibetan Raiders, Batang Captured by 10, 43
Tibetans, Batang Besieged by... 83
Tientsin, Another Modern Bank Building in 439
Tientsin, Building Boom in ... 485
Tientsin Chamber of Commerce 362
Tientsin, New H. & S. Bank in 363, 440
Tientsin Sensation, A 239
Tobacco Tax, The ... 90, 401
Tokio Letter 444
Tokio Police, More Weapons for 88
Tokio's Tram Problem, ... 202
Tongshan, Mine Disaster at ... 482
Trademark Law, The New Chinese 157, 197, 313
Trade Unionism in Japan ... 485
Trade with China, Japanese ... 49
Treasury Bonds, China's ... 274
Tsao Jui Exiled from Peking... 117
Tsao Kun's Ill Health, President 85, 354
Tsinanfu, Appalling Fire near 366, 399
Tsingtao Disgrace, A 320
Tsingtao, Holidays at 404
Tsingtao, Japan and 47
Tsingtao, Naval Mutiny at 162, 442, 479, 354, 393
Tsingtao Police Paid 238
Tsingtao Police and Their Pay 483
Tsingtao, Political Activity at... 366
Tsingtao's Beach 366
Tsingtao's Huge Beef Export... 122
Tsingtao, Trade Figures for 444, 485
Tuan Chi-jui, Illness of... ... 84
Tuan, Peking's Offer to Marshal 274
Tufei Arming Fast 239
University After the Fire, Southern 201
University, Chinese Gift to Hongkong 44
Unpaid Diplomats Abroad ... 6
Unpaid and Bannermen, Peking 37
Unpaid F. P.'s, The 78
Upper River, Winter on the ... 164
Upper River Steamer, Accident to 164
Uppper Yangtze, Uneasy Times on 83
Upper Yangtze, Navigation in the 44, 242
U. S. Secretaryship of the Navy 283
Van Praet, Capture of Father ... 122
Van Praet's Ordeal, Father ... 440
Vladivostok, Chinese in... ... 6
Van Praet, Rescue of Father 284, 400
Vladivostok, Japanese Arrested in 359
Voice in the Well, The 167
War Brewing at Chêkiang ... 10
War in East Shensi, Outbreak of 398
War in the Spring, No 399
War Memorial in Hongkong, C. P. R. 47
War, Sinews of a Local 283
War, The Rumours of ... 8, 274
Wars of China, Provincial ... 283
Wedding Anniversary, Nanking 241
Wedding—Hughes-Summers ... 240
Wedding, Japanese Imperial 84, 163, 204
Weihaiwei, The Rendition of ... 173
Widler Held in Captivity by Chinese, Mr. Elly 324
Widler Released, Mr. Elly ... 440
Will of the People," "Against the 279
Winter Has Been So Mild, Why the 324
Wireless Telegraphy in China... 482
Wood, Philippine Antagonists of Gen. 47
Workers' Union, C. E. R. ... 482
Wu Pei-fu and Civil Power 318, 353, 405
Wu Pei-fu and the Tsingtao Navy 314
Wu Pei-fu's Bid for First Place 400
Wu Pei-fu's Demand for Funds 158
Wu Pei-fu's Latest Project ... 278
Wu Pei-fu, Shantung Railway and 118
Wuchow, Canton Militarists in 298
Wuchow, New Memorial Hospital at 205
Wuchang to Hankow, From ... 441
Wuhu! Oo-Hoo 481
Wusih, Beautiful and Busy 44, 202
Wusih, Chinese Learning in ... 280
Wusih, Factories at 203
Wusih Letter 439
Wusih, Yan Sen Victor of Szechuan ... 323
Yang Sen's Advance on Chêngtu 124
Yang Sen's Troops Besieged ... 443
Yangtze, American Gunboats on the 279, 478
Yangtze, Mr. Palmer's Report on the 354
Yangtze, Uneasy Times on Upper 83
Yellow River, Taming the 38, 48, 401
Yenchow's City Wall 164
Yihyang Maru Bandit Outrage 84
Yihyang Maru Captives, The ... 124
Y. M. C. A. Building at Kowloon 125
Yokohama After the Earthquake 126
Yoshiwara Evil in Japan ... 127
Yunnan Brigand Chief Executed 318
Yunnan, Ex-Bandit of 83

SHANGHAI NEWS

Accident on French Bund 11, 51
A.D.C. in "Dear Brutus" ... 289
Adelaide's First Rotary, Dame 171
Aerodrome, The Lunghua ... 446
Aeroplanes for Sale, German ... 91
"All-of-a-Sudden Peggy" ... 173
American Club, New 52
American Insurance Merger ... 486
American School, Shanghai 14, 406
American Woman's Club ... 369
Anglo-Chinese School 173
Armed Robber Outrage 289
Australian Commissionership, Mr. E. S. Little and ... 170
Automatic Telephone, The ... 487
Ball, St. Patrick's Day ... 446
Banking Merger, Important ... 52, 368
B.-A. T. Staff Dinner 207
Bazaar, M. C. L. 450
Begdon, Presentation to Mr. K. 369
Beggar Colony Ablaze 93
Bok Peace Prize, The 290
Blind Soldier," "The 171
Blindness, Victory Over ... 173
Brandt, Funeral of Capt. F. J. 170
British Chambers' Conference... 246, 289
British Women's Association... 11, 369
Building Scheme, Bubbling Well Road 129
Bureau of Foreign Affairs' New Home 445
B. W. A. in "Mrs. Dot" ... 369
Caldbeck, Macgregor's Diamond Jubilee, Messrs. ... 367
Carey Decorated, Comdr. ... 405
Cathedral's New Sub-Dean ... 170
Cement Works, Shanghai Portland 406
Cercle Sportif Francais Performances ... 173, 326, 449
Cercle Sportif Fancy Dress Ball 487
Chambers of Commerce Conference, British ... 246, 289
Chapei Strike, The 449
Chapei, Terrible Fire in ... 406
Christian Literature Society ... 369
Cigarette Tax in Kiangsu ... 172
Club, New American 52
Clock, The Customs 487
Columbia Country Club ... 93
Council, Waterworks Co. and... 486
Cruise of the Yawl Shanghai ... 174
Customs Clock, The 487
Dent's Portraiture, Mr. Vyvyan 326
Dietericha' Orphanage, Mme. ... 12, 51
Dinner, Ex-Gunners' 174
Dollar at Union Club, Capt. Robt. 14
Dynamite Depot in Shanghai ... 367
Edmore Aground, The str. ... 207
Elections, French Municipal ... 91
Elections, Shanghai Municipal 367
Empress Liners in Shanghai ... 487
Empress of Russia Comes Up Stream 249
Ex-Service Men, Shanghai ... 406
Finger Print System, The ... 367
Fire at Foochow Road Theatre 407
Fire in Chapei, Terrible ... 406
Fire in Lumber Ship 130
Fire in "Shanghai Times" Office, Disastrous 488
Fire on Houseboat 450
Franconia in Shanghai, The ... 51
French Municipal Elections ... 91
French Traffic Regulations ... 290
German Aeroplanes for Sale ... 91
Grain Elevators in Shanghai ... 249
Gunners' Dinner, Ex- 174
Hanbury School for Girls, Thomas 326
Ho Tung, Farewell to Sir Robert 14
Homes of Shanghai, The Stately 448
Japanese Naval Squadron, Visit of 489
Judge Lobingier's Departure... 325, 369, 288
Judge, New U.S. Court ... 287
Kadoorie School, Ellis 172
Kurdistan, The Voyage of the 171
"La Belle Aventure" at French Club 326
Land in Shanghai, Commandeering 12
Land in Shanghai, Value of ... 405
"Le Vertige" at the French Club 449
League of Nations and Russians 91
Linebarger's Trip to Europe, Mr. 51
Little and Australian Commissionership, Mr. E. S. ... 170
Lobingier's Departure, Judge 325, 369, 488
Lunghua Aerodrome, The ... 447
MacLeay's Arrival, Sir Ronald 248
M. C. L. Bazaar 450
Mellows, Retirement of Supt.... 368
Memorial, Union Church War 248
Memorial, Unveiling Shanghai's War 288, 369
Mint Dollars, Analysis of Nanking 367
Motor Roads Out of Shanghai 406
Motor Thefts, Epidemic of ... 50
Moule, Farewell Dinner to Mr. W. A. H. 369
Moule, Retirement of Mr. W. A. H. 129, 173
Municipal Elections, Shanghai 367
Municipal Orchestra, The ... 207
Murder, Mahjongg and 487
Murder in Tatung Road, Triple 171
Mystery, A Hongkew 325
Nanking Mint Dollars, Analysis of 367
Nanking Tuchun's Chauffeur Robbed 406
"N.-C. D. News" Building Opened 285

Obituary:—

Baring-Gould, Mr. S. ... 13
Bersouza, Mr. A. 290
Blechynden, Mr. John ... 129
Brandt, Capt. F. J. 170
Courtney, Mrs. Frank J. ... 171
Dabelstein, Mr. Arthur ... 369
Eaton, Miss D. F. 13
Fredericks, Mr. M. 170
Holt, Dr. L. Emmett ... 93
Hunter, Mr. H. E. R. ... 13
Hykes, Mr. R. S. 326
Kan Chiu-nam, Mr. 13
Langley-Smith, Mr. N. H. ... 290
Leighton, Mr. N. B. 486
Levy, Mrs. Raymonde ... 13
McMichael, Mr. J. H. ... 171
Nissim, Mr. D. M. 248
O'Mahony, Mr. Joseph E. ... 129
Palmer, Capt. A. 326
Petit, Dr. Julian 13
Rein, Mrs. B. F. 51
Richardson, Mr. T. W. ... 171
Ross, Det.-Sub. Inspector ... 290
Skains, Mr. J. W. 369
Thompson, Rev. W. G. ... 172
Walter, Mr. O. R. 51
Wells, Mr. M. S. 13
Worcester, Mr. W. G. ... 290
Pacific Mail Steamship Co. ... 91
Paper Hunt Club for Ladies... 130
Passengers by the Teiresias ... 406
Paul Regendaz Gone 207
Persia, Salving of the Str. ... 248
Photography, The Stereoscope in 447
Pilot, The Senior 248
Postal Development in Shanghai 287
Press Association, The Foreign 130
Public School for Girls ... 207
Purim Ball, The 489
Quaints," "The 407
Quest Society, The 208
Railway Development, Ussuri... 174
Rescue, Mid-Ocean 91
Rheinland, The Salving of the 326
Ricsha, The New Bicycle ... 286
"Rotary," Dame Adelaide's First 171
Rowland and Union Church, Mr. 130
Royal Engineers' Dinner ... 369
Royal Asiatic Society 447
Russian Refugees' Christmas Treat 52
Russian Ships and Arms ... 92
Russian Ships at Woosung 51, 92
Russians, League of Nations and 91
Salisbury, Interview with Mr. R. B. 405
Scene in Nanking Road, Sensational 129
Science and Arts, Chinese Society of ... 12, 172, 287
Science, Art and Literature 12, 172
School, Ellis Kadoorie 172
School for Girls, Public ... 207
School, Shanghai American 14, 406
"Shanghai," Cruise of the Yawl 174
"Shanghai Times" Office, Disastrous Fire in 488
Shipbuilding Costs in Shanghai 287
Siberia, Travelling Home via... 405
Social Evil in Shanghai, The... 249
Soochow Creek, The Scandal of the 12
Spanish War Veterans 446
St. Dunstan's, Chinese Boys' Help for 249
St. George's Society Scholarships 449
Stowaways, Schoolboy ... 207
St. Patrick's Day Ball 446
Strike, The Chapei 449
Sturt, Presentation to Mr. H. R. 93
Tax in Kiangsu, Cigarette ... 172
Telephone, The Automatic ... 487
Tod, Retirement of Mr. H. ... 11
Training Ship Hwahyah, The 50
Traffic Regulations, French ... 290
Tweedie, Mrs. Alec 50
Union Church, Mr. Rowland and 130
Union Church War Memorial... 248
Union Club, Capt. Robt. Dollar at 14
Union Club Fellowship ... 91
United States Income Tax ... 11
U. S. Consular Invoices ... 130
U. S. Court Judge, New 287
Ussuri Railway Development... 174
War Memorial, Unveiling Shanghai's 288, 369
War Rumours, More 13
Warren Sunk in the Huangpu, U. S. Transport 449
Washington Ball, The 325
Weddings :—
Abily—de Linewska 447
Allan—Harvey 289
Buijs—Bell 447
Chassels—Martin 326
Evans—Johnson 11
Friedman—Raymond 367
Green—Dewar 487
Kahler—Henry 289
Miller—Chapman 447
New—Zee 326
Phillips—Burtenshaw 367
Porter—White 207
Rosenbloom—Soulevich ... 207
Toscani—Chadderton 51
White—Fuller 51
Who's Who in China 248
Wireless for Houseboats ... 91
Woman's Club, American ... 369
Women's Association, British 11, 369
Woosung Outer Bar 50
Y.M.C.A., Growth of Chinese 11

CORRESPONDENCE

Aerial Defence, Britain's ... 327
America, China, The League and 217
Armadillo, An Early 217
Arms Deal, The Italian... ... 458
Arts for Shanghai, A Palace of 296
Bandits, the People's Defiance 139, 179
Banque Industrielle 370
Birds in Britain, New Game ... 250
Braga, Dr. Teofilo 217
Britain's Aerial Defence 327
British Cemetery, The Old ... 327
British Trade Mark for British Boats 216
Cemetery, The Old British ... 327
Chêkiang, Kiangsu and... ... 53
Chichow Girls' Home 327
Coin Collectors, For 217
China Pony Issue, The 94
China's Search for Peace ... 179
China, The League and America 217
Chinese Children, Education and 459
Chinkiang Industrial Orphanage 94
Choutsun, The Fire at 457
Coinage, Russian 250
Cottage, That Country 250
Dietericha' Orphans, Mme ... 94
Doctors and the Social Evil ... 179
Docking and Wharfing 218
Dynamite Store, The Kajao ... 370
Editor's Reward, The 139
Education and Chinese Children 489
Flagpole, The Empty 217
Fire at Choutsun, The 457
Game Birds in Britain, New ... 250
Genius and Longevity 217
Germany, The State of 54
I. S. S. Drawings... 179, 250, 458
Italian Arms Deal, The 459
Italy and Russia 217
Kiangsu and Chêkiang 53
Koreans, The Massacre of ... 295
League and America, China, the 217
Libel on Szechuan Missionaries 53
Liberal Party, The 217
Longevity, Genius and 217
Massacre of Koreans, The ... 295
Mencius Up To Date 53
Milk, Pure 217
Mint, The Nanking 370
Mint, The Shanghai 295
Missionaries, Libel on Szechwan 53
Monk, The Memorial to Mr. A. V. 327
Moral Welfare League ... 49, 218, 403, 457
Munitions, A New Sort of ... 295
Nanking Mint, The 370
Never Three 458
Ningpo, Breezy ... 295, 327, 370
Orphanage, Chinkiang Industrial 94
Orphans, Mme. Dietericha, ... 94
Ostriches," "Our... 94
Penalty, The Extreme 94
Puzzle, A 179
Pony Issue, The China 94
Prices in Shanghai 403
Rat, The Year of the 260
Record, A Long 409
Refugees, The 94
Render Unto Caesar 370
Revenue, China's Salt and Its ... 137
Ricsha Mission Christmas Fund 406
Road Free of Cost, New ... 94
Russia, Italy and... 217
Russian Coinage 260
Russian Refugees and the League 295
Russians, The Repatriation of ... 215
Salt and Its Revenue, China's... 139
Shanghai Mint, The 295
Shanghai, Prices in 403
Siberian Railway, The Trans... 370
Singapore Naval Base 490
Social Evil, Doctors and the ... 179
Stamps, China's New 379
Sun Yat-sen, Dr. 53
Tea, Black 490
Trade for British Boats, British 216
Trademark Law, The 370
Trampling on Treaties ... 20, 53
T. T.'s 370
Waterworks, The 458
Widler, The Case of Mr.... 327, 370
Yangtze Outrages, Upper ... 295
Year of the Rat, The 260

NAMES AND NOMS-DE-PLUME OF CORRESPONDENTS

A. L. B. 139
Americus 94
Amateur 217
Akehurst, Arthur... 94
Author, The 327
Bamboo 53
Bend, G. A. 217
Bondholder, A 179
B. G. P. 295
Boadge, Agatha 327
Bond No. 3,958 458
Bunting, B.... 217
Carmichael, W. V. 490
C. G. P. 370
Citizen 179
Creditor 370
D. B. 370
Engineer 94
England, John 409
E. M. S. 457
Ferro 295
Frere 179
Excuzez-moi 490
Grafton, T. B. 53
Greig, James A. 295
Gundry, George 370
Hall, L. K.... 457
H. K. 218
Holland, V. J. 327
Hopeful 94
Hu, William 94
I. M.... ... ... 403, 457
Inquirer 370
Investor 250
Isler, J. L.... 327
Juannou 458
K. C. K. ... 20, 53, 139, 179, 490
Kim, Y. K. 295
Kliene, H. 250
Laissez Faire, ... 403
Lebedeff, D. 217
Logan, M. H. 216
Lockhart, W. Bruce 490
Lockwood, W. W. 439
Mabee, Fred C. 370
Machado, C. J. 217
Mariott, G. C. 94
Mason, I. 179
Matheson, George... 370
Monk, Beatrice 217
Nature Lover 217
Nature 370
Nielsen, Gordius ... 20, 53, 179
Nil Desperandum... 457
Non Sequitur 250
Ottery, L. 94
Oystercatcher 250
Pat, ... 295
Peet, Gilbert E. 490
P. H. H. 295
Plain Speaking 458
P. O. Q. 94, 217
Pourquois? 458
Puzzled 280, 403
Quilp, Benjamin 327
Rawlinson, Frank... 403
Reciprocity 217
Rice, Joseph W. 54
Rye, J. E. E. 370
S. 179, 295
Sah Fu-mow 295
Scott, P. M. 327
Seaton Delaval 216
Shinohara, T. 490
Shipping 218
Sixtieth 327
Sokolsky, George E. 20
Somewhat Tired 94
S. M. B. D. A. A. C. 370
Smith, E. M. 457
Smithson-Jones, C. I. ... 295, 370
Stobie, Wm. R. 217
Spectator 20, 53, 490
Sympathizer 94
Tasar 370
T. L. C. 179
Trousers 54
Unperplexed 403
Van Biene, Nigel 250
Waung Man 403, 457
W. S. P. G. 250
X. O. X. 217

MEETINGS

American Association 138
American Legion 414
American Returned Students ... 414
Asia Life Insurance Co.... ... 454
Boy Scouts Association 457
British Women's Association ... 455
Cheng Rubber Estates ... 58, 139, 378
China General Omnibus Co. ... 216

Tsingtao ... 113, 122, 162, 221, 305, 233, 278, 319, 320, 359, 360, 361, 363, 365, 394, 399, 401, 440, 444, 478, 480, 481, 482, 483, 485
Tungchiman 358
Tunki 441
Tzehutsing 441
Washington 359, 366
Wenchow 99, 443
Wuchang ... 231, 441, 480, 485
Wuhi ... 44, 202, 203, 280, 439
Wuhu 481
Wuchow 85
Yangchow 239
Yenchow 164, 167
Yingchowfu 8, 363, 404
Yunnanfu 88, 91, 318

OUTPORT LETTERS—SUBJECTS

[illegible] ... ... [illegible]
Administration of Kuechow, The ... 376, 363, 394, 434
Aeronautical Enterprise, An ... 47
Aeroplane Crash at Chihs ... 403
Aglen, Wild Story about Sir F. 113
America and the Canton Crux 1
American Fleet at Chefoo ... 126
[illegible] Yangtze 279, 478
American Women in Peking ... 243
America's Exclusion of Japanese 345
Amoy, Short-lived Scare at ... 193
Amur, Gold-mining on the ... 481
Anglo-American Association ... 359
Anderson at Ningpo, Dame ... 124
Anhui, Auspicious New Year in 40
Anhui, Cattle Plague in ... 404
Anhui Family's Flight, Wealthy 441
Anhui, The Bandit Peril in ... 8
Anniversary, Buaas's Birthday 166
Anking, Terrible Accident at 202
Anthologist's Paradise, An ... 239
[illegible]
Arms, Transportation of ... 84
Attack on the Prince Regent, The 9, 46
Aviation Fatality in Japan ... 164
Baby-stealers Executed ... 380
Baghdad, Laura Kadoorie School at 404
Bandit Atrocity, Another ... 49
Bandit Outrage, Yihyang Maru 81
Bandit Peril in Anhui, The ... 6
Bandit Suppression in Shantung 478
Bandit Sway, A Province under 123
Bandits Again, Shantung ... 166
Bandits, Baby-stealing by ... 88
Bandits' Capture Released ... 45
Bandits, Capture of Kiahsien by 84
Bandits' Grim Reminder ... 6
[illegible] 197
[illegible] 131
Bandits, Hupeh's Terror of ... 44
[illegible] 122
[illegible] ... ... [illegible]
[illegible] by 84
Bandits, Protection Against ... 85
Bandits, Railway Stations and 7
Bandits, Shantung 8
Bandits Threatening N. Kiangsu 125
Bank Building in Tientsin, Another Modern 439
Bank, C. P. O. Savings ... 401
[illegible] Interested in [illegible] 44
[illegible] Note Issue & S. 205, 440
Bank Meeting, H. & S. ... 319
Barbarous Treatment, Schoolboy's 483
Batang, Attack on 318
[illegible] Electric [illegible] 53
[illegible] Captured by Tibetan Raiders 43
Peking, The Imminent Fall of 10
[illegible] Rail Way ... 135
[illegible] Capital ... 37
Beggar [illegible] ... 397
[illegible] 205
Bo Paosan Gen.... 203
Bossel Assaulted on Mukden Railway, Mr. 301, 278
Bossel Case and Col. Chen ... 439
Birds Go North Again, When 360
[illegible] ... ... [illegible]
[illegible] 18
[illegible] 36
[illegible] 141
[illegible] 45
[illegible] 153
[illegible] 31
[illegible] 35
[illegible] 205
[illegible] ... ... [illegible]
[illegible] 126
[illegible] 201
[illegible] 95
[illegible] 96
[illegible] 163
[illegible] 168
[illegible] 173
[illegible] 234
[illegible] 184
[illegible] 41
[illegible] 162
[illegible] 235
[illegible] 359
[illegible] 8
Canton, Northern Campaign Against 394
Canton, Nurses' Convention at 240
Canton, Opium Monopoly in ... 127
Canton's Iniquitous Taxation 45
Canton's War Chest and Civic Bill 314
Canton, Yunnanese Falling Out in 89
Cattle Disease in China ... 44
Cattle-raising in Heilungkiang 283
Cattle Plague in Anhui 404
Cattle Plague in Shansi ... 486
C. E. R. Workers' Union ... 482
C.-E. Railway, The ... 245, 282, 319, 438
Chamber of Commerce, Hongkong 480
Chamber of Commerce, Tientsin 362
Chang Tso-lin and His Army 479
Chang Tso-lin's Railway Schemes 441
Chang Tso-lin, Peking's Overtures to 233
[illegible] ... ... [illegible]
Changsha, New Year in ... 321
Chefoo, American Fleet at ... 127
Chefoo's Summer Attractions 86
Chekiang Border, Delicate Situation on 7
Chekiang, Kiangsu and... 7, 43, 123
Chekiang, Quietist Society of 43
Chekiang, Smuggled Opium in 166
Chekiang, Troop Movements in 90
Chekiang, War Brewing in ... 10
Chekiang's New Year 279
Chekiang's War Scare 202
Chengtu Captured by Northern Troops 203
Chengtu, The Capture of ... 393
Chengtu under Northern Rule 481
Chengtu, Yang Sen's Advance on 124
China and the League of Nations 314
China and the Soviet 83
China New Year 158
China, Pneumonic Plague in ... 126
Chinese and Russians [illegible] 165
[illegible] Railway Loads [illegible]
Chinese Industrial Commission 45, 84
China's Industrial Revolution 479
Chinese in Vladivostok 6
Chinese Labour Manifesto, A ... 403
Chinese, Listening to the ... 206
Chinese Law Courts 482
Chinese National Railways ... 80
Chinese New Year in Canton 278
Chinese New Year in London 435
Chikungshan, Swedish School on 167
China, Aeroplane Crash at ... 403
Christmas, The Communists ... 126
Chungking, Another Racecourse at 201
Cigarettes, Russian 445
Cobalt Mining in Manchuria ... 86
Coinage in Siberia, New Silver 166. 242
[illegible] Plot in Japan, Alleged 324
Communists' Christmas, The 126
Conference, Changsha Military 393
Conference, The Round Table 6
Conservancy on the Min River 480
Consolidated Loan Service ... 353
Cotton, Proposed Surtax on ... 7
Courts, Chinese Law 482
C. P. O. Savings Bank ... 401
Currency for China, National ... 86
Currency Reform, Russia's ... 361
Customs, Dr. Sun's Attack on 118
Customs Official Killed by Cook 202
Customs Revenue, Canton 1. 37. 12
Customs Surtax, The ... 353, 394, 474
Death of a Filipino Hero ... 246
Doctors, Brave London Lady ... 238
Dollond Barth, Barometer of 441
Earthquake at Tsingtao ... 320
Earthquake in Japan, Another Graves 77. 98
[illegible] Japan after the [illegible] 9
[illegible] Japan's Last [illegible] 168
[illegible] Murders in Japan, Fire 17
Earthquake Relief Funds, Japanese 47, 449
Earthquake Victims and Harbin 84
Earthquake, Yokohama After the 126
Earthquakes in Manila ... 9, 96. 164
[illegible] Pointes and [illegible] 37. 232. 324. 364
Education, Shansi's Governor and 358
Educational Work in China, Japan's 324
Enterprise, An Aeronautical ... 47
[illegible] and Surtax 353
[illegible] Dr. Sun's Northern 12
[illegible] Ten with Two Children 281
[illegible] Fighting ... 124
[illegible] Beggars 399
"Father and Mother" of the People, Real 361
Feng and the Legation Police, Gen. 373
Feng Yu-hsiang's Ironsides, Gen. 329
Feng's News Post, Gen. ... 314
[illegible] Death of [illegible] 246
[illegible] Premier, Peking's Coup for 117
[illegible] Defections, Peking's 164. 197
[illegible] Appalling 366. 399
[illegible] Tax Cost 73. 234
[illegible] Loan 184
[illegible] Residents in China, Protection of 41
[illegible] Village Massacre in 162
[illegible] Appalling Tyranny in 235
[illegible] Insecurity of Life in ... 359
[illegible] Military Greed in ... 8
Fukien, Military Operations in 438
Fukien, Miseries of 479
Fukien, Poppy Cultivation in 44, 86, 164
Fukien, Turn-over in 394
Fukien's Fruit Industry ... 128
Fukien's Military Despots ... 205
German Agreement, A Sino- 197, 234, 273
Ginling College, The Conference of 241
Girls' School at Ningpo ... 8
Gold Franc Controversy, The 78, 234
Gold-mining on the Amur ... 481
Government in Canton, A New 83
Government, Kuomintang Scheme of 273
H. & S. Bank in Tientsin, New 363, 440
H. & S. Bank Meeting 319
Hangchow Hospital 165
Hangchow, Historic Event in ... 284
Hangchow, Lepers of 6
Hangchow, Life in 308
Hangchow, New Year Festivities at 205
Hangchow, No War Clouds at 89. 123
Hangchow, Seasonable Gatherings at 87
Hangchow, Premier's Envoy in 324
Hangchow War Fears, The ... 164
Hangchow Waterworks 441
Hankow, From Wuchang to ... 441
Harbin, Earthquake Victims and 84
Harbin Letter 90
Harbin, Lightless Suburbs of 85
Harbin, Opium and Gambling in 85, 202
Harbin, Seeing the New Year in at 87
Harbin, Sleeping Sickness in ... 200
Harbin, White Slave Traffic at 205
Heilungkiang, Cattle-raising in 283
Holidays in Manchuria 445
Honan, British Minister in ... 202
Honan, Quiet Corner in... ... 323
Honan Railway, A 83
Honan, Rainfall in 240
Honan, Soldiers' Mutiny in ... 358
Honan Troops, Mutiny of ... 480
Hongkong Chamber of Commerce 480
Hongkong Military Lands Transfer 403
Hongkong Police, Heroic ... 204
Hongkong Robbers 9
Hongkong Sweep Dispute ... 365
Hongkong, The Share Boom in 49
Hongkong University, Chinese Gift to 44
Hospital at Wuchow, Memorial 205
Hunan, Attack on Foreigners in 90
Hunan, Divination in 440
Hunan, Highways in 163
Hunan, Improved Outlook in ... 238
Hunan's Autonomy 158
Humanese Troops in Canton ... 400
Hsu-chiatsze, Russian Murdered by 4, 7
Hupeh, Bandit Outrage in ... 480
Hupeh Governor's Birthday ... 44
Hupeh's Terror of Bandits ... 483
Ichang Letter ... ...
Industrial Commission, Chinese 45, 84
Industrial Revolution, China's 479
Insatiable Octopus, An 8
Insurance Policies and Earthquakes 127
Imitating Foreign Goods ... 279
Isolation, Quarantine and ... 401
Italian Munitions 318
Japan after the Earthquake ... 9
Japan and the Soviet 279, 320, 400, 442
Japan and the Singapore Base 282
Japan and Tsingtao 47
Japan, Alleged Communist Plot in 324
Japan, Anxious Days in ... 239
Japan, Attempted Murder of Prince Regent of ... 9, 46
Japan, Big Fire in 47
Japan, Disasters in 445
Japan Invaded by Jazz... ... 443
Japan, New Political Party in 165
Japan, New Spirit Visible in ... 365
Japan, Trade Unionism in ... 485
Japan, Unloved Soldiers of ... 125
Japanese, America's Exclusion of 245
Japanese Arrested in Vladivostok 359
Japanese Cabinet, The New 46, 89, 169
Japanese Capital and China ... 360
Japanese Diet Dissolved ... 167
Japanese Electtin Campaign ... 364
Japanese Imperial Palace Bombed 46
Japanese Imperial Wedding 84, 168, 204
Japanese Loan, New 246, 282, 323
Japanese Mine Explosion ... 47
Japanese Ministry Tottering ... 125
Japanese Premier, The 89
Japanese Press Resurgent ... 166
Japanese Steamers in Distress . 49
Japanese Sunken Submarine ... 485
Japanese Trade with China ... 49
Japan's Army, Modernization of 195
Japan's Burnt Books 433
Japan's Educational Work in China 324
Japan's Foreign Trade... ... 285
Japan's Frenzied Politicians ... 243
[illegible] Grand Old Man ... 284
[illegible] Plans for Olympic Games 321
[illegible] Pictorial Underworld, Olympic 304
[illegible] Peace Council ... 97
[illegible] Rice Sold, Indirect ... 246
[illegible] Hongkong Sir Roberts 6
Kadoorie School at Baghdad [illegible] 404
Kaifeng, Capital Picturesque Scene in 443
Kaihsing Notes 363
Kalgan Border, Freebooters on 323
Kiangsu and Chekiang ... 7, 43, 123
Kiangsu, Bandits Threatening N. ... ...
Kiangsu, Motoring in N. ... 299
Kiangsu Notes, North 90
Kiaochou, The Administration of 278, 363, 394, 434
Kiao-Tsi Railway... 360, 361, 440
Kiating, 20,000 Soldiers at ... 435
Kilen, Heroic Conduct of Mrs. 84
Kirin, Poppy Cultivation in ... 363
Kilen, The Captivity of Mrs. 118
Koreans, The Massacring of ... 47
Korea and Manchuria, Business in 364
Korniloff Be Executed? Will... 402
Korniloff Upheld, Death Sentence on 320
Korniloff's Appeal 491
Kuangtung, A New Campaign in 233
Kuangtung, Levy of Taxes in... 127
Kuangtung, Military Matters in 402
Kuangtung, Reign of Terror in 24
Kuangtung, Resumption of War in 162
Kuangtung's Host of Mercenaries 361
Kuangsi, Lu Yung-ting's Iron Rule in 85
Kueichow Governor in Mourning 123
Kueichow, Insecurities of Life in 123
Kuomintang Scheme of Government 273
Labour Manifesto, A Chinese... 403
Lady Doctors, Brave London... 238
Lamaism, The Going Round and Round of... 125
Lamaistic Styx, Six Planks Across the 484
League of Nations, China and the 314
Lepers of Hangchow 6
Lincheng Reparation 84
Listening to the Chinese ... 206
Loan, Chinese Marconi 479
Loan, New Japanese 246, 282, 323
Loan Service Committee [illegible]
Loans, China's International ... 195
London, Chinese New Year in 438
Loyang's Immense Influence ... 444
Lu Yung-hsiang, Marriage of... 482
Lu Yung-ting's Iron Rule in Kuangsi 85
Macdonald, Dr. Sun to Mr. Ramsay 162
Manchuria, Brigandage in ... 358
Manchuria, Business in Korea and 364
Manchuria, Coalmining in ... 86
Manchuria, Holidays in 445
Manchurian Beans 202
Manchuria's Trade 481
Manila, Bank Funds Embezzled in 44
Marconi Loan, Chinese [illegible]
Ma's Misrule, Tali 240
Matsukata's Future, Alleged 162
Massacring of Koreans, The 47
Matsukata's Illness, Prince ... 364
Medical Conference, National 241, 279
Memorial in Hongkong, C. P. R. War 47
Militarism and the Opium Evil 163
Military Lands Transfer, Hongkong 403
Mine Disaster at Fongshan ... 482
Mine Flooded, Shantung ... 481
Minister in Honan, British ... 202
Min River Conservancy ... 480
Mint, Nanking 201
Missionaries House Looted ... 440
Mission Compound, Guarding a 205
Mongolia, New Soviet Envoy to 403
Montagues and Capulets, Chinese 298
Morality, No Decline of ... 403
Morphia, The Trade in Smuggled 6
Moslem Kingdom in Tibet ... 162
Motoring in N. Kiangsu ... 239
M. P.'s, The Unpaid 78
Mukden En Fête 204
Mukden Negotiations, Peking and 6
Mukden's Air Force 239
Munitions, Italian 318
Murdered Foreigners of Szechuan 85
Murdered Railway Official ... 359
Murderers, Capt. Brandt's ... 43
Murder of Rev. Achille Scenes 7, 43
Mutiny at Tsingtao, Naval ... 162
Mutiny of Honan Troops ... 368, 480
Nanking Clearing Beggars from 89
Nanking, Important Conference at 206
Nanking Mint 201
Nanking Naval Plot ... 162, 198
Nanking Seminary, Presbyterians and 279
Nanking, Two Popular Chinese of 202
Nanking Wedding Anniversary... 241
Navy Reinforced," "Independent 84
Naval Armaments 314
Naval Mutiny at Tsingtao ... 162
Naval Plot, Nanking ... 162, 198
Navy to Quit Tsingtao, Admiral Wen's 319
Navigation in the Upper Yangtze 44
Navy Fleetan to the Chinese 313
Navy's Lack of Funds, Loyal 49
Nieh, Wu Pei-fu and the Tsingtao 314
New Year in Anhui, Auspicious 42
New Year in Changsha ... 321
New Year in London, Chinese... 438
New Year, Fuhing Over the ... 40
Ningpo Bigotry 245
Ningpo, Capital in 393
Ningpo Girls' School at ... 8
Ningpo, Prophet of New China at 44
Norman, Social Activities at ... 10
Nanzing Steamer Wrecked 443
Northern Expedition, Dr. Sun's 42
Nurses' Convention at Canton 240
Octopus, An Insatiable 8
Olympic Games, Japan's Plans for 321
Opium and Gambling in Harbin 85
Opium Evil Militarism and the 163
Opium in Chekiang, Smuggled... 166
Opium Monopoly in Canton ... 127
Opium on Pacific Ships ... 44
Opium Seizure in Peking, Big... 6
Opium Smuggling Officials ... 90
Opium Suppression in China ... 441
Outport Pride 442
Obituary:—
Burnham, Miss Grace Evelyn 361
Eaton, Miss Dalta 86
Emery, Mr. H. C. 240
Gillard, Mr. 482
Hasegawa, Count Yoshinrichi 167
Kanda, Baron Naibu 9
Kwacho-no Miya, Prince ... 445
Lowry, Dr. H. H. 89
Sandercock, Mr. L. 241
Whitewright, Mrs. J. W. 283, 324
Pacific Ships, Opium on ... 44
Palmer's Report on the Yangtze, Mr. 364
Parliament in Milder Mood ... 313
Peking, American Women in ... 245
Peking and Mukden Negotiations 6
Peking, Big Opium Seizure in... 6
Peking's Cabinet in Session ... 234
Peking Day by Day ... 45, 158, 197, 274, 314
Peking's Fight for Finance Ministry 117
Peking's Great Unpaid... ... 37
Peking's Political Parties ... 42
Peking, The Secret Hand in ... 78
Peace Encouragement Association 49
Peace Secure in East China ... 157
People," "Against the Will of the 279
Philippine Ambitions, ... 399
Philippine Antagonists of Gen. Wood 47
Philippines, Dynamite Smuggling in 167
Philippines, Independence of the 365
Philippines, Insurrection in the 128, 163
Philippines, Religious Fanatics in the 46
Philippine Trade 243
Piracy on British Steamer ... 10
Piracy, On Lee 361
Piracy on the str Tzeaui 86, 122
Pirates, Dastardly, Outrage by 122
Pirates, South China's Struggle with ... 10, 87, 234, 361, 480
Political Parties, Peking's ... 42
Poppy Growing in Szechuan ... 220
Poppy Cultivation in Kirin ... 363
Poppy Cultivation in Fukien 44, 86, 164
Poppy, Cultivation of the ... 162
Plague at Chita, Pneumonic ... 126
Premier, "Bad Press," New ... 126
Premier, Mr. Sun Pao-chi as... 77
Premier's Envoy in Hangchow... 324
Premier to Visit South China ... 158
Presbyterians and Nanking Seminary 279
President Tsao Kun's Ill Health ... 85, 353
Priest's Plucky Act 46
Prince Matsukata's Illness ... 364
Prince Regent, The Attack on the 9, 46
Prison Reform in China 365
Prophet of New China at Ningpo 44
Process," "The Slow and Painful 445
Protection of Foreign Residents in China 44
Provincial Wars of China ... 235
Quarantine and Isolation ... 401
Quietist Society of Chekiang ... 43
Racecourse at Chungking, Another 201
Railway, A Honan 83
Railway and Wu Pei-fu, Shantung 118
Railway Disaster, Shantung ... 192
Railway, Kiao Tsi ... 360, 361, 440
Railway Lands, Chinese Eastern 86
Railway Schemes, Chang Tso-lin's 441
Railway Stations and Bandits... 7
Railways, Shantung 201
Railway, The C.-E. ... 243, 282, 319, 438
Recruiting Troops in Shanghai 394
Red Gospel, Spreading the ... 484
Reds, Rising in Arms Against the 283
Red Wall, Battle of the ... 485
Reform in China, Prison ... 363
Refugees, Sending Home the ... 478
Refugees, Soviet and the ... 359
Ricsha Coolies' Lightning Strike 321
River Craft, Troops to Guard .. 480
River, Taming the Yellow ... 38
Roosevelt, Shinto Prayers for ... 169
Roots, Bishop 49
Round Table Conference, The .. 6
Russian Cigarettes 445
Russian Convicts Amnestied ... 282
Russian Pedlars 167
Russian Ships, Sungari Closed [illegible] 281
Russians, Chinese and... ... 165
Russians Murdered by Hung Hsu-chiatsze 402
Russia's Currency Reform ... 261
Russo-Chinese Negotiations 159, 234, 274, 353, 393, 433, 475, 478
Salt Revenue, Decrease in ... 158
School at Ningpo, Girls' ... 8
Schmalzried, Release of Rev. E. W. 46
Secret Hotel in Peking, The ... 78
Seoul, Another New 125
Shantung Bandits 8
Shantung Bandits Against ... 160
Shantung Bandit Suppression in 478
Shantung Beef 480
Shantsing, Ghastly Crime near 480
Shantung Mine Flooded ... 481
Shantung Railways 201
Shantung Railway and Wu Pei-fu 118

The North-China Herald

AND SUPREME COURT AND CONSULAR GAZETTE

WEEKLY EDITION OF THE NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS

Registered at the Chinese P. O. for transmission as mail matter under Class B. (Tsz-ling-sing-chi-chow-kan 字林星期報)

VOL. CL. No. 2943. SHANGHAI, SATURDAY, JANUARY 5, 1924. TAELS 12 PER ANNUM.

CONTENTS

GENERAL POLITICS—
America and the Canton Crux 1
Domestic Loans and the Surplus 1
China's Indemnity Payments... 2
Chinese Customs Returns 2
Peking's Search for a Premier 2
LEADING ARTICLES—
Controversy at Canton, The 3
Holiday Moods 3
Russians: Children and Others 4
First Offenders 4
World Looking to the New Year, The 4
NOTES AND COMMENTS 5
NEWS FROM THE OUTPORTS—
Round Table Conference, The 6
Northern Troops in Szechuan... 6
Lepers of Hangchow 6
Big Opium Seizure in Peking... 6
Bandits' Grim Reminder 6
Trade in Smuggled Morphia, The 6
Kiangsu Chekiang Situation 7
Delicate Situation on Chekiang Border 7
Railway Stations and Bandits... 7
Missionary Murdered 7
Bandit Outrage in Hupeh, The 7
Bandit Peril in Anhui 8
Idle Rumours of War 8
An Insatiable Octopus... 8
Military Greed in Fukien 8
Girls' School at Ningpo, A 8
Shantung Bandits 8
Attack on the Prince Regent, The 9
Socialists' Burial Dishonoured 9
Japan after the Earthquake 9
Social Activities at Ningpo 10
War Brewing in Chekiang 10
Piracy on British Steamer 10
Imminent Fall of Batang, The 10
SHANGHAI NEWS—
United States Income Tax 11
Growth of the Chinese Y. M. C. A. 11
Entertainment at Country Club 11
Retirement of Mr. H. Tod 11
Motor Accident on the French Bund 11
Wedding—Evans-Johnson 11
Scandal of the Soochow Creek 12
Science, Art and Literature 12
Commandeering Land in Shanghai 12
Italian Opera Company 12
Mme. Dieterichs' Orphanage 12
More War Rumours and Denials 13
Obituary—
Mrs. Raymonde Levy 13
Dr. Julian Petit 13
Mr. H. E. R. Hunter 13
Miss D. F. Eaton 13
Mr. M. S. Wells 13
Mr. S. Baring-Gould 13
Late Mr. Kan Chu-nam 13
Farewell to Sir R. Ho Tung 14
Shanghai American School 14
Capt. Robert Dollar at Union Club 14
SPORT AND PASTIMES—
Paper Hunt Club 14
Golf Championship Finals 14
Association Football 14
Interport Rugby 15
Miscellaneous 15
MUNICIPAL GAZETTE NEWS 15
COMPANY MEETING—
Penkalan Durian Estate (1921), Ld. 16
COMMERCE AND FINANCE 17
CORRESPONDENCE—
Trampling on Treaties 20
LAW REPORTS—
H. M. Supreme Court—
Merging of Insurance Companies 21
H. M. Police Court—
Maltese Seamen Charged 21
U. S. Court for China—
Hinde Convicted of Embezzlement 22
Deal in Francs and Marks, A 22
Asia Life and an Ex-Manager 22
Claim for Damaged Cargo 22
Remedy for Tuberculosis 22
Mixed Court—
New Year Tragedies 22
FOREIGN TELEGRAMS 23—27
FROM THE FOUR WINDS... 28—29
SPECIAL ARTICLES—
Cure for Critics of Christ, A 30
China's Skies for January 30
A. D. C. and Its Critics 31
New Year Hymn (Poetry) 31
China's Search for Peace 32
Four Fighting Buddhas of the Chibli Party 33
BOOK PAGE 34
WOMAN'S PAGE 35

A SQUARE DEAL AT A ROUND TABLE: SIR ROBERT HO TUNG'S TEA-PARTY OF TUCHUNS.—

AMERICA AND THE CANTON CRUX

U. S. Feeling Alarmed by Report of Anti-American Sentiment Due to Customs Question

LEADERSHIP IN COERCION REPUDIATED

London, Dec. 29.

The Washington correspondent of the "Times" says that a newspaper despatch from Canton, describing rapid growth of anti-foreign sentiment in South China and indicating that it is reported to be directed chiefly against Americans, has caused some concern and has been the subject of official reference.

It is explained that the United States co-operated with the other Powers in the naval demonstration at Canton primarily for the purpose of assisting maintenance of the integrity of China. The American Government was of the opinion that Dr. Sun Yat-sen's threat to seize the Customs was a direct blow at China's credit and, if allowed, would set a seal of approval upon retention of national revenues by provincial authorities, a practice which is threatening to starve the Central Government of funds.

The policy adopted by the United States in concert with the other Powers is based on reports received from Consular and other officials on the spot and it is intimated officially that such measures will be taken as may be necessary to protect the Customs revenues from seizure either by Dr. Sun Yat-sen's forces or by whoever may secure ascendancy in Kuangtung.

The "Morning Post's" Washington correspondent says that reports from China that the Chinese are contemplating a boycott of American goods because of American participation in the naval demonstration at Canton have resulted in a cautiously worded semi-official intimation that, while the American Government favours joint action by the Powers in China to protect Treaty rights, the United States will not consent to be placed in a position of assuming the leadership in coercive measures and, if that impression is created in the Chinese mind, the United States may be compelled to adopt an independent policy.—Reuter's American Service.

Hongkong, Jan. 2.

The American destroyers have returned from Canton.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Order to Bocca Tigris Forts to Prevent Approach of Foreign Gunboats

Canton, Dec. 28.

According to the local press, two American and two British gunboats have anchored in front of the Wuchow Customs House, presumably to guard the Customs against interference.

The commandant of the Bocca Tigris forts has ordered the fort guards to prevent foreign gunboats from approaching the territory of the forts.

Up to the present no new developments have arisen regarding the Customs questions, pending a reply from the Inspector-General in Peking.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Peking, Dec. 30.

With regard to the reply communicated by the Commissioner of Customs at Canton to Mr. C. C. Wu, which was from the Inspector-General of Customs and not the Diplomatic Corps, it is understood that the Inspector-General informed Dr. Sun Yat-sen that the Inspectorate-General of Customs could receive instructions from no one but the Central Government.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Jan. 3.

Sir Francis Aglen, the Inspector-General of the Chinese Maritime Customs, has received telegrams from the associated Chinese bankers and commercial bodies of Tientsin, Shanghai, Hangchow, Nanking, Nanchang, Soochow and Pengpu strongly protesting against any diversion of Customs surplus funds.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

DOMESTIC LOANS AND THE SURPLUS

Chinese Businessmen Becoming Anxious over Dr. Sun's Threat to Seize

A TELEGRAM TO SIR FRANCIS AGLEN

The following has been sent us by the Shanghai Bankers' Association:—

Sir Francis Aglen,
The Inspectorate General of Maritime Customs, Peking.

We beg to state that the adequacy of security governs absolutely the free circulation of national bonds; during the year, among the various kinds of Government Domestic Loans, only the 9th year loan bonds have been recently drawn once. Fortunately, owing to the fact that these domestic loans are secured by the Customs surplus, their standing has been maintained to some extent, and the bonds still circulate in the market. Nevertheless, the failure of the Government to carry out the scheduled drawings has caused great dissatisfaction among the general public.

A large part of these domestic loan bonds now circulate in the Shanghai market to serve as security for private loans, or act as negotiable instruments. They are held both by Chinese and foreigners. Should their security be in any way endangered they would become as worthless as waste paper, with the consequence of creating great disturbance in financial and commercial circles, and the loss on occasioned will not be confined to actual bondholders. The security of the domestic loans has for some time been involved with the controversy over the settlement of unsecured

THE "NORTH-CHINA HERALD" IN NEW GUISE

Readers of the "North-China Herald" will no doubt receive something of a shock on discovering the new guise in which it appears to-day. And as mankind is in the main a conservative creature, protests against the change will not be lacking.

Many reasons, however, combine to make this change imperative. Under the old system, Saturday's news could not be included in an issue which bore Saturday's date. Often, therefore, our readers were obliged to wait a week or longer for some telegram of worldwide interest. In the new "Herald" this disadvantage will disappear, and the issue will be brought up to date, without any delay in the hour of posting to subscribers.

Secondly, on account of the increasing bulk of the "Herald" in its old form, it becomes more and more difficult to print it and bind it in one section. Till recently the "Herald" consisted of four separate sections: (1) The principal news; (2) the telegraphic supplement; (3) Municipal Gazette; (4) share supplement. All these supplements will now be included under one cover and will be bound in with the "Herald," making it a complete record instead of the partially complete one that it has been for some few years.

All this, it may be thought, might have been done without changing the size. This, however, is not the case, as we shall no longer be printing on flat bed machines. Beginning with this week the "Herald" will be printed on the same presses that now print the "North-China Daily News." These presses instead of printing from a sheet, print from the reel at a speed of about 5,000 to 6,000 copies per hour.

The increased size of the "Daily News" compelled us to instal these presses six months ago and to change the size and format of that paper. Critics of course there were by the hundred, but a referendum conducted by us among our subscribers to the "Daily News" a few weeks ago showed that 75 per cent. of them now prefer the new format to the old. We hope that that will be the case with the subscribers to the "Herald."

Finally it may be mentioned that the larger page will enable us to include pictures which were previously impossible. Not only Sapajou's clever drawings, but illustrations of the growth and many activities of Shanghai should prove attractive to old residents of the Far East and instructive to readers abroad, who never hear without amazement of the modern developments of ancient China and now will have evidence thereof before their eyes.

Chinese Y. M. C. A. 410
Chempedak Rubber Estate ... 98
Columbia Country Club ... 138
Oriental Cotton S. & W. Co. ... 254
Ewo Cotton Mills... 374
General Chamber of Commerce 454
Ferry Temple Cathedral 376
Kali Gindik Coffee Estates ... 175
Kroewoek Java Plantations ... 410
Lawn Tennis Association 456
Laou Kung Mow C. S. & W. Co. 575
Magor Bros. Ltd. 494
Moral Welfare League ... 96
New Amherst Rubber Estate 330
New Engineering Works Ltd. ... 254
Pamoeka Rubber Estates ... 254
Pergkolan Durian Estate ... 16
Reformers' Association 294, 456
Repah Rubber Estates 494
Senawang Rubber Estates ... 98
Shanghai Land Investment Co.... 454
Shanghai Loan & Investment Co. 374
Shanghai Horticultural Society 377
Shanghai & Hongkew Wharf Co. 374
Shanghai Rifle Association ... 294
Shanghai Rowing Club 376
Shanghai Sumatra Tobacco Co. 410
Shanghai Tug & Lighter Co. ... 410
Shantung Road Hospital ... 375
Small Boat Club 456
Small Investors, Ld. 374
St. Andrew's Society 98
St. David's Society ... 376
St. George's Society 330
St. Patrick's Society 178
The Shriners 414
Union Club... 414
Union Club Proprietary ... 414
United Services Association ... 294
Weihaiwei Land & Building Co. 254

SPECIAL ARTICLES

A. D. C. and Its Critics ... 30
America, Traveller in Modern ... 388
Anaesthesia 72
Betting Commission's Report... 339
Buddhas of the Chihli Party, Four Fightinig 33
Chihli Party, Four Fighting Buddhas of the ... 33
China Notes for January ... 30
China Notes for February ... 193
China's Skies for March ... 386
China's Search for Peace 32, 71, 112, 150, 191, 308, 348
Chinese Education in Shanghai 269
Collectors Confounded ... 508
Cotton Imported Chinese ... 346
Cotton Surtax, The Proposed 193
Cui Bono? 469
Cure for Critics of Christ, A 30
Deus Ex Machina 228
Desert and the Sown, The ... 269
Education in Shanghai, Chinese 269
Films, British 468
Flower Book, A Chinese ... 73
Four Fishes, The ... 113
Gambling Mania in Great Britain 428
Golf, Lessons in 468, 508
Hardening of Pharaoh's Heart 386
Justice, Fortitude, Sacrifice ... 308
Korean Women, Ten Years' Advance by 426
Labour Cabinet, Britain's ... 347
Labour Government and its Policy Towards Chinese, British 229
Labour Government, Britain's First 344
Laurent et Feng, Chin. ... 328
Lao Yang-jen the Terror of Honan 152
Leap Year Basics ... 228
Letter, A Personal Memory of 162
Linkage of Life, The 426
Lord in the Lock-up, A ... 227
Macdonald, Chinese View of Mr. ... 228
Manning on the Man 343
Mei Lan-fang, The Charm of 469
Morning Tea, My 389
Motor Traffic in Peking ... 349
New Year Hymn (Poetry) ... 31
Numbering the Days 71
Pamphlet Passes Pretty, A ... 73
Pavement, but in Hebrew Gabbatha," "The 112
Peace, China's Search for 32, 71, 112, 150, 191, 308, 348
Peking, Motor Traffic in ... 349
Pillars of Cloud and Fire ... 150
Piracy Regulations, China Coast Officers and 427
Pulpit, From the :—
Critics of Christ, A Cure for 30
Desert and the Sown, The ... 269
Four Fishes, The 113
Justice, Fortitude, Sacrifice... 308
Linkage of Life, The ... 426
Manning on the Man 343
Numbering the Days 70
Pavement, but in Hebrew-"Gabbatha" 112
Pharaoh's Heart, The Hardening of 386
Pillars of Cloud and Fire ... 150
Short Creed, A 507
Taking Trouble 191
Will of God, Doing the ... 227
Race Club, China's Early ... 73
Reminiscences 509
Russian Policy in China, New 387
Russia's Pressure for Recognition in Japan 343
Shanghai, As Other See ... 229
Shipping Board's Sale of Vessels, U. S. 388
Short Creed, A 507
Sixth Sense, The 228
Skies for January, China's ... 30
Skies for February, China's ... 193
Skies for March, China's ... 386
Striking, Latest Device in ... 309
S. V. C. Gymnasium ... 347
Taking Trouble 191
Tales for Worthless Infants, Unmoral 507
Will of God, Doing the ... 227

SPORTS AND PASTIMES

14, 58, 93, 139, 180, 212, 255, 296, 328, 380, 409, 458, 494

COMMERCE AND FINANCE

17, 55, 95, 135, 175, 215, 251, 291, 331, 371, 411, 451, 491

BOOK PAGE, THE

34, 74, 114, 153, 194, 230, 270, 310, 350, 390, 430, 470, 510

MUNICIPAL GAZETTE NEWS

15, 58, 99, 140, 180, 257, 296, 329, 380, 407, 450, 498

WOMAN'S PAGE, THE

35, 75, 115, 154, 195 271, 311, 351, 391, 431, 471, 511

FOUR WINDS, FROM THE

Australian Letters ...147, 304, 341, 425, 506
Canadian Letters... ... 268, 342
British Columbia Letter ... 28
London Letters 28, 68, 69 110, 149, 266, 339, 503
Manchester Letters 28, 148, 189, 266, 305, 307, 342, 503
Paris Letters 68, 110, 189, 224, 306, 340, 385, 424, 467
Scottish Letters ... 67, 147, 223, 305, 340, 424, 466, 504
Miscellaneous ... 29, 67, 110, 149, 189, 224, 267, 306, 339, 385, 424, 467, 503

FOREIGN TELEAGRMS

23, 62, 104, 141, 184, 219, 262, 300, 336, 381, 420, 462, 499

H. M. SUPREME COURT

Addis, Admission to Practice of Mr. Thomas 100
Cheng Chong-yuen v. D. Goldman 131
China Merchants S. N. Co. v. China Navigation Co. ... 415
China Mutual Life Insurance Co. and the Sun Life Assurance Co. of Canada, In re the 21
Dr. R. A. Thompson v. C. P. Rakusen 59
Hawkings, Reed & Co., Ld., In re 131
Hongkong & Shanghai Bank v. Schiller & Co. 59
Kiangnan Dock & Engineering Co. v. Hing Wha Paste Co. 459
Kung Chang-tai v. C. P. Rakusen 209
L. E. Brown v. Frank H. Hyde 59, 100
M. Tsah and others v. C. P. Rakusen 130, 208
Oriental Press v. E. A. Paige 131
Pang Wo Manfg. Co., In re the 258
Rex v. Sadara Singh 415
R. P. Remedios v. P. R. Murray 181
Sahdoo Singh v. T. R. Crank... 378
S. G. Kamsi v. L. H. de Caser 258
Shanghai Life Insurance Co. and the Sun Life Assurance Co. of Canada, In re the 21
Van Zeh-sung v. Bank of Canton 334
Wiso Kang-zung v. Schiller & Co. 297
Yao Pak-liang v. S. J. Halse 416

H. M. POLICE COURT

Loh Yik-tse v. P. Cassidy ... 100
Rex (French Police) v. G. H. Wilder 104
Rex (French Police) v. W. H. Shaw 132, 209, 258
Rex (S. M. P.) v. C. E. Fisher 259
Rex (S. M. P.) v. W. J. Moss 181
Rex v. A. E. Bolden 101
Rex v. A. Ismail 132
Rex v. Baldacchino and others 21. 59
Rex v. Chanan Singh and Beer Singh 59
Rex v. de Jonge, Pleydell and Penders 459
Rex v. H. Quelch 181
Rex v. Harbaksh Singh and others 101. 132
Rex v. John Edwards 459
Rex v. M. Sulman 416
Rex v. Munsha Singh 378
Rex v. N. Poignand 258
Rex v. N. W. Bowler 416
Rex v. R. W. Campbell ... 101
Rex v. Amar Singh... 297
Rex v. (S. M. P.) v. H. E. Jones 297
Rex v. Sadar Singh 297
Rex v. Sucha Singh and Amar Singh 459, 495
Rex v. W. H. Goulbourn 416. 459, 495
S. J. Powell v. Mrs. Catherine Agnes Powell 181
S. M. C. v. Shanghai Electric Construction Co. 334

U. S. COURT FOR CHINA

A. Abeles v. J. L. Cowen ... 192
American Manufacturing Co. of China, In Re the 133
American Sales Corpn. v. U. S. Shipping Board 132
Asia Life Insurance Co. v. W. R. Rice 22
Belgian Trading Co. v. Neuss, Hesslein & Co. 102
Chemische Fabrik Griesheim Elektron v. International Banking Corpn. 259
Chinese American Bank of Commerce v. F. A. Bowen ... 22
Dr. F. T. Kiang v. C. J. Kosel 22
E. Greenfield v. L. Slegman 132, 182
Emil S. Fischer v. C. Stone ... 181
Fur & Wool Trading Co. v. Andersen, Meyer & Co. 60, 260
General Accident, Fire & Life Assurance Corpn. v. Dr. Alfred H. Swan 60
Stewart, Crane, Inc., In re ... 102
Gun Kwei-long v. Carl Crow 298
Kingdom of Italy v. Robert Dollar Co. 60
Luk Hop Co. v. American Express Co 102
Nanyang Bros. Tobacco Co. v. Green Star Steamship Co. ... 22
U. S. v. A. P. Pattison ... 209
U. S. v. Arthur W. Smith ... 181
U. S. v. Dr. R. A. Thompson 133
U. S. v. D. W. McCabe ... 460
U. S. v. E. G. Hinde ... 22, 102, 133, 495
U. S. v. H. D. Roberts ... 496
U. S. v. J. Elmont, R. B. Libby and C. J. Johnson 60,
Reid's Ld., Inc., Affairs of ... 460
Russo-Asiatic Bank v. Max Wulfsohn & Co. 297
Yu Fong Steamship Co. v. Wm. Katz & Co. 210

NETHERLANDS CONSULAR COURT

Charges of Fraud Dismissed ... 460

JAPANESE CONSULAR COURT

Corrupt Consular Policemen ... 460

MIXED COURT

Amazing Charge of Torture ... 456
American Express Co.'s Suit ... 61
Ancestors' Bones, His 182
Armed Robbers, New Trial for 334
Armed Robbers Sentenced ... 418
Assault by Chinese Shoemaker, Alleged 496
Cabaret Arrest 298
Cargo Thefts, Audacious ... 102
Chileans and Extraterritorality 418, 460
Chivalrous Bagsnatcher 298
Counterfeit Bank Notes... ... 496
Court Procedure, Mixed ... 418
Dummy Pistols 210
Ex-Labour Leader Charged 134, 182
Frauds on Local Bank, Alleged 61
Kiangwan Racecourse Dispute, A 378, 496
Land Swindle, Ingenious ... 460
Laughter and Tears 61
Lottery Scheme or Kindness?... 210
New Year Tragedies 22
Obnoxious Porcelain Figures ... 210
Officialdom and Road Extension 334
Paul Regandaz Affair, The 134. 182, 260
Pilferage Evil on Wharves 182, 210, 418, 460
Pilferage of Cloth 61
Policeman's Plight, A 278
Rowarth's Amah Charged, Mrs. 378
Ship's Officer's Claim for Damages 103, 182
Theft of Chinese Bonds ... 60
Trade Marks, Alleged Imitations of ... 260, 334, 378, 418

LEADING ARTICLES

The North-China Herald.

ublished every Saturday evening.

PREPAID SUBSCRIPTION

(INCLUDING DELIVERY):

anghai ... ... Tls. 12 per annum
her parts of China „ 13 „

All communications should be addressed to the Secretary, NORTH-HINA DAILY NEWS & HERALD LD., to om all remittances should be made yable.

THE CONTROVERSY AT CANTON

Dec 29.

THE statement of Dr. Sun at-sen which we published sterday, touching the dispute er the Customs, brings mat- s one degree nearer to an en clash. In it, after re- ewing the course of events miliar to our readers, Dr. n says definitely that his Government (i.e., the Can-) has to-day issued an order to Inspector-General (a) to re- n at Canton or other places to designated all Customs re- nues collected within the terri- y of this Government and, er providing for a proportion- e share of the funds required the service of the foreign ligations charged on the Cus- s, to pay the same as may be dered by this Government: and) to refund and make good all ears of Customs surplus pay- e to the Government here since rch, 1920," latter being the date when previous payment to Canton its share of the Customs sur- s ceased. And Dr. Sun adds at, if the Customs offi- ls disobey, he shall replace en by others, following this ent with the ingenious argu- t that as reign obligations, including Boxer Indemnity, are secured the revenues and not on the ldings and other corporeal perties of the Chinese Mari- e Customs," can certainly be no concern the Foreign Powers what cials Dr. Sun chooses to in- l in those buildings. This tement is dated December It is curious that no news at the time of writing come ny development. A Hong- g telegram of December 24 that the French sailors had withdrawn from Shameen, news from the South has so quently proved badly mis- rmed that one must regard item with reserve. An- er message said that the sular Body at Canton had rmed Dr. Sun that they ld withdraw the gunboats as as he withdrew his threats. re apparently the matter nds.

Perhaps the most interesting t of Dr. Sun's statement— the part quoted above is but fulfilment of what he told editor of this paper that he nt to do, nearly four weeks —is his assertion that the lomatic Body in their tele- m to him of December 11, itted that treaty right has been conferred upon them to decide for what pose the Chinese Government l use funds which at the end each year shall remain at the posal of that Government after ice of the said loans and in- nity shall have been entirely vided for."

would be discourteous, to say least, to accuse Dr. Sun of quoting, besides that it ld be very silly of him to do so at such a juncture. But it would none the less be extremely interesting to know exactly what the Diplomatic Body did say, and we think it is important that they should tell us. However, they may not care about entering on a public war of words with the agile dialecticians of the South. If Dr. Sun Yat-sen were to be successful in keeping the Customs revenues or any portion of them for his Government, his example would immediately be followed by the leaders in every province, and practically the last stable piece of the machinery of China's national finances would be blown to pieces. It is, perhaps, a weak point in the Diplomatic Body's position that payments of surplus were made to Canton in 1919 and 1920, and after their suspension would probably have been renewed (at the end of 1920) had not the American Government vetoed it. The American Government's position was that, after foreign claims had been met, the Diplomatic Body should concern itself merely with the unconditional release of the surplus to the recognized Government of China. It is a pity that this attitude was not taken from the beginning. Whether the Powers should or should not recognize Peking is another question. But if they recognize any other Government than the one, as they would be doing if they handed the Customs surplus to Canton, they must recognize all, and there would follow the break up of the Customs mentioned above. In preserving these revenues and the Customs organization intact, the Diplomatic Body are undoubtedly acting in the interest of all the Chinese people.

One other aspect of this regrettable incident must be mentioned, in view of the violent attack recently made by a northern foreign newspaper upon the Hongkong Government for the part it is supposed to have played in the controversy. How far the writer expected to improve matters by "calling names" in this manner, he does not seem to have stopped to reflect. It is patent that Hongkong would be the first to suffer by any labour outbreak in Canton and must watch the situation with anxiety. But it certainly does not follow that Hongkong would deliberately go behind the back of the Diplomatic Body to "give it away." That would be a palpable disloyalty. It cannot, however, be ignored that there is a want of liaison between Hongkong and the Diplomatic Body, which did not exist in bygone years and ought not to exist now. To what extent this derives from the fact that Hongkong is under the Colonial Office and the British Legation under the Foreign: to what, that Hongkong is a single colonial administration, while the British Minister is but one of an international posse, we do not pretend to know. But the interests of both, as being wholly bound up in the affairs of China, are so largely identical, that it is of the utmost importance that both should be guided by the fullest mutual understanding.

THE A.D.C. AND ITS CRITICS

Dec. 31.

BEFORE touching on any other points in Mr. Wilkinson's article to-day we must emphatically dissociate ourselves from his attack on the writer of "Sharps & Flats." Even if the article appeared as a letter to the editor, when the latter takes no responsibility for opinions expressed, we should feel it necessary to make this disclaimer. In the case of a contributed article we are doubly bound to do so. "Concerto" will please himself as to whether he replies: but the gist of his remarks was surely nothing more than that he thought "Madame Sherry" unworthy of the A.D.C.'s steel (it is, by the way, allegedly a musical play and "Concerto" was thus perfectly within his rights in commenting on it) and that they might get something better. The "North-China Daily News" said much the same in the first place: it thought that excellent good work was put into a rotten piece. Where the bias and malice and "spiteful mudthrowing" comes in in saying so, we fail to see. As for "Fairplay," we seem to remember that his attacks were quite as much directed at this paper as at the A.D.C. We are not at liberty to disclose his identity, but we may say that Mr. Wilkinson is quite wrong in his assumptions and we are perfectly satisfied that the warmth of "Fairplay's" letters was due to genuine enthusiasm and not to ignoble motives.

It is a pity that Mr. Wilkinson has written in this vein. It cannot but strengthen an unfortunately prevailing opinion that, say what they may to the contrary, the A.D.C. do not like criticism. In an experience of very nearly seventeen years (three more than that of our contributor to-day) the present writer can recall very few occasions when an A.D.C. has been adversely criticized that there has not been a row about it. And always the same complaint, that the criticism is "not honest," "biassed." It is perhaps, inevitable in a still comparatively small community like Shanghai, that personal motives should be looked for in every disagreement. That extends to matters far beyond amateur theatricals. But we can honestly say that never, in the experience of the present staff, has the "North-China Daily News" allowed personal considerations to influence its comments, nor has it ever, consciously, opened its correspondence columns to letters actuated by private spite. It is, of course, impossible to be sure that that feeling has never played a part in the letter-writing. But every letter containing criticism of anybody or anything is scrutinized with the utmost care. No self-respecting newspaper would knowingly allow itself to be made a tool of, still less would it stoop to personal revenge on its own account.

With regard to Mr. Wilkinson's appeal to the box office as the best critic, the A.D.C. are certainly not the only theatrical organization in the world which might use such an argument, but it would not make a bad play into a good one. We know, of course, about Wagner's relying on the people to justify him, against the critics who slated him; and the people have done so and the critics been proved wrong. But for one play of which popular approbation is the judgment of all time, there are dozens in which box office earnings mean nothing but boodle for the management. Take musical comedy for instance: anybody of fifty years of age can remember the beginnings of it and the really beautiful stuff to which the freshness of the idea formerly gave birth. Gradually that idea became "played out," the wit grew stereotyped, the music thinner, display was called in to eke out invention; and now for some years past, theatrical managers at Home have been feverishly hunting about for some new mode of amusement. There is more money to be made out of "The Three Twins" and "Madame Sherry," perhaps, in places where there are not twenty theatres nightly within reach, and they are more obviously "amusing" than, let us say, "What Every Woman Knows." But the money they earn is not a proof of intrinsic excellence; it merely suggests that the average playgoer's taste is that of Polonius, that he goes to the theatre for distraction, and having seen, promptly forgets, and looks for something new. There is no question of highbrow or non-highbrow. That we are bored by "Madame Sherry" does not mean that we can enjoy nothing but Leoncavallo; we can also revel in the barbaric revelry of Sousa; that we find Calverly more amusing than "Comic Cuts" does not forbid our enjoyment of Joss Chiderdoss.

The strongest part of Mr. Wilkinson's article is his showing of what the A.D.C. have done for Shanghai, and other places as well. Herein the warmest tributes should be paid. It is a simple fact that without the A.D.C. the theatre could not be kept going, and not only is nobody in the Club a penny the better for it, but they have to put in a great deal of work; which, though possibly enjoyable on the whole, must often interfere with things they would at the moment sooner do. Moreover, in general excellence of acting and production the standard maintained by the A.D.C. is extraordinarily high, not only relatively to their status as amateurs, but actually. More and more difficult does it become to realize that the production is not the work of professional hands. And perhaps it is this which occasions the criticism. If the work of the A.D.C. were less finished, we should all be the readier to make excuses and there would be no angry letters to the paper. It is the normally high repute of the A.D.C. which causes people to complain when their talent is expended on something that appears slightly beneath them. As Smee says of the crocodile's pursuit of Captain Hook "It's a kind of a compliment." So might the A.D.C. think of their occasionally adverse critics.

ACCORDING to a telegraphic report from Mukden, Dr. Sun Yat-sen's representatives to Moscow, Messrs. Chow Chung-ping and Chu Yih-san, have now returned to China, after four months' stay in Russia. They called upon Marshal Chang Tso-lin and reported to him their negotiations with the Soviet Government.

HOLIDAY MOODS

Jan. 1.

ONCE more Christmas has come and gone. Services have been held in the churches, and festive gatherings in the homes; children have had a glorious time; gifts and greetings have been sent to friends; salaries been raised and bonuses distributed, or will be when times are better; in the hospitals the sick and the injured have been cheered; the ricsha mission and other worthy charities have been aided financially; there is a general spirit of hearty good will and to-day we shall be wishing each other a Happy New Year. For a few days, at least, Shanghai and the world in general seem very pleasant, even though we are not ready to affirm that the world is the best of all possible worlds.

But there are many in Shanghai, especially among the elderly of foreign birth, to whom the Christmas season does not bring unalloyed joy; they take part in all the festivities and are outwardly as gay as the rest, but when alone they are more than half inclined to agree with the philosopher who said that life would be endurable if it were not for its holidays. For at Christmas, more than at any other holiday, there is a recrudescence of the feeling that out here they are exiles in a strange land, where it is almost impossible to become perfectly adapted to the environment, and they long for London or for their native place, where they will be more at home and meet none but their own people on the streets. The feeling is all the stronger if their children have been sent home to be educated. What are the holidays without them? Then there are the intruding memories of the joyous Christmases spent with the friends of their youth and of all that has happened to them since. Some have prospered; others have met with adversity. Following Thackeray in his "Ballad of Bouillabaisse", it may be said that Fred has lost all his money in rubber and other speculations; Harry went the pace with a vengeance and is down and out; goodnatured George, formerly hail fellow well met with nearly everyone, is now a hard and sardonic hermit; William is a chronic invalid; John, generous to a fault when young, has become an old Scrooge whose one aim and object is to acquire money and hold it; over James and several others the grass is growing. Somehow or other the tide which at the flood carries to fame and fortune has been missed by most of them and it is now on the ebb and no one knows how soon they must put out to sea. Eheu fugaces, labuntur anni! The years glide away and take our friends from us and in Shanghai, for various reasons, it is hard to make new ones. Regretful memories of the past, uncertainties concerning the future, and present troubles and difficulties all combine to put the elderly in a pensive mood at the close of the year.

If the mood be indulged in rarely and care taken not to dampen the pleasure of others, no harm is done; but there is the peril that it may become habitual and that the ranks of the pessimists who live in the past and praise the past to the foreign debts. On many occasions, the Associations have exerted themselves to strive and maintain the Customs surplus for the service of domestic loans. Lately, news has been circulated to the effect that it will be endangered in certain ways, consequently great uneasiness has prevailed in the financial market. As you are directly responsible for the proper management and safe custody of the Customs surplus and indirectly for the payment of domestic loan bonds, we cannot but request you to fulfil your duty for the good of public trust.

In view of the uneasiness of opinion of the Associations and other bodies that the domestic loans have the prior claim on Customs surplus, Note should be allowed to appropriate it for any other use. As regards the over-dues from salt surplus and wine and tobacco taxes which should have been handed over to provide for the service of domestic loans, prompt steps should be taken so that the defaulted drawings of different loans can be made up. It is our sincere hope that you will jealously safeguard the Customs surplus and strive to maintain the standing of domestic loan bonds. You have the support of the entire public in this matter.

General Chamber of Commerce.
Shanghai Chinese Bankers Association.
Shanghai Native Bankers Association.

Shanghai, Dec. 29.

Chinese Protest Against Action of Local Bodies

The Chinese press reports that various local organizations are taking the General Chamber of Commerce, the Shanghai Bankers' Association and the Shanghai Native Bankers' Association to task for addressing their telegram to Sir Francis Aglen, Inspector General of Customs, in connexion with the use of the Customs surplus as security for domestic loans.

The organizations express their surprise at the action of the Chamber and its colleagues in sending this telegram while the Government continues to issue bonds in the absence of a legal Parliament which is the only body that can legally grant permission to do so.

"Respectable citizens," they state, "not only refuse to accept these bonds but they also oppose the circulation of all such. Now, some individuals, selfish and greedy, are uniting with an illegal government in securing the benefits from the issuance of these bonds. All such sinful persons should be punished severely up to the limits of the law, but unfortunately they are allowed to be free to circulate these bonds. The better class of people, if they do not desire openly to oppose the bonds certainly should not support them. You are doing the contrary, however, and are asking foreigners to come and support you and these bonds. What are you aiming at? How can you explain the fact that you are backing up an illegal government and illegal bonds, and the fact that you have invited foreigners to come to your assistance? There must be men with brains among you, and surely all of these do not support you in your action. This is evidenced in the affirmative by protests which have been addressed to you. . . . We trust, therefore, that you will see your way to cancelling your telegram without further delay; otherwise the people will be compelled to devise some method of treating you."

CHINA'S INDEMNITY PAYMENTS

The Waichiaopu's Argument on the 1901 Protocol: Metal or Currency: Possible Advantages of Fluctuations

Peking, Dec. 28.

The Waichiaopu sent a Note to the Ministers of the eight Powers signatory to the Protocol of 1901, last evening, of which the following is a summary:—

The Note acknowledges the receipt of the Powers' joint Notes of February 24 and November 5, 1923, and explains that the delay in answering is due to the necessity for comprehensive study and to the importance of the question involved. The two Notes in question expressed the unanimous opinion that "there is no doubt whatever that the Protocol of 1901, as well as the arrangement of 1905, provide in a manner absolutely clear and indisputable that the indemnity should be paid in gold, namely, for each Haikuan Tael due to each Power China ought to pay the sum in gold which is shown in Article VI as the equivalent of one tael.

Since the foregoing expression of opinion follows closely the language of the arrangement of 1905, the Chinese Government would have little hesitation in giving their concurrence if they felt sure of the precise meaning which the signatories attached to the phrase "in gold." Judging by the context of the arrangement of 1905 as well as Article VI of the Protocol, on which it is based, the Chinese Government are inclined to the view that the said phrase cannot be correctly constructed to mean anything but the respective gold currencies of the signatories in contrast with the Haikuan Tael, which is the silver struted to mean anything but the the indemnity is stipulated.

In other words, by gold is meant not gold metal but simply gold currency. This appears clear from Article 6 of the Protocol which, while declaring that the Haikuan Tls. 450,000,000 indemnity shall constitute a gold debt, fixes the equivalent of the tael in gold not as a certain quantity of gold metal but in the currencies of the signatory Powers issued on the basis of their respective gold standards. Examination of the available records of the discussion among the signatories which resulted in the drafting of Article VI leads to the same conclusion.

THE POWERS' CHOICE.

If there is any doubt as to what was intended to be the manner of payment, it was resolved by the arrangement of July 2, 1905, which, while declaring the indemnity a gold debt, settles definitely once and for all the precise mode of payment. It provides that: "China shall make these payments calculated on the basis set forth above which fixes the value of the Haikuan Protocol Tael in relation to the money of each country either in silver according to the price in the London market, or in gold bills, or in telegraphic transfers at the choice of each Power. China may obtain bills or telegraphic transfers as best suits her interests at any place or any bank at the lowest price, or by public tender, provided the payments in gold be made to each Power direct on the due date. It is understood that China is responsible for the exact payment of transfers and bills. Each Power in accepting the present proposals must inform the Chinese Government which of the three methods cited above is the one it chooses until the debt is extinguished."

On the same day, July 2, 1905, by separate Notes addressed to the Waiwupu, the signatories indicated their preference each for itself for one or another of the three stipulated methods of payment. The selections made were as follows:—

For telegraphic transfers in their respective currencies: Belgium, France, Great Britain, Holland, Italy and the United States.

Provisionally for payment in silver according to the price of silver in the London market (but in 1906 definitely selected payment by draft): Spain.

For telegraphic transfers sterling on London: Japan.

These selections were proposed and accepted with the express understanding that they were to remain effective "until the debt is extinguished." Ever since the conclusion of the arrangement of 1906 they have been faithfully applied to the respective countries without interruption and heretofore have given no occasion for difference of views in their application.

In the note of December 28, 1922 addressed to the Ministers of Belgium, France, Italy and Spain, to whom the notes under consideration were intended as a reply, the Chinese Government did not wish either to place a new interpretation on the language of Article VI which is made clear by the arrangement of 1905, or to propose a modification in the precise mode of payment stipulated in the said arrangement. It was, and remains, the intention of the Chinese Government to continue to make indemnity payments as heretofore, each according to their own selected method, in full conformity with Article VI as interpreted and amended by the arrangement of 1905.

AN UNACCEPTABLE VIEW.

The Chinese Government does not understand that, by the two Notes under reply, the Powers desire to propose that a radical change should be established in the mode of payment. They appear, however, to intimate that the telegraphic transfers should be so effected that the proceeds would not merely amount to the fixed sums in the respective currencies of the Powers but that they should also be gold specie or the equivalent thereof in value. If this be the view of the signatories, the Chinese Government do not feel able to accept it.

The Note then deals technically with exchange fluctuations which are constantly occurring and goes on:

"If therefore, specie is driven out of circulation by currency inflation, as in the case of francs, the money that can be so purchased must be the money obtainable on the market. Such fluctuations, unfavourable as they are for the time being, do not appear to constitute a practical ground for abandoning currency as the medium of payment and for adopting specie instead, for it would be scarcely possible to determine at what stage of fluctuations in the exchange rate currency should be abandoned in favour of specie."

The Note then argues that different application of the chosen method of payment is incompatible with the accepted practice of telegraphic transfer and also contrary to the intent and purpose of the arrangement of 1905. It recalls that no sooner had the first instalment of the indemnity been paid than difference of opinion arose with regard to the precise nature and extent of the obligation which China had assumed under Article VI. The controversy was brought about by the unexpected rise in the gold exchange rate which caused a deficit in respective sums in gold currencies though China paid the stipulated amount in Haikuan Taels.

QUESTION OF FLUCTUATIONS.

China maintained that her total obligation was expressly limited to Hk. Tls. 450,000,000, with interest at 4 per cent., in the bond she signed and delivered to the Diplomatic Body. For nearly three years the Chinese Government have declined either to sign fractional bonds in gold or to make up the deficit on account of payment in silver. It was only after the Powers had subsequently agreed definitely to fix the future mode of payment applicable "till the debt is extinguished" that China consented to sign the fractional bonds stated in their respective currencies and, in addition, to pay Tls. 8,000,000 as compensation for loss in gold exchange for the years 1902 to 1904. The result was the arrangement of 1905 and the Powers made their selections on that day. China accepted the arrangement of 1905 and with it risks fluctuation of the exchange rate monthly and yearly because the Chinese Government understood that, while they might thus incur losses, they might also at times gain thereby. The Note cites the years in which fluctuations favoured China or the Powers concerned, giving details of the principal variations during 140 months.

The Note concludes that, in view of the foregoing, the Chinese Government is of the opinion that the word "gold" in Article VI and in the arrangement of 1905 cannot reasonably be construed to mean anything other than the currencies of the signatory Powers issued on the basis of their respective gold standards and that whatever exchange prevails at present or is likely to prevail in the future, favourable or unfavourable to China as compared with the Protocol rates, it cannot be considered a valid ground for placing a new interpretation on Article VI or for proposing a radical departure from the mode of payment selected by the signatories in accordance with the said arrangement.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

CHINESE CUSTOMS RETURNS

Comparatively Small Increase in Revenue Despite Five Per Cent. Import Tariff

Peking, Jan. 3.

The Maritime Customs revenue for 1923 totalled Haikuan Tls. 63,378,000, which at the average exchange of 3s. 5¾d. equals £11,025,100.

It will be noted that, although the effective five per cent. import tariff was being enforced for practically the whole year, the revenue increased by only Tls. 4,744,000 on the previous record collection of 1922, while as a result of the drop in the average exchange from 3s. 9d. in 1922 to 3s. 5¾d. in 1923, the gold equivalent of the 1923 collection was only £37,600 more than the collection in 1922.

All ports show increases except Hankow.

The revenue of the Native Customs under the Inspector-General amounted to Tls. 4,480,-000, equalling £779,330, an increase of Tls. 162,000 as compared with 1922.

All foreign loans and indemnities secured on the Customs, including the Reorganization Loan, have been met or fully covered.

DOMESTIC LOAN SERVICE.

Of the domestic loan obligations indirectly secured on the Customs, the service of which is under the Inspector-General, those of the 3rd, 4th and 11th years were fully met. The revenue funds, however, did not permit the service of the consolidated debt to be fully maintained. While all interest payments were punctually made according to schedule, funds have been sufficient to allow only one loan drawing during the year and redemption payments are now approximately $7,720,000 in arrear.

RETURNS OF PRINCIPAL PORTS.

The following are the Customs collections for the principal ports:—

	Total. Tls.	Increase. Tls.
Harbin	1,113,000	42,000
Antung	1,566,000	258,000
Dairen	5,690,000	232,000
Tientsin and Chinwangtao	7,263,000	218,000
Kiaochow	2,659,000	431,000 (Decrease)
Hankow	4,285,000	230,000 (Increase)
Shanghai	23,904,000	2,269,000
Swatow	1,491,000 (approx.)	149,000 ((approx.)
Canton	3,842,000	577,000
Newchwang	1,178,000	213,000

—Reuter's Pacific Service.

PEKING'S GREAT UNPAID

Peking, Dec. 28.

A special meeting of the Cabinet is being held this afternoon to allocate funds for the various ministries before the end of the year. It is believed that no distribution will be made in favour of the staffs of organizations which have been abolished.—Reuter.

The Ministry of Finance has requested the Cabinet to take action in suppressing lotteries throughout the country, no matter in what form they are issued or under what pretentious name.

PEKING'S SEARCH FOR A PREMIER

Five-Province Peace Alliance for East China

Peking, Dec. 28.

Mr. Sun Pao-chi, being disinclined to interview the political wire-pullers or to intervene in the disputes among the military leaders, is expected to abandon his former intention to take up the Premiership, which means that the present acting Cabinet will carry on till the end of the lunar year.

It is reported on good authority that Messrs. Sun Pao-chi, Wang Ta-hsieh and Wang Chia-hsiang have issued a circular telegram to the Tuchuns and Civil Governors of Kiangsi, Kiangsu, Fukien, Anhui and Chêkiang, advising them to form a five-province alliance for preservation of peace and avoidance of strife amongst their number. It is also reported that the President has telegraphed to General Chi Hsieh-yuan instructing him to do his utmost to maintain peace in the Yangtze Valley, while the Military Council has instructed General Sun Chuang-fang to cease military activities on the Chêkiang border.

Dec. 30.

The sudden withdrawal of the Ministers of Justice and Communications and the Chief Secretary of the Presidency from the Constitutional Party, of which they were members of the Board of Directors, has aroused considerable speculation among the vernacular papers.

In this connexion, Reuter's correspondent learns that General Wu Pei-fu telegraphed to the President yesterday saying that if the Government could not suppress the Constitutional Party it should at least insist on all Government officials withdrawing from it, thus leaving Members of Parliament to control that body.

General Wu's action may reveal the influence of the Tientsin faction. If so, this is the first overt step they have taken in support of Mr. Wu Ching-lien.—

The vernacular newpapers devote considerable space to the prospect of Dr. W. W. Yen accepting nomination to the Premiership on the ground that he is the only outstanding politician likely to pass Parliament.

Dr. Yen's views in that connexion are not known owing to his absence at the Western Hills.

Mr. Wang Ko-ming has apparently arranged to tide over the New Year financially. The papers therefore do not expect a new Cabinet immediately but foresee a new Government early in 1924. —Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE PARLIAMENT.

Jan. 2.

A mandate issued last night fixes April 14 for the preliminary elections for the House of Representatives and May 14 for the final elections. It explains that as the term of the present Parliament expired on October 10 a new Parliament must be elected. —Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE FIGHTING AT CANTON

Dr. Sun's Generals at Loggerheads

Canton, Jan. 2.

The latest attempt by General Chen Chiung-ming's forces to recapture Shêklung has failed.

Mr. Jue Chock-man's forces are fighting those of General Chan Chak near Macao. Both are subordinates of Dr. Sun Yat-sen and the dispute has arisen over the collection of the taxes on the sand-fields at Chinshan.

The Customs situation is unchanged. The Cantonese believe that the British Consul-General, Sir James Jamieson, should postpone his leave of absence in order to assist in bringing about a compromise on the matter, as they consider that he is friendly to the Cantonese.

The Japanese Consul-General, Mr. Amau, becomes the Senior Consul upon Sir James Jamieson leaving.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

From all this welter of fear and hope, anger, boastfulness and deprecation, the only obvious conclusion is that the world is still in a state of most uncertain transition, with signs of a general misgiving that the much advertised new ways and new ideas are not so trustworthy as the old. Clearly that thought is very prevalent in China. The determination of the gentry of Kiangsu and Chêkiang, for the second time in a very few months, that there shall not be war between their respective leaders, is most significant, leading us to hope that the Chinese people are rousing themselves to take their magistrates to task as they have done again and again in their history when conditions become unendurable. The Republic in China and the war in Europe achieved in different ways the same paradox of producing in the same people two entirely self-contradictory characteristics. They inculcated a new sense of patriotism and the detestable doctrine of self-assertion and self-expression. The revolutionists in China must be given the credit in many instances of being inspired with a high desire to improve her position in the world; but that improvement had to be according to their own pet shibboleths and with themselves in the chief places. In Europe young men went into the unconceivable horror of the trenches with the noblest self-sacrifice and returned, for their brief spells of leave, to have a good time, marry recklessly and generally behave as if there were no to-morrow; while the girls who sang songs in darkened munition factories, while aeroplanes dropped bombs about them, developed an equal indifference for all the old restrictions. When the armistice came, patriotism cooled but self-assertion held sway. Now this phase begins to give place to the older sense of mutual responsibility, which is indeed the oldest and most unvaried lesson of history. Already England has begun to learn her lesson through the wretchedness and afflictions of the peace. For that reason, perhaps, a Labour Government is not seriously to be feared. We do not care about breaking things to pieces in England and the recent election showed convincingly that the nation will not endure speculative legislation.

By far the most interesting country in the world to watch at the present time is America. The burden of that extraordinary book "The Letters of Walter Page" was that there must be the closest community of thought and purpose between the English-speaking peoples of the world. He laboured for this and unceasingly through all his embassy in London; he lectured to President Wilson on it, during his last visit to Washington, and thereby lost the President's friendship: he found an undoubted response among thousands of his fellow-countrymen; only in Government circles did he encounter apparently total indifference to the issues involved in the world war; and whereas other nations were under the impression that President Wilson was always carefully educating the American people up to the point of entering the war, the inference from Page's book is all the other way round, that it was the people who finally pushed their officials into the arena. If this reading of Page's letters is correct, then we cannot but think that since the war, American politicians have swung back to precisely that insular view of national affairs with which he battled so hard. Telegraphic summaries are not a very accurate guide to what men say and Mr. Hoover's past record would not suggest that he could really be guilty of the peculiar heartlessness of the saying attributed to him, that he suggests that America can maintain her prosperity in spite of the state of Europe. But it cannot be ignored that since the war the actions of American politicians would seem to have been inspired chiefly by a desire to steer clear of the affairs of the rest of the world. Against that spirit, so contrary to the broad outlook of Walter Page, it is inevitable that the strong Puritan strain in the American character will sooner or later assert itself. There is no nation in which, among individuals, the acquisition of wealth carries with it so keen a sense of the duties of charity as the American, as witness the benefactions of the Rockefeller trust, of the Red Cross and the countless endowments of educational and philanthropic institutions. It is but a question of time before this spirit takes effect on the policy of the nation as a whole and the unequalled prosperity which has come to the United States must surely hasten that time.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

South China Pirates

As more information comes to hand, the task of dealing effectively with the pirates of south China presents an ever increasing magnitude. The pirates' organization seems to be so complete as to be the work of a master brain, and hence it is little wonder that the authorities have so far been baffled in their attempts to lay the band by their heels. As an instance of the extent to which the organizattion is brought it is mentioned that the men who not so long ago carried out the jewel robbery aboard the str. Sunning are said to have taken their operations as far north as Amoy where a steam launch has disappeared entirely. All the circumstances point to the fact that she has been made away with by the band which usually works in the Canton delta. Whether the launch will turn up at some later date, found perhaps as a derelict, or whether it will be converted into a piratical craft to assist the band in their further exploits, remains to be seen, and all that is yet known is that another instance of great daring has been added to the record of the band. The remedy lies in a forcible and effective demonstration against the village in which the pirates take refuge. In the recent case of the Hydrangea the outlaws got away into Bias Bay, just north of Mirs Bay. There they probably are still. Strong measures in this locality would have a most salutary effect on piracy all through the south.

Dirigible v. Aeroplane

The unfortunate loss of the French dirigible Dixmude is certain to revive the controversy about the correct lines of aerial development. With prophetic instinct Jules Verne started it in his "Clipper of the Clouds," and events since the War have brought it into great prominence. The frequency of accidents to aeroplanes while engaged on passenger service naturally directed attention to the great possibilities of the Zeppelin type of airship, and when the British-built R4 made her epoch-making flight across the Atlantic opinion was more and more inclined to the belief that commercially the dirigible had the most in its favour. Then, however, came a series of catastrophes to airships. There was the disaster attending the craft built in England for the U.S. Government, followed by the collapse of an Italian-built dirigible in America, and the loss of the Dixmude is but the latest of an unfortunate series. In the circumstances it will only be natural if opinion veers strongly in the other direction. So far as engines of war are concerned there can be no two opinions as to the comparative efficiency of the types. Although during the War one Zeppelin made a very prolonged cruise, as far as Arabia or Egypt, the vulnerability of these airships was very early demonstrated, and ultimately aerial attacks were practically confined to aeroplanes. Moreover, their radius of action was steadily expanding, and only the armistice saved Berlin from a first-class bombardment by Handley-Pages which would have shown at how great a distance from their base aeroplanes could operate.

India's Opposite Phases

Telegrams such as those of today surely show India as a land of irreconcilable oppositions and contrasts. On the one hand there is the Swaraj element, chauvinist in the extreme and opposed to everything British and apparently a good deal that is pure Indian: on the other side of the picture is a new feud between Indian religious sects—the Moslems and the Hindus—because of a dead pig having been found in a mosque. If anything were needed to show the general artificiality of the Swaraj movement it is the incidence of these things at one and the same time. The Moslems and Hindus of Howrah, where the mosque incident took place, have become infinitely more excited over it than over the refusal of the Swaraj leaders to accept Government office under a British Viceroy, and they obviously do so for the reason that the political opposition to the British Raj is a minor concern when placed alongside certain religious observances dear to their hearts. A study of Indian conditions shows this to have been the case all throughout the Swaraj agitation. The Sikhs, for instance, gave little thought to the question of Home Rule, but their two sects, the Akalis and the others waged a bitter contest which had its climax in the Nankana massacre. Here we see what its supporters would have us believe is a great national movement for liberty, but none of the usually accepted features attend it. Religious differences are not for a single moment sunk in pursuit of the aim, as has been the case with other countries and peoples, but they are even accentuated. And if the Swaraj leaders have so little influence, there ought to be an end to pandering to them which has largely been the policy since 1919.

French Elections

No time is being wasted in getting on with the business of the new year. Following the various changes which we expect at this juncture in the staffs and personnel of firms, comes the customary notification that the French Municipal elections are at hand, polling day being fixed for January 16. Two French members conclude their term of office on this occasion, MM. P.Le Bris and A. Tulasne, and equally two foreign members, Messrs. M. Speelman and H. J. Sheridan must present themselves to the electors should they wish to continue their service. There has been no time so far to observe the state of public interest in municipal affairs, and remembering how at times in the past whole sections of the community have displayed an utter indifference, there is every reason to keep the matter in the forefront during the next fortnight. Two years ago only about 270 people out of a total of over 1,000 electors took the trouble to poll, and previous to that, when the burning question of tramways and electric light was before the public the record attained was less than 500. Last year, however, there was a decided improvement, the number voting being in the neighbourhood of 560. It was felt at that time that candidates might come forward with expensive schemes for the Concession involving ultimate heavy increases in the rates, and a hint that if those who stood for economy were not adequately supported difficulties were certain to arise, brought the ratepayers out in such numbers. We may trust that the same healthy spirit will be shown this year, for nothing can be worse for a community than the absence of interest as has so often been seen in the past here.

Shanghai's Revenue

Among the details of Customs revenue published to-day the most important so far as we are concerned is that referring to Shanghai. The total collection of duty for 1923 amounted to Tls. 23,904,000 as against Tls. 21,600,000 in 1922, an increase of over Tls. 2,000,000. but unfortunately the figures thus given are by no means illuminative of the actual state of trade. While 1922 was a bad year, the impression is general that 1923 has been worse, and there is no doubt that the Customs revenue would have shown its real state but for the fact that the "effective five cent." tariff came into operation about the end of its first quarter. The collection for the first quarter was Tls. 5,625,000, but though this was over the quarterly average of 1922. which was Tls. 5,400,000, there were signs of a heavy falling off, and only the advent of the "effective" tariff rescued the revenue from a heavy retrograde movement. If, as some authorities do, we put the old tariff as low as two and a half per cent., its continuance would have meant a drop of millions in the duty collection, and so apparently the increased rate came none too soon to save the situation. As regards the 1922 figures it is worth while to quote Mr. H. J. Brett's remarks in his report as Commercial Counsellor where he says:—

> It is difficult to reconcile the imposing figures shown in the Customs returns with the undoubted fact that from the point of view of the merchant in China, whether foreign or native, the year was one of the worst ever experienced, and that most of the firms carrying on a general import and export business incurred losses, or, at the best, just paid expenses. The explanation usually given in reply to inquiries on this point is that a very large proportion of the goods passed through the Customs in 1922 represents cargo arrived during the previous year, but detained in bond owing to the refusal of the consignee to take delivery.

It boils down to this, that whereas the trade of 1921 saved Shanghai's revenue in 1922, the new tariff saved it in 1923.

Russia's Politics

The political situation in Russia develops slowly as yet. A couple of weeks ago the news was given out that the growing difference of opinion in Moscow had caused the formation of Centre, Right and Left Parties, and the belief then expressed that this was a sign of abandoning pure Communism is borne out by the remarks of the leader of the British trade mission which has just returned from the country. He points out that the reign of Communism is definitely at an end and that a gradual return to Capitalism may now be looked for. When in addition we learn that the followers of Lenin and Trotsky, once a pair of inseparables, are in opposing camps, we may begin to hope. The idea that Capital is fundamentally a pernicious thing and that its functions are wicked was bound to be exploded in time, especially as people begin to find how much they suffered from its absence. It has required much physical anguish to drive this home to the Russian Communists, but in other parts of the world the truth has been quicker in penetrating, possibly because of Russia's plight. Mr. Ramsay Macdonald during the General Election seized upon a very convenient opportunity to drop his anti-capitalistic ideas, and it must be admitted that he did it very adroitly indeed, in a fashion that must have given the least possible offence to the extremists of his party. If present indications are correct Russia may now be expected to emerge a sane State, largely free from the evils of both Communism and autocracy.

The Soochow Creek

In our article on the Soochow Creek in this issue reference is made to the delay which its deplorable condition is causing to shipping. It ought to be added that this and kindred effects are imposing upon Shanghai a very much higher cost of living than need be. Since Manchuria made the export of its grain to Shanghai a matter of the greatest difficulty, the flour mills here have largely worked with Canadian and American wheat, and the difficulty experienced by the mills situated on the creek is simply appalling. In ordinary circumstances the wheat would be loaded direct from the steamer into lighters and sent up the creek to the mills, arriving there within a few hours. But now days elapse before the supplies reach their destination. The mills have thus to pay heavy demurrage on either lighter or steamer or both, and even then it is matter of the greatest difficulty for them to get the grain which is nedded. This demurrage adds to the cost of the flour which the consumer buys, and there is no hope of eliminating this item. To land grain at one of the wharves, load it on carts or lorries and transport it by land would be uneconomical. These mills are having a very bad time just now, while others, doing a different kind of business, are even worse off and a few have had to shut down. In exactly the same way as with grain, market produce from the country is held up so long that its price must necessarily be inflated, and so it comes about that because of an acamedic obstinacy we and our Chinese fellow residents suffer in respect of the high cost of living.

Bullet Proof

An American gentleman, Mr. Pierpont Potter, is said to be engaged in a suit for the equivalent of £4,000, damages resulting from a bullet wound. He was a salesman engaged in selling bullet-proof waistcoats, and such was his faith in them that he put the garment on with the object of demonstrating it to a customer, allowed himself to be fired at, and as the bullet went through the armour-plating he became a casualty. Hence his action in the New York courts for damages. This bullet-proof waistcoat business is a sad one, and we hardly know whether to sympathize with Mr. Potter or not. There was a type of soldier who left England during the war and crossing the Channel had another fancy sort of waistcoat which could be inflated should he be torpedoed and sent afloat. These people were very proud of them, and no doubt some of them were useful at times, but it was a source of immense satisfaction to the common or garden soldier to cross without such precautions and feel that a similar amount of money, spent on a theatre with a decent-looking girl at his side, had been so much more profitable. The same compleat soldier would generally also have a bullet-proof waistcoat, such as the aforesaid Mr. Potter apparently tried to sell, and there was unholy joy if he got a bit of shell in the leg or the face or some other spot where waistcoats do not fit. Hence sympathy with Mr. Potter on the part of infinite numbers will certainly be small.

disparagement of the present and who therefore fail to take full advantage of its opportunities, will be increased. "The world is going to the dogs, sir; it is not at all what it was in my young days." What are we to say when this stage is reached? Sympathy is out of place. The easy optimism which says, "keep smiling", only exasperates. Browning's lines, "Grow old along with me, the best is yet to be," etc., true as they are, sound too much as if the world belongs to the old, which is not convincing, neither can mankind be persuaded that old age is better than youth.

O for one hour of youthful joy!
Give back my twentieth spring,
I'd rather be a bright-haired boy,
Than reign a gray-beard king.

The Chinese may think differently, for with them old age has its advantages, and the past is reverenced, unduly so, for it has done much to hinder their progress. But among Occidentals old age with its limited personal experience does not count for much in these days of rapidly advancing knowledge. As long as the world is young—and it always will be so until children cease to come into it—youth with its hopes will carry the day. The elderly are wise who range themselves with the young. In the story of the Infancy it is remarkable that outside the two families immediately concerned, and the poor shepherds who may have been of any age, those mentioned were old people—the rich and wise sages still searching for a completely satisfying philosophy of life: an old man who foresaw there would be much overturning and sorrow but was convinced that the world held a new hope and so with mind at rest was ready to depart: and a very aged widow whose heart was stirred to joy by the events she was witnessing. Evidently the hope of Christmas belongs as much to the elderly as to the young. So at the threshold of another year, we wish happiness and prosperity to our readers, young and old. The world may seem to be in a bad way at present, but progress has always been like the going out and coming in of the tide and before long there must be a great change for the better.

RUSSIANS: CHILDREN AND OTHERS

Jan. 3.

HAVING been very recently before the public in the guise of a beggar, the "North-China Daily News" hesitates to importune readers further. But it cannot refrain from calling attention to the letter from Mrs. Desnitzky-Stone, which appears on another page to-day. Directly concerned with the orphans under Mme. Dieterichs's care, it indirectly presses the mute claim of all Russian refugee children, at the time of the approaching Russian Christmas, January 7. The compassion that both cases arouse is wholly devoid of the controversial aspects which have disfigured other discussion concerning the refugees. It would be impossible to imagine an institution more free from political taint than Mme. Dieterichs's orphanage. She has collected these children as if they were lost dogs and, greatly daring, has made herself responsible for them with a bravery worthy of all admiration. What they may do in self-support they are only too anxious to do; and somehow they struggle along. It would surely be pleasant to brighten their Christmas. Even more urgent is the appeal of the Russian children who come under the notice of the Refugee Relief Advisory Committee. This Committee has a soup kitchen where meals are served to the most necessitous, but its resources are very slender. A few days ago we were told that the Committee hoped to be able to do something for Russian children when their Christmas came, but the utmost hope did not apparently go beyond giving each of them a bit of bread and an orange, in addition to the usual broth. Here again one is sure that Shanghai would like to make the children's feast a little less that of the "stony-hearted stepmother." Mme. Desnitzky-Stone's address is given with her letter: she is the channel for Mme. Dieterichs's children. For the others, any contribution sent to the Refugee Relief Advisory Committee, 5A North Soochow Road, will be greatly welcomed and well used.

Turning to the larger question of Russian refugees generally we are glad to learn that good news has been received by the Committee just mentioned from the party of forty-six Russians whom it repatriated in the latter part of October. The latest report of them is from Omsk, some already in their old homes, others well on the way thither. It is interesting to mention that one man had no intention of going to Siberia. He merely wished to take advantage of the cheap trip offered to get to Harbin; and when he found there was no means of evading the guard set over the party and that he had to go on to Manchuli, he was much upset. His father, still in Shanghai, invaded the offices of the Advisory Committee, denouncing its members in no measured terms. Later on, however, a letter came from the son, written from Irkutsk, full of praise of the manner in which he had been treated by the Soviet officials and bidding his father to tell all refugees to come back to their homes as soon as possible. Unfortunately, the refugees have no money nor has the Refugee Relief Advisory Committee. One group of about fifty men from the ill-fated Eladorado recently managed to get as far as Changchun, going viâ Dairen, whence the Chinese authorities promptly pushed them on to Manchuli. But the Japanese officials at Dairen will not allow any more Russians to go that way, without a guarantee from the Relief Committee in Shanghai, which the latter is in no position to give.

There appears no doubt that the influx of refugees is at last subsiding. Until recently they were continually arriving by rail, river and sea, and from every conceivable direction, Hankow, Hongkong and Manila as well as from the north. Partly this was due to the breaking up of the concentration camps at Kirin and Gensan, whence the refugees were pushed out to go whither they would and, it would seem, with nowhere but Shanghai where they were not moved on. These supplies appear to be coming to an end and we do not understand that there are any further refugees from Russian territory direct: indeed there are already signs of the tide setting back to Siberia from Harbin. Can nothing be done to stimulate this movement? It is to be emphasized that the entire responsibility for the Russian refugees has been in private hands. From the beginning the Consular Body's attitude has been that the refugees ought never to have come here and could not be recognized; from this the Municipal Council naturally took its cue: and, as no adequate measures were taken to prevent the Russians from coming, it was left to private charity to stop their presence from being recognized in the unpleasant form of corpses on the streets. Actual experience has shown that the Russians can, and are willing to be sent to their homes, and if official agencies were exerted to assist their movement, we are certain that public subscriptions would supplement them. The greatest credit is due to the Refugee Relief Advisory Committee for all it has done. But the trouble has been that no finality to the work was visible. Now, however, a definite solution has appeared and it is not too much to urge that the authorities who allowed the Russians to come here will exert themselves to get them out.

FIRST OFFENDERS

Jan. 4.

AT a recent meeting of London magistrates there was an interesting discussion concerning the proper punishment of youthful delinquents and those brought before courts of justice for the first time. Less than a century ago, sentences of imprisonment in these cases were very common, even for comparatively slight offences. Readers of the Christmas stories of Dickens will remember Alderman Cute, the magistrate, saving to the poor heroine in "The Chimes," "You are going to be married. You will quarrel with your husband and come to be a distressed wife. Now I give you fair warning that I have made up my mind to put distressed, wives down. So don't be brought before me. You'll have children—boys. These boys will grow up bad, of course, and run wild in the streets, without shoes and stockings. Mind, my young friend! I'll convict them summarily, every one, for I am determined to put boys without shoes and stockings down." By "putting down," he meant imprisonment. No wonder it was taken for granted in those days that the children in the slums of large cities would "grow up bad," for the poverty and depravity of their surroundings, as depicted by Dickens, were appalling. When they fell into the clutches of the law, as many of them soon did, they received little mercy. No doubt the magistrates and judges who inflicted severe sentences were just and as humane as the circumstances seemed to them to warrant, yet it must be admitted there has been a great improvement in the administration of justice since their day. Human nature is better understood: it is not incorrigibly evil. The proper object of all punishment is more clearly discerned: it should not be wholly retributive and deterrent, but disciplinary and reformative. Hence at the London meeting of magistrates it seems to have been the unanimous opinion that young offenders, speaking generally, should be placed on probation and not sent to prison.

From this conclusion few will dissent. But it does not necessarily follow that all first offenders should be placed on probation in countries where law and order are not as firmly established as in England. One of our correspondents has complained of the sentence of one month's imprisonment passed on a youth guilty of obtaining money by means of a worthless cheque. Perhaps the matter has not been considered in all its bearings. During the discussion in London, in recommending clemency in the treatment of first offenders, the phrase, "consistent with the safety of the State" was used more than once. This proviso must be the paramount consideration, not individual interests, in deciding when the severity of the law may be relaxed. "In the scheme of nature, the welfare, and even the existence, of the individual, count for nothing in comparison with the preservation of the stock; so, in social animals, the welfare and even the existence of the individual count for nothing in comparison with the preservation of the community." All offences are to be judged from this point of view. As a corollary, when the State is in peril, certain offences are punished heavily which can be lightly dealt with when the circumstances are different. During a great war, a young soldier, perhaps a mere boy, exhausted by the hardship and strain of the battlefield, falls asleep while on sentry duty. He is sentenced to death. The sentence is merciless, but grim necessity demands the sacrifice in the interests of the army and the nation. So it is that at different times and places, forgery, the passing of base money, horse-stealing, sheep-stealing, have been capital offences, because these acts were deemed dangerous to the welfare of the community. Apply this to the case cited by our correspondent. Shanghai is a business community and the offences it can least condone are those which render business difficult or impossible, such as forgery, theft, fraudulent statements, and so forth. Moreover, offences of this kind on a larger scale, such as graft, robbery, misappropriation of public funds, bribery, and official "squeezing," are ruining China. Foreigners friendly to her should advocate the stern punishment of this class of offences, whether the culprits be high or low, rich or poor. Probably nearly all business men in Shanghai, foreign and Chinese, will agree that a month's imprisonment for passing a worthless cheque is not a severe sentence.

At the same time, there are many Chinese guilty of petty or minor offences, who could be wisely punished otherwise than by imprisonment. In England there are certain offences still punishable with the "cat" or lash. In Chinese yamêns many petty offenders are beaten. Why not try corporal chastisement more freely in Shanghai for small offenders? Some years ago at a foreign summer resort in China the Chinese magistrate kept good order by the use of the bamboo. Some good people objected to corporal punishment and the magistrate abandoned it. Later, the same good people came to him complaining of the increased thieving and gambling. "What am I to do?" said the harassed official. "You will not allow me to use the most effective remedy; to fine or send these offenders to prison will do no good." To quote a very old saying, "Spare the rod and spoil the child." In mental and moral development many of the Chinese are children, and should be treated accordingly. This principle is of wide application. In Lord Macartney's journey to Jehol the cook was bamboo'd by the mandarin in charge because the meat was tainted. We dare not suggest that in many a household an occasional beating of the cook, "boy," and other servants when they were bad and excessively troublesome would clear the moral atmosphere; but distracted and tired housekeepers would probably welcome it. Lastly, as criminals are made not born, it is far better to try to remove the poverty, depravity and ignorance which lead the young into criminal ways—tremendous and baffling as the task may be in Chinese cities—than to wait until a crime has been committed and then deplore the punishment.

THE WORLD LOOKING TO THE NEW YEAR

Jan. 5.

ANY philosopher could moralize on the New Year anticipations of the different countries as revealed in our telegrams a couple of days ago, but he would find it hard to extract a satisfactory moral therefrom. Berlin riots uproariously: for foreigners her festivities are too costly, but the Berliners seem to have plenty of money to spend. Can the moral be that it pays best not to pay one's debts? Meanwhile Paris announces that the situation in the Ruhr is so much improved that General Degoutte has been able to reduce the army of occupation and France has leisure to arrange an alliance with Czecho-Slovakia, which greatly perturbs the chancelleries of Europe. Are we to infer that a policy of "force force to the uttermost" triumphs in the long run? Certainly Ireland's case seems to indicate as much. A little while ago she had twelve thousand prisoners, mostly hunger-striking. They dropped this device because it made no impression on their gaolers and now there are but two thousand prisoners, and gunmen have put away their guns, and Free State ministers go about unguarded. America reports a state of unparalleled wealth. Russia begins to lift her head again: the end of the nightmare of Communism appears in sight. The Indian Nationalist Council inflicts a smart snub on Swaraj, implying that even the Babu begins to learn a little sense. Only from England comes a humbler tone. The days are dark, the past year's financial record is not encouraging; but still the King is confident "that, with God's help, the British, true to their great traditions, will face the outcome of the difficulties which are still confronting us at the close of a decade which, though memorable in glorious achievement, has been beset by much trial and suffering."

KIANGSU-CHEKIANG SITUATION

War Rumours Said by Wu Pei-fu To Be Exaggerated: Vigorous Denials All Round

According to the "Sinwanpao" a number of leading Kiangsu gentry have telegraphed to Marshal Tuan Chi-jui, the Anfu leader, urging him to mediate between Marshal Chi Shieh-yuan, Military Governor of Kiangsu and High Military Inspecting Commissioner of Kiangsi, Kiangsu and Anhui, and Gen. Lu Yung-hsiang, Director-General for the Reorganization of Military Affairs in Chêkiang.

The "Shanghai Journal of Commerce" reports that Marshal Wu Pei-fu, the Loyang warlord, in an interview, stated that the Kiangsu-Chêkiang situation was greatly exaggerated and had arisen because of the spread of rumours. He says, "I and Gen. Lu are connected with each other: he is my teacher, and I will not begin war on him. Without my permission, Gen. Sun Chuan-fang (Tuli of Fukien) will not dare to start warfare against Chêkiang." The "Journal," in summing up this statement, says, "So far as Marshal Wu is concerned, there will be no fighting in east China; if there is, it will be due entirely to Marshal Chi Shieh-yuan, of Kiangsu, as neither Wu nor President Tsao Kun desires fighting."

Gen. Lu and Gen. Chang Tsai-yang, Civil Governor of Chêkiang, have issued a telegram stating that they will not fight with other provinces unless they are first attacked and then they will naturally have to defend themselves.

MARSHAL CHI'S DENIALS.

In an interview with Mr. Sheng Chu-shu, manager of the Bank of Communications in Shanghai, and Mr. Sze Liang-zay, general manager of the "Shun-pao." Marshal Chi Shieh-yuan is reported by the "Kuo Wen News Agency" to have made the following (translated) statements:

When the proposed treaty between this province and Chêkiang was first shown to me, I could easily have declined to sign it, but I did not. Instead I personally added a paragraph which showed my desire for peace. This was that the treaty should be published and copies handed to the Consuls. If I did not desire peace I would not have added this paragraph. Then there is talk of my instigating Kiangsi and Anhui to attack Chêkiang and cause that province to suffer. This is a lie. I have no desire nor right to interfere with peace in this part of the country. If I could influence Anhui and Kiangsi after they signed the peace agreement, surely I could have influenced them long ago, so that they would not have entered into treaties of peace with Chêkiang. Really, I did my best to make my colleagues in Anhui and Kiangsi sign these treaties. So everybody will see immediately that statements to the contrary are lies and are without foundation. I have repeatedly announced my intentions and attitude towards Chêkiang, and now I once more sincerely tell you that, since the treaty, there has been no ground for warfare between Kiangsu and Chêkiang and it cannot and must not be brought about. I emphasize this—Kiangsu troops shall not cross their borders by a single step. If you do not believe me, you can ask the people of the two provinces from time to time to investigate and report to you. If there is warfare, from whence will the warfare come? Everybody will see. There will be Chinese and foreign criticisms. Then, as to the statements that I am stirring up Kiangsi and Anhui against Chêkiang. Do you think this is true? Do you think that I am such a coward as to allow others to do my fighting when I hide in the background? Do you think that I would start fighting in this manner? Is such the action of a Chun-tz (great man)? Do you think that I have fallen so low as this? To avoid these troubles and misunderstandings, there should be a general disbandment of troops. Gen. Sun Chuan-fang says that there will be no fighting so far as he in concerned. He has telegraphed to the Red Cross Society stating that there is no need for their services as he is only suppressing the bandits. Kiangsi and Anhui have their peace treaties with Chêkiang and there will be no fighting in this direction. So far as I am concerned I have given you my word of honour that I will not start warfare against Chêkiang. I will do my utmost to maintain peace and order. I will preserve my jurisdiction. Thus I think that everybody will be doing a great service if they will disband their useless troops that are maintained for causing internal friction and misunderstanding. Let the people of the two provinces investigate to see whether this is carried out, to see who is sincere and who is not. You can convey my words to Gen. Lu or his representatives. I will not retract my statements.

Gen. Sun Chuan-fang is reported by the "Eastern Times" to have instructed his agent in Shanghai to purchase 13,000 bags of rice, 30,000 bags of flour, 4,000 bags of horse food, 200 rice boilers, etc.

The Sungkiang Residents' Association is reported by the Chinese press to be establishing a volunteer force for self protection.

Earnest Assurances to Sir Robert Ho Tung from Tuchuns of

In view of the uneasiness created throughout this section of China by rumours of inter-provincial friction Sir Robert Ho Tung recently addressed communications to the military leaders of the three provinces concerned, Kiangsu, Chêkiang and observing the recently concluded pact. Re-assuring replies have now been received from all the commanders concerned. Below will be found Sir Robert Ho Tung's original telegram and the replies:—

SIR R. HO TUNG'S QUERY.

Telegram sent on December 24, 1923, by Sir Robert Ho Hung to Tuchun Chi Shieh-yuan, Nanking,

Tupan Lu Yung-hsiang, Hangchow,

Tuli Sun Chuan-fang, Foochow.

Sometime ago I respectfully acknowledged the receipt of your letter signifying your full approval of my Peace Campaign. Besides my personal gratitude, the people of the Southeastern provinces infinitely appreciate your benevolent action to avert the disaster of war.

Newspapers here recently published reports regarding the appearance of Fukien troops on the border of Chêkiang, invalidating the peace pact between Kiangsu and Chêkiang. I believe you cannot possibly adopt any policy that is opposed to the declaration contained in your letter. I feel confident that the consideration of your grave responsibility and your sacred pledge will prevent any inconsistent action. Mindful of your past courtesies I presume to send you this telegram, requesting you to be good enough to reveal the real aspects of the situation in order to check the circulation of the alarming rumours. Your reassuring reply is eagerly awaited.

(signed) Ho TUNG.

SELF-PROTECTION IN CHEKIANG.

The following is the reply from General Lu Yung-hsiang of Chêkiang to Sir Robert Ho Tung.

Your telegram of December 24 noted. Chêkiang faithfully abides by the peace pact and concentrates its attention in preserving order and pacifying the people. Resolute and unrelaxed efforts will be made to maintain this policy consistently. I have also seen rumours published in the newspapers. Chêkiang cannot assume any responsibility for the appearance of Fukien troops within its border. The public are fully aware of the party actually responsible for pushing the belligerent preparations in Kiangsu and Chêkiang. The main fact to be borne in mind is that Chêkiang is confining its efforts to measures of self-protection and is therefore obliged to take steps to ensure its own defence. I am absolutely unwilling to infringe the terms of the peace pact. I have the honour to telegraph this sincere statement to you for your information.

(signed) LU YUNG-HSIANG.

Dec. 28, 1923.

NANKING'S PEACEFUL INTENT.

The following came from General Chi Shieh-yuan of Kiangsu:—

Your telegram of December 24 noted. During the past few months the Kiangsu province did not despatch even one soldier for offensive action. Our military force has not been increased by recruiting a single battalion or a regiment. The talk of belligerent preparations entirely lacks foundation. I hope this reply will ease your anxieties.

(signed) CHI SHIEH-YUAN.

Dec. 28, 1923.

BRIGANDAGE IN FUKIEN.

The reply from General Sun Chuan-fang of Fukien is as follows:—

Sir Robert Ho Tung.—Your telegram of December 24 noted. Owing to a recent outbreak of brigandage which is disturbing northern Fukien troops have been sent lately to effect its suppression, and this will be accomplished very soon. The report that Fukien troops have taken the offensive on Chêkiang territory is a fabricated rumour from irresponsible sources. I am advocating peace in great earnest, and will not relax my efforts. I appreciate your kind inquiries. Reply respectfully submitted.

(signed) SUN CHUAN-FANG.

Dec. 27, 1923.

DELICATE SITUATION ON CHEKIANG BORDER

Sun Chuan-fang's Contemplated Invasion Halted for Negotiations with Peking

Peking, Dec. 29.

According to various reports reaching Peking, General Sun Chuan-fang's forces are now mainly stationed on the Chêkiang border. General Sun is reported to have asked the Central Government for authority to enter Chêkiang. The only way in which the Government could comply with this request would be to appoint him Inspector-General of Fukien and Chêkiang, but as this would probably precipitate war in Chêkiang the Government has not complied. General Sun's position is now, however, that he must either cross the border or order his men to retreat, a contingency for which he has not prepared.

The main factors in Fukien are said to be General Sun Chuan-fang, who wishes o subjugate Chêkiang; General Wang Yin-chang, who is keenly supporting General Sun Chuan-fang's plans to enter Chêkiang, as the former wants control in Fukien; General Tsang Chi-ping, representative of General Lu Yung-hsiang; and General Chou Yin-jen. Generals Chang, Wang and Chou are nominally supporters of the Chihli Party, while General Tsang is an Anfuite. General Tsang was recalled from Amoy a month ago by General Lu Yung-hsiang, but he has since returned to Amoy.

The position, therefore, is that the Central Government must decide whether or not to support General Sun in his ambitions to conquer Chêkiang. With recognition of some sort from the Central Government it is said to be unlikely that General Sun will actually cross the Chêkiang border.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Proposed Surtax on Cotton

Peking, Dec. 31.

The Shuiwuchu has referred to the Cabinet the request of the Shanghai cotton traders for a surtax on the export of cotton, to serve as the basis of a loan to help the cotton interests at Shanghai. It is not likely that the Cabinet will give a ruling for some time.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

PEKING, Dec. 30.—General Sun Chuan-fang's representative, General Chi Ching-shih, arrived in Peking and interviewed the President yesterday in order to inform him regarding the actual situation in reference to Fukien and Chêkiang. After hearing General Chi's report, President Tsao emphasized that the Government desired the preservation of peace in the Yangtsze Valley.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

RAILWAY STATIONS AND BANDITS

Several Attacked by Robbers in Honan: Officials Disarmed and Powerless

From Our Own Correspondent.

Huaiking, Ho., Dec. 28, 1923.

The weather has been very mild this autumn. However, on Wednesday evening there was a light fall of snow. Moisture is very much needed for the dry dusty roads and autumn sown wheat fields. The recent snow fall was welcome and quite in keeping with the Xmas Season, and we hope that a heavy snow fall will come soon, to moisten well the dusty fields and highways. Meanwhile, the bandits are very active.

On the night of the 27th. a band of 10 or more local robbers attacked and robbed the Chinghua Station of the Tao-ching Railway. The station agent was rather roughly handled. He received a few body wounds but was not shot. The robbers made off with as much silver and copper as they could find after a careful search and smashing open all boxes and drawers containing such valuables. Chinghua police and railway station guards were conspicuous by their absence. Inasmuch as this is the third robbery at Chinghua station during the past fortnight it would seem that the police or local soldiers or station guards do not consider it their duty to be present at such times to interfere with the plans of local bad characters and robbers. On the former occasions it was the Fuchung coal yard that suffered and a little later the Oil Co. was robbed. In each case a good deal of coin was carried off.

Another station on the Taoching Railway was robbed about a week ago. Siuwu station some 80 li further along the line from Chinghua, was attacked and the robbers were unfortunately, either by arrangement or otherwise, left to carry on as they pleased. They treated the station agent roughly and secured what coin they could and departed.

For the robbers more especially than other people generally can it be said that this Xmas time is a time of Peace? Unless something is done soon to disturb their minds and prevent them from carrying out their plans without resistance there is no telling how speedily their numbers will increase and robberies of much larger proportions will be committed.

As reported earlier this year nearly all the soldiers were withdrawn from the Huaiking Military Yamen. Then, later, followed the withdrawal of some three quarters of all good useful rifles, in use by the local soldiers and police. So the present state of affairs gives reason for alarm, not because the local officials are not trying to cope with the situation but because they are left with neither men or rifles sufficient to deal with well armed robbers.

MISSIONARY MURDERED

Crime Attributed to Disbanded Soldiers

We have been informed that a cable has been received in Shanghai from the Vicariat in Suiyuen to the effect that the Rev. Achille Soenen has been shot and killed in his residence (probably) at Hokiao, which was also despoiled and plundered. The Rev. Joseph Leemans, his companion, is reported to have escaped. R. P. Van Lanschoot, the procureur at Suiyuen, is of the opinion that the murder was committed by disbanded soldiery.

The Rev. Soenen was born at Poelcapelle, West. Flanders, Belgium on April, 5, 1886. He was ordained on July 25, 1914 and came to China the following year in the month of August, when he went directly to his chosen field. He was particularly interested in evangelizing the district of Paotow and for the sake of carrying on his work had two residences, one at Hokiao and the other at Satsy—the former the most important. Paotow is the terminus of the Kingsui Railway (extension).

THE BANDIT OUTRAGE IN HUPEH

Capture of American Missionaries at Tsaoyang: Protest to Waichiaopu

Hankow, Dec. 30.

A telegram from the Siangyang correspondent of the "Central China Post" reports that bandits have captured Tsaoyang, Hupeh, and that Mr. and Mrs. Hoff have been wounded and Mrs. Kilen taken prisoner. The bandits are proceeding to Tungpeh.

A further telegram from Suichow states that three missionaries have been killed by the notorious bandit chief Lao Yang-ren.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Peking, Dec. 31.

Regarding the bandit outrage at Tsaoyang in Hupeh, information reaching the American Legation from the American Consul at Hankow is that the city was captured by bandits under the leadership of Lao Yang-jen and that an American missionary lady, Mrs. Juline Kilen, was taken prisoner, while two others, Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Hoff, were wounded, but escaped. All belong to the American Lutheran Mission, which comprises seven foreigners. The date of the outrage is not given.

This occurrence is rendered more heinous by the fact that some little time ago Marshal Hsiao Yao-nan had warned missionaries in this neighbourhood of the danger of brigands operating in the neighbourhood and accordingly all the missionaries took refuge on junks and were ready to flee at a moment's notice. Subsequently Marshal Hsiao addressed a communication to the American Consul-General at Hankow advising that the brigands had been suppressed and the missionaries could return safely to their respective stations. This they did, with the result reported.

A DEMAND FOR PROTECTION.

Mr Edward Bell, in charge of the affairs of the American Legation, this morning called on Dr Wellington Koo at the Waichiaopu and lodged a strong protest, pointing out that the missionaries at Tsaoyang, relying upon the assurance of Marshal Hsiao Yao-nan, had returned to their stations, calling upon the Chinese Government to take immediate steps to secure the release of the lady missionary, and demanding that protection be accorded to the other Americans in the locality.

Later.

The American Legation this morning lodged a protest with the Waichiaopu in connexion with the capture of an American missionary at Tsaoyang, pointing out that the missionaries in that locality left their stations on receipt of warning that bandits were operating in the neighbourhood, but returned to the stations after receiving an assurance from General Hsiao Yao-nan that the bandits had been suppressed. The American Legation called on the Chinese Government to take immediate steps to secure the release of the lady missionary and demanded protection for the other Americans in that locality.

According to telegrams from Hinking, Fengtien, about 150 bandits appeared at Mouchi on the 25th instant and completely looted that village. The loss is reported to be very great. Mouchi is situated between Hinking and Hushung.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Hankow, Jan. 2.

A Chinese official telegram states that Mr. and Mrs. Hoff, the American missionaries who were wounded by bandits at Tsaoyang, Hupeh, are in hospital at Siangyang. There is no news of Mrs. Kilen, who was reported to have been taken prisoner.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

NEWS FROM THE OUTPORTS

THE ROUND TABLE CONFERENCE

Sir Robert Ho Tung's Visit to Wu Pei-fu.: Expectations of Ultimate Success

From a Correspondent

In view of Sir Robert Ho Tung's early return to Hongkong, it may not be out of place to make a brief reference to his recent effort to bring the Round Table Conference to a reality, when he visited Loyang and endeavoured to gain the agreement of Marshal Wu Pei-fu to attend the Conference.

The impression has obtained in some quarters that Sir Robert's mission was a failure. A failure it was not, and certainly no other man has come nearer to bringing a realization of the country's position and the necessity for peace to Marshal Wu Pei-fu, than has Sir Robert Ho Tung; and the time may yet come when the Loyang chief will himself be the first to invite Sir Robert to convene the Round Table Conference.

Perhaps few people will realize what it has meant, this going afield, this "stumping the country," by Sir Robert Ho Tung in the prosecution of his peace plans. Sir Robert had realized that the best course to inspire confidence in his project would be for him to go in person to interview each leader in turn instead of communicating with them from Shanghai, provided they were ready to discuss the matter with him; and although far from being in the best of health and no longer a young man (Sir Robert is 62 years of age), he unhesitatingly embarked on the arduous enterprise. Sir Robert may well be termed an ambassador of peace. Everywhere he has been received with the courtesy and consideration due both to his name and to the noble mission, though unofficial, on which he is engaged. One result of his recent trip and what has counted for greatest gain, is that he has met the most influential Chinese, apart from the official, and they have been in every case deeply impressed by his personality and absolute sincerity.

Sir Robert is returning to Hongkong because personal interests and affairs, so long neglected, require his presence there; and as one of the Associate Commissioners from the Colony to the British Empire Exhibition at Wembley, he has already booked his passage for London, expecting to leave Hongkong about the middle of February.

Sir Robert leaves China with ardour undiminished and a fine optimism as to the final success of his Conference scheme. He has opened a path through many obstacles, and will return to supervise the construction of the permanent way to peace. If a full measure of success does not ultimately crown Sir Robert Ho Tung's efforts, if events shape their course by some other channel (and one can never be sure of anything in China), there will always remain the ineffaceable record and personal satisfaction that he did his best in a task, viewed as hopeless and thankless from the very outset by 99 persons out of every hundred, to which he gave of his health and time and money.

Sir R. Jones in Hongkong

Hongkong, Jan. 1.

Sir Roderick Jones, Chairman of Reuter's, arrived here this morning. Captain Neville, the Aide-de-Camp to the Governor, went on board the steamer with an invitation from the Governor to Sir Roderick to stay at Government House.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

NORTHERN TROOPS IN SZECHUAN

French Motor Launch Fired on: City Looted and Rich Man Kidnapped

From Our Own Correspondent.

Fowchow, Sze, Dec. 10.

Once again we belong to the North in this great struggle for supremacy. This is the ninth time that we have changed masters in this city during as many months, and just as many pontoon bridges have been floated and then cut loose. For the past six weeks we have had one of Cheo Shi-chen's men here, Mao Lü-chang. On the morning of the 8th, General Yang-seng's troops arrived on the east side of the little river. Rifle fire commenced at once. After dinner he put over a half dozen shells just to let us know that he was there. One of them fell in the street just behind our Middle School where we are living.

Next morning at daybreak there was a fierce bombardment but they were not able to make the crossing. There was desultory firing all day. During the afternoon a little steamer or motor launch went up the river flying the French flag. She was a target for the first army but, judging by the number of shots which struck the water, was too small for them to hit. At just midnight the second army launched a fierce fusilade and crossed over. At the same time random firing was heard all over the city and the doors were requested to be opened while these fellows appropriated some things for the journey. They banged at our door for a long time but it held against all persuasion to break it in. During the which morning General Yang-seng's troops followed up the others as fast as they could go. The road leading to Lanchuan was blue with them. They certainly are not short of men or ammunition. We are hopeful that this will end the warfare here for a few months at least. Judging from the rapid passage of these fellows through this city they should soon have the enemy stranded in Thibet.

The shops closed a few days before the departure of the first army as the soldiers were trying to force military notes on the people. Early one morning last week the robbers captured a rich man who lives in the suburb here, by going to his door and telling him that a certain military official wanted to see him. He responded and they hustled him down to the river, put him in a little boat and went off with him.

LEPERS OF HANGCHOW

A Seasonable Treat for the Unfortunates

From Our Own Correspondent.

Hangchow, Dec. 31.

On Saturday through the kindness of friends sending us money we were able to give the lepers a real treat. They each got a bowl of pork, which they love immensely, and on Saturday they had what the Chinese call a "Dong Loh We" a "Rejoice together meeting," at which several hundreds were present on Pine Avenue Hill. Quite a number of foreigners were there to rejoice with the lepers.

Dr. Tsong was in the chair, and Dr. Main gave the opening address of welcome, after which Pastor Swen prayed. Vong Pao, the little blind girl, read the lesson, by reading part of the 2nd chapter of St. Luke, referring to Christmas, from memory. One of the college boys sang a Christmas Carol, and some of the lepers, men and women, sang very sweetly in Chinese "Oh, come all ye faithful." The next performance was by two of the girls in the Fresh Air Home. It was a very clever little dialogue between master and pupil, representing the ancient and modern forms of learning in China. Tsu Me who has a tubercular hip and teaches blind girls, was dressed as an old fashioned school master and was very amusing. Kyin Hsiao-tsi, a girl with weak lungs, was dressed as a modern school boy, and acted her part exceedingly well. A patient from the Fresh Air Home sang "Bubbles in the Air" in English. This was followed by a ventriloquist, pedlars selling their wares, and Tsau selling his birthright for a mess of potage. Then came a monkey performance, the monkey being a little leper boy, and several other pieces by the lepers themselves, and at the end of it all a little present of ham, peanuts and cakes was presented to each. They were as happy as could be, and greatly pleased with their own performances, which very much delighted the audience, some of whom had come a long distance to be present.

The place was nicely decorated, and many thanks are due to Dr. Wang, the doctor in charge, who superintended all, and spent a lot of time in training the lepers to do their little bit.

To the friends who enabled us to get up the entertainment we owe a debt of gratitude, and I am sure if they had been present and saw what we saw they would have felt that their money was well spent. Next year we hope we shall again have the privilege of of being their almoners. It surely is worth while giving the poor lepers a real treat once a year. They have so few pleasures in this life. They cannot go where others go, and are out off from many privileges which we enjoy, so it is rather nice that others should go to them and rejoice with them in the open air, where the entertainment was held.

THE C. M. S. HOSPITAL.

The C.M.S. Hospital had its "Dong Loh We" on Friday night in the lecture hall, and the talent manifested in every part of the entertainment quite took our breath away. We had no idea that there was such latent talent among students and nurses of the hospital. It was surely an eye-opener to some of us, and all who were present thoroughly enjoyed themselves, especially the patients.

BIG OPIUM SEIZURE IN PEKING

Jehol Militarist Implicated by Culprit's Confession: An Enormous Trade

Peking, Dec. 31.

The International Anti-Opium Association states on the authority of a reliable report that a soldier happened to pass Hsi-chih-mên on December 21 with a bag on his shoulder which aroused the suspicion of an inspector of the Hai-chih-mên Customs Branch Bureau. Accordingly inspection was made, with the result that 528 oz. of opium were found in his bag.

The smuggler was taken to the inspecting office, where he stated that he is named Li Hung-cheng, one of the guards of a Jehol Militarist. Further he alleged that this militarist bought more than 80,000 oz. of opium in Jehol districts and has repeatedly sent his men conveying some of his opium into Peking.

Unfortunately for the militarist, a lot of this contraband was seized when it arrived in Peking, so for this reason the militarist hesitated for the time being to send any more, and decided to wait for a better chance when he thought the police or inspector's attention would be given to other things rather than his opium. Recently he has begun again to send his men to sell his opium in Peking.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

BISHOP Gennare of Hankow died on December 26 at his residence there of heart trouble after a long illness. Bishop Gennare came to China in 1891.

BANDITS' GRIM REMINDER

Young Man's Severed Ear Sent to Father: Chinese "Gordon" Wanted

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tsingkiangpu, Ku., Dec. 24.

After reporting a quiet autumn in this section I am sorry to report that the bandits are again very active and the Chinese in the north country say they are expecting worse things to follow. The writer has just admitted to the hospital three patients who had fallen into the hands of bandits; two of them were shot and got away, the third, a young man 20 years of age, was carried away and a ransom of $1,000 demanded for his life. This his father promised to give, selling almost every foot of land that he possessed. The money was to be paid on a certain date but the father was delayed in getting the payments and was a day or two late. The bandits then cut off one ear of his son and sent it in to him. The following day the money was turned over and a few days later he received his son. He immediately brought him here and the writer found the entire ear and a large section of skin from the side of the head gone. Skin flaps from the arm may make a fairly presentable "ear" later on.

There is another patient—a woman—here now who was shot in the leg by bandits. Her daughter and the latter's baby were carried off at the same time. A few days after she arrived, her daughter put in an appearance, having run off from the bandits but she has heard nothing of her child.

FOREIGN TROOPS WANTED.

How one wishes for a regiment of good foreign troops to come in and "clean things up" and yet, how powerless they would be; the bandits would vanish, or melt into the general population in a night. A Chinese Gordon, some aggressive foreigner, who could and would train a loyal force, could clean up this country and keep it clean. Who wants the job?

The local hospital is passing through the busiest period of its history for this time of the year. For months we have been filled to overflowing, and daily we are turning away patients for lack of room. Even now in the cold weather over 100 patients are being treated in the clinic daily.

A SOLDIER PREACHER.

Yesterday the local Presbyterian Sunday School inaugurated a new plan. For three months they had been studying the missionary activities of the early church. Yesterday afternoon the entire Sunday School, over 200 strong, divided into various bands and went through the entire city and surrounding country preaching the Gospel. It was an inspiring sight and the bright, happy faces of the Chinese as they came in last night made one realize how much they need the responsibility of telling the Gospel to others. The writer heard one man, a soldier in the local forces here preaching outside of the South gate, and the message that he had and the earnestness he showed in giving it made one's heart very happy. He has no connexion with the mission or foreigners, simply being a member of the local church, but from many sources we hear that he is daily living and preaching Jesus Christ to his companions. God is still choosing and using the foolish, the weak, the base, and the despised to confound the wise, and strong, the mighty and the noble.

PEKING AND MUKDEN NEGOTIATIONS

Peking, Dec. 31.

Gen. Chang Ching-huai arrived in Peking from Mukden on December 29 with the avowed intention of attempting to bring about a reconciliation between Peking and Mukden. Gen. Chang was entertained yesterday by Gen. Wang Huai-ching and some members of the Cabinet, and it is understood that he will return to Mukden shortly to lay a plan before Marshal Chang Tso-lin. As Gen. Chang Ching-huai no longer possesses the full confidence of the Fengtien Party, his plans have no connexion with the recent conference at Mukden.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Unpaid Diplomats Abroad

Peking, Dec. 31.

It is reported that $5,000,000 worth of treasury bonds have been floated by a foreign firm and that 70 per cent. of salaries and expenses of Legations and Consulates abroad are being remitted to-day by telegraphic transfer.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Chinese in Vladivostok

Peking, Dec. 31.

Mr. Fan Chi-kuang, Chinese Consul-General at Vladivostok, has requested the Government's permission to return to Peking and make a personal report regarding the condition of Chinese residents at that port.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE TRADE IN SMUGGLED MORPHIA

Immense Consignment Seized: Urgent Appeal that Switzerland Will Join the League of Nations Convention and Thus Checkmate the Smugglers

Peking, Dec. 28.

The International Anti-Opium Association issues the following:—

On November 14, 1923, at Shanghai, the Customs authorities seized on board the str. Atsuta Maru 500 pounds of morphia, which had been shipped from Marseilles by Veron Grauer & Co., transport agents for Jacky Maeder & Co., of Basle, Switzerland.

Switzerland is the only European nation which has not ratified the Hague Convention and consequently has a free hand to indulge the get-rich-quick instincts of her merchants.

According to the consignment labels this consignment reached Marseilles on October 23, and presumably was put on board the Atsuta Maru a little earlier than a similar consignment of 500 pounds of morphia from Basle which was seized in Marseilles on November 4. A Japanese named Miyagawa (of a firm of that name in Kobe) who was conducting these operations, was advised by the Basle firm to get out of the country after this last seizure, but being the head of a well known smuggling gang he was arrested in London and is now doing three years in gaol. It is more than a suggestion that he got clear with one consignment of 500 pounds, only for it to be seized in Shanghai. The loss of a thousand pounds of morphia valued at almost $200,000 must be somewhat of a jar to the combine.

Switzerland not having ratified the Hague Convention has not supplied statistics of her narcotic imports, exports or manufacture to the League of Nations, but her traffic must be very extensive. A thousand pounds of morphia is shown above, and in the London trial the prosecuting counsel referred to £37,000 worth of heroin which the Miyagawa gang had succeeded in exporting through Hamburg in October.

Is it not time that some form of pressure be brought to bear on Switzerland to secure her ratification of the Convention in order to throw the responsibility of future narcotic traffic upon her Government, and not leave it as at present in the hands of her merchants?—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE ATTACK ON THE PRINCE REGENT

Resignation of Viscount Goto: Accused of Socialistic Tendencies

Tokio, Dec. 27.

The Regent's assailant proves to be Daisuke Namba, a 25-year old student of Waseda University, whose circumstances compelled him to work as a labourer and interested him in Communism. He declared that he had no associates.

Namba was seriously injured by the crowd, who seized him before the police effected his arrest.

Later.

Viscount Goto is reported to have resigned, assuming responsibility for the attack on the Regent.

Viscount Goto has been accused since his invitation to M. Joffe to come to Japan of having Socialistic tendencies.

The Seiyukai threatened to introduced a vote of non-confidence in the Diet because of an allegation that Viscount Goto had supplied the murdered Socialist Osugi with funds.

Socialist centres and Viscount Goto's residence are closely guarded for fear of anti-Socialist outbreaks.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Resignation Persisted in: The Assault on Regent and Hostility in Diet

Tokio, Dec. 28.

While the Cabinet, assuming responsibility for yesterday's outrage, have formally tendered their resignation, it is quite uncertain whether this will at present be accepted. The opinion is generally expressed, however, that a change is imminent though it may be delayed over the New Year holidays. It is understood that, whatever the fate of the Cabinet, Viscount Goto insists on his resignation as "the Minister directly responsible."

On every side it is admitted that the Government's difficulties have been much augmented. The opposition, on the part of political parties in both Houses, which developed during the special session, to the reconstruction budget and the insurance payment proposals is regarded as placing the Ministry in a precarious position, and a few days ago it was believed unlikely that the Government could survive the regular session. Any weakening of the personnel of the Government from resignation at the present juncture would, it is believed, only tend to hasten the end.

The morning papers are freely commenting on yesterday's attack and all join in a chorus of congratulation on the Prince Regent's escape. They warn the people against any undue excitement.

Dec. 29.

The Prince Regent this morning returned the Cabinet's resignation, but after a further meeting the Cabinet again tendered its resignation.

Dec. 30.

Though a Ministerial change at the present moment is untimely and undesirable, with the approach of the Imperial wedding and the necessity for prompt execution of the reconstruction undertakings, says the Minister of Education, explaining the Cabinet's resignation, the outrage that took place on Thursday is so unprecedented in the history of Japan that any attempt on the part of the Ministry to evade the responsibility for it would run counter to the recent Imperial decree aiming at improvement of national thought and might also seriously aggravate the political situation.

The Minister adds that the maintenance of the Cabinet's credit demands adherence to its original decision to resign.

Though somewhat unexpectedly, the press generally regards the Government's resignation as natural and inevitable, adding credit to the Cabinet."

PRESS OPINION.

The "Jiji" says that the disappearance of the Cabinet would be no loss to the country since it accomplished nothing during its régime.

The "Hochi" believes that the resignation of the Cabinet as well as of the other responsible officials would be the best demonstration to the radical elements that incidents similar to that on Thursday are unbecoming to Japan and incompatible with her national life and character.

The "Asahi" and others are of the opinion that the Government's resignation is due rather to political reasons and hold that the Cabinet has seized a suitable excuse for retirement.

The choice of Count Yamamoto's successor is expected before the end of the year. Political circles believe that a Seiyukai Cabinet is probable.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Tokio, Jan. 1

An Imperial command to-day was given to Viscount Kiyoura to form a new Cabinet. Viscount Kiyoura replied that he would think the matter over. In an interview Viscount Kiyoura said that in view of his advanced age, 75, it was doubtful whether he could fulfil his responsibilities as Premier. He wished, if possible, not to form a Cabinet, —Eastern News Agency.

Tokio, Jan. 3.

Viscount Kiyoura has informed the Prince Regent that he is unable to form a Cabinet.

Viscount Kiyoura has apparently failed to form a Cabinet because he was unable to secure the support of the political parties in both Houses. While the Kenyukai in the House of Peers was prepared to back him conditionally the Seiyukai will not give any definite promises, except one of benevolent neutrality.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Tokio, Jan. 3.

Viscount Kiyoura, who declined to accept the Imperial command this morning, was once again honoured at 3 o'clock this afternoon by the Prince Regent who asked him to form a new cabinet. —Eastern News agency.

Tokio, Jan. 3.

Viscount Kiyoura, on a further request by the Prince Regent, has reconsidered his decision and will form a Cabinet.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

HONGKONG ROBBERS

Fierce Fight with Police: Several Casualties

Hongkong, Dec. 29.

While investigating a robbery in a Chinese house at Yaumati this morning, the police encountered five armed men. The latter attempted to escape from the building but were met by shots from the police. A fierce battle ensued in which two European and two Indian policemen and a Chinese detective were wounded, while four robbers, three of whom were wounded, were captured after a chase. —Reuter's Pacific Service.

DEATH OF A NOTED JAPANESE SCHOLAR

Tokio, Dec. 31.

The death is announced of Baron Naibu Kanda, the educator and noted English scholar.

Baron Kanda was the adopted son of the late Baron Kohei Kanda, a pioneer Dutch scholar. He proceeded in 1871 to America for study and returned home in 1884 after having graduated at Amherst College, Mass. The Baron was Professor Emeritus of the Tokio Higher Commercial School and a Member of the House of Peers.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Earthquake in Manila

Manila, Jan. 2.

Several sharp earthquake shocks between one and two this morning woke up residents. Reuter's Pacific Service.

SOCIALISTS' BURIAL DISHONOURED

Outrage at Obsequies of the Murdered Osugi and His Wife

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tokio, Dec. 17.

Not even in death have the murdered Socialists Sakae Osugi and his wife Noe Ito been able to find peace. Funeral services over the remains of these two and their strangled seven-year-old nephew, who is an American citizen, having been born in Portland, Oregon, were to take place yesterday. While most of the persons gathered to do honour to their ashes were at breakfast, a man presented himself and asked that he might be permitted to approach the temporary altar and pay tribute to those done to death by the gendarmes during the confusion that followed in the wake of the great earthquake. This request was readily assented to. The man approached the spot where the three urns containing the ashes were placed, went down on his knees, and then suddenly firing a pistol gathered the urns in his arms and rushed for the door. At the entrance he handed over the urns to three accomplices who were ready with a motor-car, and to the noise of further revolver firing and shouts from the friends of the deceased, the vehicle made away. One of the men, however, was unable to get on to the car in time and was arrested by the police.

The arrested man has refused to make any disclosures as to where the ashes have been taken to, and to repeated demands that he shall state his identity merely declared that he was a miner who detested Socialists and Socialism. The police suspect that the stolen ashes have been taken to the headquarters of the Anti-Reactionaries' Association.

The funeral services proceeded as arranged, but, instead of the panegyrics that were to have been uttered over the ashes, angry speeches, demanding vengeance on those whose sacriligious hands had stolen the ashes of the dead, adorned the obsequies for the departed.

The Socialists Osugi Sakae and Noe Ito have been regarded as martyrs even by those who do not approve of the doctrines of the Extreme Labourites in Japan. This insult to the dead will only tend to make them greater martyrs, if such be possible.

THE COURT MARTIAL'S SENTENCE.

While this scene was being enacted, Captain Amakasu, formerly connected with the Tokio Gendarmerie, whose hands squeezed the life out of the Socialist and his wife, and whose orders were responsible for the atrocious murder of their seven-year-old American—born nephew, had entered on the first morning of his imprisonment, having been removed to the penitentiary the evening previous to serve the ten-year sentence inflicted on him by the court-martial which tried the case.

The Japanese press, generally, regards the sentences meted out on Captain Amakasu and on Sergeant Mori (who was sentenced to three years' confinement as an accomplice in the murders) with unfeigned dissatisfaction. The "Nichi Nichi," for example, one of the most popular of the larger Tokio journals, regards the decisions of the court martial as a triumph of the military spirit over the dispensing of justice fairly. Whether Captain Amakasu or Sergeant Mori will ever serve their sentences in full can never be said. Court martial sentences in Japan have a way of lasting only until the public have forgotten things, and then the delinquents are sent to Korea or perhaps Manchuria. At least such has happenned in the past.

MARSHAL Chang Tso-lin, the Fengtien warlord, is reported by the "Shunpao" to have refused to allow the re-establishment of a Russian Consulate in Mukden, his headquarters.

JAPAN AFTER THE EARTHQUAKE

The Murdered Chinese and Koreans: Press Demanding Daylight: Telling Figures about the Yoshiwara: How to Readjust Japan's Finances

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tokio, Dec. 17.

The presence in Japan to-day of Dr. C. T. Wang, China's special commissioner, who is here to make full investigations into the murders of Chinese during the earthquake, has been responsible for severe attacks on the Government in the Diet, one of the Opposition members terming the Chinese Mission to Japan a "gross shame and insult to Japan" and a proof of "China's distrust in Japan's judicial machinery."

Severe onslaughts were also made in connexion with the deplorable murders of Koreans during the chaos that immediately followed the terrestrial convulsions, one of the members of the Kakushin Club (an Opposition party) producing photographs showing outrages perpetrated on the bodies of men slaughtered by the Vigilantes (as the mentally ill-balanced mobs who hunted Koreans to their death were called) by the police and, in some instances, by the troops. Although the Diet has been sitting for some days, it met and continued in an atmosphere of unusual lethargy and the vigorous interpellations with regard to the murders of Chinese and Koreans have considerably tended to awaken the Government and the House. The former, in response to demands from the members of the Opposition, have replied that the murders are "under investigation," and it is gratifying to see that members of parliament and the press refuse to be bamboozled with such official casuistry. The "Yorodzu," for instance, one of Tokio's most jingo organs, which generally throws the weight of its influence in the scales favouring the Army or the Navy, declares editorially that "it is an important duty of the Government to expedite investigation into the slaughter of the Koreans, and to give full satisfaction to the suffers or their survivors; otherwise the union of the two nations can never be effected."

FIRE INSURANCE QUESTION.

Heated debates in connexion with the Government's policy regarding fire insurance are also a feature of the present extraordinary session of the Diet and opposition to the proposals and suggestions of the authorities seems to be gaining steadily both in the Upper and in the Lower Houses.

In spite of the general anticipation that insurance firms would pay a portion of the 10 per cent. solatium (which the Government was to advance to them at a low rate of interest) out of their own funds, the Government now proposes to pay the entire sum—Yen 180,000,000—out of the Central Treasury, charging insurance firms an interest rate of two per cent. per annum. Now, the current rate on Government loans is seven per cent. per annum, and so the loss of the State will be five per cent. per annum. The loan, according to the Government's plan, is to remain untouched for five years, and then to be fully redeemed only after 50 years.

The opposition to the Government's scheme is based on the enormous burden that the national treasury is called upon to bear for the purpose of aiding only a small portion of the suffers, and a still smaller proportion of the whole nation.

THE YOSHIWARA BUSINESS.

The crusade against licensed vice in Japan, of which the Tokio Yoshiwara is regarded as the model, has been resumed on the floor of the Lower House. While solons are arguing that such a system is a disgrace to a civilized nation and is a curse to the country, the rebuilding of the Yoshiwara is proceeding. It is encouraging to see that the nation is now seriously considering the abolition of a system the sordidness of which was revealed in no unmistakeable manner when thousands of women, chained throughout life to an existence more degrading than that of a slave, perished miserably in the various licensed quarters that dotted the stricken regions.

The press is enthusiastically championing the good cause of doing away once and for all with these dens of infamy that really are duller than an old-time Sunday school, and citing interesting statistics to counter the oft repeated argument that when public prostitution is abolished private prostitution and disease will increase.

The medical examination of young men for military conscription during 1922, according to these statistics, shows that of every 1,000 persons examined in the Gumma prefecture where licensed vice had been abolished, 11.13 were syphilitically affected. In Tokio, the figures were 20.63 per thousand; in Osaka 19.65; in Nagasaki, 44.78 which is nearly a half of the prefecture's young men; and in Yokohama, 19.18.

These figures are now being quoted by the press to prove that, far from the abolition of public and licensed prostitution increasing private vice and aiding in the dissemination of disease, the opposite is really the case, even in a country like Japan where the relations of the sexes are far freer than in any other country, barring perhaps China.

Other interesting statistics show that public prostitution in Japan is patronized more by the married than by the unmarried, and this, as the press argues, is ample proof that the system is both harmful and unnecessary. As of interest, some of these figures are given: A census of those frequenting houses of prostitution from 1917 to 1922 shows that the percentage of those below 20 years of age has been 0.2; those between 21 and 25 years of age, 22.7; those between 26 and 35 years, 33.8; those between 36 and 45 years, 28.6; and those between 46 and above, 11.8.

During a campaign recently inaugurated in Tokio for the purpose of obtaining signatures for preventing the re-building of the licensed quarters, interesting disclosures were revealed. Women generally were totally indifferent, such of them as were approached declaring that if public prostitution were abolished, girls of decent families would not be safe, thus registering their ideas of the wild, untamed nature of the dominant sex. Soldiers and students were also found to be indifferent, but the working classes, from whose daughters are drawn the vast majority of the victims of the shameful classes, were enthusiastic for the abolition of licensed vice.

READJUSTMENT OF FINANCE.

There is considerable complaint in and out of the Diet as to why the Government has not shown keener interest and as to why it has not exerted greater efforts towards the readjustment of finance. How to improve the straitened condition of the money market is being nervously discussed. Three methods have been suggested by members of the Diet, namely, (1) the introduction of foreign funds; (2) lowering of the Bank of Japan's discount rates; and (3) making the terms of loans granted easier than they are to-day.

There is, however, something more at the bottom of the matter, and that is the destruction of credit consequent on the September disaster. One evidence of this is to be seen in the fact that out of Yen 20,000,000 given by the authorities to two special banks—the Hypothec Bank and the Industrial Bank—for reconstruction purposes, only between five and six million yen have been made available to the public.

Steps must be taken to remove this stumbling block, otherwise there will be no real improvement in the monetary situation. One of these steps, suggested and approved by the press, is the renewal of notes made prior to the disaster.

THE BANDIT PERIL IN ANHUI

No Incentive to Round Up Lawless Men: Bright Prospects for Coming Harvest

From Our Own Correspondent.

Yungchowfu, Dec. 24.

There seems to be no more con- [illegible] up the brigands who are roaming the countryside. Word reaches here from the neighbouring province of Honan that these hordes are still in their war-paint, and that they go to all extremes, even to throwing adults and children into rivers. What sad conditions exist in these interior parts! Because the soldiers when rounding up the brigands who held the two lady missionaries felt satis- [illegible] their perilous plight they stopped short in the chase and allowed the men to clear off, thus giving them breathing space to recover, and time to revise their future programme. The following quotation from a letter from the elder of the two unfortunate ladies written soon after their release speaks volumes for the conditions into which they had come so unwillingly drawn, and which they little reckoned on as being a present-day experience to be met with when they came out to this country:—

[illegible] dropping dead, and yet we escaped unhurt. We were dragged up and down [illegible] sometimes on foot [illegible] by bushes and trees and [illegible] yet we are very tired.

These experiences are harrowing in the extreme, and the letter quoted from concludes, thus, "we feel those who have been through it know and understand those who have not never can."

The fuller account given so recently in your columns gives very graphically the terrible circumstances attending the whole movement of the unfortunate captives during their 34 days captivity, and puts into the shade anything that has yet been enacted in this country. The mere fact of a happy release having been effected, though involving the captives many times in imminent personal danger which looked at times almost certain death, should not deter the utmost action being taken in trying to subdue the whole brigand pest throughout the country.

LAXITY OF THE TROOPS.

It is a regrettable fact that the government troops do not push their action to a conclusive issue when they surround these bands and the odds are entirely theirs. It would look as if the game is not worth the candle for them unless foreign lives are involved and diplomatic pressure is kept up. There seems no possible incentive to round up these lawless men when China and China only is concerned.

I referred in a previous communication to the necessity of reducing these brigands by negotiation but only on the terms of unconditional surrender with safeguards, using the relatives of the men themselves as a powerful lever in reaching the desired end, and, furthermore, of getting to the root of the present trouble by dealing with those in authority, who should and must be held directly responsible for all arms and ammunition in use throughout the country. Correspondents have explained that these brigands have been driven to it on account of exceptionally trying economic and family conditions, and while education will do wonders along certain lines the [illegible] goes stalking through the country.

When the country settles down peacefully and tries to work out her own salvation from some of these economic incongruities brighter days may come round for the oppressed. Things are too much out of hand for anything but drastic action to be taken, and Governments cannot be exonerated from dilly-dallying with glaring facts.

BIG OPIUM HARVEST.

The prospects for the coming harvest, next spring are bright, and it is hoped that the crops showing so well out of the ground at the present time will yield a goodly harvest. With the sowing out of the wheat there has been a very widespread planting of opium, and if this crop is allowed to be reaped—and there seems to be every indication that no restrictions will be placed on the farmers getting the yield that is at present in the ground—a quantity of opium will be turned out from this North-west that will astonish people. Into the hands of the military went every dollar that was derived from the tax last crop. What of the future! Proclamations should not be used as a cloak, but what these proclamations mean should be put into action even to the very last letter of the law. Proclamations cannot exonerate people from complicity and double dealing when officials are not made to act up to their [illegible]

NEW MOTOR ROUTE.

Recently another route has been opened up by motor cars, viz., from this city to Cheng Yang Kuan 80 miles away, from which point a launch connexion takes travellers to the railway. [illegible] a goodly number of [illegible] the new mode of transportation, and this method of getting over the interior parts will be increasingly popular as good roads are established. Unfortunately the chauffeurs in charge of the cars at present drive with rather a heavy hand. This is seen in the way they keep their machines in order, or rather they only just try to keep their machines within a minimum radius of effectiveness bordering on a seemingly slender margin next door to a breakdown. They simply flood all working parts with a superabundance of lubricating oil, and it would seem that they try their best to get rid of as much oil as they can, and possibly they get some kind of commission on the amount consumed.

Recently the local schools had some trouble with their scholars, who apparently desired to get out of their necessary examinations, thinking they could carry their demands. They have been given to understand that while scholars they should be amenable to all Educational rules, and not try to be the teachers and the taught at one and the same time.

IDLE RUMOURS OF WAR

Tuchun's Message to Assembly: Flotation of Waterworks Co.

From Our Own Correspondent.

Hangchow, Dec. 27.

The Tuchun of Fukien has sent a telegram to the Assembly asking them not to give heed to idle rumous about troops being sent to the Chékiang border, as it means nothing beyond what is done every year to combat the tufei.

The local gentry have again been interviewing the Tuban with reference to the rumours that are running wild just now, and he has assured them that he is as anxious as ever he was to do away with the tuchunate, and reduce the troops, but that, at present, this is quite impossible. He advised them to keep their hearts at rest.

The Waterworks Co. are again getting together, and are hoping soon to get sufficient shareholders to float the company. They are meeting to-day to discuss ways and means.

Hangchow is quiet, the bank discount is falling, and soon we hope for rain, which may prove sufficient to damp the ardour of the easily excited.

AN INSATIABLE OCTOPUS

How the Lamaseries Are Maintained: Country Scoured by Begging Lamas Led by Living Buddhas: Persistence Rewarded

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tachienlu, Sze., Dec. 1.

Kiangsi is not the only place in Asia that suffers from the invasion of a huge, ravenous, insatiable octopus. Minya is the name of the country formerly ruled by the King of Chala. Every year, just after the harvests have been gathered in, the Lamas leave their temples and spend a month or so visiting the different farmhouses. To make their visits more efficacious each foraging party is accompanied by a Living Buddha.

On a recent visit into Minya we crossed the arms of several octopi. The Living Buddha rides a horse: accompanying him are two other Lamas, also riding horses: more horses accompany the party to carry the good stuff home. The Living Buddha is dressed in all the regalia of his sect, a magnificent gold coloured hat covers his head; he is dressed in rich silk and usually carries some of his sacred books.

On arrival at a Tibetan farm house the two Lamas dismount, the Buddha remains on his horse and prays for blessing to fall on the inhabitants of the farm. As every house has its huge Tibetan dogs much care is necessary in approaching the establishment and before the party makes any advance the dogs are made secure. The two Lamas now produce their large Yak skin bags and beg for a liberal supply of barley to keep the Lamasery going and maintain the good fortune of the whole district.

LAXITY OF THE TROOPS.

What surprised us was the octopus like persistence of their simple foraging party. The cause of their poor brothers praying in the Lamasery was not carried lightly and move they would not from that door till some barley or flour had been deposited in the bag. The Buddha sat tight and prayed hard, the Lamas held out their bags and sought hard. Usually they were successful and a supply of barley was given. The party then move off to the next farm house.

An hour afterwards, or perhaps the following day along comes another foraging Buddha and his Lamas attack the same farm house, exercise the same persistence while the Buddha prays if anything harder, and Lamas beg with more insistence. The poor people are helpless and for the blessing that accrues they give the barley and the Lamas pass on.

The Temples throughout Minya are at present in a very precarious condition. The people are very poor, and during the past few years the harvests have been very bad; added to this the Temples have suffered from lawless bands. The buildings are falling into disrepair and the once wealthy Temples, the centre of influence in the district, are fast becoming empty buildings. The resident Lamas are taking on a new role, they are now becoming private chaplains in every village you pass. The larger Lamaseries, however, still maintain their thousands of Lamas. Litang (14,000 feet high) Tachieh, Derge and Kanze are all in a very flourishing condition. The octopus comes from the poorer Temples which receive little or no official recognition.

MILITARY GREED IN FUKIEN

Press Gang Cruelties in the Villages: Opium Sowing Forced on Farmers

From Our Own Correspondent

Kienning, Fu., Dec. 18.

All evidence indicating the real state of the country at the present time is most important in order that foreign governments may act wisely as regards their nationals. Let no mistake be made! China under the tuition of the militarists is rapidly relapsing into a savagery and want of civilization till lately comparatively rare. Unless something is done to save this great country from the adventurers who are running her all talk of extraterritoriality should be abandoned.

Under the present press-gang system, villages are raided at night, men taken from their beds with but a single garment or from the plough and allowed to perish with cold. One constantly meets women crying because their men have been taken—they know not where—and there is no one to fend for the family.

Then money must be found to satisfy these enemies of China. When all that is possible has been extorted from the commercial class, opium seed is forced on the unhappy farmers. In the Sungkihsien I know of houses where, when the packet of opium seed was not received, it was thrown in at the door with the information that the tax would be collected later.

To-day about 60 country men, each with both arms roped together, were driven by soldiers through one of the city gates which a foreigner happened to be passing. A Chinese remarked that in the time of the worst of the emperor's there was no such cruelty. A couple of soldiers rushed into the house of a butcher in search of two possible loadmen; not finding their men, they unblushingly robbed two women of $70 they had found in the house—and this in broad daylight, not in a looting bout.

Fortunately these men are moving on and we hope soon to have seen the last of them, at least for the present. Trade is almost at a standstill, at a time which is normally very busy, for the country people are afraid to come in lest they should be caught by the officers.

I have just heard in the Sungkihsien that in the market town of Weitien the soldiers went out to shoot two men who refused to sow opium. In this case the men were robbed of their victims for a friend heard of it and sent a message just in time for the men to flee. A few years ago men were actually shot for planting poppy.

I understand in Foochow that the great opposition of people and students obliged the military leaders to withdraw the abominable order; as always, the people are much in advance of their rulers in matters of morality.

A GIRLS' SCHOOL AT NINGPO

Exhibition by St. Catherine's Pupils

From Our Own Correspondent.

Ningpo, Dec. 31.

On December 27 a most interesting gathering was held at St. Catherine's Girl's School, Ningpo, when the students gave their annual concert and entertainment to their assembled parents and friends. Under the direction of the Misses Greene and Hughes a varied programme of events was enacted in a very excellent manner giving much delight to the visitors and reflecting much credit upon the teachers and scholars.

Miss Davies who has recently joined the C.M.S. staff at Ningpo was the only Westerner who took part in the entertainment, but this she did with great success in the rendering of violin solos (one of which was by Kreisler) which evoked much enthusiasm and applause from both the foreign and Chinese sections of the audience.

Among the most notable items of the other part of the programme may be mentioned the various drills;—Club, flag and wand drills which were performed with much grace and precision. The native gift of the Chinese for acting also had plenty of scope and the plays "Preach and Act the Gospel" and "The Deceiver Deceived" were very much enjoyed.

The recitations "David Livingstone" and "Baby Dear" (George Macdonald) gave evidence of the careful training of the students in reading, pronouncing and memorizing English

The impression that was left upon the visitor who witnessed this succession of pleasing performances was that here in this school a noble work is being done, one that cannot fail to awaken new and beautiful impulses in the hearts of the pupils and educate them in the things of highest import.

SHANTUNG BANDITS

As Bad as Ever: Well Organized and with Regular System of Purchasing Arms

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tsinan, Dec. 26

In spite of official declarations to the contrary, banditry is still rife in Shantung. A few days ago a village in P'ing Yuan was visited by a band of about 30 who looted seven families and carried off 10 captives, one of whom was a woman.

It is said that this band have their headquarters in a town called Hokou, not far from the scene of the pillage. At this town a detachment of soldiers is stationed, but it is the oft-repeated tale—soldiers and bandits are comrades in arms.

AN INTERRUPTED WEDDING.

Weddings are supposed to be held only on lucky days. The fortune-teller who arranges these festivities in the district of Enhsien must be feeling somewhat discredited. Recently a young bridegroom was bringing home his intended partner to the paternal roof when the bridal party met a band of marauders. These stopped the procession, and hauling the principal actors out of their chairs, carried them both into captivity.

No one troubles much about these things so long as there are no foreigners taken captive. Signs are not wanting however that these local bandits are not without organization.

It is said on fairly good authority that they have a centre in Tsinan, in a disreputable district quite near to the main railway station.

The leaders come up to town to buy their guns and ammunition. They occupy what is outwardly a Chinese hotel, which is in the possession of the organization.

As this centre is outside the suburb gates there is no difficulty in getting the ammunition away by road at night, into the country districts. Where—up to the present—it is being used.

Set-Back for Filipino Malcontents

Manila, Dec. 28.

The revolutionary veterans, of whom General Aguinaldo is President, have refused to march in the parade on Rizal Day, December 30, which has been arranged as a protest against the American Chamber of Commerce and American newspapers. The veterans say that such a protest is unnecessary. Their action has been a serious set-back for the malcontents. —Reuter

SHANGHAI NEWS

UNITED STATES INCOME TAX

Protest of Americans Abroad: Chance of Remedial Measures Small

Conscientious American citizens will shortly be busy again with their annual task of filling in their income tax returns slip, the said papers arriving at the American Consulate-General on Thursday. Although there has been much agitation on the part of citizens living abroad against paying this tax, because, as they say, they do not receive the full benefits of American schools, civic institutions and church life, as well as the more intimate social relationships with their neighbours at home there has been no relief as yet in sight and it becomes incumbent on all those who wish to live up to the law as they have done in the past to go through the usual process again. The local American Chamber of Commerce—as also the other chambers in China and the Philippines—have been outspoken in their protests against the measure. Moreover, we understand, that those resident in South America have also organized opposition. Some maintain that the proposed measure of Mr. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury whereby he hopes to reduce the heavier portions of the tax and turn capital from tax-exempt securities to industry, contains also provisions for the relief of those in foreign lands but to date Congress has done nothing and with the radical elements of Congress holding the whip hand and the Democrats refusing to co-operate with the Republicans in their desire to ameliorate conditions (the Republicans having denied Wilson, as President, the assistance in similar measures) there appear to be slight chances of remedial measures being passed at the present sessions. The adherents of the bonus also are against tinkering with matters that will reduce their chances of getting what they are after and unless a compromise is effected nothing at all will be done.

THE LAW UNCONSTITUTIONAL!

The only possible hope that one can see at all is that the Supreme Court in Washington may possibly declare the law, as it stands, unconstitutional, for there is a test case pending before that body filed by an American citizen residing in Mexico City with the sanction and support of the American Chamber of Commerce in that place. Even should this body declare that section of the law relating to citizens residing abroad not legal, who knows when they will arrive at their decision. Their programme is continually crowded and with matters that usually relate to a larger portion of the community, than those few who are unfortunate enough to be forced to pay income tax without actually residing on American territory.

Several Shanghai men have expressed the opinion that this year they will refrain from paying what is due to the Government because they feel very optimistic that the law will be abolished within the present session of Congress, and they think that it will be a long, long time indeed before they may expect to get a return of funds paid inasmuch as the American Treasury is notoriously slow in such matters for there is such a large amount of "Red tape" to be gone through.

Of all the forms which arrived here those to be used most are for incomes under G. $5,000, the corporation income tax and the form for incomes over G. $5,000. The alien non-resident will hardly be touched, if at all. The partnerships form is very unlikely to be used too.

EXEMPTIONS FROM TAX.

According to the law every single individual who has a net income of more than G. $1,000 must make out a form even though he has exemptions large enough to preclude his actually paying a tax. The same holds true for the man or woman living with husband or wife, either of whom may be the fiduciary head of the household if their combined income is over G. $2,000 or if one has a gross income of more than $5,000. The following items are exempt from tax—Proceeds of life insurance policies paid at death, certain other benefits therefrom, viz, dividends not over G. $300 from special building and loan funds, gifts not received as a consideration for services, amounts received from accident or health insurance, and from War Insurance, etc., from U. S. Government for war services, rental value of Gospel minister's residence, compensation of State or political subdivision and certain political organizations' bonds and securities with qualifications.

The biggest single deduction, however, for the individual is G. $1,000 for a single individual, upon which he must not pay the tax and for the married individual who is the head of a household, who is allowed the amount G. $2,500 exemption; in addition for each dependent under 18 years of age while for every one else who is physically or mentally incapable of supporting self another G. $400 is permitted to go by the boards. Further deductions, not exceeding 15 per cent. of the total income, are permissible if made to charitable or religious organizations. Upon the remainder four per cent. tax is levied. This concerns only incomes up to G. $4,000. An eight per cent. tax is levied on all income, less exemptions above G. $4,000, while beginning with G. $100,000 a graduated surtax is added—one per cent. for that figure and increasing until at incomes of more than two gold lakhs the surtax is full 50 per cent.

The following is a summary of the conditions under which returns must be made out and tax paid:—

Who must make out returns according to the law?—All single persons having an income (net) of more than G. $1,000 and all heads of families with incomes of more than G. $2,000.

Who must pay the tax?—All those who come within the law. Taxes must be paid by single persons on all sums above G. $1,000, less certain deductions and exemptions and by heads of families having incomes over G. $2,500 with certain exemptions.

Where must the tax be paid?—All who claim U. S. as their residence must pay to the Collector of Internal Revenue in their District. Those claiming China as their residence should address their returns to the Collector of Internal Revenue at Baltimore, Maryland.

Should husband and wife each pay a tax?—If husband and wife were living together on December 31, 1923, either make out the return for both or each may pay the tax for him or herself, but the same deductions may not be applied to each return (those deductions and exemptions paid in common).

Should children under 18 years of age pay a tax?—If a child has earned monies throughout the year it should be added to the income of the family and tax paid thereon.

Are dividends resulting from China Trade Act Corporations exempt from normal income taxation?—Senator Cummins, in charge of the Bill, said "The dividends received by the stockholder from the corporation are subject to full surtax and normal tax, except in the case of stockholders of citizens of China, resident in China. . . . no way of collecting anyway."

What is the date of return of forms?—Forms should be returned by March 15, 1924.

How should the tax be paid?—The tax may be paid in one instalment, at the time of filing the return or it may be paid in quarterly portions.

Are there any penalties for violation of the statute?—For making a fraudulent return, a fine not exceeding G. $10,000 or one year's imprisonment or both and in addition 50 per cent. of the tax evaded. For failure to make the return on time a fine up to G. $1,000 with an addition of 25 per cent. of the tax. For failure to pay the tax when due five per cent. of the tax plus interest at the rate of one per cent. per month.

Citizens living without America have one legal relief as provided by the law of 1921. Any income tax, war profits or excess profits paid to any foreign country or any possession of the United States may be deducted from the returns.

The U. S. Consulate-General will gladly provide those with forms who desire them.

GROWTH OF THE CHINESE Y.M.C.A.

Association's Work and the Education Movement in China

Nearly 50 guests were present at a tiffin given on Saturday by the Board of Directors of the Shanghai Chinese Y.M.C.A. at the home of the late Mr. A. O'Ben, Kiangwan Road, in honour of Captain and Mrs. Robert Dollar. A number of Chinese ladies were present.

During and after tiffin matters relating to the Shanghai Association were discussed, especially in reference to branches which, it is hoped, will be erected in the French Concession and in Pootung in the near future.

Called upon to deliver an address, Captain Dollar congratulated the local Association for the amount of work it had already done and for its excellent results.

Captain Dollar stated that he had paid a visit to the Wu-han Association in Wuchang and inspected the building which he had the honour of presenting to the young men of that city, as well as Hanyang and Hankow. He was greatly impressed by the activities of that Association and mentioned that arrangements were being made for its additional equipment in the near future.

ENCOURAGING PROGRESS.

"When I first saw the Chinese 'Y' building in Shanghai upon its completion in 1907, I thought it was large enough to accommodate the young men of this city for many years, but five years later, there was not enough space to meet the demand. That was very inspiring, impressing and encouraging, with the result that, as you know, I helped in starting the 'Y' in Wuchang. President Li Yuan-hung (then General) bought their first piece of ground. The other day I saw it in action, but it is already too small to meet the present needs of the young men of Wu-han," stated Captain Dollar.

"The work the Association is doing in China is enormous," he continued, "and the prospects of the future are full of promise and extremely bright."

Captain Dollar stated that Association work amongst the Chinese in San Francisco was very important and mentioned that he was interested in their plan to secure a permanent home.

He was greatly impressed by the popular education movement—the movement started by the Association to teach the illiterate to read and write their own language simply. If that could be continued, China would soon have an educated population. It was of utmost importance and of benefit to all. To have a real republic the people must be taught and must be able to read and write. If the people were educated and made literate, militarism would finally be abolished. Militarism was the curse of the Chinese republic, hence he would wish all success to the popular education movement. Captain Dollar stated that his sympathies were with the Chinese people and China. The situation was not very encouraging but he was certain that China would pull through. He sincerely hoped that she would.

THE Shanghai District Police Chief has issued an order to his subordinates to investigate the counterfeit bank-note question as it is becoming extremely serious, and to arrest any person who attempts to pass false notes. No mention is made in the "Eastern Times" of the name of the bank whose notes have been forged, but the denominations are given as $5 and $10, and the colours of the notes are said to be lighter than the real notes.

ENTERTAINMENT AT COUNTRY CLUB

Highly Successful Evening Arranged by the B.W.A. Dramatic Section

The Country Club was filled to its utmost capacity on Thursday for the performance given by the Dramatic Section of the British Women's Association and the large audience thoroughly enjoyed a well balanced musical and dramatic programme, the first half arranged by Mrs. Kenneth Newman and the farce produced by Mrs. Chris Wingrove. Miss Jansen opened the evening with a well rendered violin solo, Francoeur's beautiful "Sicialiano et Rigaudo," and Mr. Dumbarton followed with the songs "So Fair a Flower" and "Lady Mine" by Herman Lohr, which were enthusiastically received and encored. Mrs. J. A. Cochrane, with her impetuous, flexible cadences swayed her audience to the varying moods of Alfred Noyes' "A Song of England" and followed it with the stirring speech from Shakespeare's "Henry V," "Once more into the breach."

Mrs. Bowes-Smith charmed as ever with her fresh, sweet rendering of Landon Ronald's "Deep in the Heart of a Rose" and "The Nightingale Has a Lyre of Gold," and Mrs. Sykes gave a brilliant piano solo, the "Novelette" by Schuman, which was also encored. Mr. Meyer's song, "Stancez de Lakme" and "Der vor en Tvend nid fin Pigelil" showed to advantage not only the depth and sweetness of his voice, but also its dramatic quality.

During the interval the orchestra supplied by Mr. J. Raines played popular selections and when the curtain rose again it revealed the passage-way of a Channel steamer where the scene of the farce "Calais to Dover" by Gertrude Jennings was laid, a clever dramatization of mal de mer, poignantly realistic without taste. The highly amused audience saw Aunt Clara (Mrs. H. Peyton-Griffin) in a "groaning part"—effectively expressed without a single word, her sympathetic nephew Captain Pengellan (Mr. H. E. Muriel) who immediately fell in love with a widow, Lady Armitage (Mrs. Cochrane), who was still fascinating despite the perils of the passage.

It would be hard to assign the honours of the production among the actors, all of whom brought out the best points of the spirited lines. Mrs. W. Lyle as Mrs. Bilbery was an apt pupil of Coué although she failed to convince her pallid daughter Amy (Mrs. E. A. P. Wood) that she was feeling better and better every moment. The complications of plot were handled in a thoroughly satisfactory manner and the audience went away well pleased.

RETIREMENT OF MR. H. TOD

Resident in Shanghai for 26 Years

Mr. and Mrs. H. Tod sailed for England on Thursday in the str. Patroclus, after having resided in Shanghai for some 26 years, during which time Mr. Tod has always been associated with local dock companies. After some years of service with one of the companies which is now combined with the Shanghai Dock & Engineering Co., he joined the Vulcan Iron Works in 1906, which latter company amalgamated with the New Engineering & Ship building Works in 1912 and with whom he remained until a few weeks ago when he was compelled to retire owing to failing health.

He was the recipient of a farewell presentation made to him by members of the Yangtszepoo Dock when Mr. A. W. Brankston, Managing Director, referred to the able and loyal work rendered by Mr. Tod during his many years of service, and to the high esteem in which he was held both by the Company and his colleagues. Reference was also made to the general regret at his departure, with which was coupled the hope that his return to England would result in restoration to health of both Mr. and Mrs. Tod who herself has been ill for some considerable time.

Mr. Tod was formerly well known in the football field having played for Shanghai, the Engineers, and the Dock elevens.

Both he and his family were well known as members of the Union Church.

MOTOR ACCIDENT ON THE FRENCH BUND

Four Russians Severely Injurde and Car Reduced to Wreckage

Four Russians, three of them brothers and another the chaufeur of a motor car, were severely injured on Saturday night when the machine crashed into an electric pole in the middle of the French Bund after midnight. The injured, Yseuloff Vikentieff, aged 24, Alexandre Vikentieff 18, Yiatcheslioff Vikentieff, 16, and Tcheslowsky' Igor, driver, have been removed to Ste. Marie's Hospital on Route Père Robert, having sustained severe bodily injurires, strained muscles and cut and broken skins. Those in the front seat must have been thrown right through the windshield, for the car had been running at a terrific rate of speed.

It is reported that the car after it rounded the corner at Avenue Edward VII while racing could not negotiate the curve and was forced into the post, but evidently the driver did not know the nature of the roads there, for the natural centrifugal force of making the turn would have swung the machine to the far side of the road, and as it was it struck the posts in the centre of the road. A motorist, who passed shortly afterwards, states that he brought his car to a stop 10 yards beyond the scene of the trouble and as far as he could see there was nothing in sight but bits of broken glass verifying the theory that the speed must have been abnormal.

Both of the wheels on the right side were smashed from the axles while the fenders were bashed in. The tonneau had broken itself loose from the chasse and several hours later one of the front lights was still burning proving that the batteries were still in condition. Otherwise it was a mass of wreckage and ruin.

WEDDING

Evans-Johnson

On December 27, Miss Ellen Boydt Allen Johnson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Johnson, was married to Mr. Robert Leslie Evans, son of the Rev. and Mrs. A. E. Evans.

The bride, who was given away by her father, wore a charming dress of white chiffon velvet, caught up at the side with a train of orange blossom. Her veil was of white embroidered silk tulle, with orange blossoms, and she carried a bouquet of white roses. Mrs. Johnson, in brown velvet with hat to match, was matron of honour. The bridesmaid, Miss Bell Turnbull, wore helio colcured chiffon velvet, silver lace hat with helio trimmings and carried a bouquet of sweet peas.

The service was conducted by the Very Rev. Dean Symons. In addition to Mr. J. H. Ford, the best man, and Mr. K. C. Evans, Mr. L. G. Day and Mr. B. McCarthy, who acted as ushers, there was a large gathering of friends at the church. Master Bobby Roach was the page.

After the ceremony a reception was held at the bride's home, 168 North Szechuen Road, following which the newly married couple left for Taihu Lake, where they will spend their honeymoon.

The bride's going-away dress was of nigger brown material with French skunk collar and cuffs, and gold thread mushroom hat with Bird of Paradise trimming.

SOCIAL ACTIVITIES AT NINGPO

Cafes and the Carefree Feet of Revellers: A River Carnival

From a Correspondent.

Ningpo, Jan. 1.

Your many readers must have been wondering for some time why there has been no news of Ningpo's social and athletic activities appearing in the correspondence columns of your journal and, doubtless, there have not been wanting those who, envious of her glories, have hinted that, like Pome, Ningpo has had her day. It is partly to satisfy the curiosity of the former, partly to stifle the calumny of the latter that I would ask you, Sir, to allow the following short account of the recent winter season, ending as it has with all the wonted splendour of our Christmas week, to appear in your paper.

A rapid survey of the arrivals during the last three months is sufficient indication that Ningpo has been as full as ever. Never has the Bund presented a gayer and more alluring spectacle than on a Sunday morning when visitors and residents alike have thronged its merry length and gladdened its stones with the ring of joyous, lighthearted mirth. Our café has echoed to the carefree feet of revellers swinging to the latest tunes, while our rose battles and champagne sorties have evoked the most enthusiastic appreciation on all sides.

NINGPO'S SERIOUS SIDE.

It must not be assumed, however, that Ningpo has been a mere riot of sensuous enjoyment. We have also our serious side and among our more sober amusements may be remarked lectures on Chinese country life (illustrated by lantern slides), the cinema with its educational presentation of bird and insect life, fornightly gatherings of our classical dance society; and, of course, our winter bazaar.

Nor have our outdoor recreations waned in attraction. With its unrivalled facilities for every form of athletic sport Ningpo has seen its golf course congested with enthusiasts and has acclaimed the prowess shown on tennis court, river, football field, polo ground and other popular "terrains." The river carnival on Boxing Day [illegible] city.

[illegible] sketch of some of the attractions Ningpo has to offer may be the means of stimulating interest in [illegible] trying to raise for the erection of [illegible] still required is only Tls. 51,441 [illegible] 9) and it would indeed be a pity if for lack of this trifling sum Ningpo should have to bow the knee and veil the face before that select coterie of world renowned pleasure resorts among whom she has for so long stood preeminent.

[illegible] to the "Chinese [illegible] by the Chinese Government Bureau of Economic Information at Peking [illegible] at Mukden, Harbin [illegible] is believed to be the richest [illegible] mine so far discovered in the province. It is also favourably situated, being about 90 li from Pinkiang and about 280 li from Changsha, the capital. The property covers 60 square li. It was discovered in the late Tsing dynasty, and in 1913 attempts were made by the head of the Hunan Government Gold Mining Bureau to work it. Several shafts were sunk, but operations were suspended, and they have not yet been renewed.

WAR BREWING IN CHEKIANG

Signs of Coming Trouble: Military Movements in Progress: A Prosperous City

From Our Own Correspondent.

Lanchi, Chè., Dec. 25.

Since my last visit six years ago I find that this city has prospered in every way and trade is quite brisk in most lines. This is due to two chief causes: first to the peace enjoyed by the people and second to the improved means of communication. The express passenger boats which connect with the system of launches plying between Hangchow and Tong lu make it possible to reach here in three and half days. It is a trip well worth anyone's while to take for the scenery alone is a sight to behold. This city is now lighted by electricity and building operations are quite active. The crops look good and the weather through the middle of the day is beautifully warm.

There are signs of coming trouble for the province. Last week the rice merchants refused to buy up supplies of rice from tht farmers who brought it into the city. The reason given was that danger was brewing. Rumour says that Fukien troops have reached Changshan and that they are coming along this way. It is reported that troops from Hangchow are fastening up to resist them. The military here are busy getting all available men sent up to Chuchowfu by boat.

PIRACY ON BRITISH STEAMER

Hydrangea Looted on Leaving Hongkong: Pirates' Gifts of Oranges and Cigarettes

Hongkong, Dec. 28.

The British str. Hydrangea, voyaging to Swatow from Hongkong, was pirated last night.

The Hydrangea left Hongkong yesterday afternoon with 500 Chinese passengers and 300 tons of cargo. At about seven in the evening, at a given signal, the pirates, who were armed and were distributed over the ship as saloon as well as deck passengers, surprised the Indian guard, whom they disarmed. They then rushed to the saloon where the captain and officers were dining.

The pirates soon gained control of the steamer, which their pilot navigated to Bias Bay, where the Hydrangea was grounded [illegible] the shore. The passengers were ransacked and the steamer was looted and abandoned at four this [illegible] There were no casualties. The pirates did not harm the British officers, whom they [illegible] blanket.—Reuter's [illegible]

SOUTH CHINA'S STRUGGLE WITH PIRATES

Hongkong, Jan. 3.

The recent recrudescence of piracy, particularly the case of the Hydrangea on the night of December 27, is focussing attention on the efforts now being made to secure practical co-operation between Canton and Hongkong with a view to the suppression of [illegible] It is [illegible] every hope of co-operation materializing, which is [illegible] and good [illegible] between Hongkong and Canton accruing, from which economic benefits are anticipated. — Reuter's Pacific Service.

Japanese Train Wreck

Osaka, Dec. 27.

A train which left Tokio last night was derailed between Saita and Osaka at 1.1 this afternoon. There were over 50 casualties.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE IMMINENT FALL OF BATANG

Settlement of One Feud Leads to New Trouble: Foreign Families Isolated

Chêngtu, Dec. 12.

A grave situation is developing around Batang (Chinese Tibet). The long-standing feud between the Nankang and Kungpo lamas has been settled by the intervention of the Markham Teje and the Sungpeng Lama and the former have joined forces with the latter brigand armies, numbering over 2,000, in an attack on Batang.

Two companies only can be sent as a relief force from the small Litang garrison. The Chinese garrison holding Batang numbers only 200 odd soldiers who are reported to be demoralized and addicted to opium. Their commander, Wang Cheng-hu, has sent an urgent demand for relief to General Chen Hsia-ling, the Warden of the Marches, but he dare not send a large force for fear that the Chêngtu Governor (General Liu I-chiu) should take the opportunity to attack him. The Tibetans in Batang offered to help the Chinese garrison, but the latter, fearing treachery, refused. The fall of Batang is imminent.

There are in Batang one Canadian family (Macleod), three American families (Hardy, Duncan, Morse) and one Roman Catholic priest (Nussbaum.)—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Daily Mishaps

THERE'S nothing to equal Zam-Buk for ending the fiery pain of a scald or burn, a smarting cut or scratch or the soreness and tenderness of a bruise or sprain. Zam-Buk not only heals quickly, but prevents an injury going "the wrong way." Zam-Buk grows new healthy skin in a way never done by fatty ointments and artificial dressings.

MAKE ZAM-BUK A DAILY NEED

Zam-Buk owes its supremacy over all other forms of skin treatment to its unique herbal composition and its entire freedom from animal fats. Zam-Buk is always reliable and no Native or European household is ever complete without it.

Leg Sores & Leech Bites.

"WHILST in India I was never without Zam-Buk" writes Mr. W. L. Rayfield, from Hunter's Hill, Sydney, Australia. "I used it for my coolies' jungle sores with complete success. These septic sores, result from injuries to the legs sustained in the poisonous undergrowth. Also for leech, and mosquito bites Zam-Buk is the finest healer I know."

Zam-Buk

Free from Animal Fats

Agents :—Messrs. Wakefield & Co. (China), Ltd., S. Y. Sheng Building, Szechuen Road, Shanghai.

THE

"ALL-IN-ONE"

Exchange Tables

The second edition of these Tables is now through the press and on sale. The success of the "All-In-One Exchange Tables," which facilitates the accurate calculation of exchange, has met with a remarkable welcome, the whole of the first edition being disposed of in 12 months.

The old-fashioned exchange table is a bulky volume compared with the "All-In-One Exchange Tables," covering the same ground. This is because so much space is occupied in the older tables with needless repetitions. The "All-In-One," although it is smaller in size and printed in larger and more legible type, covers a very wide range of exchanges, in sterling rising by sixteenths and in other currencies by the smallest quotable unit.

The following are the exchanges covered:—

Sterling into local currency and vice versa
Gold Dollars into local currency and vice versa
Yen, Hongkong or Singapore Dollars into local currency and vice versa
Francs into local currency and vice versa
Rupees or Guilders into local currency and vice versa
Mexican Dollars into Taels into Mexican Dollars

Examples of working are given on every page; a thumb index makes for speedy reference; and the book is bound in strong rexine. Moreover, it is accurate.

PRICE EIGHT DOLLARS

NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS OFFICE

SHANGHAI

MORE WAR RUMOURS AND DENIALS

Local Merchants' Alarm: Influx of Chinese Refugees

The agitation for peace in this section of the country is to-day stronger than ever it was before, repeated rumours being circulated to the effect that the Chihli party was preparing for warfare with Chêkiang by way of either Kiangsu (which would naturally involve the Shanghai-Nanking Railway and Shanghai itself), Fukien, Kiangsi and Anhui, or vice versa.

These rumours, groundless as they are, have naturally caused no small amount of alarm and consternation locally and the merchants, gentry and residents are united in their demand that Kiangsu and Chêkiang shall keep the peace.

One of the latest of these rumours, issued on Sunday, was to the effect that various military commanders in the Chihli party had telegraphed to Marshal Chi Hsieh-yuan (Military Governor of Kiangsu and High Military Inspecting Commissioner of Kiangsu, Kiangsi and Anhui) urging him to permit Marshal Feng Yu-hsiang (the Christian soldier, who is now Military Inspecting Commissioner of the three special areas of Suiyuan, Jehol and Charhar) to bring his troops south to attack Chêkiang. Should Marshal Feng succeed in his task, they will ask that he be granted the post of High Military Inspecting Commissioner of Chêkiang and Fukien. A similar telegram, it is also stated, has been sent to Marshal Wu Pei-fu, the Loyang warlord, but no replies have been received. According to the rumour, these Chihli men have every confidence that Feng and his men (who have been weighed and not found wanting) can succeed if the necessary permission is granted them.

The Chêkiang Residents' Association in Peking has passed a resolution which is being sent to Marshal Chi and Gen. Lu Yung-hsiang (Director-General for the Reorganization of Military Affairs in Chêkiang) warning them against warfare and stating that the first man to move his troops will be condemned by the whole nation as an enemy of the people.

President Tsao Kun and Marshal Wu Pei-fu have telegraphed to Marshal Chi and to Gen. Sun Chuan-fang (Tuli of Fukien) ordering them not to resort to military force in an attack against Chêkiang. They state that they are sending agents to Hangchow to meet Gen. Lu and discuss peace terms with him. They will urge him to unite with them under the self-government clause of the new Constitution.

NO AGGRESSIVE SCHEMES.

Meanwhile, Marshal Chi and Gen. Sun have telegraphed to local merchants denying that they have any aggressive schemes against Chêkiang. Marshal Chi states for months past he has not increased his army by a single soldier and he has not moved one man because he is afraid of causing misunderstandings which may result in trouble. Gen. Sun admits that he recently sent some troops to the north of his provinces to suppress the bandits, but denies that they were there for war against Chêkiang. As he hoped that the bandits will soon be dispersed or suppressed altogether, Gen. Sun stated that he would shortly withdraw his men to their proper stations. "I love peace," stated Gen. Sun, "and will never change my stand."

In another message to a local Chinese, Marshal Chi states that he has given his word not to fight and he will abide by his word, because his pledge was given honourably. He has not moved and will not move his men unless he is first attacked.

Gen. Lu, in a telegram denying that he is preparing for war, states: "Everybody knows that I love and want peace. There is no reason why we should fight at all. These rumours are groundless." Gen. Lu is reported to favour the statements of Gen Chi which appeared in this paper on Saturday last.

The Associated District Assemblies of Kiangsu has issued a manifesto urging all organizations in this province to demand that there shall be no movement of troops on either side. Should this wish be carried out, they state, the will of the people will be obeyed and peace will be maintained.

The Wusih Native Bankers' Guild has telegraphed to the Shanghai Chinese General Chamber of Commerce urging that organization to unite with other Chambers in requesting the authourities of the provinces concerned "to maintain the peace treaties for ever."

Meanwhile, Shanghai's population is steadily increasing by the influx of hundreds of Chinese daily, these coming here to be out of the war zone in good time.

Gen. Lu's Suggestion to Marshal Chi That They Retire from Office Together

As a further step towards effecting peace between the provinces in this section of China, we understand that a number of merchants are negotiating for a treaty of peace between Gen. Lu Yung-hsiang (of Chêkiang) and Gen. Sun Chuan-fang (of Fukien). Mr. Lin Chang-ming, former Minister of Justice, and Mr. F. M. Sah, former Commissioner of Foreign Affairs here and Director of the Shanghai Mint, have been appointed by the people of Fukien to negotiate with the Chêkiang people in carrying on agitation and propaganda for peace and in meeting with the officials concerned.

These two gentlemen, who are at present in Foochow, state, in a telegram just received, that Gen. Sun has given them an assurance that he will not attack Chêkiang and that he is prepared to sign a treaty similar to those which have already been entered into by Chêkiang with Kiangsu, Kiangsi and Anhui, all of which has his complete approval. The telegram, however, states that Gen. Chow Yin-jen, one of the Fukienese commanders, has refused to make any comment in connexion with the matter.

Gen. Lu, in an interview with a prominent Chêkiang merchant, Mr. Shen Tien-chen, states that he will abide by the peace treaties into which he has entered with neighbouring provinces and he will maintain peace and order, only defending his territory when forced so to do; that he will not start fighting or trouble of any nature as he is not a low down schemer; and that he has always hoped for the abolition of the Tuchunate and the abolition of troops. He states that he will carry out his word, and that, while he has no intention of entering provincial territory other than his own, he has the right of taking every precaution for his own defence. "I heartily approve of Marshal Chi's (Marshal Chi Shieh-yuan, of Kiangsu) statement," states Gen. Lu, "in connexion with the abolition of troops in concert with other provinces, and I endorse his statements that we must work together. But I will make a further suggestion; this is that we should retire from office together. This is for the good of the people and is not an impossible task. Let us take action rather than talk."

The members of the Chêkiang Provincial Assembly have addressed a letter to Marshal Chi demanding to know why he is ordering Gen. Sun and the troops in Fukien to fight Chêkiang. "You know we desire peace," they say, "but still you order your troops to attack us. This cannot be denied because there is always fire when there is smoke."

President Tsao Kun has received the representatives of the Chêkiang Residents' Association in audience and assured them that there will be no war between Chêkiang and its neighbouring provinces as he will do his utmost to avert this. He states that he has sent representatives south to negotiate with the various leaders for peace. The President showed the delegates Marshal Chi's telegram stating that he will not declare war, but will maintain peace and order.

OBITUARY

Mrs. Raymonde Levy

Mrs. Raymonde Levy, wife of Mr. Jack Levy, of Messrs. Sennet Freres, died at St. Mary's Hospital on Christmas night after a brief illness, peritonitis being the cause of death. The deceased lady, who only recently came to Shanghai, was but 21 years of age, and was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Leon Laffaille-Schrerb, resident in Paris. The announcement of her death was received with the greatest sympathy, and there was a large attendance of relatives and friends at the funeral, which took place at the Jewish cemetery, Baikal Road, on Wednesday of last week. Many beautiful floral tributes were sent.

Dr. Julian Petit

The funeral service for Dr. Julian Petit who was suddenly stricken by cerebral hæmmorrhage on the morning of December 31, and died on January 1, was held on Wednesday at Bubbling Well Cemetery, where friends and acquaintances completely filled the Chapel to an overflow. The ceremony was conducted by Rev. C. F. MacRae and the subsequent Masonic tributes by Rev. C. M. Drury, Chaplain, and Dr. C. J. Irons, Master, and Messrs. H. Norman, H. Holgate, J. J. Evans, H. Wiley, C. Beatty and J. Mason, his fellows in the Rotary Club, acted as pall bearers. The remains were cremated.

The deceased who came to Shanghai in 1915 has always been a prominent figure in American affair. He was born in Joplin, Missouri, in 1881 and graduated in medicine at Kansas University and Washington University in St. Louis, Mo. He was for many years city dispensary physician in that place and later U. S. public health surgeon. In Shanghai deceased was the first president and one of the principal organizers of the local Rotary Club and was one of the founders of the Acacia Masonic College Fraternity. Always a sincere and earnest Mason, Dr. Petit continued his studies in that science through the York Rite and upon completion became a member of the Mystic Shrine, being one of the first members and most earnest workers in the local Nomad Oasis. He acted for some time as the representative of Afifi Temple (Tacoma, Washington) for China. Dr. Petit was a member of the American Club, the Shanghai Club, the Columbia Country Club, the Cercle Sportif, the Rotary Club the Race Club and of the Nu Sigma Nu (medical fraternity). The greatest tribute that can be paid to Dr. Petit was that he was a friend to every one and had not an enemy in the world.

There were very many beautiful floral tributes.

Mr. H. E. R. Hunter

The news will be received with the deepest regret that the death occurred in London on the afternoon of December 31 of Mr. H. E. R. Hunter, formerly manager of the Hongkong & Shanghai Banking Corporation here. Mr. Hunter had been seen by many Shanghai residents during recent months at Home, and he appeared to be in the best of health, and enjoying a well-earned retirement. Unhappily a stroke supervened on Monday from which he died.

It is not in Shanghai alone but throughout the whole Far East that the death of Harry Hunter will be mourned. It is difficult to give an adequate description of his work here, because all his relatives and most of his contemporaries are absent at the moment. His brother, Mr. Ellis Hunter, is on his way out to China after a holiday at Home, and his nephew Mr. J. E. L. Hunter is up-country. The deceased gentleman is understood to have been born in Inverness, although probably of English parentage, and it is believed that he came to Shanghai in the early 80's. He served in Shanghai, Penang and Japan ports, and his ability as a banker led to his appointment some 15 or 16 years ago as manager in Shanghai. He occupied the post at a period of great crisis, and all who remember financial conditions in the port at that time pay a tribute to his ability. For one thing the rubber boom took place, and there is no doubt that he greatly minimized the effects of the speculative orgy in which the public were anxious to indulge. In addition there was a far-reaching Chinese bankruptcy, and his ability in bringing the resources of the bank to the aid of the native finances of the port redounded to his credit. For a time he acted as Chief Manager of the bank in Hongkong, and retired in 1911.

The late Mr. Hunter was keenly interested in social events, and both during his stay here and afterwards at Home took his full share in the arduous committee work which falls to the lot of such men. Not only was he an owner of ponies, but he also acted as Steward of the Race Club while here, and with Mr. John Liddell ran a stable. It was a very great satisfaction to him to win the St. Leger in 1910 when Mr. Benbow Rowe brought Resilient home successfully. This same spirit was manifest when he retired to London. He was constantly in attendance at the Thatched House Club, of which he latterly became chairman, and he did much to carry on its traditions. The many service men from China who made use of that club during the war will remember his bluff but kindly presence and appreciate his consideration for their comfort. He had given up the pair of spectacles he wore in his office, and a monocle with a broad black ribbon gave him a distinguished appearance.

By the lamented death of Mr. H. E. R. Hunter old Shanghai residents are reminded that the deceased gentleman took a personal, active part in local sports while he was stationed here as a young man. In the early eighties some members of the bank's staff lived in a charming house on the Bubbling Well Road and there Mr. Hunter took his daily exercise with the tennis bat. But the younger generation, who only knew the deceased gentleman when he directed the affairs of the bank here, can hardly imagine him as bestriding a Mongolian pony at the races and fighting strenuously for a win. Yet he rode at not a few meetings, and at one time a local judge of jockeyship pronounced the opinion that he was the "coming jockey."

Miss D. F. Eaton

We regret to record the death on December 10 from meningitis of Miss Delta Frances Eaton, a member of the staff of the West China Mission of the Methodist Episcopal Church, stationed at Chengtu. Miss Eaton was in the Shanghai office for over a year and was prominent in the social work carried on by the Navy Y.M.C.A. in this city, having previously been connected with one of the largest Y.M.C.A. canteens in Paris during the War.

Mr. M. S. Wells

We regret to record the death at the age of 66 on December 22 of Mr. M. S. Wells, who for 15 years was a resident of Hongkong. Mr. Wells first arrived in the Far East to join the Taikoo Dock in the Colony. Latterly he was manager of the Hongkong Cigar Store. Mr. Wells was a Freemason and a member of the Royal Order of Buffaloes.

Mr. S. Baring-Gould

London, Jan. 2.

The death is announced of Mr. S. Baring-Gould, M.A., J.P., the well-known author and Rector of Lew-Trenchard, in his 90th year.—Reuter.

THE LATE MR. KAN CHIU-NAM

Memorial Services for Founder of Nanyang Tobacco Co.: Many Thousands Attend

Nearly 200 local Chinese organizations took part in memorial services which were held at the Town Hall on Saturday for the late Mr. Kan Chiu-nam, founder and former president of the Nanyang Bros. Tobacco Co., Ld., and several thousands of people attended. The proceedings lasted throughout the day, from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m.

The exterior of the Town Hall was decorated with a willow and evergreen pailou, lighted with small electric bulbs. Eight characters were shown, representing the words, "Memorial for Mr. Kan Chiu-nam."

In the main hall hundreds of scrolls and tablets were hung on the walls, entwined with bamboos and flowers, as well as two dozen wreaths. Over the middle of the platform was a portrait of the late Mr. Kan.

The Fuh-Tan University Boy Scouts acted as ushers, and the Lunghua and Kiangwan Orphanages' bands provided music.

At the beginning of the service in the morning, Mr. Chen Liang-yu, a prominent merchant, asked those present to rise and give three bows to the spirit of deceased. This was done in unison.

Mr. Fang-Chao-pah, acting Chairman of the Chinese General Chamber of Commerce, then took the chair and outlined the career of Mr. Kan, this being similar to the report of his life which appeared in the "North China Daily News" the day after he passed away. Mr. Fang emphasized deceased's thriftiness, his industry, and his generosity. He concluded by stating that a brass tablet had been placed in the Chamber of Commerce building as a memorial for their late fellow member.

Following this speech, an announcement was made of the number of wreaths, scrolls, etc., which had been sent in, the senders' names, and the contents of their messages. A memorial song having been sung, addresses relating to Mr. Kan's life were delivered by Dr. Huang Yen-pai, Sir Robert Ho Tung, and others. Members of the deceased's family (his brother and his two sons) read messages of thanks to those who took part in the service. Music ended the proceedings.

The afternoon service was carried out on the same lines. Mr. Chu Hsia-chu was chairman and the speakers were Mr. Yang Tcheng (former Commissioner of Foreign Affairs in Shanghai), Miss May Tsu, Mr. Ma Shu-chow, Mr. Chang Ve-yung, and others.

At this service 3,000 male and female workers in the employ of the company paid their respects to their late employer by bowing thrice.

A RECENT report of the Chinese Navy states that there are 54 vessels now in active service, divided into three fleets. The first fleet numbers 11 cruisers and is stationed at the important seaports. The second fleet contains 40 vessels all on duty along the Yangtze River. Three of these are used as training ships. The Third Fleet is made up of two transports and one cruiser, which is used as an officer's training ship.

THE office of Foreign Affairs on December 20, states the "Independent News," sent a circular telegram in regard to the number of foreign nationals residing in the various provinces. It wants a complete list of all foreigners in order that due protection may be given them. The telegram follows the refusal of the Diplomatic Body to grant a request of the Chinese Government to prevent foreigners from travelling in certain part of China until order is restored.

THE SCANDAL OF THE SOOCHOW CREEK

Trials of a House Boat: Difficulties of Delivering Cargo: Improvement Delayed by Chinese Distrust

A gentleman making the trip by water to Soochow during the holidays reports a most interesting time, inasmuch as it required nearly 24 hours to be towed from the Garden Road Bridge to the Markham Road structure. The party left from near the Rowing Club at 3.30 p.m. on the Thursday before Christmas and by edging their way slowly, and cautiously taking every six inches or a foot that they could possibly manage to slip into, the laodah was able to get the houseboat as far as the Sinza Road Bridge by 11 o'clock in the morning. Here the entire group were subjected to a variety of sights and smells that only China at its worst could produce, a condition probably reproduced nowhere on the face of the globe. However, that stage was passed by dint of hard work on the part of the boatmen and in three hours more, at 2 p.m., the Markham Road Bridge was reached. Most of the congestion was then over and though much shallow water was encountered before arriving at their destination, the picnickers arrived at the walls of Soochow at eight on Saturday morning. They considered themselves extremely fortunate, however, when they saw on their arrival that many others who had gone up by train the day before expecting to find their beds, stoves and utensils awaiting them—having shipped them on the Wednesday—had to spend the night as best they could in taverns, tents and what not in lieu of their delayed houseboats. As many as 30 parties were more or less disappointed through the vagaries of the Soochow Creek and its nefarious channels.

It is needless to report that these seekers of relaxation during the holidays did not attempt to return in the same manner that they went up, but employed the foreign-managed Shanghai-Nanking Railway to get back to the Settlement. Last Monday morning the laodah of the boat which took so long to get up, came to his master and said, "Here, I am." It had taken him the best part of the week to get back. On both the up and return voyage great inconvenience was encountered above the limits of Shanghai because boats had tied up right in the middle of the channel.

It has been stated that the clearest channel could be found on this side of the waterway, while on the Chapei side congestion unimaginable was run into, though credit must be given to the Chapei police for their attempts to keep the boatmen on the move. With their batons and bamboo sticks and clubs they belaboured and flogged the boatmen, but it was of no avail. To appease in a small measure the police they would move perhaps six inches and then stop until struck again and with the swarms of small vessels of all descriptions and the larger ones too it would have required nothing less than a small army to keep them in any sort of motion at all.

SHIPPERS' STRENUOUS TIME.

This picture has been presented merely to give the casual reader and the public in general an idea, however meagre it may be, of the strenuous time shippers must experience in getting cargo through this tortuous waterway and the slowness in delivery. It requires 24 hours for a pleasure boat towed by a motor launch to navigate the creek from the Garden Road Bridge to Markham Road Bridge, how much longer will be required for hand-driven coolies to 'yuloh' a cargo sampan full of machinery, flour or general merchandise. Consider the goods from the S.N.R. terminal which are brought by land from the depot and then must be taken over this waterway to deep harbour ships and then foreign goods taken from the vessels for interior cities and towns.

A person standing on Szechuen Road Bridge during the past week must have wondered with amazement that as much as a sampan could edge its way along at all for there did not appear to be an open inch of water much less than enough for a draft boat. Thousands of small craft as far as the eye could discern were crammed into it and though Customs men at the mouth attempted to prevent further ingress, it was more the inability of the boats to enter than their efforts that stopped further congestion.

It will be remembered that several weeks ago the Chinese press reported that an organization had been formed called the Soochow Creek Improvement Association for the improvement of the Soochow Creek.

These people, Chinese, propose to raise a fund of $600,000 to dredge and improve the channel, and wish to raise it in two parts, half to come from the Shanghai merchants and the other $300,000 to be subscribed by farmers and tenants along the stream who will be benefited from the work inasmuch as their crops can be moved the more readily, and further that they will no longer be inconvenienced by having their land flooded at times of fertility and need.

AN OFFER TO DREDGE.

But that is not all. Some five years ago the Whangpoo Conservancy Board offered to dredge and clean out the bottom so that it could be used for all classes of small shipping but the Chinese were afraid of their "sovereign rights." In the meanwhile "sovereign rights" have allowed the bottom to become silted up and the channel narrowed until there is barely a modicum of efficiency remaining. Then there was a proposition that the Municipality, the Board and the Chinese themselves should each contribute a third of the cost to dredge it for a distance of 10 li to well beyond the confines of the Settlement, the remainder of the channel to be attended to by the provincial authorities; but this was also frowned upon and turned down and native papers were full of reports that the Council had bought a dredging machine and were going to proceed upon their own. The latest offer has come from the Whangpoo Conservancy Board again. It is to the effect that they will provide the full cost of the work and the machinery if it will only be permitted to proceed, but again there appear to be fears on the part of the populace that it is an attempt to grab portions of territory and assign them to the use of the foreigner.

There has been a wholehearted effort on the part of some of the Chinese officialdom and gentry to persuade their countrymen that this move is but for their own good, but so far they have met with no success. Mr. Hsu Yuen, Commissioner of Foreign Affairs, is a hearty supporter of the measure and used all his influence at Nanking to assist the movement and returned with a message of hope, but that is as far as it has got. Mr. Hsu has even prepared a memorandum outlining the measure for the consumption of his countrymen and assuring them that there is nothing but altruism in the proposals of the Board. An organization has been formed of local officials known as the Woosung Conservancy Committee to assist in the getting together of all discordant elements and caring for the dredging above the limits. Certainly co-operation is doing much to alleviate distrust in the arrangements, but so far nothing has really been done, not a shovel full of earth has been removed and until this happens well it would seem probable that absolutely nothing can be done until the issue is settled—if then. Of course with Gen. Ho in power here and Gen. Hsieh in control at Nanking what chances of settlement are there?

Thousands of tons of shipping are delayed monthly and hundreds of boats are held back daily for the channel to clear. Coal, iron, machinery, flour, perishables, inflammables, cargo of all descriptions are beggaring along and are left to the play of the elements—storms and sunshine. The prejudices are immense. The feelings of the uneducated are anti-everything that may assist. Members of Parliament use the Creek for an issue to inflame their supporters along general lines. Those that do not understand are firm. But the Conservancy Commission have a fund of Tls. 500,000 which they have pledged to use purely for the benefit of the Chinese. It is time that something were done. When will light dawn?

With reference to the above article, we learn that the chief of water police has issued an order that no junks or other vessels will be permitted to remain standing in any section of the creek unless loading or unloading. Protests naturally are being lodged.

SCIENCE, ART AND LITERATURE

Formation of a Study Circle

On Saturday afternoon a number of persons interested in science, art and literature were the guests of Messrs. Arthur and Theodore Sopher at 445 Avenue Joffre, and discussed the advisability of forming a circle devoted to the cultivation of various branches of knowledge and the interchange of thought thereon.

Dr. Frederick Reiss explained briefly the object of the meeting, and introduced the principal speaker, Mr. Arthur de C. Sowerby. Mr. Sowerby referred to the work of the China Society of Science and Arts throughout the country, and left it to his auditors to decide whether the new Society should be associated with it as its Shanghai centre or proceed independently.

Mr. Sowerby further alluded to the important work in biological research now being carried on by educational institutions in this country, and read an original paper summarising the present state of knowledge of the fauna of China. His remarks were received with cordial appreciation, and the resulting discussion made it clear that those present welcomed the opportunity of attending lectures by specialists from time to time, and discussing their somewhat varied interests with each other.

COMMANDEERING LAND IN SHANGHAI

The Small Man's Complaint of Southeastern University

To the requisition of 500 mow of land by the Southeast University, the countrymen are continuing their opposition as strongly as before, because they will be thereby deprived of their only means of livelihood, comments the "Sinwanpao." Of the total area of 500 mow requisitioned, the owners are mostly poor people, some possessing one mow and some even less each. On his tiny land, the owner has built his dwelling house, and buried his ancestors, and managed to grow something whereby to eke out a precarious living for himself and family. The owner would be thrown into a pitiful plight if he were suddenly deprived of his little property one day and, even fairly compensated according to market value, not to mention the reduced rate arbitrarily fixed, he would find it a very difficult task to secure another suitable site on which to live and thrive, in view of the exceedingly high cost of land now ruling in Shanghai. With such a pittance as would be paid to him, (a flat rate of $500 per mow is officially announced), could he forsake his native village and emigrate, or could he buy a competency for life? Such a highhanded way of acquiring land would be tantamount to destroying the owner's house, making him bankrupt, driving him to poverty and exile, and inflicting the death sentence upon the whole of his family, not to mention the demolition of his ancestors' tombs.

Let the University authorities place themselves for a moment in the position of these small owners and reconsider this matter from a humanitarian viewpoint. We should say there is certainly an abundance of vacant waste land to be had at Nanking. Why does not the University try to meet its requirement there?

The Shanghai District Council and other public bodies, the gentry and other prominent persons should all lend their support to the appeal of the poor countrymen, since this is a matter in which not only is the latter's welfare threatened, but the interest of the public affected as well, though indirectly.

THE ITALIAN OPERA CO.

New Year Performances of "Traviate" and Tosca

The popularity of the Italian Opera Company held good even in the face of all the special New Year's Eve attractions.

The Lyceum was well filled for Monday's performance of Verdi's tuneful "Traviata." Signorina Delza made a very appealing Violetta and her solos were rendered easily and in a highly artistic and dramatic manner. Signor Gilletta as the lover, Alfredo, was excellent and the rich qualities of his voice were impressive. Signora Polastri sang the parts of Flora and Annina and Signors Bigardi, Giorgianni, Contini and Paterna appeared respectively as Germont pere, Castone, Baron Souphol, and Doctor Grenvil.

Whatever faults there may have been to criticize in past performances the Italian Opera Company certainly rose to the occasion of "Tosca" on Tuesday evening.

Miss Impallomeri's interpretation of the title role combined a fine and sympathetic control of the voice with natural acting. We have already had occasion to refer to the excellent singing of Mr. Chiaia. As Cavaradossi, the painter, he more than fulfilled expectations in his grasp of the magnificent opportunities afforded him. Mr. Scamuzzi, too, showed an artistic restraint and judgment which sometimes he appears to lack and the great natural strength and beauty of his voice has rarely been heard to better advantage.

"La Boheme"

All the positive qualities of the Italian Grand Opera Co. were in evidence on Wednesday when "La Bohême" was presented for the first time during this visit. Half way through the first act the orchestra became more manageable; one was able to hear Signor Giletta's magnificent voice at its most lyrical moments, but the same bad fault noticed on previous nights very nearly ruined the efforts of the singers. Signor Giletta as Rudolpho, and Mlle. Ambroso as Mimi made a charming pair, both of them being particularly good in the pathetic passages. Without exception the vocal efforts of the other principals were fully as effective, especially in the well-remembered quartettes.

"Aida"

To characterize last evening's production of "Aida" in a few short phrases one may say that the singing on the whole was excellent, the chorus ensemble at the conclusion of the second act was magnificent, while the duets of Aida and Amonasro, and Aida and Rhadames, coupled with the ensuing trio between the three, could hardly have ever been surpassed on an Oriental stage. For pure pathos and sympathy and a hearty fellow feeling on the part of the audience the temple dungeon scenes with Rhadames and Aida enclosed within, furnishes the most tragic event.

MME. DIETERICHS' ORPHANAGE

A Brave Little Russian Household at Siccawei and How It Manages to Live

Not far from the Siccawei Convent, off one of the narrow streets of the little Chinese village, whose name sounds like Tuzeva, Mme Dieterichs is maintaining the little group of Russian girls whom she has cared for since they were separated from their parents in the hasty evacuation of Omsk away back in 1919. She started with 46 children, but some have been restored to family or friends, so now there are only 24, including two little boys, who were mere babies at the time they joined the group with their sisters.

Mme. Dieterichs feels herself responsible for the nurture and education of these children, whose ages range from five to 15. She has undertaken to bring them up so that when they are able to return to Russia they will be of real service to their fatherland. Their first stopping place was at Harbin but economic pressure brought them down to Shanghai where they were first domiciled in Hungjao Road, but have now secured cheaper quarters in Siccawei.

The little orphanage is entirely dependent upon outside sources for its support, Mme. Dieterichs making no appeal for charity but accepting gladly what assistance is offered by those interested in the work. The orphanage is conducted with the greatest economy, the girls are taught to care for the house, to do their own washing and mending and to help in the preparation of meals. There are no servants of any sort kept, but three teachers who have been with the children throughout carry out the usual programme of the Russian gymnasium.

The girls for the most part seem well and happy, and they are receiving a splendid training in home-making as well as a good general education. Both General and Mme. Dieterichs teach and share the same fare as the others. For breakfast at eight there is only tea and bread, at noon a rice porridge, at five o'clock soup—which has meat in it only three times a week. Again at eight in the evening tea is served to give a little additional warmth before going to bed, as they have no adequate stoves.

The girls sew very neatly and will be glad to take orders for mending, plain sewing or embroidery. In this connexion it may be added that the address for a small table cover, ordered some time ago, was destroyed when part of the ceiling in their former house fell down and they are consequently unable to advise the lady who ordered it that the work is completed. If this reaches her eye, she is asked to communicate with Mrs. Desnitsky Stone, 16 Wongkashaw Gardens, Telephone W.1835, who is in constant touch with the Orphanage.

A raffle of the embroidery made by the girls has been arranged and tickets for this and also for a beautiful platinum wrist watch may be obtained from Mrs. Stone, who will also be glad to hear from any one who wants Russian lessons from a well qualified teacher, who also speaks English or from any one wishing boots made to order, as General Dieterichs has learned to make shoes of the best cut and finish. Russian riding boots are a speciality but any style can be furnished.

Those responsible for the welfare of this group are making every effort to render it as nearly self-supporting as possible, but there are necessarily many large expenses to be met and with no endowment nor any regular pledges the uncertainty of its finances weighs heavily upon Mme. Dieterichs.

INTERPORT RUGBY

Shanghai Victorious Against Hongkong

Hongkong, Jan. 2.

The interport rugby match between Shanghai and Hongkong was played this afternoon and resulted in a win for Shanghai by 6 points to 3.

The weather was ideal and there was an immense concourse of spectators, including the Governor and Sir Roderick Jones. Sir Reginald Stubbs shook hands with the players before the start of the match.

Shanghai displayed better teamwork. After 20 minutes of vigorous and even play Shanghai carried the ball two-thirds down the field. Bichard crossed far to the left but failed to convert. Fifteen minutes after half-time Bowker (Hongkong) missed a free-kick 40 yards in front of goal. McMeekin (Shanghai) five minutes later also missed a freekick. Then Shanghai displayed pretty passing, right across the field to Bichard, who scored. McMeekin failed to convert. Five minutes from time the Hongkong forwards rushed the ball over but Day failed to convert.

E. J. Dowley was injured in the knee towards the end of the match and was carried off but later returned to the field.

The visitors will play a Navy team on Tuesday.

To-morrow evening the teams are being entertained to dinner at the Hongkong Club, and on Friday they will be guests at the St. George's Society Ball.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Shanghai Defeated by Navy

Hongkong, Jan. 3.

A Navy XV this afternoon defeated the Shanghai Interport Rugby team by 16 points to 3.

The Navy had the superior team, possessing good outside men, particularly Shenton, who scored four tries, two of which were converted.

McMeekin (Shanghai) scored one penalty goal.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

NEW POPULARITY OF SPORT IN FRANCE

"London Park" for Athletics on the Field of Verdun

Verdun, Nov. 14.

A standard athletic stadium, with regulation Rugby and Association football fields, running tracks, velodrome, grandstands and club house, being erected on the edge of this battered city, simultaneously with the work of reconstructing homes to provide shelter for the war victims, is evidence of the place which outdoor sports and athletics now occupy in French life.

"London Park," as the new grounds will be known, in grateful appreciation of the fact that 350,000 francs of the amount necessary for the expense involved were subscribed in London, is to be officially inaugurated by the Premier, M. Poincaré, next summer. Invitations will be sent to celebrated foreign athletes and their participation is expected greatly to enhance the ceremony from an athletic point of view.—Reuter.

AUSTRALIAN CRICKET

Melbourne, Jan. 1.

In a cricket match which concluded to-day Victoria beat New South Wales by 43 runs. The match was fought out with remarkable determination and lasted 5½ days.

Scores:—Victoria 285 (Mayne 106: Scott took 5 wickets for 107) and 412 (Woodfull 117).

N.S.W. 268 (Collins 108: Liddicut took 4 for 50) and 386 (Kelleway 98, Bardsley 74, Kippax 72).—Reuter.

Noted Boxer's Death

Minneapolis, Jan. 1.

The heavyweight boxer, Billy Miske, died here to-day.—Reuter's American Service.

MUNICIPAL GAZETTE NEWS

Volunteer Corps.

Light Horse.—2/Lieut. C. Trenchard Davis M.C. to be Lieutenant.

Machine Gun Company.—2/Lieut. E. C. Baker and 2/Lieut. D. W. Leach to be Lieutenants.

American Company.—2/Lieut. E. L. McCloskey to be Lieutenant.

Chinese Company.—2/Lieut. T. Y. Chang to be Lieutenant.

Commission Renewals.—Captain H. E. Middleton M.B.E., Reserve of Officers, from 2/12/23.

Captain J. E. Murray, Medical Officer, from 30/12/23.

Education.

Extra VI Form at the Public School for Girls.—The Acting Headmistress has recommended that, with a view to encouraging pupils to remain at school for a further year after passing the Senior Cambridge Examination or to pursue a special branch of study, an Extra VI Form be established, and that half fees only be charged for attendance. It is suggested that this project should be in the nature of a reward to pupils for good work, that extra staff will not be necessary, and that the opportunity of an extra year's study under these conditions would be advantageous to pupils in assisting them to select a career. The project is approved, by way of experiment, provided that only pupils who have passed the Senior Cambridge Examination are considered eligible therefor.

Permanent Education Committee

The following is the Report to the Council on the Annual Inspection of Schools for 1923, drawn up by the Permanent Education Committee. The Report bears evidence of the care and attention to educational matters given by the Committee. The various suggestions made will, in due course, receive the Council's detailed consideration:—

ANNUAL INSPECTION OF SCHOOLS, 1923.

The annual inspection of Municipal Schools and of those receiving grants-in-aid took place during the months of November and December. Altogether seven afternoons and one morning were spent on visitations. In as much as this constitutes a somewhat heavy tax on the time of busy men, it was never possible to have all the members of the Committee present at any one visit.

On the first and second days three members took part in the inspection, namely Dr. MacGillivray, Mr. Dawson and Dr. Hawks Pott. On the third, fourth, fifth and sixth days only Mr. Dawson and Dr. Hawks Pott were able to be present. The visitation on the seventh and last day was undertaken by Dr MacGillivray and Mr. Rowland; the latter was prevented by illness from taking part until the last day. Mr. V. G. Lyman was unable to take any part in the inspection.

In our comments on the schools we will group them according to the following order:

I Municipal Schools for European Children.
II Municipal Schools for Chinese.
III Municipal School for Indian Children.
IV Schools receiving grants-in-aid.

I.—The Municipal Schools for European Children.—There are altogether six schools: (1) the Public School for Boys, (2) the Public School for Girls on Yuyuen Road, (3) the Public School for Girls on Boone Road, (4) the Thomas Hanbury School for Boys, (5) the Thomas Hanbury School for Girls, and (6) the Kungping Road School for Boys and Girls. We will refer to them in that order.

(1) The Public School for Boys.—The members of the Committee noted with considerable interest the formation of the Cadet Corps. It was a pleasure to watch the boys at drill, and taking into consideration the short time that has elapsed since the formation of the company, the efficiency already attained is truly remarkable. Mr. Dawson and Dr. Hawks Pott inspected the company and the former made a few remarks expressing his commendation.

The Science work in this school appeared to be of a higher grade than in any of the other schools which were inspected, and might well be taken for a model.

The fact that the registration in the school showed a slight falling off from that of last year seemed to indicate that for the class of boys attending the school, the fees charged present some difficulty. Certainly, they should not be further increased.

The school is much to be congratulated on the fact that one of its students gained the Peace Scholarship.

We noticed that the Natural History Specimens in the School Museum had been well mounted and put into new cases, and we hope that this department of the school will be further developed.

The addition to the playground at the rear of the school building will be of great value for games and athletic sports.

(2) The Public School for Girls on Yuyuen Road.—This was the first visit to this new school, and the Committee found much to admire. The building has been well planned for its purpose, and there is but little to criticise. Some of the workmanship might have been better, but it appears to be very difficult to get as good construction now-a-days as in former times. The tile floors and the Ningpo varnish are not altogether satisfactory.

We would call attention to the following needs. There should be more space for storing coal,—the present coal house being altogether too small.

More serious than this is the need of better equipment for the teaching of science, and the enlargement of the school library.

We were pleased to learn that practically all the girls formerly attending the school in Avenue Road were in the new school, and that the total number of pupils showed considerable increase. Evidently the school has been erected in the right locality, and there will be little difficulty in filling it.

At the present time the third floor is unoccupied and we would suggest that it be utilized for a school for small boys up to the age of ten, and thus help to meet the growing need for a school for boys in this district. The management of this Department might be in the hands of Mr. Billings.

(3) The Public School for Girls on Boone Road.—This school, now reduced to the grade of an Elementary School, is as well attended as ever, and is evidently much needed. As the girls from the district come from less well-to-do families than those in the Western District, we believe the fees should be kept lower. In as much as many of the pupils will have to make their living, it is desirable that the education should be made practical, and we would advise that instruction in commercial subjects be given in the higher forms.

We see no reason why the girls in this school should not be taught cooking and domestic science.

At the present time much to our surprise we found that the Headmistress has to attend to all the office work, without the help of a clerk. It would seem wise to relieve her of some of the routine clerical work, so that more of her time might be devoted to the important duty of supervision.

(4) The Thomas Hanbury School for Boys.—In our visit to this school, we inspected the new addition. We were pleased with the Assembly Hall, and the Chemistry Laboratory, but disappointed with the Physics Laboratory. The last mentioned is so dark as to be practically useless, and some rearrangement of the ground floor would seem to be necessary.

The Department of Manual Training seems to be highly popular and well conducted, and we would favour the development of this branch of work in the other schools.

We would call attention to the fact that the roof of this building appears to require a coat of paint, and that it would be in the interest of economy to have the work undertaken immediately.

In the general efficiency and in good organization, this school stands very high.

(5) The Thomas Hanbury School for Girls.—Owing to the fact that we were late in arriving at this school, it was not possible to see many classes in session, but we were impressed by the excellent work in those which were visited.

It seems a great pity that such an excellent school should be so poorly housed. Year after year we have called attention to the need of a new school building, but thus far no plan for remedying the present unsatisfactory condition has been adopted. We think it greatly to the credit of the Headmistress that in spite of many handicaps, such good results have been achieved.

We were interested in seeing that the girls are taught shorthand, cooking, drawing, basket making, as well as the usual subjects in the school curriculum. It might be well to add a course in typewriting. All these girls will have to make their own living, and therefore the vocational side of education should be emphasized.

(6) The Kungping Road School for Boys and Girls.—This is largely a Kindergarten and preparatory school for small children. The children are bright and happy, and the class rooms are attractive. Evidently school life is made a pleasure and not a drudgery.

The building which is used for this school answers the purpose very well, but the high rent makes the cost for educating a small number of children, about fifty, higher than it should be. The Council would find it a wise economy to erect their own building in the Eastern District as it is certain that a school will be needed in this locality. If the lease on the present building is renewed it should be with the understanding that the lease would include the stable and servant's quarters on the grounds. It is an anomalous state of affairs that right next to the school building there should be a stable and quarters occupied by mafoo and family, not under the control of the school authorities.

II.—The Municipal Schools for Chinese.—At present there are four: (1) the Public School for Chinese on Elgin Road, (2) the Ellis Kadoorie School, (3) the Nieh Chih Kuei School, and (4) the Polytechnic School.

(1) The Public School for Chinese.—This school has been greatly improved in appearance by the repairs and the new coat of paint. The former masters' residences make excellent laboratories. We would like to see the Physics Laboratory as well equipped as that for Chemistry.

In this school as in the other schools for Chinese there might be more uniformity in the text books used for teaching English. It appeared that each school acted independently in this matter. One Headmaster spoke highly of a certain book, and another did not seem to know much about it. It would be a good plan for the Headmasters to confer on such matters.

In regard to the teaching of Geography, more emphasis should be placed on the teaching of the Geography of China than seems to be the case at present.

(2) Ellis Kadoorie School.—The new wing is a splendid addition. We would suggest that the pavement of the ground floor might be improved. A coat of asphalt would make it useful as a play shed in wet weather. It might also be provided with some simple gymnastic apparatus.

Again we were struck by the lack of uniformity with other public schools, and found ourselves wondering why there was no attempt to teach Science in this school. In modern education we realize that no education is complete that fails to give the pupils some instruction in the Natural Sciences.

(3) Nieh Chih Kuei School.—The increase in the number of pupils has been remarkable. There are now 360 on the roll and the maximum will soon be reached. The school is satisfying a need in a rapidly growing district.

We inspected the new wing, containing the work shops. It seems somewhat of a pity that such excellent equipment is not put to greater use. More pupils should be taking manual training and it should be a regular part of the curriculum instead of being taught after the close of the school day.

We would call attention to the fact that the latrine could be greatly improved if the surface was covered with tiles. In this way it could be kept clean and the smell would be less offensive.

(4) The Polytechnic School.—The school is doing excellent work and the pupils are alive and alert. It is evidently located in the right district, and the new building should be erected on the present premises.

III.—The School for Indian Children.—The main purpose for establishing this school was to provide education for the children of the Sikh Police employed by the Municipal Council. The idea was a good one, but has not worked out very satisfactorily. The number of children attending has been so small that the expense has hardly justified. The teacher seems to have lent himself to political propaganda, and the decision reached by the Council to suspend the school at the end of the year is a wise one.

The suggestion of the Permanent Education Committee that the expense of such a school should be a charge on the budget of the Police Force and not on the Educational Budget has been adopted. This is not a public school, and its existence is rendered necessary only because the Municipal Council wishes to encourage the Sikh Police to bring their families to Shanghai. It is therefore an expense incurred in connexion with the Police Force.

IV.—Schools receiving grants-in-aid.—The following schools receive grants-in-aid: (1) the Jewish School, (2) the Providence Or-Orphanage in connexion with St. Joseph's Institute (3) St. Francis Xavier's, and (4) the Institution of the Holy Family.

The Jewish School has now been moved to one of the buildings formerly occupied by the American School. This is a great improvement, but if the school is to become permanent, we think it would be advisable for the Jewish community to erect a suitable school building.

The Roman Catholic Institutions receiving grants-in-aid are carrying on a charitable work that is worthy of support, and in as much as the Municipal Council does not provide any home for orphans, or the exceedingly poor, we consider that these grants are justified.

Conclusions.—In submitting this memorandum, the Committee feels that it is somewhat of the nature of an ad interim report. The time has come when better provision should be made for the oversight and inspection of schools than it is possible for the Permanent Education Committee to give.

The schools are doing excellent work, but further improvement is possible in the way of co-operation, unification and adaptation to present-day requirements.

In as much as the General Education Commission has such matters under consideration further comment at this time is unnecessary.

On behalf of the Committee.
F. L. HAWKS POTT.

FAREWELL TO SIR R. HO TUNG

Chinese Chamber of Commerce Reception: Peace to Be Won Only by Deeds

[illegible] we take action not talk. If we want to have real peace in China we must be prepared to sacrifice for it," was the keynote of a reception held on Wednesday afternoon in the Chinese Chamber of Commerce in honour of Sir Robert Ho Tung.

Mr. Fang Chao-ying, acting Chairman of the Chamber of Commerce, presided, and among those present were Sir Robert and his two sons, Mr. Hsu Yuan (Commissioner of Foreign Affairs), Gen. Wang Ching-chen (chief of staff to the local Military Governor), Chev. S. K. Chen, Judge T. S. K. Loh Messrs. Fu Siao-en, Pan Ching-poo, Lo King-kee, Shen Shen-ching, N. Y. Chang, S. S. Fung, P. K. Chu, S. U. Zau, K. S. Zee, W. H. Chen, and Sze Liang-zay, L. T. Yuan, and Drs. David Z. T. Yui, P. W. Kuo, T. H. Lee, and Huang Yen-pai.

The hosts of the afternoon were the Chamber of Commerce, the Kiangsu Educational Association, the Shanghai Bankers' Association, the Shanghai Native Bankers' Guild, the World's Chinese Students' Federation and the Shanghai College of Com[illegible] Southeastern University).

Mr. Fang, in the opening speech, stated that the reception was not only a welcome to Sir Robert personally, but it was a welcome to the desire for peace which [illegible] which everybody should work, and the speaker expressed the hope that Sir Robert Ho Tung would return to Shanghai in the near future to carry on the work which he is leaving behind.

Mr. Shen Chu hsu, chairman of the Bankers' Association, concurred with Mr. Fang, stating [illegible] provinces, but the provinces still at war, which wanted Sir Robert to come with his peaceful designs.

Dr. Huang Yen-pei, representing the Kiangsu Educational Associa[illegible] ancient times, when they wanted peace, advocated it, agitated for it and secured peace. When he re[illegible] abroad, said Dr. Huang, he and three other gentlemen (Dr. David Yui, Mr. C. C. Nieh and Dr. Moulin Chiang) issued a circular telegram throughout the country [illegible] and unity, but unfortunately at the [illegible] about. China's troubles were because the people only talked and did not take action.

Mr. [illegible] Liang-zay, who has consented to carry on the work of [illegible] motrow, said that the Kiangsu [illegible] bad and matters were threatening. Mr. [illegible] local journalist, has just returned to Shanghai after [illegible] Nan[illegible] and Hongkong where he met Marshal Chang Tso-lin, and Gen. Li Yuan-hung in the interests of peace. [illegible] was part of the [illegible] to [illegible] able to arrive at peace with each other, he said, what hopes [illegible] for [illegible] of this country.

Sir Robert stated that he was leaving Shanghai, but his heart was with the Chinese people in Shanghai. He wanted peace and was willing to work hard for peace, but now, owing to pressure of business [illegible] and the cold weather which has [illegible] Hongkong. He was returning to Hongkong. After going to Hongkong he was going to England to be present as one of the Hongkong commissioners at the British Empire Exhibition, but he was prepared to return immediately [illegible] if a crisis arose. He would like the conference would take place. Sir Robert stated that he was also willing to mortgage [illegible] property in order to raise funds for China.

A dinner was given by Mr. C. F. Hsu, the Commissioner of Foreign Affairs in honour of Sir Robert Ho Tung, the promotor of the Round Table Peace Conference, at the Bureau of Foreign Affairs on Sunday last. Mr. Hsu Tai-chi, formerly Governor of the Bank of China and now Vice-President of the Chinese Ameri[illegible] Bank of Commerce, Mr. C. P. Fang, President of the Chinese General Chamber of Commerce and Mr. Shen Chu shu, President of the Chinese Bankers' Association, were among the guests. The host delivered a farewell speech and Sir Robert responded. Mr. Shen Chu-shu, the President of the Banker's Association, and Mr. P. K. Chu, General Secretary of the World's Chinese Students' Federation, also spoke. Sir Robert left for Hongkong by the President Madison on Friday.

SHANGHAI AMERICAN SCHOOL

Dedication Service

A large number of interested friends accepted the invitation of the Shanghai American School to exercises in connexion with the dedication of the new buildings in Avenue Petain on Wednesday afternoon when they inspected the three buildings already in use, the recitation building, the girls' dormitory, and the building housing the large dining hall in which the services of dedication were held.

At 3.45 an American flag, the gift of the American Legion, was presented by Mr. C. S. Franklin, Commander of the Frederick Ward Post of the American Legion, to the school as represented by Cpl. Raven in charge of a squad of American school boys, members of the American Co., S.V.C., Cpl. Raven handed the flag to the School Co. of Boy Scouts who raised it while Mr. Miller sounded "To the Colours" on the cornet and the S.V.C. squad presented arms. In presenting the flag Mr. Franklin charged the school to guard it carefully and keep it proudly flying as it stood for the traditions and ideals of their country.

After tea had been served to all guests the service of dedication was opened by a prayer by Rev. C. N. Caldwell, the "Father" of the School, whereafter Miss Louise Macklin of the Music Department then gave a violin solo. Mr. W. W. Lockwood, Chairman of the Building Committee, presented the buildings to the Board of Managers. Mr. Harold Dollar, Chairman of the Board of Managers, in accepting the gift spoke in appreciation of the untiring work of the Building Committee. Miss Beruice Austin, also of the Music Department, sang, and the Rev. C. L. Boynton, the Principal of the school, spoke of "The School and the Future," saying that the school was "too large for its clothes already" since the number of applications was already greater than could be accommodated and unless 40 or more students were to be denied admission this [illegible] temporary buildings would have to be erected or other means taken to meet the need. He then introduced Captain Robert Dollar.

SHANGHAI'S AMERICAN COMMUNITY.

In the dedicatory address Cap[illegible] Dollar touched on the rapid growth of American interests in China, of the forward outlook of the school, the wise foresight shown in choosing a plan adaptable to large development and to the interest which America was beginning to take in China both commercially and generally. The American community in Shanghai, said the speaker, has been referred to as the greatest community of Americans outside the United States.

The prayer of dedication and [illegible] were pronounced by Rev. H. N. Smith, Vice Chairman of the Board.

Mr. A. Sorensen, formerly Vice-Consul for Norway, has been appointed Sub-Manager of the Sino-Scandinavian Bank, Shanghai. Mr. Sorensen is relieving Mr. A. H. Haslund, who has joined the Board of Directors of the same bank.

CAPT. ROBT. DOLLAR AT UNION CLUB

The Great Expansion of Pacific Trade and the Future of Shanghai's Commerce

Capt. Robert Dollar was entertained at luncheon last Friday by the members of the Union Club. Mr. V. G. Lyman was in the chair, and there was a very large number of members present, British, American and Chinese. After lunch, Mr. Lyman introduced Capt. Dollar in a few well chosen words, and Capt. Dollar rose to reply. He began by expressing his great pleasure at the cosmopolitan nature of the society in which he found himself. It was a matter of great delight to him to find an institution such as the Union Club, with British, American and Chinese all co-operating.

Capt. Dollar recalled how, when he was in London some years ago, he was much struck by the formation of the English-Speaking Union, of which he became the first life member. With such unions, he said, with co-operation and with intimacy between the English-speaking peoples of the world, apart from any question of politics or alliances, war must become practically impossible. Capt. Dollar then turned to the question of China, and while expressing regret that she was not making the progress that she should, he emphasized strongly that neither was there cause for her friends to be discouraged. He recalled that it was just 47 years ago that the Woosung Railway was torn up and taken away to Formosa. There were then no railways in China, but she was now abundantly provided with them, though not so abundantly as she should be.

Capt. Dollar next spoke of the great prosperity through which America was passing. All over the country, in big cities and little villages, houses were being built, and the saw mills of the Western Slope could not turn even domestic orders. Simultaneously, there was an amazing expansion of trade on the Pacific. This was shown by the development of the harbours from Canada to Southern California, which still could not keep pace with the ships which required them. In 40 years the trade of the Pacific had increased by 636 per cent., and the tonnage now passing through the Panama canal was 3,000,000 tons more than that of the Suez canal.

China must share in this prosperity, and it was certain that she would share in it. Capt. Dollar contrasted Shanghai of 30 years ago, when nothing but little ships could come up the river, with the Shanghai of to-day, when all the biggest vessels on the Pacific could come right up the harbour. Shipping entering the port of Shanghai in 1922 amounted to 27,000,000 tons, which was ahead of Hongkong, once the leader, and second he thought, to the port of New York. There was however, still much to be done in respect of the Fairy Flats and at Woosung, but this would be done. He dwelt on the great prospects of Shanghai as the entrepot for all the peoples living along the Yangtze and its tributaries, who amounted in number to one-eighth of the world's population. Capt. Dollar then spoke with great satisfaction of the Four-Power Treaty. Before that Treaty, war between the United States and Japan had seemed to many people to be inevitable, but the Four-Power Treaty had put it back into the remote distance.

He concluded with the hope and the sure confidence that China would get over her troubles; and then bade his hosts farewell, as, he said he prided himself on letting business men get back to their offices by two o'clock.

In a New Year's message to his fellow nationals, Mr. S. Yada, the local Japanese Consul General, urges them to awaken to the fact of the importance of entering into closer relations with the Chinese people.

SPORTS AND PASTIMES

PAPER HUNT CLUB

The Eighth Hunt: A Cold Day and Plenty of Water in Kiangwan Country

The last hunt of the year took place on Saturday afternoon at Kiangwan. The weather was bright overhead, but the wind was piercingly cold, and the hunters got well chilled through before they started. There were only about thirty competitors, and several of these got rather wet because the tide was in and the creeks were very full of water. The hunt was laid by Mr. H. G. Elliott over good galloping country, but the jumps were too many and too big, especially the first jump, which should not have been laid. The course lay entirely on the west side of the Woosung Railway line and the pace was slow, as the jumps and wades took it out of the ponies. The falls were numerous and the veteran Mr. A. W. Burkill took a toss no less than five times, Mr. Benbow Rowe fell at the beginning of the hunt, and Mr. N. L. Sparke and Mr. J. Liddell at the end. Mr. Wells Henderson might have secured a win; but his pony fell between the last jump and the flags, and for a brief space could not get up again. Mr. G. G. C. Harper came in first and Mr. M. O. Springfield, third, won the heavy-weight. The card reads as follows:—

1.—G. G. C. Harper on Micawber.
2.—A. J. Rea on Red Surrey.
3.—M. O. Springfield on Harry M.
4.—D. L. Newbigging on Zoulou.
5.—H. G. Robinson on Flying Arrow.
6.—A. S. Withers on Night Raider.

The New Year Hunt

In spite of the dust, which was in no way lessened by the slight rainfall of the previous week, the hunt on New Year's Day was a pronounced a success. The trail was laid by Mr. M. O. Springfield, winner of the previous event, assisted by Mr. G. G. C. Harper, lightweight winner on that occasion, and the meet was set for Pinkerton's Line, near the Long Village on Rubicon Road. Fortunately the course was not a long one as the Christmas and New Year holidays have been prolific in those contests dear to the members of the Hunt Club. The start was set at 3.30 p.m., and prompt at the hour some 110 riders were despatched by Mr. E. S. Benbow Rowe, Senior Steward. Mr. A. B. Thompson on Silver Wing came in first, thus achieving the distinction of winning both the Christmas and New Year hunts, and there was no heavyweight on the card, which read as follows:—

1. Mr. A. B. Thompson on Silver Wing
2. Mr P. Stang Pund on Nordborg
3. Mr. J. C. Greig on Mistylight
4. Mr. R. Gordon on Blazing Corn
5. Mr. D. L. Newbigging on Wyvlesfield
6. Mr. J. Offor on Buffalo

WEDNESDAY'S HUNT.

Wednesday's hunt, like that on New Year's Day, was a short one and was laid by Mr. M. O. Springfield. The day was bright, warm one and the going was not so dusty, probably owing to a much smaller field. At 3.30 p.m., riders assembled at Miss Johnstone's line and were despatched by Mr. E. S. Benbow Rowe. Mr. J. K. Brand, on The Poung Bird, was first past the flags, followed by Messrs. E. A. Brodie on Seafield and J. C. Grieg on Black Adder. Mr. E. S. Benbow Rowe, sixth, on the Deerhound, was the heavy-weight winner. The card read as follows:

1. Mr J. K Brand on The Young Bird
2. Mr E. S. Brodie on Seafield
3. Mr. J. C. Grieg on Black Adder
4. Mr J. H Liddell on Good Fellow
5. Mr. J. H Teesdale on Cape Horn
6. Mr. E. S. Benbow Rowe on The Deerhound

GOLF CHAMPIONSHIP FINALS

Hong Foursomes Won by Old Dock

The final of the Hong Foursomes was played at Kiangwan on Sunday between the Old Dock (C. Richards and H. R. Malcolm) and the British-American Tobacco Co. (J. B. Ferrier and A. V. Pettitt). The latter had to concede three strokes each 18 holes, and so well did the handicap work out that the match was only won on the 36th green, when the Old Dock couple were declared victors.

In the early stages of the game play went slightly in favour of the B.-A.T. In the morning Ferrier and Pettitt were three up, and they held this advantage until the 13th hole in the afternoon. The Old Dock took the 14th, being now two down, and a half at the 15th resulted, B.-A.T. two up and three to play. The 16th and 17th went to the Old Dock, so that at the 18th hole (the 36th of the match) the contestants were all square. Ferrier was just over the bunker with his drive, Richards being ahead. Malcolm with the second put Richards into the rough and then Richards played the shot which won the match. He placed it beautifully on the green, and in the extremely difficult putting contest which ensued the Old Dock won.

Hongkew Club Championship

The championship final of the above Club took place at the Hongkew Park on Wednesday, December 26, under favourable weather conditions and although there was a strong northeast wind blowing, the match resulted in a very close and thrilling finish.

The last year's champion, Mr. C. M. Sequeira, again retained the title by defeating his younger opponent, Mr. H. Collaco, but after a very hard contested game, as he was tested to his utmost ability and won the match after three extra holes had been played.

ASSOCIATION FOOTBALL

Results in Brief

FIRST LEAGUE.

S. R. C., 1; S. F. C., 0.
Police, 4; Pubic School, 2.

SECOND LEAGUE.

Lusitano, 6; Jewish R. C., 0.
S. F. C., 3; T. H. School, 0.
St. Xaviers, 1; Navy, 0.

FRIENDLY MATCH.

Interport Probables, 9; H. M. S. Durban, 1.

H. M. S. Durban Again Beaten

It is the general opinion that H. M.S. Durban's football team since coming to Shanghai has been very unfortunate. The men came here with a great reputation and a fine record of play, and their performances in Shanghai have shown that there was no exaggeration about the reports. However, they do not seem able to win. It was remarkable that so clever a team should go down before the Interport Probables on New Year Day by the big score of 9 goals to one. The score suggests a smashing defeat, but as a matter of fact it was a very close and interesting game. Six of the goals came very near the end, mostly from Goldman, who, besides being in splendid form, had the fortune always to be in the right position for a sudden change of play. Naturally, Shanghai's hopes regarding the Interport series now are very high.

COMMERCE AND FINANCE

Money and Exchange

OFFICIAL RATES.

Shanghai, Jan. 4.

Bank's demand selling rate for £1 at 3/4⅛=Tls. 5.98 at 71.45=$8.37
G.$100 at 71⅜=Tls. 139.37 at 71.45=$195.06

Mex. Dollars, market rate	71.7
Native Interest	35
Copper Cash	252,500
Bar Silver	34 1/16
Bank rate of discount	4%
Paris on London	Frs. 87.25
New York on London	G.$4.27⅜

BANK'S OPENING SELLING RATES.

	Per Tael
LONDON—
Telegraphic Transfer	3/4
Demand	3/4⅛
NEW YORK—
Telegraphic Transfer	71½
Demand	71¾
PARIS—
Demand	1463
INDIA—
Demand	231¾
HONGKONG—
Demand	71¼
JAPAN—
Demand	64¼
BATAVIA—
Demand	197
SINGAPORE—
Demand	70¾

BANK'S OPENING BUYING RATES.

LONDON—
Demand	3/4⅝
4 m/s. Credits	3/6
4 m/s. Docs.	3/6⅛
6 m/s. Credits	3/6⅛
6 m/s. Docs.	3/7
NEW YORK—
Demand	73
4 m/s. Credits	74½
4 m/s. Docs.	75
PARIS—
4 m/s. Docs.	1540
Closing business done at:—
London T.T.	3/4
New York T.T.	71½

CUSTOMS EXCHANGE RATES FOR JANUARY.

Hk Tl. 5.44 @ 3/3⅜	£1
,, 1 @ 1370½	Frs. 15.27
,, 1.24 @ 72⅛	Gold $1
,, 1 @ 66⅜	Yen 1.68
,, 1 @ 230½	Rupees 2.57
,, 1 @ 1.50	Mex. $1.50
,, 1 @ 16.40	It. Lire 18.27

Marks and Roubles no quotation

Sino-Italian Bank Quotation

Selling Rates, Jan. 4.

It. Lire 16.60	Tl. 1
Swiss Frs. 4.09	Tl. 1
It. Lire 10.70	Y. 1

Week's Exchange Notes

Jan. 5.

At the close of business on the 3rd instant the stock of silver in Shanghai was Tls. 23,336,000 and $31,690,000.

These figures include Tls. 5,970,000 and $18,940,000 in Chinese banks, in which there were 635 bars.

BAR SILVER.

Arrivals were:—
2412 bars from America.
Shipments were:—
186 bars to Nanking
90 ,, ,, Hangchow
90 ,, ,, Foochow

366 bars

SYCEE.

Arrivals were:—
Tls. 30,000 from Kiukiang
Shipments were:—

DOLLARS.

Arrivals were:—
Tls. 700,000 to Hankow
100,000 ,, Changchun
100,000 ,, Mukden
100,000 ,, Tungchow

$400,000

Shipments were:—
$100,000 to Kiukiang
$660,000 from Hangchow
380,000 ,, Nanking
50,000 ,, Wuhu

$1,090,000

SILVER.

The price of London silver on December 28 was 33 1/16d. ready and 32⅞d. forward; on Thursday the quotation was 34 1/16d. spot and 33 3/16d. forward, an advance in price on the respective deliveries of ⅛d. and 1/16d. Supplies have apparently not been plentiful. India continues to be a buyer to a small extent; China, on the other hand has on one or two days been reported as having sold. Stocks in India have decreased 50 per cent. since November 17, when they stood at 16,000 bars; on 29th ultimo they were 8,000 as wired by Reuter. Stocks of sycee since December 28 have increased by Tls. 16 lakhs, whilst stocks of dollars have increased by $4 lacks. The price of silver in America on Thursday was 64⅜, small business done, delivery San Francisco. The New York/London cross rate is 429⅜.

EXCHANGE.

The market has been steady with sellers round about T.T. 3/4d. or a fraction higher. Owing to the late arrival of silver per President Wilson the market at the close of business on Monday was firm. The quoted rate on Friday last was T.T. 3/3⅞d. which advanced to 3/4d. on Saturday and on opening on Monday dropped back to 3/3⅞d. With silver up ⅜d. ready and ¼d. forward yesterday morning, the quoted rate advanced to 3/4d. the present level, but small sellers are to be found at 1/16d. higher for cash, 3/3⅛d. January, 3/3d. February and G.$T.T. 71 Cash, 70⅛ January, 70¼ February. For Bills 4 m/s. L/C 3/4⅛d. is to be had for January, 3/3⅛d. February, 3/3⅛d. March. 4 m/s. L/C 73⅛ January, 72⅜ Feb./March.

SHANGHAI MARKET REPORT

Better Feeling in Local Yarn: Outlook for Higher Prices at Piece Goods Auctions

Jan. 5.

Two principal features of interest present themselves in the Shanghai markets this week, firstly the better outlook as far as the piece goods auctions are concerned owing to what may well be described as famine supplies, and secondly the stronger tendency of local yarn. The gratifying feature of the latter is the increased business resulting to the mills.

Apart from this there is little of outstanding importance, for the Home markets have been largely stagnant as a result of holidays. The chief point so far as exports are concerned seems to consist in a better inquiry for silk.

PIECE GOODS.

So far as piece goods are concerned the year has started no better than the old one closed, and prospects of a resumption of any volume of trade with Manchester are not bright. This is in spite of the fact that dealers are advancing their rates here considerably. These advances are being carried out on a speculative basis, principally in White Shirtings and Greys which the speculators hope to re-sell after China New Year to advantage.

In view of the fact that the shortage of piece goods will probably be still more acutely realized after China New Year, to-day's buoyant feeling is readily appreciated. Dealers are confident in the immediate future because of the fact that the statistical position shows stocks to be on practically a famine basis, and their speculations seem to be on a sound foundation in view of the very high replacement costs. At the same time the local political situation is distinctly curbing operations on the part of merchants in Chinkiang and Fukien who would probably have come into the market.

The week's auctions were the last for which payment has to be made prior to China New Year, and as a consequence of this the strength of the market was not fully apparent. Next week, however, when purchases are made with payment after the settlement, price developments ought to assume interesting proportions. At the auctions local demand was good, as was also that from the north. A good demand continued from Changsha for Whites, and Hankow, where the tightness of money seems to have been relieved somewhat, has been buying more. The Korean market is steady to firm.

In woollen piece goods there is nothing new to report.

COTTON AND YARN.

China Cotton—Raw cotton has been steady to firm during the week, with comparatively little doing on account of the holidays. The watering evil appears to be getting worse all the time, and the supplies to the mills are most unsatisfactory. On the Chinese Cotton Goods Exchange the following quotations are current:—January 47.65; February 47.80; March 47.70; April 47.70; May 47.75. Spot quotations are as follows:—

Tungchow	Tls. 48
Shanghai	,, 46
Shensi	,, 47
Hankow	,, 44

Local Yarn—Largely owing to short production by the mills local yarn has shown an improvement during the week. The absence of stocks has enabled spinners to force a moderate advance in prices all round, and quotations are from Tls. 2 to Tls. 3 per bale higher than a week ago. A moderate business has been done with the mills, and it is satisfactory to note that in the market there is generally a brighter feeling as regards the commodity. Cloth remains dull, inquiry being largely confined to delivery after China New Year. On the Chinese Cotton Goods Exchange quotations are as follows:—January 177.50; February 179.30; March 181.30; April 181.40; May 181.70.

SILK.

The silk market opened rather firm after the holidays, and it seems as if consuming markets are at last waking up, and are sending orders, although most of their offers are still considerably below our prices.

However, a fair turnover is to registered, most of the transactions being for Lyons, whilst the depreciation of the franc rate has probably frustrated a still larger volume of business with France. Prices.

	Tls.
Szechuan fil. middle grades	1,200
Tsatlee Rls. new style Black Lion 1.2.	990
Tsatlee Re. old style K. K. Mars 1.	865

PRODUCE.

Owing to the New Year holidays the markets at Home have again been closed during most of the present week, and as a consequence no change can be reported in the local situation.

SUMMARY OF EXCHANGE—HIGHEST AND LOWEST WITH AVERAGE MONTHLY RATES

1923

The following records are kindly supplied to us by Mr. H. F. Bell:—

Month	Highest Date	Bar Silver	TT	4 m/s Credits	Lowest Date	Bar Silver	TT	4 m/s Credits	Average Monthly Rate
January	25/26	32 1/16	3/1¼	3/3¼	3/11	31 3/16	3/-	3/1⅜	3/0⅝
February	28	31⅝	3/1	3/3	5	30 7/16	3/-	3/2	3/0 5/16
March	28	32 7/16	3/2	3/4	3	31 7/16	3/1	3/3	3/1⅛
April	30	32 1/16	3/2⅛	3/4⅛	11	31 1/16	3/1¼	3/3¼	3/1 1/16	Average 6 months 3/1⅛
May	1	33 3/16	3/2¾	3/4⅜	17	32 7/16	3/2	3/4	3/2⅛
June	19	32 7/16	3/1⅞	3/3⅝	28	31⅜	3/0½	3/2½	3/1⅛
July	10	31⅝	3/1	3/3	31	30	3/-	3/1⅛	3/0 7/16
August	13	31⅛	3/0½	3/1⅜	1	30 7/16	3/0½	3/1⅛	3/0 7/16	Average 6
September	21/2	32⅝	3/1⅜	3/3¼	1	30 1/16	3/0½	3/1⅜	3/1 1/16
Obtober	2	32 1/16	3/1⅛	3/3	13	31 7/16	3/0½	3/2	3/1
November	29/30	33⅛	3/3⅛	3/5¼	3	31⅜	3/0¾	3/2¼	3/2⅜
December	12/19	33 1/16	3/4	3/6	4/7	33	3/3	3/4¼	3/3⅝

Average for 1923=3/1⅜

WHOLESALE PRICES IN SHANGHAI

The Commissioner of the Treasury Department's Bureau of Markets publishes the following report on wholesale prices in Shanghai:—

The total index number for this month is 157.5 being about 0.1 per cent. higher than that in the previous month. In general the market prices are quite steady. Only metals and fuels have risen—approximately from 2 per cent. to 3.5 per cent. while building materials and industrial materials show a marked tendency to decrease. This year has the highest figure among the index numbers for the last five years which are respectively as follows:—

1923	156.4
1922	145.5
1921	150.2
1920	152.0
1919	144.7*

*The average from September to December.

Our tables of index numbers for the five years as well as for 1913 and that for this month are given below:

	Cereals	Other food products	Textiles	Metals	Fuels	Miscellaneous: Building materials	Miscellaneous: Industrial materials	Miscellaneous: Sundries	Miscellaneous: Average	Total average
1913 ...	100.0	100.0	100.0	100.0	100.0	100.0	100.0	100.0	100.0	100.0
1919 ...	119.1	116.0	152.2	133.2	187.7	144.8	346.4	131.8	202.7	144.7
1920 ...	126.1	128.8	148.1	150.0	183.0	161.3	348.0	134.8	206.7	152.0
1921 ...	126.6	131.0	147.6	150.4	177.7	172.0	291.4	140.0	195.3	150.2
1922 ...	145.5	133.6	148.1	133.4	172.8	163.8	200.9	130.8	167.1	145.5
1923 ...	149.6	153.4	157.4	158.1	172.4	164.0	183.3	131.9	162.9	156.4
Last Wed.
Dec. 1922	140.7	141.7	151.4	138.1	189.2	160.5	203.0	130.2	170.7	148.5
Jan. 1923	148.5	146.6	157.0	142.6	188.9	161.7	192.8	131.2	168.7	152.7
Feb ,,	153.5	150.2	180.9	153.0	185.5	164.7	197.3	133.6	160.7	161.6
Mar. ,,	149.2	156.2	155.7	162.5	178.5	166.1	199.3	136.5	170.1	158.7
April ,,	150.1	156.3	154.1	160.3	177.0	168 4	189.7	135.1	167.5	157.7
May ,,	154.1	159.8	154.9	162.4	169.5	162.3	177.7	134.3	160.6	158.4
June ,,	153.7	152.6	155.8	157.8	167.7	159.1	172.5	126.0	156.3	155.2
July ,,	152.8	154.4	155.9	155.8	168.1	160.9	170.8	132.8	158.1	155.4
Aug. ,,	150.0	148.5	153.8	156.8	164.2	162.4	162.9	132.4	155.5	153.1
Sept. ,,	153.2	150.3	154.8	166.9	172.2	162.9	189.6	129.7	163.6	157.5
Oct. ,,	146.1	152.9	160.0	160.8	165.2	165.7	173.0	131.7	158.9	156.8
Nov. ,,	141.5	157.4	165.8	157.9	166.0	166.3	180.6	129.5	160.6	156.1
Dec. ,,	141.2	155.8	165.7	161.0	166.4	167.2	193.0	129.7	164.1	157.3

KOWLOON'S DEVELOPMENT

China Light and Power Co.'s New Capital

Hongkong, Dec. 30.

The recent substantial rise in the China Light and Power Company's shares is explained in Stock Exchange circles by the fact that it is proposed to issue $1,000,000 additional capital to provide new machinery to cope with the rapid development of Kowloon.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Duff Development Co. and Kelantan Govt.

London, Dec. 28.

At a meeting of the Duff Development Company to-day, the Chairman, dealing with litigation with the Kelantan Government, stated that the directors hed refused the offer to settle all matters in dispute by monetary compensation of £300,000 and each party paying the costs of arbitration and litigation. He intimated, however, willingness to accept a reasonable compromise. The Chairman complained strongly of the action of the Colonial Office in supporting the Government of Kelantan in running up costs.—Reuter.

Canadian Steel for Japan

A recent message from Montreal says:—Demand for finished iron and steel is showing steady improvement in the domestic and export market. The Steel Company of Canada and the British Empire Steel Corporation have recently closed extensive orders for bars for shipment to Japan.

Gula-Kalumpong Estates

Messrs. Ilbert & Co., Ld., the Local Secretaries of the Gula-Kalumpong Rubber Estates Ld., are in receipt of the following telegram from their Penang Agents:—

Output of Dry Rubber for December 1923	85,000 lb.
Shipped	131,418 lb.
Cocoanuts	500,000 nuts.
Rainfall	6 inches

Coal Output

Messrs. George McBain have received a telegram from the manager of the Mentoukou Mine stating that the output of coal for the month of December was 14,000 tons.

Shanghai Tramways

The following is the traffic return of the Shanghai Tramways (Foreign Settlement) for the month of December, 1923, and for the year 1922, with corresponding figures for the previous year:—

	Dec., 1923.	Dec., 1922.
Gross receipts	$336,465.58	$321,002.75
Loss by currency depreciation	146,091.33	131,584.37
Effective receipts	$190,374.25	$189,418.38
Percentage of loss by currency depreciation	44.79	42.76
Car miles run	508,131	503,723
Passengers carried	11,502,656	11,197,058
	Year, 1923.	Year, 1922.
Gross receipts	$3,978,672.52	$3,597,201.86
Loss by currency depreciation	1,684,500.00	1,397,578.72
Effective receipts	$2,294,172.52	$2,199,623.14
Percentage of loss by currency depreciation	43.91	40.68
Car miles run	5,988,356	5,853,979
Passengers carried	137,854,236	126,684,226

The following is the traffic return for the Shanghai Tramways (Foreign Settlement) for the week ended January 2, 1924, with figures for the corresponding week last year.

	1924.	1923.
Gross receipts	$71,932.30	$72,089.10
Loss by currency depreciation	31,351.19	29,798.54
Effective receipts	$40,581.11	$42,290.56
Percentage of loss by currency depreciation	44.88	42.97
Car miles run	113,719	114,244
Passengers carried	2,446,873	2,498,757

OFFICIAL NOTICES

AMERICAN citizens resident in the Shanghai Consular District are informed that income tax forms for the calendar year 1923 may now be had on application to the Shipping Office, American Consulate-General, Shanghai. Requests by mail should state whether the form desired is one for an income of over U. S. $5,000 or for an income of U.S. $5,000 or less.

EDWIN S. CUNNINGHAM,
American Consul-General.

COMPANY MEETING

PENGKALAN DURIAN ESTATE (1921). LD.

Annual General Meeting

The third annual general meeting of shareholders in the Pengkalan Durian Estate (1921). Ld., was held last Friday at the offices of Messrs. J. P. Bisset & Co., secretaries and general managers, Mr. G. M. W. Hummel, Chairman of Directors, presiding, supported by Mr. E. C. Gill, director.

The total number of shares represented was 33,915, and five shareholders were present personally. Mr. H. V. Hummel, A.C.A. represented the secretaries and general managers, and after he had read the notice convening the meeting and the auditors' report, the Chairman said:—

Before passing to matters arising out of the directors' report and accounts, I propose with your permission to review very briefly the general position of our industry. It seems to me interesting to do this at the close of the first year of restriction, a year that will live long in the memories of all interested in rubber, witnessing as it has done the event that most companies, after a disconcertingly long interval, have once more earned dividends for their shareholders, which I trust and believe will be the first of a regular yearly series.

It was in the autumn of last year that the British Colonial Office became persuaded that it could no longer remain indifferent to the rubber of Malaya and Ceylon, 80 per cent. of the world's total output, being continuously sold under the cost of production at prices ever tending to a lower and lower level. The adoption of a schedule of graduated taxation, that in effect restricted export, not production, was the result. How vitally necessary this measure was to Malaya is readily understood when one notes that even last year, when the value averaged so much under cost, rubber figured in her export returns at no less than 33 per cent. of the total value.

Having only set out to secure for producers what it considered the fair economic price of 1s. 3d. London, the Colonial Office and its expert advisers are to be congratulated on the price having actually averaged for the first year of restriction 1s. 3½d., as compared with 8d. for the first nine months of 1922.

At the present time there is a good deal of agitation for some modification of the restriction scheme to secure primarily a higher price; and in the second place, a re-apportionment of production between mature and young estates, more favourable to the latter. As regards the first, having obtained for producers what was thought necessary to save the industry, it is scarcely to be expected that the Government will take any action at the present time. The second is quite a different matter, since the agitators should remember that:

First, it was only their planting and continuing planting when it was abundantly evident that production was already in excess of demand, that made restriction necessary;

Second, it is owing only to the experience acquired and heavily paid for by the older estates that these have been enabled to develop their properties on a more economical basis, secure higher yields, and effect important savings on maintenance costs;

Third, the young estates can expect to be reaping the full benefits of their lower capital expenditure, higher yields, etc., when the older, less profitable estates are ceasing operating.

DUTCH INDIES AND RESTRICTION

The one thing that keeps restriction from being a complete success by which I mean dependably securing to producers a fair return on their rubber pending a resumption of normal world trading conditions whereupon demand may once more overtake supply—is the fact that the Dutch East Indies are not only not restricting, but actually materially increasing their production. Last year the total export from the Dutch Indies was some 109,000 tons. This year it is to be expected that it will be not less than 130,000. This circumstance is the more disappointing when one remembers that practically all British controlled companies in Sumatra, as well as in Java, are restricting just as in Malaya, which means that at the present time they are only producing 60 per cent. of what they were in 1919-1920. Yet Dutch planters are converts to the efficiency of restriction. They see our point of view, and agree that it is not fair that they should profit from our self-denial, themselves making no sacrifice. They protest, however, that they would be faced with insurmountable difficulties in an attempt to enforce restriction on the native producers of the east coast of Sumatra and the numerous small islands adjacent thereto. It is, by the way, only to such native holdings that they attribute the actual increase in production. The last mail brings information that the question was to be re-opened at a conference to be held at an early date, and for the good of the entire industry it is earnestly to be hoped that the Dutch will decide the join Malaya and Ceylon.

It is now expected that shipments from producing countries for the year will total 390,000 ton. This figure is higher than originally estimated, due to the extra production of the Dutch Indies and 22,000 tons from Malaya and Ceylon, by which latter amount actual shipments exceeded authorized restriction quotas in the first five months of the year. During this time, that is, during the first half of the year, enormous capital was made out of the fact that shipments exceeded licences, by those who desired to see restriction quashed, and a return to the times of buying at less than cost of production. Admitting that a small part of the excess was the result of smuggling, the officials in charge of restriction claimed that the bulk represented pre-restriction stocks gradually being liquidated at the higher prices then ruling. Smuggling was stopped by improving the machinery of control and reorganizing the preventive service. Since June shipments have been under, rather than over, authorized monthly quantities.

The latest available figures for the year indicate that there will be no disappointment in the matter of consumption, that indeed the total will not be less than the record figure of 420,000 tons, to which America will have contributed approximately her usual 70 per cent.

It may be expected that the stocks in London and New York will not exceed 59,500 and 85,000 tons respectively, as compared with 71,000 and 90,000 on December 31 of last year, a total reduction of 12,000 tons in the surpluses on the consuming markets. It is customary to consider this stock excessive, but it is very questionable if it actually is, representing as it does only four months' requirements on the basis of this last year's consumption. Considering consumption, it is interesting to note that the present stock of 144,500 tons is the equivalent of only 25,000 in 1913.

WORLD SETTLEMENT AND PRODUCTION

I have already expressed the confident opinion that world settlement means the beginning of a demand for full production. I base that opinion on the enormous number of uses for rubber; on the consideration that what is best for the tires of the wheels of the traffic of the world, is probably best also for the roads on which these wheels move; that an ever increasing number of buildings are being floored with concrete or similar material, the noise of walking or other movement on which in a confined space is intolerable, and that rubber in the form of tiling or carpeting is by far the best, in fact the only effective medium for deadening such sounds. More important than all these is, it seems to me, that America—which is using 70 per cent. of the world's present output, and of that 80 per cent. or 235,000 tons per annum, for the tyres of her 12,500,000 motor propelled vehicles—has only 6 per cent. of the population of the world and occupies only 6 per cent. of its total area. Of such vehicles the rest of the world has only 2,000,000. There are many reasons for this discrepancy, and none of us will live to see the world with the same number of cars per square mile of territory or per thousand inhabitants as America has today. Given, however, the same opportunities to acquire, and pleasurably or profitably to use them, as America has enjoyed during the past nine years, it seems reasonable to expect a tendency towards levelling that will require cars and trucks with tens of millions of wheels and therefore tyres.

So much for the immediate past, present and future of the industry. I will turn now to the affairs of our company in particular.

The following changes in the directorate during the year have taken place. Mr. L. E. Canning resigned from the board on the February 7 and Mr. E. C. Gill took his place, and I will ask you to confirm his appointment in a few minutes. Mr. E. W. Noel, I regret to say, on November 14 also resigned on leaving for home after a period of severe illness. I am sure you will join the board in hoping that he may soon enjoy a complete return of good health.

It is recommended that the board of directors shall in the meantime comprise not more than two directors, in order that Shanghai expenses may be reduced somewhat, and resolutions giving the authority required by the Articles and halving the directors' fees for the ensuing year will be proposed this afternoon.

For the year under review the accounts cover a full period of 12 months, whereas the previous year's accounts covered only the period of seven months from the date when the company as reconstructed commenced business.

During the working period of 12 months of the accounts now before you, rubber production was continuous for only nine months up to the end of December, 1922. By this time the restriction enactment of the Federal Malay Estates had come into operation, and your directors decided to take advantage of the opportunity afforded by the provisions of the enactment to close down the estate in January, 1923. The complete suspension of tapping has been giving the trees the rest which for long has been felt to be desirable, and instead of costing money this rest has been a source of considerable profit. This is because the export rights of the estate granted under the restriction enactments have been sold up to the end of January, 1924, as set out in the directors' report, at satisfactory prices.

During the period of rest, opportunity has been taken to carry out a programme of silt pitting and thinning out. Silt pitting and thinning out have long been advisable but previously impossible owing to lack of funds. Necessary weeding has also been maintained. Clean weeding has been discontinued on the advice of the visiting agent. Pests and diseases affecting the trees have been negligible. These matters you will also find commented on in the directors' report.

On closing down, the services of the manager, Major Fitzwarine-Smith, who continued to supervise the estate most efficiently up to January, 1923, were discontinued, his contract terminating about that time. Upon his departure arrangements were made for the manager of a neighbouring property to visit the estate weekly to supervise the upkeep, continued under contract and the carrying out of the programme of improvements.

A RESIDENT MANAGER

In September it was decided to instal a resident manager again, and Mr. J. A. Owen, late assistant manager of the Chemor United Rubber Co., Ld., has been in charge since that time.

Since it is now apparent that it will not be posible to sell export permits for a further period, the board has decided to commence tapping again in February, 1924, and the manager is making preparations accordingly.

You will notice from the directors' report that the whole of the estate, exclusive of building sites, swamps and waste lands, now bears mature rubber, the last 94 acres under cultivation having been brought into the tapping round during the year prior to closing down the estate. Tapping will open, however, on 360 acres only, as it has been decided to give the remaining area a further rest in the coming year. A production of 8,500 lb per month will be aimed at in the meantime. It is estimated that this can be achieved from the 360 acres only. A conservative and uniform system of tapping has been decided upon, which, together with the policy of continuing to rest a large area, is hoped will build up the future productivity of the estate.

Since rubber production was curtailed and finally stopped after restriction came into operation, statistics of production costs which can fairly be compared with those of the previous year are not available, though I may say that every effort was made during the period of production to lower costs and there are satisfactory indications in returns from the local agents that economy was achieved in various directions.

I think you will find enough detail has been given in the working and profit and loss accounts, and in the directors' report, to explain the profit of Tls. 4,008.14 on working account, and the profit of Tls. 93.14 on profit and loss account, for the year which latter reduced the debit balance on profit and loss account brought forward from last year by the same amount.

I may mention that the secretaries and general managers waived a portion of their fees for the year amounting to Tls. 1,800.

In the balance sheet you will notice we have now an issued share capital of Tls. 90,000. The advent of restriction gave considerable promise for the future of the rubber industry and your directors seized an early opportunity to issue in December and January last 21,416 shares at par, being the balance of 30,600 shares authorized for issue and offered to shareholders in August, 1921, per the agreement between the old company, its liquidator and the present company, but not taken up. This subscription enabled the company immediately to pay off a bank overdraft amounting to close on Tls. 15,000 and interest. The company has now ample capital funds for present requirements.

In conclusion, I may add that the accounts for the current financial year to date, and estimates to the end of the year, are satisfactory enough to allow the board to pay an interim dividend in respect of the year ended March 31, 1924, of taels five cents, and the same was declared some days ago, and dividend warrants will be posted to you to-day.

Gentlemen, I think there is nothing more I can usefully add to the remarks I have made, and I will now move as follows:—

"That the directors' report, and the working and profit and loss accounts and balance sheet for the year ended March 31, 1923, duly audited, be and are hereby received, approved and adopted."

The resolution, having been seconded by Mr. E. C. Gill, and there being no discussion and questions, was put to the meeting and carried unanimously.

The following resolutions were also moved and carried unanimously:

That the number of directors shall not be less than two or more than five for the ensuing year."

Proposed by the Chairman, Mr. G. M. W. Hummel, seconded by Mr. E. C. Gill.

"That the appointment of Mr. E. C. Gill as director of the company be and is hereby confirmed."

Proposed by the Chairman, Mr. G. M. W. Hummel, seconded by Mr. G. A. Candlin.

"That the remuneration of each director for his service be and is hereby fixed at Tls. 300 per annum for the ensuing year."

Proposed by the Chairman, Mr. G. M. W. Hummel, seconded by Mr. E. C. Gill.

"That Messrs. Lowe, Bingham & Matthews, Chartered Accountants, be and are hereby re-elected auditors of the company for the ensuing year, at a remuneration for their services of Tls. 300."

Proposed by the Chairman, Mr. G. M. W. Hummel, seconded by Mr. H. V. Hummel.

The business of the meeting then terminated.

Always Carry PEPS

To Safeguard Against Dangerous Colds & Chills.

Indoors or out, always carry a bottle of Peps with you. This novel and invaluable medicine owes its wonderful potency to the fact that in the ingenious form of a compressed tablet, it brings the volatile lung-healing air of the pine forest into every home. This powerful curative agency speedily ends the worst cough, cold or chill and dispels all trouble in the throat, chest, or bronchial tubes.

* * * *

THE SURE way to keep influenza, pneumonia and other deadly lung trouble at bay, is to dissolve a Peps tablet in your mouth at the first sneeze or shiver. As the Peps medicine is breathed in, it goes straight to the weak spot, relieving congestion and irritation, clearing out dangerous germs.

* * * *

WHEN TRAVELLING by train or tramcar, or out shopping in the busy store or bazaar, or when visiting any crowded place of entertainment, be sure and carry a few Peps with you. They ward off the ill-effect of chills and draughts, and guard against dangerous infection from neighbours suffering from deadly throat and lung complaints.

* * * *

DURING those periodic dust storms which are veritable death-dealers to people with weak lungs, the value of Peps is self-evident. They thoroughly disinfect the throat, invigorate the bronchial glands, and keep the air-passages and lungs free from gritty dust particles and dangerous germs

* * * *

IN THE NURSERY Peps save mothers and ayahs many an anxious hour. Without the aid of harmful drugs, Peps comfort and strengthen little sufferers from croup and whooping cough. Weak-chested old folk find that Peps free the breathing and end those exhausting bouts of bronchitis and asthma

* * * *

GET THE HABIT of always keeping a bottle of Peps by your bedside. They give prompt relief from that persistent cough which keeps you awake at nights, also stop those lung-tearing bouts of early morning cough

* * * *

PUBLIC SPEAKERS, lawyers, preachers, singers, and others of similar vocation, should remember that the air of every public assembly is vitiated and poisoned with the emanations from the lungs of the multitude and the germs of many a deadly disorder. An occasional Peps in the mouth thoroughly neutralises the evil effects of this foul air and prevents hoarseness, laryngitis, etc.

* * * *

LASTLY, it should never be forgotten that Peps are particularly valuable in our climate. By regularly taking these wonderful little tablets, the dangers lurking in low night temperatures following tropical days is greatly minimised. Peps have an invigorating, antiseptic and fortifying action on the whole of the human breathing apparatus.

* * * *

PEPS are obainable in sealed bottles of chemists and dispensaries everywhere. Agent—Messrs. Wakefield & Co. (China), Ltd., S. Y. Sheng Building, Szechuen Road, Shanghai.

HIMROD'S asthma Cure

GIVES INSTANT RELIEF

No matter what your respiratory organs may be suffering from—whether Asthma, Influenza, Nasal Catarrh or Ordinary Cough you will find in this famous remedy a restorative power that is simply unequalled.

FAMED FOR 50 YEARS

Sold in tins by all Chemists and Stores throughout the Country

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS

The following telegraphic advices have been received:—

Singapore, December 24, 1923.

Smoked Sheet	48¾ cents
Jan.-Mar.	50⅜ "
Apr.-June	51½ "

Market steady but quiet.

DEBENTURES.

LOANS	Term in years	Last business recorded	Loan Amt.	Int %	Payable
S'hai Municipal Council	1903 6 to 20	26-9-22	T98¾	b T490,500	6	June-Dec.
	1904 do.	11-1-23	T98¾	c 214,500	6	do.
	1905 do.	12-5-22	T96¾	d 320,000	6	do.
	1907 do.	24-4-22	T91	500,000	6	do.
	1908 do.	6-12-23	T100	650,000	6	do.
	1909 do.	15-3-23	T99	300,006	6	do.
	1911 10 to 30	11-5-23	T99	313,800	6	do.
	1912 do.	8-1-23	T95	350,000	6	do.
	1913 do.	3-1-24	T99	310,000	6	do.
	1913 do.	3-3-23	T100	756,300	6	do.
	... 10 to 50	8-5-22	T78	500,000	5½	do.
	1914 10 to 30	3-1-23	T91	900,000	5½	do.
	1915 do.	22-9-23	T91	800,000	5½	do.
	1916 do.	4-12-23	T99½	1,400,000	6	do.
	1918 10	18-10-23	T103	507,300	7	do.
	1919 10	4-12-23	T104	1,793,300	7	do.
	1920 10	17-11-23	T105½	2,240,000	7	do.
	... 10 to 30	3-10-23	£105½	£750,000	6	do.
	1921 do.	9-9-23	$112	$1,000,000	8	do.
	1921 do.	17-11-23	T112½	T5,096,400	8	do.
	1922 do.	4-1-24	T105½	T8,000,000	7	do.
	1923 do.	3-1-24	T99	$16,000,000	6	do.
French Municipal Council†	1911 do.	8-10-23	T96	400,000	6	May-Nov.
	1914 do.	12-2-23	T88	500,000	5½	June-Dec.
	1915 do.			350,000	5½	do.
	1921 do.	20-11-23	T108½	2,000,000	8	do.
	1923 do.	17-12-23	T95	a T800,000	6	May-Nov.
S'hai Waterworks Co., Ltd.	1921 10 to 30	2-10-23	T112	2,000,000	8	June-Dec.
	1922 do.	6-6-22	T108	T500,000	8	do.
S'hai Gas Co., Ltd.	1922 do.	2-10-23	T105	T1,000,000	7	do.
	1909 do.	29-11-23	T94	e 800,000	6	do.
S'hai Land Investment Co., Ltd.‡	1905 5 to 20	31-8-22	T96½	T250,000	6	June-Dec.
	1908 do.	27-3-23	T98	750,000	6	do.
	1911 do.	26-9-22	T92	250,000	6	Mar.-Sept.
	" do.	27-3-23	T93	250,000	6	May-Nov.
	" do.			250,000	6	Jan.-July
	1912 do.	3-4-23	T98	250,000	6	June-Dec.
	1913 do.	3-4-23	T98	250,000	6	April-Oct.
	" do.			250,000	6	May-Nov.
	" do.			250,000	6	April-Oct.
	1914 do.	22-3-23	T98	250,000	6	June-Dec.
	1916 5 to 25	21-8-22	T90	f 500,000	5½	do.
	1922 do.	12-2-23	T95	750,000	6	Mar.-Sept.
	1922 do.			500,000	6	May-Nov.
Shanghai Club	1907 20			450,000	6	do.
Country Club	1901 Perpetual			139,000	6	June-Dec.
Lane, Crawford & Co., Ltd.	1914 5 to 20			130,000	6	May-Nov.
	1915 do.			110,000	6	Mar.-Sept.
Anglo-French Land Invest. Co., Ltd.	1906 do.			250,000	6	June-Dec.
	1911 do.	7-6-23	T93	300,000	6	do.
S'hai Hotels, Ltd.	1916 30	6-1-23	T88	g ‡ 865,000	6	do.
S'hai Mutual Tel. Co., Ltd.	1923 10 to 20	27-2-23	T95½	h 270,000	6	do.
S'hai Race Club	1923 25			1,200,000	6½	Mar.-S
Cuity Dairy Co., Ltd.	1915 10			50,000	7	Feb.-Au
Hall & Holtz Ltd.	1914 5 to 20	14-10-22	$92	i 230,000	7	Jan.-July
Asia Realty Co., Inc.	1922 5 to 20	..	..	T500,000	7	Jan.-July

*Plus interest accrued since last half-yearly payment. †See also under section headed "Companies' Notices, etc."

a—Now Issuing; Redeemed or Unissued:—b—$65,100; c—$51,100; d—$34,100; e—$68,500; f—$262,400; g—$189,800; h—$12,300; i—18,900.

RUBBER OUTPUT STATISTICS.

Company	Authorized Capital	Financial yr. closes end of	Output last 2 fin. year: Year before	Output last 2 fin. year: Last year	Estimated output present fin. year	All in cost per lb.	Output from end last fin. year to 30-6-23	1923: July	Aug.	Sept.	Oct.	Nov.	Total output this fin. yr. to date
			lb.	b.	lb.	d.	lb.	lb.	lb.	lb.	lb.	lb.	lb.
Alma	Tls. 630,000	Sept.	292,500	259,100	246,648	5.87d.	..	..	..	..	22,000	21,000	43,000
Amberst (New)	" 500,000	Oct.	72,382	81,410	80,500	*4.34d.	..	..	..	..	..	9,784	9,784
Anglo-Dutch	£200,000	Dec.	760,000	550,000	600,000	0/6.92d.	255,500	41,000	22,200	46,000	54,600	55,900	475,100
Anglo-Java	£250,000	Dec.	1,511,576	1,524,711	1,550,000	6.95d.	875,800	109,300	Nil	131 000	168,600	189,000	..
Ayer Tawah	Tls. 300,000	Sept.	369,447	58,042	360,000	†0.24.41	..	..	..	..	..	..	..
Batu Anam	" 400,000	Dec.	221,030	258,510	185,793	0/7.34d.	107,622	..	18,970	15,500	..	12,450	154,542
Bukit Toh Alang	" 500,000	Mar.	309,254	305,645	345,000	7.54d.	57,863	27,790	27,996	25,540	30,893	26,000	196,082
Bute	" 300,000	Dec.	253,300	230,067	159,516	10.11d.	73,650	16,050	14,800	16,750	17,700	16,000	155,550
Chemor United	" 360,000	Dec.	271,636	340,794	246,192	0/7.15d.	120,022	26,020	27,275	21,250	..	26,044	220,612
Cherupedak	£35,000	Oct.	145,760	162,500	..	10.15d.	..	..	..	..	..	14,000	14,000
Chong	Tls. 675,000	June	151,923	145,338	..	11.99d.	..	18,068	16,595	18,157	18,010	15,574	86,214
Consolidated (1914)	" 375,000	Dec.	591,033	669,899	574,660	0/6.58d.	275,152	59,000	63,173	58,874	62,339	56,548	575,088
Dominion	" 350,000	Dec.	263,942	271,159	306,887	11.04d.	157,869	30,401	26,913	26,323	28,111	25,596	295,212
Gula-Kalumpong	£500,000	Dec.	1,023,600	1,113,000	1,216,000	1/0.7d.	489,000	94,000	92,000	80,000	98,000	..	853,000
Java Consolidated	£87,000	Dec.	739,726	675,800	..	7.03d.	318,400	36,900	Nil	55,800	67,300	70,000	548,400
Kapayang	" 150,000	Dec.	176,890	189,239	..	†26.90	79,495	11,203	7,550	12,425	11,782	11,648	134,113
Karan	" 250,000	Mar.	114,879	104,783	84,000	8½d.	20,421	7,028	6,974	5,989	6,023	5,574	53,209
Kota Bahroe (1921)	" 390,000	June	138,330	339,970	..	..	..	27,502	24,937	26,518	24,885	27,143	130,985
Kroewoek	£70,000	Dec.	403,730	449,000	540,000	0/7.24d.	286,800	47000	Nil	33,000	61,000	62,000	490,800
Langkat	Gs. 2,500,000	Oct.	842,589	943,000	975,000	Glds 0.28	..	..	..	..	..	86,800	86,800
Padang	Tls. 500,000	April	209,711	220,232	..	10½d.	22,900	14,500	16,500	12,400	17,200	17,000	100,500
Pengkalan (1921)	" 150,000	Mar.	172,022	135,253	176,088	†40.19	..	..	..	..	..	..	..
Permata	" 250,000	Oct.	94,303	86,299	..	0/8½d.	..	..	..	..	..	9,012	9,012
Repah	" 275,000	Dec.	27,000	68,584	240,000	1/3½	93,620	22,184	18,003	19,771	23,886	19,521	196,985
Samagaga	" 600,000	Sept.	361,816	250,813	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..
See Kee (1918)	" 100,000	June	179,665	142,000	115,183	11.37d.	..	72,075	12,744	12,794	..	10,896	108,509
Semambu	" 300,000	Dec.	170,102	164,105	158,264	0/9.37d.	70,913	17,157	16,116	15,343	..	15,287	234,796
Senawang (1921)	" 375,000	Jan.	106,500	272,500	..	*17.35d.	109,500	23,700	22,700	24,900	28,100	23,400	232,300
Shanghai Kedah	" 400,000	Sept.	313,414	246,542	..	8.12d.	..	..	..	..	22,827	21,118	43,945
S'hai-Klebang	" 315,000	Dec.	113,355	126,106	..	0/9.35d.	52,500	11,400	10,815	9,400	8,000	8,100	100,515
S'hai-Malay	" 600,000	Dec.	413,055	373,111	392,000	..	138,620	28,777	28,225	27,909	23,850	20,336	267,717
S'hai Pahang	" 200,000	June	209,881	188,016	..	9½d.	..	15,667	18,926	18,128	20,430	15,018	88,769
S'hai Seremban	" 325,000	Dec.	176,588	173,213	..	0/8.67d.	61,592	15,434	11,871	14,589	13,998	13,650	131,134
S'hai-Sumatra	" 600,000	Oct.	661,338	679,710	650,000	Glds.0.38	..	..	..	..	..	50,239	50,239
Sua-Manggis	" 200,000	Dec.	187,000	144,880	..	..	..	..	..	..	14,200	13,500	27,700
Sungala	" 100,000	Mar.	30,279	103,757	..	†7.20	6,126	..	..	..	..	..	6,126
Sungei Duri	£40,000	June	308,073	296,568	229,000	11.61d.	..	19,900	22,700	21,954	23,302	18,774	106,636
Talping (1913)	Tls. 250,000	Dec.	705,550	167,911	99,000	30	52,127	10,250	8,950	8,325	8,065	7,573	95,290
Tanah Merah	" 750,000	Mar.	415,000	393,900	..	7.92d.	75,700	26,000	31,000	29,500	27,500	23,400	213,100
Tebong	" 750,000	Jan.	534,590	639,838	717,725	0/7.66d.	271,000	64,000	55,500	60,000	66,500	67,000	583,000
Ziangbe	£500,000	Dec.	616,432	514,566	600,000	7.24d.	257,000	35,700	47,800	42,000	45,800	49,100	477,400

*Excluding Depreciation and Shanghai Expenses † Straits $ cents.

See Kee Rubber Estates, Ltd.	T	1				100,000	T1	a	Loss)T32,626	Dec.	....	....
Somainbu Rubber Ests., Ltd.	T	1.37½	1½			300,000	T1	a	T10,425	Dec.	T0.10, 1922	20-4-23
								c	T20,000		Interim T0.05, 1923	30-10-23
Senawang Rubber Ests. (ord.	T	1.05			63)	300,000	T1	a	(Loss) 20,973	Jan.	....	....
Co. (1921), Ltd. (12% Cum. Pref					67)	100,000	T1			Sept.	....	....
Shanghai Kedah Plantations, Ltd.	T	1.10			31)	165,000	T1	a	T1,183	Dec.	T0.05, 1919	24-2-20
S'hai-Klebang Rubber Estate, Ltd	T	0.60	0.65		15)	315,000	T1	a	T7,112	Dec.	Ord. T0.60 for 9 months ended 31/12/16	2-5-17
S'ha Malay Rubber Estates, Ltd. ord.	T	1¾	4		22)	30,000	T10	a	T19,124		Pref. T0.40, for 6 months ended 31/12/22	31-10-23
" 8% cum. part. pref.	T	9				30,000	T10
S'hai Pahang Rubber Estates, Ltd.	T	1	0.85			200,000	T1		(Loss) T1,213	June	Final T0.09 (mkg. T0.10, 1916-17)	12-10-17
S'hai Seremban Rubber Estates, Ltd.	T	0.80				325,000	T1	a	(Loss) T247	Dec.	T0.04 for 10 months, ended 31/12/23	31-3-17
S'hai-Sumatra Tobacco Co., Ltd	T	90		90	7)	30,000	T10	a	(Loss) 230,794	Oct.	T2, 1918-19	1-4-20
								c	T812,270
Sua Manggis Rubber Co., Ltd.	T	3½			30)	56,000	T5	a	T6,055	Dec.	T0.25, 1919	20-4-20
								c	T25,000
Sungala Rubber Estate, Ltd.	T	1½	1.30		‡5)	100,000	T1	a	T4,625	Mar.	T0.10, 1916-17	12-7-17
								c	T10,000	June	T0.53, 1922-23	12-10-23
Sungei Duri Rubber Estate, Ltd.	T	8				40,000	£1 at T8 50	a	T22,766	Dec.	T0.08, 1919	20-5-20
Talping Rubber Estates (1913), Ltd.	T	0.70				200,000	T1	a	(Loss) T5,801	Mar.	Interim T0.05, 1916-17 (Final, Nil)	7-12-17
Tanah Merah Estates (1916), Ltd.	T	0.75	0.72½		32)	750,000	T1	a	T31,851
								c	T5,737	Jan.	....	....
Tebong Rubber Estate, Ltd.	T	1.40	1.35		‡5½)	750,000	T1	a	(Loss)T20,482	Dec.	T0.50, 1919	28-4-20
Ziangbe Rubber Co., Ltd.	T	3½	3		12)	300,000	10s.	a	T38,757
								c	T5,239
COTTONS, ETC.
Ewo Cotton Mills, Ltd. (ord.	T	12	11¼		43)	1,000,000	T5	a	T10,856	Dec.	Ord. T1.50, 1922	16-2-23
" (8% cum. pref.	T	113	113		43)	10,000	T100	b	T1,400,000
								c	T2,861,356		Pref. T8, 1922	16-2-23
Laou Kung Mow C. S. & W. Co., Ltd.	T	10				20,000	T10	a	T5,134	Dec.
								b	T120,000		Final T2, (mkg. T4, 1921)	8-3-22
Oriental C. S. & W. Co., Ltd. ord.	T	5			60)	500,000	T5	c	T97,612
pref.	T				3)	5,000	T100	a	(Loss) T31,045	Dec.	Final T0.50 (mkg. T1.50, 1921)	25-3-22
								b	T200,000
Shanghai Cotton Mfg. Co., Ltd. (Shanghai Boshoku K.K.)	T	‡5 old 40 new					T50	c	T2,050,000	June	T3.50 a/o., 1922-23	24-8-23
								a	T50,375
								c	T1,270,000
INDUSTRIAL.
British-American Tobacco Co., Ltd. (ord.	$			£5 3/32	66)	13,000,000	£1	a	£1,890,188	Sept.	Ord. Div. 1920-21, 24% free of I/T
(5% cum. pref.						4,500,000	£1	c	£3,645,007		Ord. Interim 1921-22, 4%	30-9-22
China Im. & Ex. Lumber Co., Ltd.	T	350				5,000	T100	a	T161,833	Feb.
								b	T300,000		T8, 1922-23	31-5-23
China Sugar Refining Co., Ltd.	H $	236½	255			20,000	H$100	c	T2,100,000
								a	H $2,762	Dec.
Green Island Cement Co., Ltd.	H $	26½	$26½			400,000	H37.50	b	H $470,000		H$10, 1922	27-3-23
								c	H $879,752
Maatschappij, &c., In Langkat	T	13	13¼			200,000	Gs.10	a	H $93,634		Final H$1.50 (mkg. H$2, 1922)	24-2-23
								c	H $1,000,000	Oct.	Interim H$0.50 a/o., 1923	18-9-23
								a	(Loss)T220,594		T0.50, 1918-19	30-3-23
								c	T103,438
Shanghai Loan & Investment Co., Ltd.	T	7¼	(comb. T34) 6½	(comb T34) (comb. T35)		250,000	T5	a	T24,423	Dec.	T0.25, 1922	27-2-23
								c	T275,000
S'hai Exploration & Development Co., Ltd.	T	14½	14¼			250,000	T5		....	Dec.	....	....
Major Brothers, Ltd.	T	5			10)	6,000	T10	a	(Loss) T13,341	Dec.	....	....
								a	T9,016
John Richards & Co., Ltd.	T	10			11)	25,000	T10	c	T70,000	Dec.	10%, 1921	24-6-22
								a	T3,130
								c	T30,000
Shanghai Gas Co., Ltd.	T	45			‡)	24,000	T50	a	T23,791	Dec.	T3.50, 1922	13-4-23
								b	T50,000
								c	T660,891
Shanghai Waterworks Co., Ltd.	T	140			‡9)	50,000	£20	a	T29,595	Dec.	(Final 1922, 20s. at Exchg., 3/2½	6-4-23
								b	T75,000		(Interim 1923, 10s. at Exchg., 3/0½	31-7-23
								c	T1,680,295
STORES.
Hall & Holtz, Ld.	$	6.90			‡16)	23,000	$20	a b	$116,937	Feb.	$2, 1917-18	1-5-18
								c
J. Llewellyn & Co., Ltd.	$	30				1,200	$50	a	$10,697	Dec.	$6, 1922	12-5-23
								c	$20,000
S. Mountrie & Co., Ltd.	$	50			17)	10,000	$50	a	$20,282	Mar.	(Final $2 & Bonus $4 (mkg. $9, 1922-23)	2-6-23
								c	$323,195		(Int. 6%, 1923-24	30-11-23
Weeks & Co., Ltd.	$	11			‡50)	30,000	$10	a	$37,633	Feb.	$1.60, 1922-23	30-5-23
								c	$210,000
Lane, Crawford & Co., Ltd.	$	102			‡)	2,500	$100	a	$5,539
								b	$20,000		$8, 1922-23	24-5-23
								c	$250 000
MISCELLANEOUS.
Cuity Dairy Co., Ltd.	T	13				10,000	T10	a	(Loss)T26,956	Oct.	T0.60, 1921-22	30-12-22
								c	T119,293
S'hai Electric Construction Co., Ltd., "B"	T	170						a	T17,022	Dec.	Final 16s. (mkg. 40s., 1922, less I/T at 5s. 3d. in £) Coupon 22	1-6-23
London	£1		£2 12s 0	£2 11s 0		10,000	£10	c	£114,315		1st Int. 12/–, less I/T at 4/7½d. in £ Coupon No. 23	1-10-23
S'hai Horse Bazaar & Motor Co., Ltd.	T	50				5,400	T50	a	T18,548	Dec.	T5, 1922	20-4-23
								c	T315,257
Shanghai Mercury, Ltd.	T	25				3 000	T50			Apr.	T1.50, 1913-14	31-3-15
Shanghai Mutual Telephone Co., Ltd.	T	72		73	‡63)	40,000	T50	a	T10,235
								b	T70,000	Mar.	T4.50, 1922-23	31-5-23
								c	T920,016
Oriental Press (L'Imprimerie Française)	$	100				940	$100	a	$109,513
								b	$7,000	Mar.	$10, 1922-23	6-7-23
								c	$21,191

For all Dollar shares quoted on the Shanghai Stock Exchange the Exchange rate is fixed at 73.

REFERENCES.

a Carried forward at last Ann. Gen'l. Meeting.
b Dividend Equalization Reserve.
c General and Other Reserves.
d Uncalled Liability £6 per sh. e " " £10 "
f " " H $150 "
g " " H $200 "
h " " H $ 30 "
i Working Account 1922
m Working Account 1921
x Working Account 1920
y Working Account 1919
z Working Account 1919 and former years.
† Registered; or Bearer (idem. "B").
also overleaf under "Companies' Notices, etc."
 Issued Capital: 7% Cum. Pref. 24,461 shares;
Ordinary, 16,270 shares.

§ Debentures Issues also.
‡ Subject to Bonus of 20% on Contributory Marine Premium.
‡‡ Subject to Estate Managers' Commissions.
* Subject to E. P. D. and Corpn. Tax.

1—14,000 sh' unis'd.
2—70,411 "
3— 5,000 "
4— 4,000 "
5—13,182 "
7—10,761 "
8—13,000 "
9—16,470 sh. unis'd.
10—500 "
11—15,200 "
12—50,000 "
13—1,387 "
14—3,000 "
16—1,662 "
17— 3,832 "
18—5,580 "
19—184,668 "
20—15,000 "
22—10,000 "
24—70,810 "
25—125,000 "
26—60,000 "
27—8,121 sh' unis'd.
29—4,633 "
30—2,000 "
31—5,121 "
32—50,000 "
33—50,000 "
34—102,570 "
35— 200 "
36—189,000 "
39— "
41— "
43—1,000 "
46—71,522 "
(Not to be issued for less than 950 ea.)
47—3,000 sh. unis'd.
48—100,000 sh. unis'd.
50—8,175 "
54—40,000 "
55—30,000 "
56—10,834,550 "
57—6,000,000 "
59—100,550 "
60—280,080 "
61—240,000 "
62—401,044 "
63—15,000 "
64—500 000 "
65— 200,000 "
66—1,484,255 "
67—66,057 "
68—5,614 "

Transcribed by Gemini 3 Flash

COMPANIES' NOTICES. MEETINGS. ETC.

The Senawang Rubber Estates Co., Ltd.—A General Meeting will be held at No. 10 Canton Road, Shanghai, on Monday, January 14, 1924, at 4 p.m.

The Shell Transport & Trading Co., Ltd.—A dividend at two shillings per share free of income tax, payable on January 2, 1924. Coupon No. 42

The Chempedak Rubber and Gambier Estate, Ltd.—The 14th Annual General Meeting will be held at No. 10 Canton Road, Shanghai, on Thursday, January 17, 1924, at 4.30 p.m.

The Transfer Books will be closed from January 14 to 17, 1924, both days inclusive.

Share Report for Week Ending January 4, 1924.

No. 241

J. P. BISSET & CO.

Telegraphic Address: "BISSET SHANGHAI"
Codes in use A1 Code
A.B.C. 4th, 5th and 6th Editions
B. Broomhall's Imperial Combination Code
Bentley's Complete Phrase Code.
Telephone Cont. 171.

Share and General Brokers,
Land and Estate Agents,
1 The Bund,
Post Office Box No. 244
Shanghai.

Business has been very quiet on the local Stock Exchange during the past week; last Tuesday and Wednesday being generally observed as New Year Holidays.

London market quotations have fluctuated very slightly and the following are the last prices cabled to us this week

Chinese Govt. 5% Reorg. Gold Loan 1913, B.I.	£	72. 0. 0	(Mean) ex. divd
" " " " " " " F.I.	"	68. 10. 0	" ex B.I.R.S.*
" " " " " " " R.I.	"	64. 0. 0	(Sellers) "
" " " " Shal. & Nanking Rly	"	65. 10. 0	"
Chinese Engineering & Mining Co. "B"	"	5. 7. 0	(Mean)
Gula Kalumpang Rubber Estates, Ltd.	"	1. 13. 1	"
Shanghai Electric Cons. Co., "B"	"	2. 13. 0	"

*British Inland Revenue stamp.

Sterling Quotation.—The opening T.T. Rate on London to-day is 3/4.

Shanghai, January 4, 1924.

Following is the official business recorded on the Shanghai Stock Exchange:—

DECEMBER	29th		31st		1924 Jan. 1st		2nd		3rd		4th
	Cash	Mar.	Cash	Mar.	Cash	Mar.	Cash	Mar.	Cash	Mar.	Cash	Mar.
RUBBERS
MISCELLANEOUS STOCKS
S'hai Elec. Cons. Co., "B" .. Tls.	170	..	..	..	BANK HOLIDAY (NEW YEAR)		BANK HOLIDAY (NEW YEAR)		..	..	..	..
S'hai Exploration & D. Co., Ld. ..	14½	..	..	..					..	..	..	..
Culty Dairy Co., Ld.	..	..	..	13					..	..	1.050	..
H. & S. Bank .. .. .. $	..	..	..	..					..	..		..
COTTONS
Ewo Cotton Mfg. Ltd (Ord) .. Tls.	..	12.40	..	..					..	..	..	..
DEBENTURES
S. M. C. 1912 6% Debs. .. Tls	..	..	..	..					99	..	..	..
S. M. C. 1923 6% Debs.	..	..	..	..					99	..	99	..
S. M. C. 1922 7%	..	..	..	..					..	..	105½	..

FORWARD SETTLEMENTS FOR 1924.

CLOSING QUOTATIONS, JANUARY 4, 1924.

STOCK	Last Dividend declared	Buyers	Sellers	No. of Shares	Paid-up Value	Reserve, etc.	Financial Year ended	Last Dividend, etc.	Paid or Due
BANKS.
London	£ 12½
Hongkong & Shanghai Banking Corp.	$ 1 050			61) 400,000	H $125	(a H $5,360,212 (c H $65,128,831	Dec.	Int. £3 for 1923 deduction of I/T	7-3-24
Chartered Bank of I., A. & C. London	£ 12½			600,000	£5	(a £222,201 (c £3,800,000	Dec.	Final 7s. & Bonus 6s. 3d. (mkg. £1 0s. 3d.), free of I/T, 1922	5-4-24
INSURANCE
Union In. Society of Canton, Ld. ..	H $ 2324			55) 200,000	d £4	(av £437,386 (b £69,500 (c £3,574,054	Dec.	Final 16s. (mkg. 40s.) ex 1921 Work. a/c., Interim 24s. & Bonus to Contributors, 20%, ex 1922 Work a/c	28-3-24
North-China Insurance Co., Ld. ..	T 138			10,000	s £15	(av T610,687 (c T4,732,885	Dec.	Final 10s. (mkg. 30s.) ex 1921 Work a/c. and Interim 15s. ex 1922 Works. a/c.	30-3-24
Yangtsze Insurance Association Ltd	$ 250	35		43) 250,000	$10	(av $1,921,996 (aw $2,408,630 (c $4,083,242	Dec.	$2 (or T1.46) ex 1922 Work. a/c. payable in Taels at Exchg. 73	30-3-24
Far Eastern Insurance Co., Ld. ..	T 22			1) 50,000	T20	(av T518,346 (aw T204,093 (c T9,361	Dec.	T1.20 ex 1922 Work. a/c.	30-3-24
Canton Insurance Office, Ltd	H $ 626	725		10,000	f H $100	(av H $2,172,375 (c H $6,649,892	Dec.	Final H $22 (mkg. H $40) ex 1921 Work. a/c., and Interim H $18 ex 1922 Work. a/c. ..	11-5-24
Hongkong Fire Insurance Co., Ld. ..	H $ 5124	5250		5,000	g H $50	(av H $631,698 (c H $3,876,385	Dec.	H $32 ex 1921 Working a/c.	28-3-24
China Fire Insurance Co., Ltd.	H $ 127	140		20,000	h H $20	(av H $1,328,926 (c H $5,523,650	Dec.	H $7 and Bonus H $3 ex 1921 Work. a/c. ..	26-3-24
Assurances France-Asiatique	F 500			14,000	F500	(a F101,368 (c F3,784,330	Dec.	None, Floated 1918	....
SHIPPING.
Indo-China S.N. Co., Ld... (6% cum. pref.	H $ 38	38½		2) 120,000	£5	(a
(def. ord. ..	H $ 140			2) 120,000	£5	(c £2,103,182	Dec.	Pref. 6s. at Exchg.—$2/4 London Warrants less I/T a/c., 1922. Def. Ord. Nil	16-6-23
Shell T'sport & Trading Co., Ld. .. (ord. 'B'	£	£23:19:6	£24:2:6	38) 30,000,000	£1	(a* £2,029,050 (c £2,000,000	Dec.	Final Ord. 2s. 6d. (mkg. 4s. 6d., 1922) "B" Coupon 41	6-7-23
(5% cum. pref.	£			48) 300,000	£10
(7% cum. 2nd pref.	£			57) 10,000,000	£1
Shanghai Tug & Lighter Co., Ld. (ord.	T			20,000	T25	(a T72,356 (a T470,000	Dec.	(Int. Ord. T2.50 a/c., 1923).. .. .. (Int. Pref. T1.75 a/c., 1923)	9-7-23
(pref.	T 53			10,000	T58
DOCKS AND WHARVES.
Shanghai Dock & Engineering Co., Ld. ..	T 58	58		10) 55,700	T75	(a T102,535 (c T1,948,080	Apr.	T7.50, 1922-23	27-7-23
Hongkong & W'pao Dock Co., Ld... ..	H $ 152	154½		8) 60,00	H $60	(a H $583,680 (c H $4,081,000	Dec.	Interim H $4, 1922 .. .. Final H $5 & Bon. H $3 (mkg. H $12, 1922) ..	11-10-22 27-3-23
New Eng. and Shipbuilding Works, Ld. .. .. .. (ord.	T 6.40	6		85) 500,000	T5	(a T82,417			10-3-23
(8% pref	T 5.20			85) 500,000	T5	(b T300,000 (c T1,290,000	Dec.	Ord. T0.60, 1922 .. .. Pref. T0.40, 1922..	10-3-23
Shanghai & H'kew Wharf Co., Ld... ..	T 180	179		‡4) 40,000	T100	(a T12,229 (b T200,000 (c T1,041,794	Dec.	Final T12 (mkg. T16, 1922) .. .. Int. T3 a/c., 1923	13-3-23 30-8-23
H'kong & K'loon W. & G. Co., Ld. ..	H $ 155½		160	80,000	H $30	(a H $303,494 (b H $250,000 (c H $100,000	Dec.	H. $6 & Bonus H. $3 (mkg. H $9, 1922) ..	20-2-23
MINING.
Oriental Consolidated Min. Co., Ld. ..	£ 12/-			24) 500,000	G. $10		June	G $0.50, 1920-21	26-7-23
Chinese Eng. & Mining Co., Ld. (Bearer).	T 19	18		(†64) 2,000,000	£1	(	June	Final 8½% (Coupon No. 23) free of I/T, 1922-1923	11-12-23
London	£	£3:5:6	£3:8:6
Raub Australian Gold Min. Co., Ld. ..	H $ 5 20			200,000	£1	(a £23,613 (c £4,873	Mar.	1s. 2d., 1909-10	21-5-10
LANDS AND HOTELS.
Shanghai Land Investment Co., Ld. ..	T 116	114		‡) 78,000	T50	(a T25,559 (b T250,000 (c T2,166,583	Dec.	(Final T3 & Bonus T2 (mkg. T8, 1922) .. .. (Interim 1923, T3	23-3-23 26-7-23 24-7-23
H'kong Land Invest. & Agcy. Co., Ld. .. (New Reg.)	H $ 85	87	89	240,000	H $25	(a H $3,231,700 (b H $250,000 (c H $123,746	Dec.	Int. H $6 a/c., 1923	24-7-23
Humphrey's Est. & Finance Co., Ld. ..	H $ 23.60			150,000	H $10	(b H $50,000 (c H $337,363	Dec.	H $0.80 and Bonus H $0.70, 1922	19-2-23
Weihaiwei L. & B. Co., Ld.	T 6			3,674	T20	(a T2,808 (c T7,000	Dec.	T1.20, 1922	24-2-23
Anglo-French Land Invest. Co., Ld. ..	T 120	120		‡3) 18,000	T100	(a T7,848 (b T20,000 (c T350,000	Feb.	Int. Divid. T3½, 1923-24	21-9-23
The Shanghai Hotels, Ld.	$ 40	50		‡45) 150,123	$7.50	(a $475,121 (c $2,465,534	Dec.	$3 on 50,000 shs; Scrip Div. 199 new Ord. shs. for ea. 123 Founders shs., 1920 Interim, $3.50 on 74,600 shs., 1921, Final, Nil..	11-6-21
Carlton, Ld.	T 53			14) 10,000	T50		Mar.	Floated April 1, 1922..	....
Asia Realty Co., Inc...	G $ 100			‡18) 10,000	G $100		Dec.	Incorporated under the laws of Delaware Ord 1922, 7%	4-1-23
Raven Trust Co., Inc. .. .. (ord.	G $ 10			100,000	G $10			Pref. 1st gr. 1923, 11%	4-1-23
(pref.	G $ 10				G $10
PLANTATIONS.
Alma Estates, Ld.	T 6½	6½		70,000	£1 at T9	a T28,910	Sept.	T0.50, 1922-23	19-12-23
New Amherst Rubber Estate, Ld.	T 0.50		0.50	‡62) 400,000	T1	T5,635	Oct.	....	....
Anglo-Dutch (Java) Plantations, Ld. ..	T 2.90	2¼		12) 400,000	10s.	a T32,505	Dec.	T0.30, 1919 ††	7-4-20
Anglo-Java Estates, Ld.	T 6½	6¼		4) 500,000	10s.	(a T129,151 (c T378,570	Dec.	Interim T0.25 a/c. 1923	14-9-23
Ayer Tawah Rubber Co., Ld.	T 21			27) 30,000	T10	(a T16,223 (b T22,000 (c T69,960	Sept.	T2.00, 1922-23 .. .. Interim 1923, T0.50	28-12-23 15-6-23
Batu Anam (Johore) Rub. Ests., Ld. ..	T 1		1.10	400,000	T1	a T30,789	Dec.	T0.05, 1919	10-4-20
Bukit Toh Alang Rubber Ests., Ld. ..	T 1.12½	1.10		500,000	T1	a T20,402	Mar.	Final T0.25 (mkg. T0.50, 1916-17)	25-7-17
Bute Plantation (1913), Ld.	T 0.75	0.80		300,000	T1	a (Loss)T13,076	Dec.	Final T0.05 (mkg. T0.10, 1916)	29-3-17
Chemor United Rubber Co., Ld.	T 1.07½	1		400,000	T0.20	a T37,897	Dec.	Interim T0.05, 1923	6-11-23
Chempedak Rub. & G'bier Est., Ld. ..	T 6			8) 35,000	£1 at 2/3½	a (Loss)T35,752	Oct.	2nd Interim, T0.50, (mkg. T1, 1916-17) ..	16-10-17
Cheng Rubber Estates, Ld.	T 1.40	1.40		135,000	T5	a T4,120	June	T0.20, 1916-17	1-11-17
Consolidated Rubber Estates (1914), Ld..	T 2½		2¾	25) 500,000	2s.—T0.75	(a T23,192 (c T30,000	Dec.	T0.10, 1922 .. .. Interim T0.06, 1923	20-4-23 15-10-23
Dominion Rubber Co., Ld.	T 2	2		19) 350,000	T1	a T13,813	Dec.	T0.40, 1919	18-5-20
Gula Kalumpong Rubber Ests., Ld. ..	T 9½	9		†48) 750,000	(21; 450,000 (5s; 200,000	(a (c	Dec.	2s. less I/T at 5s. in £1922, "B" Coupon 20)††	28-3-23
Java-Consolidated Rubber & Coffee Est., Ld.	T 14	13½		8) 85,000	£1 at 2/3½	(a T64,485 (c T650,113	Dec.	Interim, T0.50, 1923	3-9-23
Kapayang Rubber Estates Co., Ld. ..	T 12	12½		35) 15,000	T10	(a T6,977 (c T4,023	Dec.	(T0.50, 1922 .. .. (Interim 1923, T0.50	19-4-23 17-7-23
Karan Rubber Estate Co., Ltd. ..	T 6			25,000	T10	(a T3,008 (b T30,000	Mar.	T0.60, 1922-23	1-6-23
Kota Bahroe Rubber Estates (1914) Ltd.	T 1.05	1		390,000	T1	a (Loss)T38,263	June	....	....
Kroewoek Java Plantations, Ltd	T 13	13½		20) 70,000	£1 at T1.80	a T33,490 T69,380	Dec.	(T0.60, 1922 (Int. T0.50 a/c., 1923	17-4-23
Pamanukan Rubber Estate, Ld.	T 3½			20) 50,000			Dec.	Final T0.25 (mkg. T0.50, 1915-16	7-7-16

LAW REPORTS

MERGING OF INSURANCE COMPANIES

Sanction Deferred for Examination of Actuarial Reports

Application was made to his Honour Judge Sir Skinner Turner at H.M. Supereme Court on Monday for the Court's sanction of the arrangement come to last year between the Shanghai Life Insurance Co., Ld., and the Sun Life Assurance Co. of Canada concerning their proposed amalgamation.

Mr. H. Lipson Ward appeared for the petitioning company; Mr. A. G. Mossop for the Sun Life Assurance Co.; Mr. G. H. Wright for the China Mutual Life Insurance Co.; and Mr. Baddely on behalf of another party.

Mr. Lipson Ward stated that the petition had been made under Section 121 of the Hongkong Ordinances of 1911 and prayed for the sanction of the Court of an arrangement made between the Shanghai Life Insurance Co., its members, creditors and current policy holders, under an agreement between the company and the Sun Life of Canada dated December 20, 1922. Under this agreement the whole of the business of the Shanghai company was to be transferred to the Canadian company. Nominally the petitioning company was controlled by the China Mutual Life Insurance Co., which had filed a similar petition. After describing the procedure adopted in accordance with the provisions of Section 121, counsel proceeded to state that in respect to the interests of the various parties the Court had made an order for the holding of meetings of members of the petitioning company—creditors, holders of current policies and others concerned—which meetings had taken place. The terms of the agreement provided for the issue by the Sun Life to individual policy holders of a certificate whereby that company assumed liability to each holder. A separate account was to be kept by the Sun Life for the Shanghai business. Policies which matured between January 1, 1923, and the closing of the separate account the Sun Life undertook to pay, and also any deferred profits and cash at the rate of one per cent. of the sum insured in respect of each premium paid since January 1, 1920, subject to reduction if the consultative board thought that the profits earned did not justify such a payment.

Mr. Wright, appearing for the China Mutual company, was asked by his Lordship if the creditors were fairly represented by those who attended the meetings. In reply, Mr. Wright said that due and sufficient notice had been given the policy holders under this scheme of arrangement, and at all the meetings they were given an opportunity of voting for or against.

The Judge said he had no reason to think that he would refuse the sanction, but felt he must first of all examine the actuarial reports, and accordingly adjourned the matter until Thursday.

Combination Approved by Court

The scheme of amalgamation by the Shanghai Life Insurance Co., Ld. and the China Mutual Life Insurance Co. with the Sun Life Assurance Co. of Canada was sanctioned by his Honour Judge Sir Skinner Turner at H. M. Supreme Court on Thursday.

Mr. H. R. Sturt, joint manager and actuary of the China Mutual and Shanghai Life Insurance Cos., having given formal evidence as to the validity of press advertisements produced, his Lordship gave his decision as follows:—

This is a petition for sanction by the court of an arrangement under Section 121 of the Hongkong Companies' Ordinances of 1911 whereby the business of the petitioning company is to be transferred to the Sun Life Assurance Co. of Canada. The arrangement is contained in a lengthy agreement between the two companies under date December 20, 1922.

Directions were obtained from this Court in September last as to the holding of the necessary meetings in support and these meetings have been held in accordance with those directions and the arrangement was unanimously approved at all the meetings. No opposition was offered to the petition before the Court and in view of the duty resting upon the Court in considering this application I deemed it necessary to read the particulars somewhat more carefully.

I have to be satisfied that the statutory requirements have been fulfilled, that the officers and members in attendance at the meetings acted bonâ fide and were fairly representative of the class concerned and that the arrangement is such as a man of business would reasonably approve; and fair and reasonable as regards different claims. It is obvious that the persons concerned in a matter like this are: (1) the shareholders and (2) the policy-holders. The former are well able to look after themselves and they approve the scheme. The policy-holders have to be specially regarded and it is apparent to me that they seem not to have been at all well representated at the meetings. But no suggestion has been made to be that the whole of this matter is anything but entirely bonâ fide and is the result of very careful and elaborate thought on the part of all concerned. I know that many of the policy-holders would not and could not understand the nature of this scheme, and I further know that they get under it the strength of the Sun Life Company.

Then I have the report before me of three actuaries (including an independent one as required by an Act in England) as to the value of the scheme from a policy-holder's point of view, and further have the fact that this scheme has been sanctioned in the High Court in England and has the approval of the Government of India. The Canadian authorities, acting no doubt from the point of view of the policy-holders in the Sun Life Company have also sanctioned the scheme.

I have studied the scheme as far as I can, mainly from the point of view of the policy-holders, as was specially noted by Mr. George King in his exhaustive actuarial report. It seems to me that both in the matter of reserve and bonuses this class will be better off under the arrangement than before, and in addition there will be behind each policy the great strength of the Sun Life Company.

I sanction the scheme.

As regards the China Mutual, I have to note that one dissentient voice had been heard but nothing more was done to emphasize that dissent. The same considerations apply here as to the other company and I sanction the scheme.

His Lordship said formal orders would be drawn up.

STATEMENT BY THE THREE COMPANIES

Advantages of the Scheme

The Companies concerned make the following statement with reference to the above judgment.

"His Majesty's Supreme Court on Thursday ratified agreements by which the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada assumes all the liabilities and takes over the assets of the China Mutual Life Insurance Company and the Shanghai Life Insurance Company. Technically, these two China Companies are distinct Corporations, but since 1920 the Shanghai Life has been managed and housed by the China Mutual. The agreements that have now been approved affect the interests of the policy-holders of both Companies in the same way, hence they need not be referred to separately.

"Before the agreements were approved the Courts ordered advertisements to be put in the principal papers in all countries where these Companies did business so that the widest publicity should be given to the proposal. The High Court of Justice in England and the Minister of Finance for the Dominion of Canada having previously approved, the share holders and policy-holders of the China Mutual and Shanghai Life have, at meetings specially called for the purpose, also approved and the Supreme Court in Shanghai has now issued the final order making the agreements absolute. The Courts first satisfied themselves that the agreements were for the benefit of the policy-holders of all the Companies concerned.

"This merging of the principal life insurance companies transacting business in China is an event of outstanding importance, not only in China and the Far East, but also throughout the world. The Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada is the largest international company, being the only one transacting a purely life business in practically every part of the world. This Company writes annually a larger amount of new ordinary life business than any other in the British Empire.

"The China Mutual, besides having a large organization in China, also operates in Japan, the Philippine Islands, Straits Settlements, Burma, Ceylon and India.

ADDITIONAL BENEFITS.

"The effect of this amalgamation and the benefits thereby conferred on the policy-holders of these Companies is outlined in detail in a report of Mr. George King, F.I.A., of London, the acknowledged expert in these matters. Similar reports were furnished by the actuary of the Sun Life of Canada, the manager of the China Mutual, and Mr. Henry J. Baker, the actuary of the Metropolitan Life Assurance Society.

"These reports, briefly, show that the policy-holders of the China Companies are guaranteed a continuance of all the benefits and privileges now enjoyed, and in addition many valuable advantages are assured to them by the amalgamation. The security at the back of their policies will be considerably increased since the assets of the combined Companies will exceed £45,000,000 whereas the assets of the two China Companies amount to about £3,000,000. Also, the Sun Company's basis of valuation assumes an interest earning of three per cent., the China Companies valuing on a five per cent. basis. The practical effect of this is that reserves set up as security against the policy liabilities of the Sun Life Company are about 12 per cent. greater than those hitherto set up against the liabilities of the China Mutual and Shanghai Life Companies.

"The scale of profits paid to the Sun Company's policy-holders is enormously more advantageous than that enjoyed by the policy-holders of the China Companies. On Twenty Year Endowment policies for £1,000 issued in North China and now maturing the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada is paying in profits from £300 to £600, according to the age of the policy-holder, this company having the enviable reputation of paying extremely high dividends to its policy-holders. As soon as the reserves of the China Companies are on a parity with those of the Sun Company profits accruing thereafter to policy-holders of the China Companies will be on precisely the same basis as to holders of similar policies in the Sun Company.

"The policy-holders of the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada will benefit by the greatly increased clientèle and organization and the resulting economy in the administration expenses due to the accession of a large volume of business to their various divisions which will also eventually benefit the policy-holders of the merged Companies.

"It is stated that the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada intends to pursue a progressive policy throughout the Far East and with the addition of the organization of the China Mutual Life Insurance Company a very great future in the East is anticipated."

MALTESE SEAMEN CHARGED

Alleged Ferocious Assault in a Ship: Police Court Proceedings

A sequel to a dramatic fight in the engine room of a ship in port was heard at H. M. Police Court on Monday, when seven Maltese firemen, Luize Baldacchino, Carmelo Chircop, Emmanuel Zara, Emmanuel Vella, Emmanuel Sciberras, Joseph Busitill and George Gatt, were charged before Mr. G. W. King with wounding J. T. Crozier (chief engineer), J. W. George (third engineer) and W. Prior (fourth engineer) with intent to cause grievous bodily harm at 7 a.m. on Saturday morning in the str. Rio Azul.

Various implements, including a huge spanner and boiler scaler, said to have been used on the officers, were produced in Court.

Mr. A. E. Seddon appeared to prosecute.

John Peterkin, master of the Rio Azul, said that on May 7 the vessel left Barry Dock, Cardiff, at which port all the prisoners were signed on with the exception of Chircop and Sciberras, who were taken on at Port Said. Witness had had trouble with them during the whole voyage. He wished to lay a further charge of refusal to perform their duties when leaving Astoria against Chircop, Sciberras and Busitill, who had been logged. Witness was not on board at the time of the assault.

Deputy Supt. Woodfield, River Police, who carried out the arrest on board the Rio Azul, said the warrant had not been read over to accused, as Witness had not so far been able to find a Maltese interpreter. They were quite sober and calm. Nine bottles of spurious Scotch were found on their clothing. Witness knew the liquor was spurious by the labels. "The supposition is that they obtained the bottles from America," concluded the Superintendent.

TALKING EXCITEDLY.

William Prior, the fourth engineer, said that at about 7 a.m. on Saturday he went along to prisoners' quarters. They were talking very excitedly. He told them to turn to and they went down to the engine room. The second, the third engineer and the donkey man were there. Accused wanted to see the Chief Engineer before they started work. He came down half-dressed and was told by the men that they had been to the Consulate, but could obtain no satisfaction. Baldacchino started the fight when the chief arrived, striking the chief in the face. Baldacchino, Chircop and Gatt then rushed at him. Witness went to his assistance and the prisoners set upon all of them. The donkeyman came to witness's assistance, taking him into the stokehole, after which witness went on deck for assistance. He returned with the chief, second and third deck officers. Prisoners were standing in the poop and the chief engineer was subsequently found lying on his hands and face in the shaft tunnel. As soon as witness got him into the engine room, prisoner No. 2 flung a large spanner at him. After this a heavy boiler scaling tool dropped from above between the chief engineer and the chief officer.

Answering one of the accused, witness said the chief engineer had no hammer at the time. He did not use bad language. He could not use his hands, as they were in his pockets, holding his trousers up. (Laughter).

J. W. George, third engineer, said that after the altercation between the men and the chief there was a rush. Witness stepped towards them and said. "Cut that out." He was then struck on the head with a spanner by prisoner No. 5 and others. After calling the deck officers he nearly lost consciousness. He remembered nothing after that incident.

"I didn't get the chance to strike any of them, they were on top of me in a second," said witness emphatically when one of the accused insisted that he had hit them.

The donkeyman stated that he heard the row between the accused and the chief officer. On returning to the engine room, witness noticed the fourth engineer on the floor, prisoner No. 6 kicking him. The third engineer ran up the ladder followed by four men. Tools were flying about. Prisoner No. 1 was holding a hammer over the chief engineer. No. 3 had a spanner and warned witness not to interfere.

The sixth man (who interpreted) —He cannot speak English.

"He can when he likes," answered witness.

At this stage, the Magistrate ordered a remand in custody until next morning.

Accused Again Remanded

More evidence for the prosecution was heard on Tuesday.

Alexander Paton, second engineer, said that he was in the engine room when the men wanted to see the chief engineer. The latter seemed rather perturbed when witness went to his room and dressed at once in his pyjamas. He saw the fight in the engine room when the chief engineer was attacked. The men pushed witness and used a certain expression to him.

In answer to the Magistrate, witness replied that this remark was made in quite a friendly manner. He did not think the men wished to hurt him. He was knocked on the floor subsequently and it was two minutes before he got up.

The Magistrate—Have you any idea what all this trouble was about?

Witness—The men were dissatisfied, but I do not know why.

G. A. Featherstone, chief officer, said he saw the second engineer come on deck. His face was covered in blood. He sent witness went to his room and shouted out, "The firemen are killing the chief." Witness took off his coat, called to the other officers to follow him and flew down to the engine room. In the engineer room five of the prisoners were standing with their hands behind their backs and he believed they were concealing the implements. Chircop hurled a heavy iron spanner at the chief engineer. Witness ran to his assistance, and and said to him: "Chief, the whole thing is over. I am here now." He had not long said this when a long iron boiler scaler was thrown at them. It grazed his head and fell between them. After the fight he gave instructions to hoist the police flag.

A BROKEN NOSE.

Dr. W. S. Parsone said that the chief engineer was suffering from shock, a broken nose, and contusions on the back of his head and chest. His condition improved on Saturday, but on Monday he developed symptoms of concussion and there had been no improvement since.

The Magistrate—Do you think there is any danger of the chief engineer losing his life?

Witness—There is always grave danger in cases of concussion.

Mr. E. A. Bowman, second officer of the Rio Azul, having given evidence, Mr. Seddon said that it concluded his case and asked for a committal.

The Magistrate—But you cannot conclude your case without the evidence of the chief engineer.

Counsel replied that the chief engineer would not be able to come to Court before Tuesday, when the ship sails. The prisoners, he submitted, could be sent for trial on the evidence already heard and kept in custody until the Rio Azul returned three months later.

His Worship over-ruled the submission, pointing out that it was one of the strongest principles of British law and justice that a prisoner have a speedy trial before his peers.

Mr. Seddon—It frequently happens in England that a man is kept five months before the next assizes.

The Magistrate—Well that does not reflect any credit on certain people at Home. It has never happened in China.

The accused were remanded until Friday.

CORRESPONDENCE

TRAMPLING ON TREATIES.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—Mr. Sokolsky's instructive article under the above heading very rightly lays down the principle that the problem of China's foreign treaties "must be presented to intelligent Chinese from their point of view," but in presenting the case for the foreigner few Chinese, I think, will be able to subscribe to what Mr. Sokolsky assumes to be facts.

Chinese and not a few foreigners conversant with China's relations with Foreign Powers will deny his assertion that "there was practically no national law in the land" at the period referred to. And even if there had been none, would that have entitled foreigners to impose obligations on China in order to facilitate their trade!

"Was it not because arrangements made with the Central Government were unenforcible," Mr. Sokolsky asks. And the Chinese will reply: "No, it was not. The Central Government encouraged resistance by ordering Canton to burn all the opium."

The "curious conduct" of China's officialdom made these treaties "absolutely necessary," affirms Mr. Sokolsky. Why! Because the Chinese authorities obstructed trade and because they collected taxes in a peculiar manner is his answer.

For several years many countries refused to trade with Russia and singular fiscal arrangements, destructive to international trade were adopted by that country and yet no other country imposed treaties on her. Why! Because no one had the power. In 1842, 1860 and 1901 foreigners had the power to impose treaties on China and they did so, but does the presence of power make them any the more just! No intelligent Chinese will admit the justness of these treaties, and until we foreigners come to look on them "from the Chinese point of view" trade and our relations with the country will suffer. Trade is all that the majority of foreigners take an interest in as regards the problem of China; but the Chinese people have many other interests, some of which are more important than foreign trade.

Foreigners have no objection whatever to the imposition by the Chinese Government or its municipal authorities of a tax on native wine shops, on turnip stalls or on factories making sedan chairs. But if a shop tax is being imposed on the house from which cigarettes are sold, foreigners raise a hue and cry because foreign trade is being interfered with and treaties are being evaded. China must do nothing which in any way interferes with foreign trade. That the moneys collected from the cigarette tax, from likin and other internal impositions go into the wrong pockets is of course perfectly well known to any intelligent Chinese, but they will rather submit to the tyranny of tuchuns and other autocrats than admit the principle of foreign interference. As a people they are not unique in such an attitude. Reverse the situation and see where it lands you. What did the French people do when foreigners wanted to rescue them from the tyranny of a newborn faith!

China certainly could become all that Mr. Sokolsky says of she would follow his advice. Japan is his model. But when that day arrives and China really becomes powerful (which means that she has a large and efficient army and navy, thousands of big guns, millions of rifles and much poison gas) what then! Supposing she uses that power in the same manner that we have used our own in the past, will justice then be done! she will then, indeed, be a Great Power, but it is questionable if her people then will be as great as they are now.

I am, etc.,
GORDIUS NIELSEN.
Shanghai, Dec. 27, 1923.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—When I saw, affixed to Mr. Sokolsky's article in your issue of 24th instant, the headline "China Trampling on Treaties," I did not wish to read the article, because instinct born of experience warned me that under such a title, there could be nothing but illogical reasonings and unjust criticisms on us Chinese. Mr. Gordius Nielsen's letter in this morning's paper, however, gave me heart, and I have since read through the article, and I must say it has made me quite sad that I was not wrong in my assumption.

It is not enough, it seems, that we have to suffer from the sins and misdoings not of our own making, but we must also, by some perverse fate, be held accountable for these same sins and misdoings. If Mr. Sokolsky would only exercise his intellectual powers a little on our behalf, he would see that we are as much, in some cases more, the victims of those alleged violations of foreign treaties as the foreign nations or merchants concerned. Take for instance, the cigarette-tax. It is we, who have to pay more for our cigarettes after this addition of a tax, and not the foreign sellers, who will be doing better and better business as the fashion of cigarette-smoking spreads wider and wider among us. Or take the Gold Francs Question for another illustration. Even suppose it were possible that the French Government would consent to receiving its future share of the Boxer indemnity in paper currency, the saving would not benefit us in the least, but it would be diverted to another channel, just as unprofitable or in all probability much more harmful.

When foreign writers lay the blame of the alleged violations to our door, we are tempted, in an exasperated moment, to ask what right the foreign nations ever had of forcing us to make these treaties with them. But recriminations of this kind never do good, but would simply raise a cloud of dust and blind the eye to the essential issue. The root of the hardships and sufferings of the people in this country and of the cause of dissatisfaction and impatience among the foreigners in China, is that China is under the heels of a gang of the most unscrupulous and selfish militarists and politicians, who by fortuitous circumstances have become the governors of the nation. They would disregard all foreign treaties if it were convenient; they make no pretence whatever of wishing to look after the interests of those who are under them. The best remedy would be for the Chinese and foreigners to get together and work out ways either of getting rid of this gang, or of imposing such restraint on them as to disable them from making any more depredations on the rights of the Chinese people and the foreigners. But if the foreigners will not help us, they must have the goodness of not losing their temper with us, who have far greater things at stake than they. If they cannot give us sympathy and assistance, they should at least be fair enough to abstain from any indiscriminate accusations.

Mr. Sokolsky holds up the example of Japan to us as worthy of emulation. But I sincerely believe that the only honourable course for China to take in regard to her foreign treaties does not lie in imitation of Japan. An honourable nation, as an honourable man, must abide by the terms of a contract, however disadvantageous they may be to it, no matter whether it has the strength to repudiate them with impunity, unless the other party to whom all the advantages accrue is willing voluntarily to rescind them from motives of justice and fairplay. And the terms of a contract should always be interpreted by an honourable nation according to the intention, expressed or understood, at the time the contract was made, and no mean advantage should be taken of a legal quibble in phrases or words, or of changes in circumstances which could not have been foreseen at that time. I cannot understand how, after the European War and the muddle Europe is still in, Mr. Sokolsky had the courage to suggest that an increase in power and strength would be a sufficient reason to override the sacredness of a treaty. It might be either that he gave us the credit of having a low standard of morality, which would be an abortion of judgment, bad enough in a man of intellect, or that his own standard of morality was low, which I cannot believe.

I am etc.,
K. C. K.
Shanghai, Dec. 28, 1923.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—I notice that in his letter under this heading, in your issue of the 29th instant, Mr. Gordius Nielsen very subtly introduces that wearisome old cry of the use of opium having been forced upon China. He does not actually say so, but I think his letter infers it.

Now I understand from my reading of the subject that actually why opium was used by the Chinese people was simply and purely, in the last analysis, because they wanted it, officialdom included. Certain of that officialdom at Peking, however, were sensible enough to perceive that its use meant the draining of China of its silver resources, by reason of the silver payments made for the opium, and this is what they rightly did not like: therefore their commendable prohibition of the use of the drug by their subjects.

The misnamed "Opium" war in fact arose out of a determination on the part of the foreign world peacefully to penetrate China for trade purposes, an aim which met with no sympathy from the Chinese Government, which regarded all foreigners with an amazing supreme contempt and which could only think of foreign countries as vassals of China; this as a result of ignorance engendered by their long isolation from the world at large.

It was to secure recognition by the Chinese government of the equality of foreigners and Chinese that war was rendered necessary. I admit we did want trade, but was there anything wrong in that? Most of our trade was moral: the opium traffic was an exception, and is a side-issue. China at that time held us all in contempt, fear and suspicion. We felt that this was without reason or rightful ground, and solely attributable to their ignorance of us, and we determined to make the Chinese realize this. Alas, that a war should have been necessary. But very soon after, the contempt was gone, fear dissipated, and the foreigner had earned the respect of the Chinese people, and they saw in trade and intercourse the opportunity for mutual benefit.

I am etc.,
SPECTATOR.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—I have several times reread "K. C. K's" letter in this morning's "North-China Daily News" and I have yet to find wherein we disagree unless it be in such personal matters as my friendliness toward the Chinese people, which I am sure that no one who knows of my work in this country can doubt, or the scale of my morality which of course is a matter of opinion.

On general questions with regard to China we agree. On the necessity of patience on the part of foreigners, we agree. On the necessity of fixing responsibility on the officials and militarists, we agree. On the impropriety of trampling on treaties, we agree. On the indecency of breaking treaties by officials, we agree. We might even agree on an interpretation of the imposition of treaties on the Chinese people were we to come together on the general hypothesis that unlimited exclusion of intercourse is the right of no nation.

Where then do we differ? "K.C.K." as a Chinese, knows that the Chinese people will ultimately overcome their corrupt officials and will wear them out until a good government is possible. I, as a foreigner, know that unless something is done soon to prevent these same officials from flouting foreigners' rights in China (and I am dealing with paper not moral rights) the foreign Powers might take a step which all friends of China hope will never happen, namely the enforcing of their rights. To avoid such an eventuality "K.C.K." and I and those who feel as we do can work together: I can interpret the foreign viewpoint to the Chinese people and wherever I have sufficient information and accurate statements, the Chinese viewpoint to foreigners. He can drive out those who as he says, have China "under the heels of a gang of the most unscrupulous and selfish militarists and politicians, who by fortuitous circumstances, have become the governors of the nation." Foreigners cannot rid Chinese of their worst officials. Whenever they have attempted such a course they have been worsted by the greater Chinese in Peking as was instanced after the Lincheng Incident when Tuchun Tien became a Marshal and when Defence Commissioner Ho Fengyu was dismissed only to be reemployed in Shanghai.

But foreigners can tell their Chinese friends what the general consensus of foreign opinion is and they can help to stave off a blow which will alike harm China and the foreigners in China. Wholesome criticism will do that. Adulation, flattery, deceit, craving for popularity, will not do that. My only object in writing is wholesome criticism, and such replies as that of "K.C.K." make the task pleasant, could he only keep off the ground of questioning one's friendship for his country because one does not see the dawn at midnight.

I am, etc.,
GEORGE E. SOKOLSY.
Shanghai, Dec. 31, 1923.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—I regret that my brief reference to the first China war should have been interpreted by "Spectator" in the sense that I wished to fasten all guilt for that incident on the foreigner. That was not my intention. The word opium was merely used for the sake of briefness and in order to fix the time when China first came into serious collision with Western Powers. But "Spectator's" reading of history is faulty, inasmuch as it was only a small and proportionately a very small, number of China's milions who at that time desired to buy opium. The rest of the nation was against the introduction of the drug for the reasons stated by your correspondent and for other and more important reasons. A controversy on this vexed question will lead nowhere, but there are other considerations, testified to by distinguished persons of recognized fairness and ability, apposite to the time, which are important for the student to observe. Mr. Cushing, the accredited representative of the United States to China, reported to the State Department as follows:

"It is impossible to deny to China a high degree of civilization, though that civilization is, in many respects, different from ours; yet the magnitude of the Empire, the stability of its political institutions, the great advancement which the Chinese have made in the arts of life, the sedulous cultivation of letters, as well as the other useful and ornamental objects of intellectual pursuit, are such as to give China as complete a title to the appellation of civilized as many if not most of the States of Christendom can claim."

This was the impression made on a man who was himself a cultured gentleman. At that time and particularly anterior to that time, foreigners coming to China for the purpose of trade had only one outlook, the commercial one. There can hardly be a doubt but that many of their methods must have shocked that portion of the native population which Mr. Cushing had in mind when he spoke of Chinese civilization. A Chinese student makes the following comment:

"A want of regard for Chinese laws characterized the foreigners who went to China in the 17th and 18th centuries. They were either adventurers or desperate characters, and, with the exception of a few missionaries, they were all animated by the sole desire to seek fortunes in a new land. It mattered little what the territorial laws required and what they prohibited; they came on a mission to replenish their purses and were prepared to leave as soon as their object was accomplished; in their opinion, it would have been disloyal to themselves to allow their conduct to be shackled by laws of which they knew nothing, and about which they did not care to know anything. A small number of them, endowed with an inquiring mind indeed manifested an interest in Chinese laws and acquired a knowledge of them; . . . Under these circumstances it is not surprising that they considered themselves as exempt from all laws."

This was the estimate of our aims and conduct at the period referred to, but 85 years ago foreigners were unquestionably of a better type than those who preceded them. Yet the tradition of two centuries overshadowed their conception of the relative positions, as it does to a large extent to-day. We are much in need of being reminded that there are other people in China besides tuchuns, bandits and rapacious officials, as so pointedly noted by "C. H. K." Our roughness and occidental impetuosity, to use no harsher term, cannot but shock the more sensitive fibre of cultured China. Even to this day few of us know or appreciate the many excellent qualities associated with Chinese civilization, for the very good reason that our knowledge of the people is almost strictly confined to the dealings we have with officials, merchants, office employees and domestic servants. How many of us have ever really associated on terms of intimacy with the people? And it is this ignorance of the most of us which makes us as blind as the Chinese themselves are when they judge us. The family circle is the only source from which to acquire knowledge of a people's culture; but as we only know, and as the Chinese people only know, what is seen and heard in the market place, our mutual appreciation—or the reverse—rests on a very inadequate foundation. Until foreigners and Chinese approach each other on terms of social equality in the intimacy of the family circle, the two races will remain apart for want of understanding. It will require considerable sacrifice of comfort and prejudice by all before such a state can be attained, but it is the only way by which frigidity, prejudice and contempt can be dispelled. When that day comes a new era will appear founded on goodwill, sympathy and appreciation of the good qualities inherent in both races.

I am etc.,
GORDIUS NIELSEN.
Shanghai, Jan. 1, 1924.

THEY have a stiff way of dealing with swindlers in Canton. According to the "China Mail" a man who went on board a steam launch at Canton and demanded "teamoney" to the extent of $60, saying that he was a detective from the Police Headquarters, was seized by the crew and taken to the Police Headquarters. After trial he was sentenced to death and promptly executed.

WANTED

WANTED, photographs of current events in Straits Settlements, Dutch Colonies, Siam, Far East and all other parts of Asia for publication in "The Indian Daily Mail," which prints a full page of pictures daily. Prompt despatch with full description essential. Best rates of payment. Write to Managing Editor, "The Indian Daily Mail," 24-26 Dalal Street, Fort, Bombay.

FOREIGN TELEGRAMS

BRITISH IMPERIAL CONFERENCE

Resolutions Not Binding but of a Nature that Cannot be Ignored

London, Dec. 31.

Mr. S. M. Bruce, the Australian Prime Minister, speaking at a farewell luncheon at the Colonial Institute, contested the suggestion that the Imperial Government was bound by the resolutions, "which never were resolutions", of the Imperial and Economic Conferences. To suggest that the nations participating were bound by the action of their representatives until that action was confirmed by the respective Governments and Parliaments was undemocratic and against the great principles underlying the whole of the present relations inside the Empire. Australia claimed to be a free democracy where the will of the people would always prevail.

At the Conference, the Dominions claimed that the decisions were not binding on the respective countries until they had received the sanction of the Parliaments and, holding that attitude, the Dominions were not entitled to try to force the hands of Britain or to suggest a breach of faith. But it would be tragic if effect were not given to the Conference resolutions. (Cheers.).

The Australian Prime Minister believed that it would strike a most vital blow at the unity of the Empire if the whole result of the Conference were destroyed. He believed, however, that any Government coming into power in Britain would closely examine everything done at the Conferences and do everything in its power to give effect to the conclusions of the Conferences.

Mr. Bruce continued to give a moving description of his recent visit to the cemeteries of France, warmly eulogizing the work of the War Graves Commission, which he described as one great example of Imperial unity and co-operation.

Britain's Blindness.

Dealing with Empire trade, the Australian Prime Minister declared that Britain was showing the same blindness as she showed in 1914. No one in 1914, whether in Britain or the Dominions, seriously would have suggested that in case of war the Empire would put in the field more than 100,000 men, but a conservative estimate of the Empire's contribution was 1,250,000. Some said to-day that the danger to Empire trade would be completely removed if Britain would only look to the Dominions, but the deriders of this doctrine again were of the opinion that the Dominions only would do very little. "They won't be able to do very little," declared Mr. Bruce, amid cheers. "They are able to do everything. What they could do in the arena of trade and commerce is a hundredfold greater than the amazing, wonderful things they did in the War."

In conclusion, the Prime Minister urged taking the whole question of Empire development outside the field of party politics.

Reuter.

NEW YEAR HONOURS LIST

Three New Peerages: Viscountcy for Lord Inchcape: C. M. G. for Mr. T. L. Perkins

London, Dec. 31.

The New Year Honours List includes three new peerages, Sir Frederick Banbury, Sir Charles Darling and Sir Herbert Jessel receiving baronies, while Lord Inchcape is promoted to Viscount. Major Herbert Cayzer is made a baronet. Major-General Sir James Marshall Stewart becomes a Knight Commander of the Bath.

Sir Frederick George Banbury is Chairman of the Great Northern Railway.

Sir Charles Darling has just retired after 26 years as Judge of the King's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice.

Colonel Sir Herbert Merton Jessel served in the Army Remount Service during the war, retiring from the Army in 1919, when he was Deputy Director of Remounts at the War Office. He afterwards held the post of Controller of the Horses and Animals Disposals Board in the Ministry of Supply.

Lord Inchcape is Chairman of the P. & O. Steam Navigation Co.

Major Herbert Robin Cayzer is Vice-Chairman of the Clan Line and Member of Parliament for South Portsmouth.

Major-General Sir James Marshall Stewart retired from the Indian Army in 1920. During the war he served in East Africa, where he was specially promoted Major-General, and with the Aden Field Force. He took part in the operations in China in 1900 and in Tibet in 1903-4.

The Colonial List.

The Colonial Office list contains the following:—

Companions of the Order of St. Michael and St. George:—Mr. Edward Shaw Hose, Acting Chief Secretary of the Government of the Malay States. Mr. Thomas Luff Perkins, formerly Director of Public Works at Hongkong.

Knight Bachelor:—Mr. David James Galloway, Member of the Executive Council of the Straits Settlements, in recognition of public services.—Reuter.

BRITISH CONFIDENCE IN NEW YEAR

Expectation of Nine Months' Deficit of £60,000,000 to be Balanced in Three Months

London, Jan. 1.

Very merry revels at London hotels, several brilliant balls, including an assembly of 4,000 art students and others at the Albert Hall, and numerous watch-night services at the churches marked the arrival of the New Year. A novel feature was the broadcasting of the midnight chimes of Parliament's famous Big Ben throughout the country.

The national revenue for the nine months just ended shows a deficit of £60,000,000, but it is expected that this will be wiped out in the course of the next three months.

The annual statement of bills and cheques paid by the Bankers' Clearing-house last year amounts to a grand total of £36,627,592,000, a decrease of £533,869,000 as compared with the previous year. Ninety-five per cent. of the decrease occurred in town clearing. In the first three quarters there was an aggregate decrease of £1,001,572,000 and in the last quarter a satisfactory increase of £467,703,000.

King George, replying to a New Year telegram of congratulation from the Lord Mayor of London, says that he is confident that, with God's help, the British, true to their great traditions, will face the outcome of the difficulties which are still confronting us at the close of a decade which, though memorable in glorious achievement, has been beset by much trial and suffering.

The Political Situation.

The political world is reawakening after the Christmas holiday. Mr. Baldwin will return to London to-day and Mr. Ramsay Macdonald shortly afterwards. The Cabinet will meet on Wednesday or Thursday to discuss the programme for embodiment in the King's speech.

The Rothermere press has been insistently urging the Liberals and the Conservatives to cooperate to save the country from a Socialist Government, but it is declared in Liberal circles that the position has not changed since Mr. Asquith's announcement of his intentions. One paper understands that a number of men occupying responsible posts in the Empire have notified the Foreign, Colonial and India Offices of their intention to resign if a Socialist Government should come into power.

Transformation in Ireland.

Advices from Dublin agree in depicting the transformation produced in Ireland, which is entering the New Year with hope and confidence. Crime is admittedly still above the normal, but gunmen have put away their revolvers and returned to work. Ministers move freely and unprotected. There is no trace of the old tension. Only 2,000 out of 12,000 remain imprisoned and only 32,000 persons are unemployed. It is stated that the unemployed dole is shortly being dropped altogether.—Reuter.

A LABOUR MINISTRY FOR BRITAIN

Mr. Ramsay Macdonald Forming a Cabinet: Protest by London Conservatives

London, Jan. 2.

It is reported that Mr. Ramsay Macdonald, who is busy Cabinet-making, has offered the Colonial Secretaryship to Mr. Sidney Webb.

More definite light has been shed on the letter sent to Mr. Stanley Baldwin by the executive of the City of London Conservative Association, which is one of the principal topics in connexion with the political situation. A meeting of the executive, including among others Sir Frederick Banbury and Sir Laming Worthington-Evans, was held to-day, at the conclusion of which they declined to divulge the contents of the letter which was sent on December 18, but made a general statement of their views, declaring that the formation of a Labour Government was contrary to the will of the people and would be highly injurious to the nation's domestic and foreign policy. Therefore, either a Conservative or a Liberal Government should be formed with the support of the other and in the event of a Conservative Ministry proving impossible, the Committee hopes that Conservatives will support a Liberal administration.

London Conservatives and Liberals.

Jan. 2.

The executive of the City of London Conservative Association has issued a statement that if a Conservative Government supported by Liberals is not attainable, it hopes that in the interests of the nation Conservative Members of the House of Commons will support a Liberal administration. The statement says that the administration of the country in these critical times by an inexperienced Government of extreme views would be highly injurious to the nation in its domestic and foreign polices.

It is understood that Mr. Stanley Baldwin, replying to the Association's representations, expressed the opinion that, in view of Mr. Asquith's speech, it was scarcely possible to approach him as the Association suggested. It is expected, however, that Mr. Baldwin will submit the representations to his Cabinet colleagues.

Labour Leader on a Dissolution.

Jan. 3.

An interesting pronouncement is made by Mr. Ramsay Macdonald in the periodical, the "New Leader."

Discussing the three-party problem, Mr. Macdonald says that a situation that restores liberty of decision to the House of Commons as a whole ought to be welcomed rather than regretted. Everything points to a continued stalemate which will loosen party bonds, members more frequently using their own judgment, and tend to curb the partisanship of parties.

Mr. Macdonald expresses gratification that Mr. Asquith's statement on the question of dissolution has received scanty support in the best-informed quarters and terms as an absurd idea that the Prime Minister can go to the King just when it suits him and, shortly after an election, to ask for a dissolution, adding, however, that it belongs to the Minister's responsibility to have his advice taken if to the best of his beliefs, supported by the evidence of by-elections, he thinks an election necessary and that the country would accept it.—Reuter.

Fall in Sterling.

New York, Jan. 3.

Sterling is quoted in New York at 4.28. The decline is attributed in many circles to the political situation in England.—Reuter's American Service.

THE NAVAL BASE AT SINGAPORE

Capetown's Rival Claims: More Important Centre and Far Less Expense

Capetown, Dec. 27.

The "Cape Times," discussing the Singapore base scheme, calls particular attention to the declaration of Rear-Admiral Sir Frederick Field that the Cape route was more likely to become a still more important line of Empire communication in the future than in the past.

The journal urges construction of a large modern dry-dock at Capetown for the use of trading vessels, and in time of emergency for battleships frequenting the Cape route. It says that the costs of construction at Capetown are cheaper than at Singapore, and that for an expenditure of possibly £6,000,000 to £7,000,000, as compared with the estimated £11,000,000 for the Singapore scheme, Capetown Harbour could be equipped with a feature badly needed by the Navy and by merchant shipping.—Reuter.

BRITISH AIR TRANSPORT PROJECT

Government Agreement with Big Syndicate to Run Service to the Continent

London, Dec. 28.

The agreement between the Government and the Imperial Air Transport Company, Limited, for the purpose of operating an aerial transport service to Europe has now been issued.

The Company comprises the Handley-Page, Instone Daimler, and British Marine and Air Navigation Companies, with a capital of £1,000,000. The Company will be entirely British.

The Government is entitled to nominate two directors.

The agreement will operate next April and until the Company has repaid the subsidies it receives.

Under the agreement the Company shall maintain efficient air services from London to Paris, Brussels, Amsterdam, Southampton, the Channel Isles and other approved places. A minimum of 800,000 miles must be completed annually for the first four years and 1,000,000 miles the subsequent year.

The Government subsidy for the first four years will be £137,000 yearly and after that it will be gradually reduced to £32,000 for the 10th year.

All construction necessary for the air service and all important repairs will be carried out in British territory, and all engines and accessories will be British. Only pilots enrolled in the Air Force Reserve or in the Auxiliary Air Force will be employed. The technical and administrative personnel will be British.

All aerodromes and aircraft bases of the Company will be at the disposal of the Government in national emergency.—Reuter.

GERMAN FINANCES SCRUTINIZED

Political Issues Now Thought Less Pressing Than the Economic

Berlin, Dec. 29.

It is officially announced that in view of the pending foreign negotiations the Government has decided to resume payment, for a limited period and within very narrow limits, of the costs of the armies of occupation. These payments ceased when the French entered the Ruhr.—Reuter.

London, Dec. 29.

Owing to the lull in domestic politics the papers are calling attention to the new situation in the Ruhr and the Rhineland and to the conversations between the French Government and the German Chargé d'Affaires proceeding in Paris in that connexion, as likely to bulk largely in discussions when Parliament reopens.

It is pointed out that the labours of the two committees of financial experts which the Reparations Commission has appointed promise more fruitful results than have been attained up to the present, not merely because the United States is represented on the committees, but because their approvement signifies that the Commission is for the moment freed from the political restrictions which have obscured an essentially financial problem. Nevertheless the committees' investigation of the condition of German finances is bound to raise the burning question of whether the Ruhr and the Rhineland belong to Germany.

The memorandum which the German Chargé d'Affaires, Herr von Hoesch, recently presented, while not raising the question of the legality of the occupation desires for budgetary reasons to know France's views on the question of the sovereignty of the occupied territory.

This, according to authoritative circles in Paris to-day, means that Germany is less concerned with an economic modus vivendi than with the restoration of Prussian sovereignty and merely designed to negative French and Belgian action.

Industrial Overtures.

Meanwhile the Paris "Matin" has revealed that unofficial Franco-German conversations are also proceeding in Paris where the German potash mine-owner, Herr Rechberg, has been for a fortnight bringing to the notice of M. Poincaré and other prominent personages his plan for the formation of a Franco-German industrial syndicate. He argues that such a syndicate would be the most powerful in the world, that it would provide a large sum for reparations and that it would create a solidarity of French and German interests sufficient to prevent future war. Whence Herr Rechberg derives his authority is not disclosed but, though he has secured the ear of the highest authorities in France, a telegram from Berlin to-day says that his scheme is ridiculed in Herr Stinnes's organs and the press.—Reuter.

America's Representatives.

New York, Dec. 29.

General Dawes and Mr. Owen Young, the United States representatives on the reparations inquiry committee, sailed from New York to-day.

Mr. Young said that he regarded the questions to be settled as business questions and that he only hoped that they would be approached in that spirit, with a determination to get a constructive answer speedily Reuter's American Service.

Berlin, Dec. 29.

In conformity with the demands of the Allies a representa-

HINDE CONVICTED OF EMBEZZLEMENT

Sentence of One Year's Imprisonment: Application for a New Trial

[illegible] embezzlement on two charges in the U.S. Court for China, was last Friday sentenced to serve one year in Bilibid prison. Mr. H. G. Snyder [illegible] defence and [illegible] U.S. District Attorney, [illegible] Judge on the passing of the judgment. Mr. Snyder asked that the same bail be allowed temporarily as he wished to make a motion for a new trial. Mr. Husar opposed the application, on the ground that [illegible] had been registered the circumstances were different. Mr. Snyder declared that if defendant had wished to get away he could have done so when [illegible] had waited in Shanghai for months.

Mr. Husar—The conviction makes the case not at all similar to that previously. If I had a year in prison facing me I would not allow anything like a G.$3,000 bail from stopping me to try to get away. I will ask that the U. S. Marshal take custody of the defendant.' There is always a tendency on the part of the attorney for defence (I might do it myself) in these criminal cases to ask for bail to prepare motion for another trial or an appeal, and one can never tell what may happen.

Mr. Snyder—Mr. Husar has a personal motive in making these assertions. He so stated to this Court at the time of motion to set.

Mr. Husar—There is nothing personal in this at all. It was a most despicable crime and the [illegible] was [illegible] I.

Mr. Snyder—I think that Mr. Husar's remarks are out of place.

Mr. Husar—Nothing of the kind. It was only yesterday that complaining witness called me up and said that Mr. Hinde had been making overtures of marriage again and that he said he would fix up the money all right. I [illegible] he has been pestering complainant.

His Honour—I think that bail should be increased. I will fix it at an additional G.$1,000 and defendant may have until to-morrow noon to secure it. I shall expect Mr. Snyder to mention anything untoward.

The judgment follows:

These are informations charging defendant with embezzlement of the sums of Tls. 3,000 and Tls. 2,810. Defendant admitted having received said sums from complainant with instructions, he states, to invest them "as he saw fit." The complaining witness, on the other hand, testified that these two sums represented salary received and due to her as a teacher in the French Municipal School: that upon defendant's advice she transferred the larger sum to the International Banking Corporation from another bank and left instructions for the salary due to be deposited in the same institution: that on June 16, 1922, she gave defendant two blank cheques, duly signed, for the purpose of transferring these funds from the tael account to a gold account in the said bank, the purpose being to enable him to take advantage of any favourable turn in exchange after her departure for America which took place [illegible] days later. The defendant, however, used them for the purpose of withdrawing the sums entirely from that bank and depositing them in another to the credit of Hinde Bros. & Co. (unincorporated). The money has never been repaid the complaining witness and defendant admitted his inability to repay.

We do not overlook the fact that the relation between the parties was something more than friendship. But we think the evidence wholly fails to show that they were engaged. On the contrary a letter (Exhibit 1) written after her departure clearly tells defendant that they were not.

Nor is this a case where one of the parties might have been mistaken. We can see no reason why the complaining witness should attempt to fasten this charge falsely upon one whom she had concededly regarded in the light of a suitor. Defendant's interest in establishing a different [illegible] was obvious, and considering this interest as well as the corroborating circumstances, we must find that complainant has established her claim beyond a reasonable doubt.

We feel obliged under the evidence to find the defendant guilty of the crime of embezzlement and he is accordingly sentenced to imprisonment for one year in Bilibid Prison, and to pay the costs of this proceeding.

A DEAL IN FRANCS AND MARKS

Chinese American Bank of Commerce v. F. A. Bowen

An action has been filed with Mr. W. A. Chapman, Clerk of the American Court, by the Chinese American Bank of Commerce v. F. A. Bowen, involving Mks. 550,000 and Frs. 350,000 which in Shanghai currency at the day's rate involved a net amount sued for of Sh. Tls. 61,433.32. Messrs. Shoop & Chalaire filed for plaintiff and Messrs. Schuhl & Schoenfeld represent defendant.

It is alleged that defendant agreed to purchase on July 31, 1921, Mks. 250,000 at Mks. 33.50 to the Shanghai tael, Frs. 350,000 at 7.15 on the same date, Frs. 100,000 at 7.85 on July 21, 1921, and Mks. 300,000 on December 31, 1921, at 42. It is admitted that defendant paid for Mks. 30,422.93 on February 28, 1922, and Mks. 2,359.50 on December 12, 1922, and [illegible] on December 14, 1922.

Plaintiff asked for judgment of Tls. 61,433.32 and interest from December 31, 1921.

ASIA LIFE AND AN EX-MANAGER

Expenses Dispute: Amicable Settlement Reached

The hearing in the case of the Asia Life Insurance Co. v. W. R. Rice in the U. S. Court for China occupied but five minutes before his Honour Judge C. S. Lobingier last Friday. Mr. S. Moss, addressing the Court, said that he wished to ask on behalf of his client, the plaintiff, that the case be dismissed with prejudice to himself, inasmuch as an amicable arrangement had been arrived at beforehand and they were prepared to pay the costs of the action. Mr. F. J. Schuhl, for defendant stated that he had no objection to a dismissal on these grounds.

His Honour ruled:—This case comes on hearing and an oral motion by plaintiff to dismiss with prejudice and to pay the costs of the action, whereof it appearing that a settlement has been effected by the parties, it is hereby ordered that the same be dismissed with prejudice and the plaintiff pay the costs.

Plaintiff alleged that between September 1, 1921, and June 10, 1923, defendant had been general manager of the company and that in December, 1922, he had been authorized to make a trip to America in the interests of the plaintiff and it had been mutually agreed that the company should pay all reasonable expenses of the journey to America. Between January and September, 1923, plaintiff had advanced to defendant G.$9,700, Mex. $3,512.64 and Sh. Tls. 3,398.23. Defendant according to the allegation admitted his indebtedness to the company of G.$2,344.66, Sh. Tls. 248.23 and Mex. $566.24 but he did not account for G.$3,421.51.

Plaintiff therefore desired that defendant make an account with vouchers and payment of all moneys not accounted for and judgment for the amounts defendant admitted he owed with interest at one per cent a month.

CLAIM FOR DAMAGED CARGO

Nanyang Bros. Successful Suit in the U. S. Court

In the United States Court for China, on Saturday, Judge C. S. Lobingier gave a written judgment in the case of the Nanyang Bros. Tobacco Co., Ld., v. the Green Star Steamship Co. The judgment in part stated:—

This is an action to recover for damaged cargo. The amended answer sets up several defences, but by stipulation all have been eliminated except alleged non-compliance with the following clause in the bill of lading:—"The carrier shall not be liable for any claim whatsoever unless written notice thereof shall be given to the carrier before removal of the goods from the wharf. No suit to recover for loss or damage shall in any event be maintainable against the carrier unless instituted within three months after the giving of written notice as above provided." In the reply plaintiff alleges that said stipulation is unreasonable and has been waived by the defendant. It is admitted that the required notice was furnished on September 14, 1920, but it is claimed that plaintiff cannot recover for its loss because this action was not begun until May 5, 1921. No attempt was made by defendant, during the three months following the notice of damage, to invoke the clause now relied upon. Indeed, it was not mentioned in defendant's original answer. Not until more than two years after the action was begun did defendant, by its amended answer, invoke the clause in question.

Defendant, by accepting plaintiff's notice and advising it "to wait for a reply" which does not appear to have been sent, really delayed the commencement of the action. For so long as there was a prospect of payment why should plaintiff sue? If defendant intended to deny liability he should have done so promptly and then, had plaintiff failed to bring action within the prescribed period, the clause would have been applicable. But to refuse on that ground plaintiff's recovery for a just claim, which he had reason to believe defendant was at least considering payment of, would be little short of iniquitous. The failure to invoke this clause at the end of the three months or even in the first answer indicates that it was an afterthought and not a bonâ fide assertion of a recognized right. The request for special findings based on the theory that this clause is a bar to recovery is consequently inapplicable, contrary both to the evidence and the law.

It having been expressly stipulated that, in the event that the above mentioned clause is not upheld, defendant is liable for damages in the sum of G.$40,000, it is accordingly considered and adjudged that plaintiff have and recover from the defendant said sum together with interest thereon from September 14, 1920, and costs.

A REMEDY FOR TUBERCULOSIS

Two Year-old Suit Resuscitated: Partnership Dispute

In the U.S. Court for China on Thursday morning the hearings of a two-year-old suit were continued, in which Dr. F. T. Kiang brought allegations against C. J. Kossl. The original case, made in September of 1921, petitioned that the books of the partnership between the two, which it was alleged had been taken by defendant should be returned for inspection. It was further stated that the secret remedy of plaintiff for the cure of tuberculosis had been taken and he asked for its return also, and for the return of some 500 bottles of the remedy said to have been taken. Plaintiff averred that defendant had gone to Chinese dealers and asked to take the bottles and then removed the labels and substituted others in their place in order to interfere with his business. He prayed for an injunction restraining him from such practices in the future. Dr. H. C. Mei appeared for plaintiff and Mr. C. S. Franklin acted for defendant.

In the interim it was decided to allow a referee to settle the difficulties and Messrs. Seth, Mancell & McClure were appointed who in turn referred four items back to the Court for adjudication. These were $1,434, a bill for advertising and printing for which they could find no vouchers in the accounts, $1,155 the value of the remedy for which the books were not clear, $800 which defendant is said to have received as salary advance and an amount of $1,000 which was said to have been paid to one Jordan. These were the matters before the Court yesterday.

Mr. E. H. Baker, an accountant for the referees, was of the opinion that the amount of the account for advertising was a just one in view of the fact that the business for that period amounted to $10,000, but under Mr. Franklin's cross-questions he declared that he was not a business expert, though he did have knowledge of advertising rates. Plaintiff declared that he had allowed $200 per month for advertising regularly in four Chinese newspapers and declared that the vouchers in question had been taken by defendant.

During the course of the examination Judge Lobingier asked—Did this tuberculosis remedy ever cure anyone?—The remedy can cure when the disease is not too far advanced, not in the severe cases.

Plaintiff declared that the credit business for eight months amounted to $8,000 and the cash business to $10,000.

Messrs. Mei and Franklin argued and judgment was reserved.

PLEADINGS were ordered by his Honour Judge Sir Skinner Turner at H. M. Supreme Court on Thursday in the case of Hayley Morriss and William MacGregor Western v. John Benavitch, a claim for Tls. 200,000 damages for alleged breach of contract, whereby plaintiffs and defendant associated themselves in the business of bullion and exchange broking. Mr. R. G. McDonald appeared for plaintiffs and Mr. R. F. C. Master for defendant.

NEW YEAR TRAGEDIES

Man Shot By Armed Robbers: Girl's Death from Motor Injuries: Two Inquests

An inquest was held on Thursday by Mr. N. A. Allman (American Assessor) and Mr. Li Sieu-mei (Chinese Magistrate), concerning the death of Zung Da-kwe, 30. The Police evidence was to the effect that deceased was crossing East Yuhang Road when a shot was fired by a party of armed robbers, with the result that deceased was struck by a bullet in his head under the right eye. He dropped down unconscious and was taken to hospital where he died. The verdict given was that deceased came to his death as the result of a bullet fired by some person or persons unknown.

A second inquest held concerned the death of Li Tsz-sz, 63, who was struck down and fatally injured by a motor car (3570), driven by a Chinese chauffeur. The Court found that deceased came to her death as the result of an accident contributed to by her own negligence and no blame attached to the chauffeur.

WE understand that the authorities of the French Mixed Court released on New Year's eve, a score of prisoners as a New Year amnesty. Sentences given in the more serious cases were lightened in more than 40 instances, the lucky ones behaving well and working hard whilst in prison.

MR. Arthur Covey, solicitor, was admitted to practice at H. M. Supreme Court by his Honour Judge Sir Skinner Turner on Monday. Mr. H. P. Wilkinson, the Crown Advocate, said that Mr. Covey had been admitted to practice at the Supreme Court of Judicature on November 7, 1894. He had had an official career of some distinction, having been Assistant Colonial Secretary on the Gold Coast for 11 years and in the political department of Northern Nigeria. Afterwards he practised law in Uganda. A year ago he occupied a temporary appointment at the Court—acting Chief Clerk—and, subsequently that of acting Registrar. His Lordship said that Mr. Covey was personally quite well known to him, and he was very glad to admit him to the roll of practitioners in the Court.

THE SMALL INVESTORS' CO.

41 SZECHUEN ROAD, Shanghai

Phone: C. 977 and 761

NOTE

CAPITAL INVESTED, with dividends or Interest payable every six months.

At 7 per cent. Doubles itself in 10 years
At 8 per cent. Doubles itself in 9 years
At 9 per cent. Doubles itself in 8 years
At 10 per cent. Doubles itself in 7 years

START TO-DAY TO DOUBLE YOUR CAPITAL

We are holders of large stocks of sound companies whose shares will yield
7 per cent. to 14 per cent. per annum

THE SMALL INVESTORS' COMPANY

Telegraphic Address DOUGLAS FLEMING,
"Safeinvest" Manager.

BALKANS BOILING UP

Bulgaria Begins to Want Her Army Restored: Serbia Exercised in Mind

Belgrade, Dec. 30.

A grave situation between Jugo-Slavia and Bulgaria has followed a speech in the Sobranje by M. Tzankoff, the Bulgarian Premier, who referred to the treatment of Bulgarian minorities and to Bulgaria's desire to suspend voluntary enlistment in the Army. He expressed the hope that the Allied Powers would authorize the Government temporarily to recruit an army on a conscript basis.

This is interpreted in Belgrade as a demand to keep a standing army and equivalent to a challenge to the Jugo-Slavs. The Cabinet discussed the speech, after which M. Rakitch, the Servian Minister at Sofia, was telegraphically instructed to return to Belgrade to confer with the Government. Official circles are of opinion that M. Tzankoff's utterance marks a definite change in Bulgarian policy in favour of restoration of pre-war conditions in the Balkans.

The Belgrade newspaper "Vrema" declares that it is the duty of the Government to adopt military steps if necessary to assure future security. Other newspapers, irrespective of party, express similar exhortations.—Reuter.

AN END TO RUSSIAN COMMUNISM'S REIGN

A Gradual Reversion to Capitalism: The Possibility of Liquidating Liabilities

London, Dec. 31.

Speaking at a meeting of British businessmen in London, Mr. Marshall, the managing director of the Becos Traders, Ld., who sent a delegation to Russia last summer, headed by Mr. F. L. Baldwin, the brother of the Premier, declared that the period of communism in Russia could be regarded as ended. The present phase was a gradual reversion to capitalism. Mr. Marshall believed that the Russian Government would admit responsibility for the liquidation of Russian liabilities if rapid development of industries could be assured.

Trotzky out of Favour.

Jan. 1.

Reports from Riga state that the struggle within the Communist Party in Russia is being renewed as fiercely as ever. It is stated that the Central group are determined to drop M. Trotzky unless he unconditionally accepts their views with regard to the formation of internal groups.

The "Pravda" prints an official reply to M. Trotzky's recent articles uncompromisingly criticizing him and accusing him of anti-Leninism and of wilfully sowing dissension for his own tactical purposes.

One report asserts that a secret meeting of the Political Department and party leaders decided, if opposition increased, to undertake serious measures, including the arrest and banishment of leaders.—Reuter.

Panic in Moscow.

Riga, Jan. 1.

Wholesale arrests in the course of the Political Bureau's ostensible campaign against drug traffickers, contrabandists and other parasites are causing a panic in Moscow. Whole families are reported to have been banished to North Russia. Those arrested include many supporters of the new economic policy. The fact that dissatisfied workmen have been promised vacated flats is encouraging the belief in some quarters that a new attempt to return to pure communism is being made in consequence of the present agitation in political circles. Reuter.

TURKEY'S STRINGENT SHIPPING LAWS

A Ban on Foreign Pilotage, Customs Officials and Stevedores

Constantinople, Jan. 2.

Basing their action on the Treaty of Lausanne, the Turkish authorities have notified foreign shipping companies operating here that all loading and unloading operations, Customs formalities and pilotage must be performed by Moslem Turks. No Europeans will be allowed to board steamers in port in connexion with these services. Foreign shipping agents are discussing the situation.

The question of pilotage affects the safety of ships in Turkish waters as the supply of Turkish pilots is inadequate and their quality leaves much to be desired.—Reuter.

THE REBELLION IN MEXICO

U. S. Sales of Arms

Mexico City, Dec. 27.

The "Excelsior" reports that General Flores, Governor of Sinaloa and presidential candidate, has initiated a new peace move. The details of it are not known, but it is understood that they are the outcome of conferences that General Flores's emissary has had with President Obregon, General Huerta and several rebel generals.—Reuter's American Service.

A Rebel Success

Vera Cruz, Dec. 28.

The rebel headquarters announces the capture of the Federal General Gardenas, with his entire staff and 300 cavalry, at Irapuato. The remainder of the Federal column then joined the rebels.—Reuter's American Service.

Washington, Dec. 30.

The Government has agreed to sell a quantity of war materials to the Obregon Government of Mexico.

It is understood that this decision was prompted by a desire to aid the Obregon régime against the rebels.

The material involved is said to include rifles in border army depots and 10 military aeroplanes.

A message from Vera Cruz says that the garrison at Tuxpam has joined the revolutionaries. It is claimed that this is important not only because of the field reinforcements it has provided but because it yields to the revolutionaries the control of the entire oil region of which Tuxpam is the port.—Reuter's American Service.

Honduras Getting Gay.

Washington, Dec. 29.

The armoured cruiser Rochester has been ordered to Ampala, Honduras, until the situation quietens. The reasons given are, firstly, that Mexican Huertists are reported to be active in Southern Mexico, secondly, reported disturbances in connexion with the recent Honduran Presidential campaign, and, thirdly, that Honduran troops have crossed the Nicaraguan border and committed depredations.—Reuter's American Service.

A Protest from Huerta

Washington, Dec. 31.

The de la Huerta faction has filed with the State Department a formal protest against the sale of war material to President Obregon. The State Department and the War Department continued the discussions with regard to the sale of war material. The exact quantity has not yet been disclosed but apparently it will be confined to rifles, ammunition and aeroplanes, because the sale of cruisers or other men-of-war, even if President Obregon asked for them, would be impossible owing to the Washington Naval Treaty.

Jan. 1.

Opponents of the Government's Mexican policy propose to introduce a resolution in the Lower House on Thursday calling on Congress to investigate the sale of United States arms and ammunition to the Obregon Government. Undoubtedly a sharp debate in the Senate will follow. It is expected that points will be raised that such a rule is illegal and will establish a precedent likely to disturb future peaceful relations between the United States and Latin America.—Reuter's American Service.

Oil Commandeered by Rebels

Mexico City, Jan. 2.

The tanker San Antonio, belonging to the Mexican Eagle Oil Company, has arrived at Tampico after being escorted by a rebel gunboat into Vera Cruz Harbour, where it was relieved of 8,000 barrels of oil for the railways controlled by the revolutionaries. The tankers San Leonardo and Santa Alicia of the same line were also taken to Vera Cruz to provide the rebels with oil, of which they are in great need.—Reuter's American Service.

New York, Jan. 3.

Officials in Washington admit that the Mexican revolutionists have made considerable headway, but express the opinion that the Obregon Government will finally win.

The sale of arms to President Obregon is proceeding. All protests were apparently too late. A fierce debate in Congress is expected.

A British man-of-war has arrived at Puerto Mexico.—Reuter's American Service.

HOPE FOR DIXMUDE NOW GIVEN UP

Officially Reported Lost at Sea: Body of the Commander Alone Recovered

Paris, Dec. 27.

The Ministry of Marine this morning had received no news of the Dixmude.

The Maritime Prefect of Toulon has received news that squadrons of Army aeroplanes have left Tuggurt to reconnoitre the desert.

Later.

A despatch from Algiers states that outposts in mid-Sahara report seeing the Dixmude drifting at Insala towards Hoggar.—Reuter.

London, Dec. 28.

The French dirigible Dixmude (ex-Zeppelin L-72) is now officially reported in Paris to have been lost at sea.

The airship, with a crew of 50, left Toulon a week ago on a cruise over Algeria. It encountered storms, the supply of petrol was exhausted and it drifted helplessly for days.

Later.

The mystery of the Dixmude has not yet been cleared up. The Paris telegram declaring that the airship's loss at sea had been officially announced now appears to be at least premature.

Reuter's correspondent in Paris transmits the text of the Ministry of Marine's communiqué, which does not mention the loss of the airship though it confirms the news of the finding of the body of Lieutenant de Grenadan, the commander of the Dixmude, by a fisherman six miles from the shore near Girgenti.

Reuter's correspondent in Rome adds that a thorough search of the coast was resultless. No trace of any other body or aeronautical material was found.—Reuter.

Paris, Dec. 28.

The Italian authorities state that the body of the commander of the French dirigible airship Dixmude has been picked up by fishermen near Girgenti.

France has accepted Italy's offer to convey Lieutenant de Grenadan's body to Toulon on board an Italian warship.

Dec. 29.

Verisimilitude is lent to the theory that the Dixmude exploded over the Mediterranean by the fact that Lieutenant de Grenadan's watch stopped at 2.50, at which time the stationmaster of Sciacca and other railwaymen stated that they saw a light over the sea like two balloons on fire and falling into the sea.—Reuter.

Tunis, Dec. 29.

The fishermen at Sciacca stated that before discovering the body of the commander of the Dixmude they found two wires in their nets, presumably belonging to the structure of the airship, and also declared that on the night of December 21 inhabitants saw rockets fired to the south of San Marco. Other fishermen found wire in their nets, apparently part of a wireless headpiece.—Reuter.

Deep Sympathy in Britain.

London, Dec. 29.

It seems now to be generally and regretfully assumed that the Dixmude was lost at sea and the report that the airship had been seen by natives over the Sahara is erroneous. French warships have been ordered to search the neighbourhood where the body of the commander was picked up. The theory telegraphed from Paris is that owing possibly to shortage of petrol, the commander, in spite of the dangerous weather and wireless warnings, decided that the best chance lay in trying to reach the home base near Toulon and had almost crossed the Mediterranean when the disaster occurred. It is suggested in some quarters that the airship may have been struck by lightning. The fact that none of the homing pigeons on board returned is regarded as a confirmation of the theory that it was a sudden disaster.

The morning papers deeply sympathize with France and acknowledge that airship navigation has received another serious setback, illustrating the great difficulties and dangers involved, but they declare that this must not lead to abandonment of such pioneer work as represented by the Burney scheme.

The King's Message.

The King has sent a message to President Millerand (expressing the very deep sympathy of the whole Empire in the loss of the gallant crew of the Dixmude. Sir Samuel Hoare and Sir Hugh Trenchard on behalf respectively of the Air Council and the Air Force have sent messages of condolence to the French Minister of Marine and the Chief of the Naval Staff.—Reuter.

Story of Survivors

Paris, Dec. 30.

The "Matin" publishes with all reserve a telegram from Tunis stating that a sailing vessel which has arrived at Sfax reports having seen off Chebba, at a place which she was unable to reach, a raft bearing three men who were supposed to be survivors of the Dixmude. A tug was immediately sent out to investigate.

Later.

It is reported from Tunis that competent authorities deny the existence of the raft which was reported to have been seen off Chebba. No trace has hitherto been discovered of the missing members of the crew of the Dixmude.—Reuter.

DEFEAT OF INDIAN EXTREMISTS

Rejection of Swaraj as Complete Independence: Debate on Asiatic Federation

Cocanada, Dec. 31.

The National Congress to-day overwhelmingly rejected an extremist resolution to define Swaraj as complete independence.

After a lively debate, the National Congress accepted by 775 votes to 205 the Subjects Committee's recommendation to refer to committee the Indian National Pact calling for a federation of Asiatic peoples "for the emancipation of Asia." The Congress declined to treat in a similar way the Bengal Swarajists' Hindu-Moslem pact, which was rejected.

The Council of the Swaraj Party passed a resolution containing demands to be presented to the Government calling for the immediate establishment of a full and responsible Government. As a preliminary to this, the Council suggests that the elected members of the legislatures should demand from the Government the immediate and unconditional release of Mr. Gandhi and all political prisoners, suspension of oppressive laws, and the summoning of a conference of which the elected members of the Legislative Assembly, the Congress and the Government will each elect one-third. This conference will determine the principles of a constitution for India, including a declaration of rights and full control of legislation, administration and the finance services by the Legislatures. The decision of the conference will then be submitted to a new Legislature to be elected on a wider franchise which will finally frame the constitution to be presented to Parliament. The resolution will be considered at a meeting of the Swarajist Members of the Legislature at Lucknow on January 9.—Reuter.

Denial of an Afghan Liaison

Cocanada, Jan. 2.

In a statement before the Committee of the All India Congress to-day, Mr. Shanukat Ali denied that he and his brother, Mr. Mohamed Ali, had acted as agents of the Amir for the purpose of founding a Moslem Empire, in India. He alleged that the Government was at present provoking a fight with Afghanistan and added that, if war were declared, Mussulmans would start civil disobedience. The Ali brothers begged the Hindus to do their utmost to prevent war and suggested that a deputation of Hindus, including Mr. Gandhi, and prominent Mussulmans should visit the frontier and discuss matters with the Afghans.—Reuter.

The National Congress has concluded after deciding to appoint a board for the purpose of popularizing the use of khaddar or homespuns throughout India. The Congress passed a resolution expressing the opinion that the sufferings of Indians abroad cannot be remedied until Swaraj has been achieved.

Mr. Mohamed Ali, in his final speech, dwelt on the prospect of attaining Swaraj during the ensuing year.—Reuter.

The Frontier Murders.

Delhi, Jan. 2.

It is reported from Landak that a Shinwari tribesman concerned in the murder of Major Finnis in Baluchistan has been captured. Four others are still evading the vigilance of the militia.—Reuter.

Suggestion of Republic

Cocanada, Dec. 27.

Presiding at the Indian National Congress, Mr. Mohamed Ali advocated organized non-co-operation. He welcomed the attempt to establish an Eastern federation for understanding among Asiatic peoples. He declared that if Mr. Ghandi were not released within a year to receive the Swaraj charter, they ought to unfurl the flag of the Indian Republic.—Reuter.

PARIS, Dec. 27.—The Greek str. Andros, on board which M. Venizelos will sail on Saturday for Greece, brought to Marseilles a delegation to meet him.—French Wireless through Reuter.

ROME, Dec. 30.—It is announced that the Italian columns in Tripoli have gained three brilliant victories over the rebel Mahallas in the zone between Misurala and Nalut. The rebels left many dead on the field and also considerable booty.—Reuter.

[illegible] of the Government to-day handed to the President of the Inter-Allied Military Control Commission a Note apologizing for the arrest, injury and molestation of three members of the Commission.—Reuter.

The Ruhr Sabotage.

Aix-la-Chapelle, Dec. 29.

The Belgian court martial trying the cases of sabotage on the Regie railways since the occupation of the Ruhr has sentenced Menzel, the principal accused, to penal servitude for life. Five others have been condemned to death in contumaciam. —Reuter.

Improved Finances and Lower Floating Debt Since Use of Rentenmark

Berlin, Dec. 30.

Since November 15 when the Rentenmark was first issued, Germany's floating debt has decreased from 191,600,000,000,000,000,000 paper marks to 96,900,000,000,000,000,000 paper marks. According to [illegible] statement in the Ministry of Finance the indebtedness of the Reich to the Reichsbank may now be regarded as discharged. Since the Reichsbank no longer discounts Treasury bills and the Reich's expenditure and revenue do not yet balance, the Reich is obliged to raise credit from the Rentenbank. This credit on December 20 amounted to 770,000,000 Rentenmarks, apart from 200,000,000 Rentenmarks used to redeem the floating debt. —Reuter.

The Duesseldorf Riots

Duesseldorf, Dec. 27.

The court martial trying the Green Police in connexion with the disturbances in October, arising from the Separatist movement, to-day sentenced Herr Grutzner, the Prefect of Police, to expulsion and 20 years' hard labour. Others were sentenced to varying terms of imprisonment up to 10 years' solitary confinement.—Reuter.

BERLIN TOO COSTLY FOR FOREIGNERS

Germans Flaunt their Affluence in Lavish Festivities: French New Year Forbearance

Berlin, Dec. 31.

There were little signs of Germany's deplorable financial position on the eve of the New Year. The streets were packed with hilarious crowds and the restaurants were filled with people flaunting their affluence and regardless of the high prices. The hotels have arranged festivities on a lavish scale. Ninety per cent. of the guests are Germans, since most foreigners have fled from the city, owing to its expensiveness.

Herr Marx, the Chancellor, in a New Year message to the nation, refers to the steps recently taken by the Government, coupled with those which will be taken shortly in connexion with international differences. In conclusion, the Chancellor hopes that the bulwarks of hate and mistrust which are separating Germany from other nations may be torn down.—Reuter.

Paris, Dec. 31.

In view of the improved conditions in the Ruhr, the Government has authorized General Degoutte to reduce the army of occupation. Troops equivalent to three regiments already have left for home.—Reuter.

[illegible] Jan. 1.—Sir Pelham Warren [illegible]—Reuter.

[illegible] Dec. 28.—An official telegram from Kabul reports that a force of Afghan regulars and tribesmen encountered a band, reported to include the Landi Kotal murderers, near Mkhtanau. There were a number of casualties on both sides. The murderers escaped.—Reuter.

FRANCE'S HOPES FOR FINAL PEACE

President Millerand's New Year's Day Address at the Elysee

Paris, Jan. 2.

The newspapers quote the words spoken by the President of the Republic to the Diplomatic Corps at the New Year reception at the Elysée. "I hope," M. Millerand said, "that this year will be one of reconciliation and final peace; this reconciliation and final peace France desires with all her heart."

The "Temps" declares that the generous words of M. Millerand express exactly the unanimous sentiment of France. At the beginning of 1923 the President of the Republic said that France would no longer allow herself to be deluded and that in order to obtain the execution of the Treaty she would know how to act. France has acted with Belgium. That action has triumphed and faithful to her original idea, France only wishes to make use of the victory to obtain respect for her rights and definitely to establish peace.

The "Journal des Debats" notes that the wishes expressed yesterday show more confidence than those of last year. It has taken an entire year to prove to Germany that she was rebelling in vain against the execution of the Treaties. Still it is not quite certain that Germany is really yielding. — French Wireless through Reuter.

FRANCE'S FINANCIAL STATUS

Fall of Franc Not Justified: Speculators Warned Against Costly Lessons

Paris, Dec. 27.

The "Journal des Debats" says that the Minister of Finance, M. de Lasteyrie, and the reporter of the Senate Finance Committee, M. Beranger, have arrived at the same conclusion, namely, that the fall of the franc is not justified either by an exact appreciation of France's financial status, by chimerical fears of the subject of inflation which France is determined to avoid, by systematic misunderstanding of the work accomplished towards restoration, by France's expenses in the devastated regions, or by the unreasonable contagion of fear which is drawing small speculators into a path at the end of which they will receive a costly lesson as happened to those who, in the opposite manner, believed until the end in the recovery of the mark. The newspapers emphasize particularly the passage in M. de Lasteyrie's speech in which he says: "Our loans are diminishing and France has reimbursed to Spain, America and Japan Frs. 1,100,000,000 at the current exchange.

The Chamber has adopted the bill with regard to increase in rent and has sent it back to the Senate. The Chamber later resumed the question of the fixing of the number of Deputies.

In order to prevent speculation in wheat the Government has decided that the annual decree, given according to the advice of the permanent section of the agricultural council, will fix the minimum and maximum price of wheat, which the Customs duties are intended to protect.—French Wireless through Reuter.

FRENCH ELECTIONS

Living Costs and Financial Matters to be Main Issue

London, Jan. 1.

The fact that M. Poincare, on the sole occasion when he was forced to intervene in a debate outside his chosen sphere of foreign politics, received a rebuff in the Chamber of Deputies, namely, on December 21, on the decision to refer to committee the Public Servants Pay Bill, lends interest to the forthcoming elections in France, in which the cost of living, depreciation of the franc and the financial policy of France will generally be the main issue. It is noteworthy that the Chamber has just passed a Bill reducing the number of Deputies from 626 to 577, in spite of Government opposition. The agricultural districts will have 57 fewer Deputies and the industrial districts eight more as the result of the redistribution.—Reuter.

FRENCH COLONIAL DEVELOPMENT

Big Efforts to Secure Independent Wool and Cotton Supplies

Paris, Jan. 1.

M. Loucheur, in a speech on the Colonial policy of France, deprecated the dependence of France on Britain and the United States for wool and cotton. He declared that it was undoubtedly possible for the French colonies to furnish France her supplies of wool and cotton. The Ministry of the Colonies recently appealed directly to those interested. The Tourcoing Chamber of Commerce had sent Merino sheep to Madagascar, where, after a rainy season, it would be possible to say if they were becoming acclimatized. Similar experiments were being tried in the valley of the Niger and also in Morocco. M. Loucheur estimated that in ten years France would be largely independent of foreign wool imports.

The question of cotton production was more difficult. A vast programme of irrigation between the Niger and the Oubangus was being studied, but it must be years before it could be realized. Irrigation had been undertaken south of Timbuctoo, Over 3,500 acres of cotton were already being cultivated and the first results were excellent. The Ministry was negotiating with the manufacturers of France in connexion with the development of cotton-growing in Dahomey, the Ivory Coast and Guinea, where eventually two-thirds of France's requirements might be produced.—Reuter.

THE LITTLE ENTENTE'S FRENCH LOANS

Great Britain's Inquiry: An Alliance Dividing Europe

Paris, Dec. 27.

As an outcome of President Masaryk's visit to France in October, a treaty has been drafted between France and Czecho-Slovakia providing for close co-operation in political, economic and military spheres, and especially aiming at maintenance of the new status of Europe under the Peace Treaties. The treaty will be signed in a few weeks' time.—Reuter.

Paris, Dec. 28.

That the alliance between France and Czecho-Slovakia may eventually prove a bridge between Paris and Moscow is the opinion of a number of French newspapers which declare that Dr. Benes, in the course of the negotiations, expressed the opinion that as Soviet Russia would shortly be recognized by a British Labour Government, France and Czecho-Slovakia might immediately do likewise.—Reuter.

London, Dec. 31.

Reuter understands that the British Government has been inquiring of the Little Entente Governments how far the liens to which Poland, Yugo-Slavia and Rumania are subject, as succession States, are likely to be affected by the loans recently concluded between them and the French Government.

Surprise is expressed in diplomatic circles in London that Czecho-Slovakia has become involved in an entangling alliance with France which is bound eventually to lead to a division of Europe into two armed camps with Britain and Scandinavia looking on.

Italian opinion is most perturbed about the alliance, which will mean consolidation of the Little Entente and will possibly obstruct the projected Italo-Russian Entente.

France's loans to Poland, Yugo-Slavia and Rumania have received much attention in the French newspapers, which believe that Britain is about to take action on the matter.

The "Temps" asserts that Britain means to raise the whole question of inter-Allied debts and contends that the fact that the Little Entente nations must arm themselves in self-defence does not prove that they are able to pay old debts.

The "Journal" contends that France's loans are purely Treasury operations serving a general interest.

The "Homme Libre" says that if the Little Entente is compelled to arm, it is solely because of the British Government's policy of blindness.—Reuter.

AMERICA'S RECORD PROSPERITY

Production, Expenditure and Savings all Larger: Debt £232,000,000 Lower

New York, Jan. 1.

America is ringing out the old year with peals of jubilation over the prosperity of the country.

Mr. Herbert Hoover, the Secretary of Commerce, agrees with the conclusion of the Federal Reserve Board that "the American people produced more, spent more and saved more in 1923 than in 1922. Their consuming power is still increasing. The New Year promises to be one of full employment at high wages."

Though the nation purchased most of its enormous output of motorcars, the bank balances of depositors show that this failed to stem the rising tide of savings. Except for the wheat-growers, Mr. Hoover suggests that America can maintain her prosperity in spite of the state of Europe. The trade balance in favour of the United States in 1923 was roughly £70,000,000, which was paid by the importation of about £60,000,000 in gold and silver. The National Debt was reduced during the year by £232,000,000.

Mr. Hoover declares: "Taking the country as a whole, we have never in history enjoyed a higher standard of living and comfort, nor so great a degree of commercial efficiency as to-day." He holds that the world situation is hopeful in view of the initiation of negotiations for settlement of the German problem.

All great cities of America are celebrating the passing of 1923 regardless of expense. New York hotels and restaurants sold seats to 50,000 diners at an average of two guineas per cover.—Reuter's American Service.

Official Predictions.

Washington, Jan. 1.

The President and several members of the Cabinet welcomed the New Year with words of high promise.

President Coolidge, in his message to the nation, said: "The nation has made a record of gratifying accomplishment. There is every reason to believe that advancement will continue in the coming months."

Mr. Andrew Mellon, the Secretary of the Treasury, in a statement, said that he looked with confidence to a prosperous 1924. "I am convinced that, if the tax reduction proposals are enacted and the sound policy of retrenchment and expenditure is continued, the coming year will witness a steady improvement in the favourable conditions which have already begun to make themselves felt."

Mr. Hoover, the Secretary of Commerce, in a message, sees a hopeful foundation for the New Year in the high degree of economic recovery of America, Asia and Africa and the undoubted progress of Russia, the Balkans and the Near East. He said that the economic world had not yet felt the full impact of the occupation of the Ruhr.

During 1923, Government receipts totalled $4,164,000,000 about $500,000,000 more than the previous year. Expenditure was $3,888,000,000, leaving a net balance of $276,000,000.—Reuter's American Service.

New York, Jan. 1.

It is estimated that nearly 10,000 people lined up outside the White House this morning and that President Coolidge, who looked very well and cheerful, was shaking hands, according to the New Year custom, for five hours continuously.—Reuter's American Service.

ITALIAN CAMPAIGN IN TRIPOLI

Arabs Severely Defeated by Punitive Expedition: War Materials Seized

Rome, Dec. 29.

Considerable fighting is reported from Tripoli, where Italian white and native troops have been engaged in a punitive expedition against Arab rebel chiefs. The latter had made their headquarters at Benuilid, some 250 miles inland from Tripoli. About 4,000 soldiers were employed in this operation, which was crowned with complete success. The rebel forces were broken, their strongholds captured and a considerable amount of war materials seized. Fascisti volunteer militia were here employed in warfare for the first time, and an official communiqué makes special mention of their bravery under fire and in trying conditions.

Operations were begun on December 15, when five columns set out for the interior, two for Misurata, two for Zliten and one for Garian. These five columns advanced by different routes through a trackless desert, encountering natural difficulties of all kinds, chief among which was scarcity of water. Running fights were carried on against flying detachments of mounted Arabs, who harassed the columns and threatened to cut their communications continually throughout the long journey.

After upwards of six hours' fighting, when contact was made with the rebel main body, the Arabs fled, leaving many dead and wounded on the field and abandoning much rich booty.

Several Prisoners Rescued.

In Benuilid several Italian prisoners, who had been captured by the Arabs several years before, were set free. Among the prisoners there was also a "globe trotter" whose name suggests that he is either American or British, though this cannot yet be said with certainty, as no further description of him is given in the reports from Tripoli.

Italian Losses Slight.

The Italian losses during the whole operations were very slight. Up to the present only one officer and 16 men are reported to have been killed, and two officers and about 100 men wounded. The booty includes six field guns, five machine guns, several hundreds of rifles, thousands of rounds of ammunition and several scores of horses and camels. To the Italian losses must be added many who fell out on the way owing to sickness. Such cases were specially numerous in one of the columns which encountered such cold that water froze in the barrels in which it was being transported. The difficulties of transportation were so great that 7,200 camels and mules were required to carry supplies for this relatively small body of men.—Italian Wireless through Reuter.

Brussels, Dec. 29.—King Albert through the Japanese Ambassador has congratulated Crown Prince Hirohito on his escape.—Reuter.

tute discrimination against a friendly nation.

The proposed new immigration law contemplates restricting immigration to two per cent. of the number of each country's nationals resident in the United States in 1890 instead of the present law of three per cent. of those residing in the United States in 1910. The proposed measure will bear very heavily on the South European countries whose nationals formed a smaller proportion of the population in 1890 than in 1910.

Mr. James J. Davis, the Secretary of Labour, recommends selection of immigrants at the port of embarcation with special reference to the economic needs of the United States and to exclude all who are unable to become citizens under American laws before sailing.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

DEATH OF BUILDER OF THE EIFFEL TOWER

Paris, Dec. 28.

The death is announced of M. Eiffel, constructor of the Eiffel Tower.

M. Alexandre Gustave Eiffel was born in 1832. He built the Eiffel Tower in 1889, and the bridge over the Douro, the Viaduct of Garabit and the Aerodynamic Laboratory at Auteuil.

M. Eiffel was formerly President of the Civil Engineers of France Society and was an honorary member of the Mechanical Engineers' Institution of London.—Reuter.

Acquittal of Germaine Berthon

Paris, Dec. 27.

The acquittal of the anarchist girl, Germaine Berthon, is hailed by the Communist press as a victory for the Republic, a blow at Fascism in France and vengeance for the death of M. Jaures. On the other hand "L'Action Francaise" denounces the verdict as a crime, while the majority of the moderate journals deplore the result of the trial. It is noteworthy that the Advocate-General, after claiming the full penalty of the law without extenuating circumstances, recalled that M. Plateau was a Christian and would have pleaded extenuating circumstances, as did his bereaved mother. The Advocate-General associated himself with that plea. —Reuter.

Indian Frontier Murder

Allahabad, Dec. 29.

Captain Standen, of the 2nd/9th Jats was shot dead, on December 22 at Jandola in Waziristan by a sepoy who ran amok.—Reuter.

Victims of Bolshevism

Riga, Dec. 28.

It is reported that the Khan of Khiva has died in a Bolshevist internment camp.—Reuter.

The Fire on the Moldavia

Fremantle, Dec. 27.

The fire on the Moldavia has been extinguished. No. 3 Hold is being pumped out. A portion of the cargo will be landed. The hull is apparently not damaged.—Reuter.

The Pope's Authority

Rome, Dec. 28.

With regard to the conferences at Malines, a high prelate at the Vatican declared that an agreement was difficult in view of the wide differences. The Vatican itself preferred to keep out of any conversations aiming at reunion unless the Anglicans really wanted more than simple friendship between the Churches and were willing to recognize the supreme religious authority of the Pope.—Reuter.

Trotzky's Resignation

Riga, Dec. 28.

It is persistently rumoured that M. Trotzky has tendered his resignation from membership of the Communist Central Committee in consequence of his colleagues' attacks. It is added that, although his resignation has not been accepted, M. Trotzky refuses to withdraw it.—Reuter.

Court-Martial on U. S. Naval Officers

Washington, Dec. 2.

The naval court-martial to-day passed sentence on Capt. Watson and Lieut. Hunter, commanders of the destroyer squadron which crashed on the rocks on the Californian coast several months ago. Captain Watson has been reduced 150 numbers in the promotion list and Lieutenant Hunter 100 numbers.—Reuter's American Service.

Honduran Debt to be Liquidated

Tegucigalpa, Dec. 27.

The Honduran Government has signed an agreement for payment of the Honduran debt on a basis of £20,000 for each £100,000 bonds issued between 1867 and 1870. Loans totalling £5,398,570 were contracted during that period for the purpose of building a transoceanic railway, but the scheme failed. No interest has been paid since 1872.—Reuter's American Service.

British-Brazilian Finance

Rio de Janeiro, Dec. 31.

The British financial Mission, including Mr. E. S. Montagu and Sir Charles Addis, has arrived. It will confer with the Brazilian Government with regard to economic questions connected with the investment of British capital in Brazil.—Reuter.

Sugar Production in England

London, Dec. 29.

The intention to embark on an important scheme of sugar production in England was announced at a representative meeting today of agriculturists at Nottingham.

The Chairman stated that four big shipowners had agreed to find the capital of the company, which was erecting a factory at Colwick with a view to cultivating 5,000 acres in 1924 and 100,000 acres in 1925.—Reuter.

Prohibitionists Disappointed

New York, Dec. 29.

It is understood that proceedings have been dropped against the Englishman arrested in connexion with rum-running on December 24. New York prohibition officials believed that this arrest would lead to the discovery of a very large rum-running conspiracy as documents were found which were thought to contain the names of bootleggers in every part of the country. —Reuter's American Service.

Steamship Company's Troubles

New York, Jan. 1.

The United States District Court to-day appointed a receiver for the New York and Cuba Mail Steamship Line, better known as the Ward Line, plying between New York, the West Indies and Central America. The firm's liabilities are estimated at $2,000,000. The assets are said to exceed liabilities, but owing to abnormal shipping conditions throughout the world the line, according to the complaint of the petitioning creditors, lacks funds to meet outstanding obligations and floating indebtedness.—Reuter's American Service.

Anglo-American Engineering Enterprise

London, Dec. 29.

A new Anglo-American engineering company has been formed at Barrow which will specialize in designing, building and equipping complete power plants. The capital of £500,000 is being provided equally by Vickers Ld., and the International Engineering Corporation of New York.—Reuter.

Soviet Press Censorship

Riga, Dec. 27.

Alarmed by the excitement arising from the publication of Opposition articles in the "Pravda" the Political Bureau has authorized M. Zinovieff to examine copy before publication. —Reuter.

The Dutch Cabinet

The Hague, Dec. 31.

The leaders of the Right parties of the Second Chamber, MM. Nolens, Rutgers and Schokking, have asked the Queen's permission to decline the task of forming a Cabinet.—Reuter.

Reciprocal Copyright

Washington, Jan. 1.

The United States and Canada have agreed to a reciprocal copyright arrangement which will come into effect to-morrow. Citizens of the United States may obtain copyrights in Canada under Canadian copyright law and Canadians vice versa.—Reuter's American Service.

Destructive Avalanches

Geneva, Jan. 1.

In consequence of the heavy snowfall, Switzerland is experiencing the biggest avalanches for a century. Five persons have been killed and 28 injured in five days. Sixty buildings have been destroyed, many forests swept away, large numbers of cattle killed and communications interrupted.—Reuter.

Tinplate Combination

London, Jan. 1.

It is reported from Swansea that a combination variously estimated as representing 40 to 60 per cent. of the tinplate industry is being completed. It is proposed to amalgamate several merchant firms to form a central selling agency for the whole output of the works controlled by Messrs. Richard Thomas & Co. and of the Grovesend Tinplate Company recently acquired by Richard Thomas & Co. It is understood that it is proposed to register a new company with a capital of £1,000,000 to handle the output of nearly 230 mills.—Reuter.

Resignation of Greek Government

Athens, Jan. 2.

In the National Assembly to-day Colonel Gonatas, the Prime Minister, announced the resignation of the Government.—Reuter.

Smuggled Japanese in Australia

Melbourne, Dec. 31.

The Federal authorities captured two luggers which landed six Japanese in Queensland. The magistrates ordered the men's deportation as prohibited immigrants and sentenced the Japanese captain to six months' imprisonment and the first and second mates to a month's imprisonment. Reuter.

SATURDAY'S TELEGRAMS

LABOUR PARTY AND THE CROWN

Combination of Other Forces to Check a Socialist Administration

London, Jan. 3.

In a speech at Tamworth to-day dealing with Mr. Asquith's contention that the Crown could refuse Mr. Ramsay Macdonald the authority to dissolve Parliament, Mr. Frank Hodges declared that Labour believed that it could consummate a programme through the British Constitution.

He believes that the Crown will not impede democratic aspirations, but if back-stair influence shatters that belief, then it will be goodbye to political evolution and we should drift on to the rapids of revolution.

In conclusion Mr. Hodges said that the Labour Party had profound faith in the impartiality of the King which no political intrigue should be permitted to destroy.—Reuter.

BRITAIN'S NATIONAL DEBT

London, Jan. 4.

Treasury figures show that the aggregate national debt on March 31 was £7,842,000,000, an increase of £100,000,000 as compared with a year earlier, attributable to capitalization of arrears of interest due to the United States and to an increase in the nominal debt through conversion operations.—Reuter.

EUROPE DIVIDED IN ARMED CAMPS

French Alliance with Czechs Defended in Paris: League to Counter Germanism

Paris, Jan. 3.

The apprehensions of the British and Italian press that the Treaty between France and Czecho-Slovakia will ultimately divide Europe into two armed camps have evoked replies from the French press.

"Le Journal" envisages as a result of the Treaty a new Europe based on the Franco-Belgian and Little Entente alliances and improved relations between Poland and the Baltic States. The paper says that the coming conference in Belgrade and the Esthonian and Latvian Customs Union are steps in the same direction. "Le Journal" is of the opinion that the logical outcome of the new situation will be moves in the direction of Russia.

The "Echo de Paris" declares that the aim of France to organize the Continent against any attempt at hegemony will be achieved if the small States in East and Central Europe consolidate permanently outside Germanism.—Reuter.

Bulgar-Serbian Tension.

Sofia, Jan. 2.

The Yugo-Slav Minister, M. Rakitch, has left for Belgrade taking the full text of the speech by the Premier, M. Zaukoff, on December 30, which caused anxiety in Serbia as M. Zankoff expressed desire for a reversion to the system of conscription in Bulgaria. It is hoped that M. Rakitch, who is a strong supporter of friendship between Serbia and Bulgaria, will succeed in clearing up the misunderstanding. Reuter.

 This speech dwelt on Bulgaria's absolute need to possess an army again—Ed.

THE RUHR TRADE

French Claims to Be Carrying through the Bulk of Export Programme

Certain German newepapers have alleged that the agreements reached between the German industrialists and the M.I.C.U.M. cannot be executed owing to the inability of the Franco-Belgian Railway Regie to restore normal railway traffic in the occupied territories. It is stated, however, that the programme laid down for the loading and despatch of fuel by land and water for the period between December 23 and 30 was 263,800 tons. In spite of abundant falls of snow and the cessation of traffic on the Rhine and in spite of frost, 203,331 tons were loaded, namely, 99.75 per cent. of the programme laid down. The exports to France, Belgium and Italy for the month of December amounted to 1,300,000 tons of fuel for reparations, 70.20 per cent. of this tonnage being loaded and despatched. The programme for general traffic for the period between December 23 and 30, including reparations coal, provided for the loading of 114,200 tons per working day. A total of 101,000 tons was loaded per day, namely 602,510 tons in the week, representing 87 per cent. of the programme laid down.

The deficit of 13 per cent. on the provisions of the programme was due in great part to the difficulties raised by the administration of the Imperial Railways in the Cologne district. As the "Koelner Tageblatt" realizes, the Administration of the Reich Railways has no right to continue longer to the detriment of Rhineland interests and principally those of Cologne, the struggle in which it has engaged with the Regie on the question of prestige.—French Wireless through Reuter.

VENIZELOS IN GREECE

But Not to Stay: Only Until Country's Emergency Is Satisfactorily Met

Athens, Jan. 4.

M. Venizelos arrived yesterday, Colonel Plastiras and other officers went out to meet the steamer. M. Venizelos declared that he did not intend to remain long in Greece, but he would endeavour to help the country out of its present difficulties.—Reuter.

FATAL EXPLOSION IN ILLINOIS

Corn Products Factory Blown up: Many Killed, Wounded and Missing

Peoria, Ill., Jan. 3.

A terrific explosion believed to be due to ignition of dust in a corn products factory in the neighbouring town of Peking resulted in many persons being killed and injured. The explosion was followed by a fire which spread to the adjoining buildings and burned fiercely, preventing access. Eighty persons have already been taken to hospital.

Seventy-six persons were employed on the night-shift in the building where the explosion occurred. Hitherto only 28 are known to have escaped. The physicians fear that many of those in hospital will succumb to severe burns. Survivors say that there were two explosions in rapid succession, the second being the more severe.—Reuter's American Service.

Peking, Ill., Jan. 3.

The corn products company states that the casualties in the explosion were 35 dead and six missing. Eleven are probably fatally burned and 31 others are injured.—Reuter's American Service.

U. S. NATIONAL DEBT

Reduction of Nearly 4,000 Million Dollars

Washington, Jan. 4.

The United States Government debt on January 1 totalled $21,589,160,000, a reduction of $3,889,431,000 since the peak date, September 30, 1919, and a reduction during 1923 of $859,206,000. Reuter's American Service.

SHIPPING REVIEW OF PAST YEAR

Increased Cost of New Ships but Decreased Prices for Second-hand Tonnage

London, Dec. 27.

The annual report of the ship-brokers of the Australian Commonwealth Line, Messrs. Turner, [illegible] for that [illegible] prices for second-hand tonnage [illegible] coast 10 a ton, chiefly owing to [illegible]

[illegible] breaking up market has been the [illegible] Germany, Italy and Holland being the principal buyers.

British and foreign tonnage totalling 755,101 tons was laid up in the United Kingdom up to the quarter ending October 1. Of this 727,134 tons was British-owned, an increase of 45,999 tons as compared with that on July 1.

The outstanding auction of the year, in which four 8,000 ton vessels built at Hongkong were acquired by British shipowners for £155,000, with two 5,100 ton ships, built at Shanghai, for £96,000 each, showed a loss which must have been considerably over £1,000,000.

The earthquake in Japan resulted in a demand for second-hand tonnage up to 9,000 tons and a large number of boats found to and in Eastern waters [illegible]. Reuter.

A PAGEANT OF EMPIRE

Prince of Wales's Suggestion: Great Display to Be Held in Wembley Park

Arising from the suggestion of the Prince of Wales, steps are being taken to organize a pageant of the Empire at Wembley.

A special meeting of representatives of the Dominions was held at the War Office to-day when a preliminary discussion was held regarding the form of the pageant.

It is understood that special features suggested comprise early explorers, the glories of the Elizabethan period, Blake's exploits, the development of transport, the history of India, the early settlement of Canada and Australasia, missionary enterprise, [illegible] discovery of South Africa and the development of sport, etc.

Another feature which is being organized is a demonstration of rough riding in the Stadium.

The [illegible] will shortly make a tour of the Dominions and also the Sudan to obtain a characteristic exhibition from each. Reuter.

GOAT GLANDS AND RENEWED YOUTH

Austrian Scientist's Belief in Future Construction of Men Like Engines

Vienna, Nov. 14.

M. Max Thorek, the scientist who has become famous for his experiments in transplanting animal eyes, is also an expert in transplanting glands. But in a recent lecture he has discouraged the idea that the old may be made young again without fail.

He says it is sometimes possible not to improve the physical condition of persons who become aged before their time, and declared that his experiments with [illegible] and ox have proved that it may be possible some day to construct men on the new lines that engines and motor cars. Reuter.

Paris, Nov. 15.

So great has become the demand for chimpanzees, wanted for the operation of grafting and for purposes of scientific experimentation, that the Governor-General of French West Africa has prohibited the capture, keeping, buying or selling and export of the animals throughout the colony.

Chimpanzees, the animal nearest to man, have been particularly useful for experiments with the [illegible] and for this reason they were taken to Europe, but they rapidly succumbed to the rigours of the unaccustomed climate.—Reuter.

BLACK SEA TRAGEDY

Big American Freighter Lost with all Hands in Violent Gale

[illegible] damaged shipping in Turkish waters, particularly in the Black Sea where the big American cargo boat, Conejos, with a cargo of manganese ore from Batum foundered with all hands. A wireless message was picked up by the British steamer, Molesey, which said: "The Conejos is sinking fast. Hold No. 1 is full of water and the bow is awash. Have received no response to calls for help."—Reuter's American Service.

WIRELESS WONDERS

A Week of Amazing Achievements: Widely Successful Broadcasting

London, Dec. 28.

Wireless listeners in London equipped with only simply crystal sets to-night were delighted to hear quite clearly operatic selections, organ and pianoforte solos and a series of addresses broadcast from the Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, station as the result of successful picking up on high ground outside the metropolis and retransmission from the London broadcasting station.—Reuter.

London, Dec. 31.

The fact that Middelburg, Cape Province, heard the London broadcasting concert on Saturday evening and Sunday morning is hailed by the papers in London as the most amazing achievement in a week of wireless wonders. It is pointed out that, as transmission of the concert from Pittsburg which was heard in London began at 11.45 p.m., South Africa must have heard Pittsburg via London. Concerts and speeches broadcasted by Paris were successfully heard in London yesterday evening, which is encouraging broadcasters to continue experiments aiming at substitution of wireless for land lines which are at present used simultaneously with broadcasting programmes.—Reuter.

Montreal, Jan. 1.

It is announced that the Canadian National Railways are arranging to equip their trans-Continental trains with wireless receiving sets and to establish broadcasting stations.—Reuter.

London, Jan. 1.

Broadcasting from Glasgow has been heard at Flandreau, South Dakota, 4,700 miles away, and also at Minneapolis. Reuter.

RUBBER FOOTWEAR

The New Fashion Thought to Create Useful Demand

London, Dec. 30.

There appears, says the financial editor of the Observer, to be an outlet for a further very considerable quantity of crêpe rubber as soles for every kind of footwear. That use for this purpose is progressing is shown by the fact that one Mincing Lane broker sells over 1,000 tons weekly solely for footwear while another ships 10 to 12 tons weekly to the United States for the same purpose. It is understood that the boot and shoe trade is taking great interest in the product.

As a paying proposition plantation crêpe rubber is proving very popular in South Africa, while applications come daily from Australia for agencies, and the special department of the Rubbergrowers' Association dealing with crêpe rubber is inundated with inquires from Continental cities. The British War Office recently ordered 40,000 pairs of Army rest shoes with crêpe soles. It is understood that a larger contract will be placed shortly.—Reuter.

PROPOSED AIR FLIGHT TO NORTH POLE

Disagreement Between Experts: Comdr. McCrary's Proposed Dash from Alaska

Washington, Jan. 2.

Various rumours are afloat in connexion with the visit of Commander McCrary, the commander of the airship, Shenandoah, to confer with Government officials with regard to the proposed flight to the North Pole next summer.

For example, it is reported that Commander McCrary has disgreed with Herr Heinen, the German air expert, and also with Mr. Weyerbacher, the American constructor, both of whom favour a flight to the Pole.

It is understood that Commander McCrary prefers to sail along the Pacific Coast and anchor at Alaska where he will prepare for the final dash.—Reuter's American Service.

AUTOMATIC STEERING

New Invention to be Tested on World Cruise

London, Dec. 29.

The Cunard liner Laconia leaves New York on January 15 on a world cruise to demonstrate the possibilities of the automatic Sperry gyro steerer, with which she recently successfully accomplished a trans-Atlantic voyage.

She will proceed via the Panama Canal, calling, amongst other places, at Yokohama, Shanghai, Hongkong, Batavia, Singapore, Rangoon, Calcutta, Colombo and Bombay.—Reuter.

U. S. MERCHANT MARINE

Government Schemes to Stimulate Activity

Washington, Dec. 28.

In response to President Coolidge's request, Senator Jones, Chairman of the Senate Commerce Committee, has recommended to the President extension of the United States Coastwise Shipping Laws to the Philippines, separation of the Emergency Fleet Corporation from the United States Shipping Board, compulsory co-operation between American railways and shipping, and also a survey of needs for a permanent American merchant marine.

Senator Jones denied ever having expressed the opinion that extension of the Shipping Laws to the Philippines would contravene existing treaties.—Reuter's American Service.

THE U. S. NAVY

Test Manoeuvres Ordered

Washington, Jan. 2.

Mr. Edwin Denby, the Secretary of the Navy, has ordered the mobilization of the Atlantic and Pacific Fleets and has scheduled the largest manoeuvres ever held for January and February, including 15 battleships. The manoeuvres will be held in the Caribbean Sea off Panama to determine the possibility of quick mobilization of the joint fleets by means of the Panama Canal in the event of a threat by an enemy fleet in the North Atlantic. The Navy Department says that the aim is to test the effectiveness of co-operation of the Army and Navy to keep the Canal open in emergency conditions.—Reuter's American Service.

SIR A. GEDDES RETIRING

British Embassy in U. S. Filled by Sir Esme Howard

London, Dec. 29.

The Foreign Office announces that Sir Auckland Geddes has resigned as his doctors have advised him that the state of his eyes does not permit immediate resumption of work in Washington. Consequently Sir Esme Howard, the Ambassador to Spain, has been appointed Ambassador to the United States, and Sir Horace Rumbold Ambassador at Madrid.

It is understood that pending Sir Esme Howard's arrival Sir Auckland Geddes will return on a brief visit to Washington to make the necessary arrangements for his departure and to bid farewell to his numerous friends. Reuter.

London, Jan. 2.

Sir Auckland Geddes left for New York on board the Majestic to-day to clear up affairs and to bid farewell to his friends in the United States.

Sir Robert Horne also left for New York this morning on a five weeks' business trip.—Reuter.

THE U. S. AMBASSADOR TO LONDON

Arrival of Mr Kellog

London, Dec. 30.

Mr. Kellog, the United States Ambassador in London, arrived at Plymouth to-day on board the President Harding. He was welcomed by the Mayor of Plymouth and Vice-Admiral Sir Richard Phillimore, the Commander-in-Chief.

In an interview Mr. Kellog said that the economic and political chaos existing in many parts demanded very tolerant and broadminded statesmanship especially of the Great Powers. He believed that relations between Britain and the United States would grow more friendly as time went on. He would do his best towards this end.—Reuter's American Service.

AMERICAN LABOUR BANKS

Trade Unions Preferring to Handle Their Own Capital

New York, Dec. 31.

An interesting industrial development is the rush of American labour unions to establish banks and to furnish their own capital.

Two labour banks have been established in New York in the last nine months and two more will start business in January. Twenty others have already been founded elsewhere in America and 20 more are about to open.—Reuter's American Service.

IRELAND'S ARMY

Reorganization Proposals

Dublin, Dec. 30.

It is announced that the Free State Government has decided to reorganize the army, taking the French Army as a model. The Ministry of Finance has decided that military expenditure must be limited to £4,000,000 and the result of the reorganization will be a standing army of about 20,000.

A special training college will be established with a view to expansion in case of emergency.

The heavy demobilizations which have already occurred, combined with the release of over 10,000 prisoners, are likely to put a severe strain on the labour market but this will be met to some extent by the proposal of the Dail to grant immediately £2,000,000 for emergency works, chiefly on roads. Reuter.

DUNLOP RUBBER CO. SENSATION

Issue of Writs Against President and Several Directors

London, Dec. 31.

As an outcome of a special committee's inquiries during the past 18 months into the position of the company as disclosed by the balance sheet of 1921, a sensational circular has been distributed to the shareholders of the Dunlop Rubber Co., calling an extraordinary meeting for January 8 to endorse the action of the directorate in issuing writs against the President and also a number of past and present directors of the company.

The circular states that Sir Arthur Du Cros, the President, has issued a writ against the company asking for a declaration that the agreement under which he has been drawing a salary of £12,000 a year, tax free, is binding upon the company. Mr. Alfred Du Cros and Mr. George Du Cros have also instituted actions in respect of their agreements. The company is defending all three actions.

The present position of the directors of the company is that only five of them, Sir Eric Geddes, Sir George Beharenell, Sir Guy Granet, Mr. Szarvasy and Mr. Tait, are, in the opinion of the company's counsel, entirely unaffected by the report of the inspectors. Some past and present directors, against whom, as the result of the findings of the report, the counsel has advised that writs should be issued, have made proposals for a settlement. The directorate encourage the settlement of all cases, considering it to be in the best interests of the shareholders that, as far as possible the claims of the company should be adjusted by negotiation rather than by litigation. Settlements will be rendered more difficult if the report is published. Therefore, the directorate ask the shareholders to leave these grave matters in their hands. The reorganization carried out will amply safeguard the interests of the shareholders, who are invited to pass a resolution of confidence at the meeting on January 8.

An appended circular is a statement showing the company's profit for the 18 months ended December 31, which is estimated at over £1,250,000.—Reuter.

SERIOUS FLOOD IN PARIS

Seine Overflowing its Banks

Paris, Jan. 2.

The Seine has risen to six metres above normal and is still rising. It has reached the disastrous flood level of 1910. The capital is already beginning to flood, necessitating the closing of the D'Orsay and Invalides stations. The situation in a number of suburbs is serious. Families have been driven from their homes. Provisions are being distributed by boats, notably in Rueil, where rafts have replaced tramcars.—Reuter.

Paris, Jan. 2.

Owing to the precautions taken, the rise of the Seine is not causing serious apprehension. Yet it is expected that at the end of the week there will be a depth of seven metres at the Pont d'Austerlitz. Flooding of the cellars of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs has necessitated the operation of pumps. In the suburbs some houses have had to be vacated. Boats are maintaining communications.—French Wireless through Reuter.

ITALIAN IMMIGRATION IN AMERICA

Washington, Jan. 2.

Italy has made representations opposing the Immigration Bill now under consideration by the Immigration Committee, contending that further limitation of Italian immigration on the basis of the 1890 census would consti-over administration of the Oriental freight and passenger business of the Admiral-Oriental Line which has been administered by the Pacific Steamship Company.

China was represented at the three-day convention of the Pacific Foreign Trade Council held at Portland. The China Club of Seattle was in charge of the luncheon and staged a programme of songs and dances by Chinese girls and a motion picture showing the engineering feats of straightening the Yellow River in China. Miss A. Viola Smith, assistant trade commissioner at Shanghai, was one of the speakers.

PROTECTION IN BELGIUM

No Out-of-Work Problem

The Antwerp correspondent of the "Morning Post" writes:—

A Sabbatical calm that rounds off a compulsory eight-hours' working day which prevails here, and is the culmination of the British saint honoured on the Continent under the title of the Demain Anglais, is brooding over Antwerp. Officials, business men, and all others who can manage it have left town for the week-end after packing away the dry bones of statistical information secure in their office pigeonholes. So that I must wait until I reach Brussels to-morrow before attempting to present an official statement of trade and trade conditions as they exist behind the Belgian tariff wall.

For the problem now confronting Great Britain, Belgium, as a noted economist said to me to day, is a country well worth studying. Like England, Belgium is incapable of attempting to grow her own foodstuffs, and, like England again, she has an important export trade, consisting chiefly of worked iron, though recently she has been building up a notable radium industry that has reduced the price of radium salts on the market by 50 per cent.

"Belgium," the economist continued, "is suffering with other countries in the general slump in trade, and were it not for the protection afforded us by our tariff, I feel convinced that we should have an out-of-work problem to face comparable with that which has prevailed in England, but infinitely more serious politically, because there would not be the same sense of discipline as in Britain. Our leading economists, who regard Free Trade as the ideal, recognize that it would be an admirable solution if each country developed that branch of industry for which it is best suited, but we recognize that the epoch has not yet arrived when the lion lies down with the lamb, and we know that we are living in a world of reality.

FRANCE'S EXPERIENCE.

"There was a time when France was not only a believer in Free Trade but also practised it. She realized, however, that her policy was against her national interests, and she abandoned Free Trade for Protection, with the result that French commercial ships have a great advantage in French ports. What we can say definitely here, is that under a system of Protection, despite trade conditions that are universally adverse, we are free of the problem of unemployment. Owing to the German occupation we know what that problem means. Apart from the crushing cost to the State it results, as we found, in creating an incapacity for work that is permanently disabling to the nation. And this has obviously to be avoided at all costs."

The suggestion that a tariff of itself must tend to discourage enterprise and to raise prices is peculiarly well illustrated in the opposite direction by the case of Antwerp. The port has had many vicissitudes, and has been on more than one occasion the sport of international politics, but in recent years, despite the world condition, its rate of development has been significant. In 1913 the tonnage of boats entering and leaving Antwerp amounted to a total of some 13,000,000. By 1921 the pre-war position had barely been regained, with a total of 12,000,000. Last year it had been surpassed, with 15,000,000, and this year it is anticipated that between 18 and 20 million tons of shipping will have used the port. The repairing trade has also been a factor of prime importance that has greatly contributed to the well-being of the port.

A NEW INDUSTRY.

Another industry, a new one, established on the outskirts of Antwerp, is that of the extraction of radium ore. The deposits of the ore were found in the Belgian Congo, and these are now coming into Antwerp to be extracted in the huge works nearby. The output will in the current 12 months have totalled some 50 grammes, with the result that independently of Protection a virtual national monopoly has been established for Belgium. The result has not been a limitation of output destined to keep up the price, but a widespread distribution of radium has brought the cost down by 50 per cent.

GAMBLING

The Two-up Schools: Clergyman's Visits

At an inter-Church discussion on gambling held in the Lithgow Methodist Church, Australia, the Rev. Professor M'Intyre opened the discussion. He said that in Australia gambling was the worst evil, not drink. Taking the Australian in general, he was a remarkably sober man compared with the populations of some countries, but gambling seemed to have got into the bones of the Australian people. It had attained such dimensions that many seemed to think all they could do was to accept it as a fact. There was no evil, however great, which the Church should accept as a permanent condition of things. There was a strenuous time in front of the nations, and the world was only going to be saved by those who believed in honest work. There was no hope for a community which hoped to get rich by impoverishing others, by taking something from them and giving nothing in return.

The Rev. David Brandt (Chalmers Church, Sydney) said there were various forms of gambling; there was the two-up school. He did not dress like a clergyman, and he sometimes visited two-up schools, which were numerous in Surry Hills. Two-up was the fairest form of gambling. We had not adequate law enforcement. The police would raid a two-up school or a Chinese gambling resort, but the Government ran the best gambling school in the totalistator. Recently there had been 23 consecutive days' racing, exclusive of Sundays, in the metropolis, and there were 200 days' racing in Sydney and environs during the year. There was an immense amount of poverty in Sydney, because the women gambled on pony races. Their husbands earned good wages, but the money went in betting. In the Government workshops there were bookmakers' agents amongst the workers.

RUSSIA'S FOREIGN POLICY

More Violent Attacks on Great Britain: Kalinin's Outburst

The Bolshevist leaders and the members of the Soviet Government have once more, writes a Russian Correspondent, renewed their attacks on Great Britain. The President of the Russian Soviet Union, Kalinin, in a speech made at a conference of textile workers held at Ivanovo-Vosnesensk, near Moscow, in giving a "general review of the international situation," violently attacked the British Government and the British nation in terms as abusive and insulting as those used by Rakovsky.

The British Government, Kalinin assured his audience, is on the eve of collapse and Great Britain is faced with the menace of a genreal rising of all her Colonies against the metropolis:

The struggle of the native populations of the British Colonies against exploitation by the British bourgeoisie is ending in a complete defeat of the latter. In India, Egypt, and Ireland the British Government has been forced to surrender to the native bourgeoisie, but everywhere the extreme revolutionary elements are obtaining the upper hand. Growing unemployment in England itself, the loss of practically all her foreign markets, and the success of the Labour and Communist movements are placing the present bourgeois British Government in a very precarious position. This state of affairs has been clearly realized by France, which is gradually taking upon herself the part of ruler of world-policy.

Kalinin, therefore, advised his audience to cease to look upon Great Britain as a decisive factor in international politics, and declare that Soviet Russia must throw in her lot with England's enemies—with that group of European Powers which will be formed as the result of French hegemony in world politics.

PROVOKING POLAND.

Of Soviet Russia's foreign policy the most significant feature at present is her attitude to Poland. It would appear that Moscow is determind to provoke some sort of "incidente" in which Poland will be involved.

In its issue of November 2 the Moscow Isvestia publishes what purports to be material evidence of the ill-treatment by the Polish authorities of Soviet Russian citizens in Poland, of alleged cases of the shooting by Polish frontier patrols at Russian soldiers on the territory adjoining the Russo-Polish border, and of assaults by Polish officials on Russian women.

The Isvestia in a leading article, demands from the Soviet Government the "taking of immediate and energetic steps for the protection of Soviet citizens," and expresses the hope that "Poland will be given definitely to understand that the behaviour of the Polish authorities many have as its consequences Soviet reprisals against those Polish citizens who are residing on Russian territory."

FURLOUGH

Attention of intending travellers is drawn to the New Route Across Canada now available. Through most picturesque parts of the famous Rockies. New comfortable trains—specially constructed observation cars.

The Canadian National Railways operate from Coast to Coast in Canada—touch every principal city in the Dominion and many in the U. S. A.

SPECIAL FARES FOR MISSIONARIES

Through bookings—Any Steamship Line

Literature and full information furnished

The National Way

Canadian National Railways

GLEN LINE BUILDING

Shanghai Tel. C. 6973

"AMPICO"

There is a reason for the supremacy of the Ampico to-day in the re-enactment of the Pianist art.

Fundamentally, of course, it rests upon actual performance, the indisputable fact that the Ampico really accomplishes what is claimed for it.

The Ampico is to-day the standard of the world for reproducing Pianos.

ROBINSON PIANO CO./LD.

FROM THE FOUR WINDS

HUMOUR AT THE ELECTIONS

The "Tame Candidate" and Inexperienced Politician: Six Horny Handed Sons of Toil

From Our Own Correspondent.

London, Nov. 16.

It needs must be a cheery soul to get humour out of a General Election, yet there it is for those who watch. This is the time for the "Tame Candidate." All Parties keep a few on hand. I remember going to a meeting years ago and listening to one recounting his experiences in what struck me as a very humorous fashion;

> I suppose—he remarked—I have fought more elections than most men. In the words of the Apostle Paul I have fought frequently with the beasts at Ephesus but unlike the Apostle I am bound to admit that on the whole the beasts have had the best of it.

In other words he was retained at short notice to fight any hopeless constituency. His expenses were paid and he served the purpose to retain in the contested area workers and speakers of the opposite side who might have gone elsewhere.

These are the days too, when the inexperienced politician comes into his own. He sails confidently into the Party Offices and remarks "I want to fight a seat." The organizers treat the request very much as you would—if a booking clerk—treat a man who remarked "Third class ticket Westminster Bridge." You say "Ah, yes." Paying your own expenses!" Then like the booking clerk you reply if the rejoinder is "Yes I have no money to-day"—you recognize the banana adaptation—"Nothing doing. Good morning. Mind the step." On the other hand if the reply is "Yes but it mustn't cost too much," the organizers cheerfully turn up the record annd remark "Well now there's Loamshire. Excellent seat. Good chance. Majority against us last time 7543. Hard work. Find your [illegible] will recommend Captain Brown [illegible] wants to learn his job. The experience will be worth all the money you'll lay out. Try it!" So off he goes and for the next three weeks lives at the rate of two years and discovers that an election is a cross between a dogfight and a prayer meeting.

This week various M.P.s had callers at the House. In one case six horny-handed sons of toil sailed into the House and sending in for their member—a Unionist—asked if he could get them all into the Gallery to listen to the debate. "You have as much chance, as an iceberg in h— of doing it," he replied, "there's such a crush. But come and have a drink and a chat." So he stood them all a whiskey-double-and soda and as they parted one [illegible] "We're going to put you at the bottom of the poll this time and no mistake. We admit you're not a bad member but our man's going in." The M.P. being a sport offered to take them on with a 2 to 1 on his own chances but they would not [illegible]

[illegible] all manners a chance to turn off the select prize tap abruptly. They point out that such help might be misunderstood. I fancy, nowadays, the old fashioned custom of paying for votes is gone. There are too many voters. It was a very different when Mr. Henry Mathews, the famous Tory yet as he then was, stood for Dungarvan as nominee of Ireland. His agent suggested that when his Excellency met a little liquid refreshment might not be amiss. Mr Mathews agreed. At the end of the contest there was produced a bill for "Whiskey—£247.13.8." Mr. Mathews protested feebly—vigorously. His agent witheringly remarked "Sure and if ye want to squaze the pippin ye aren't the man for Dungarvan." Mr. Mathews used to start his election campaign by a prelude somewhat on these lines:

> "Gentlemen. You see before you an old man. It is probably the last time—here he had a Caruso sob in his throat—that I shall ever have the opportunity, the pleasure, the honour of addressing you at a public election. We shall not therefore probably meet again. But, . . . etc. etc. etc."

He always fired this off. I suppose, nowdays, elections are harder fought. Still most people with Lord Carson who, having been asked whether the abuse levelled at him when in Ireland he was conducting the Crown prosecutions did not perturb him—replied "Sorr, abuse is the manure on which men's reputations grow." Still it is better have this sort of thing than the reproaches of an organisation such as the Party Executive who in the days of Sir George Kekewich formally complained to the whips that he did not spend enough money in the constituency and would they change him.

THE GLOOMY DEAN

A Frank Labour View

By Our Labour Correspondent

Manchester, Nov. 21.

Of all the dispiriting experiences possible to men and women of moderate intelligence there can be few to equal that of listening for the first time to those celebrated preachers whose names have become household words as a result of the boosting they have obtained in the popular press. It has been our ill fortune to listen at some time or other to most of those preachers and prelates whom the "Daily Mail" and the Sunday press acclaim as prophets and seers. Only those who have had a like experience will realize from this admission of Tupperesque platitudes, bad biology, pseudo-science, and cheap philosohpy we have endured. Yet we have persisted.

The Rev. L. P. Jacks Editor of the "Hibbert Journal," and Principal of Manchester College, Oxford, has been the only exception to the depressing average. He has been the one piece of jade in a desert of soapstone. To listen to him was like hearing the voice of Conrad in the forest of Tarzan of the Apes. And L. P. Jacks is not popular, in the sense that Father Bernard Vaughan, or the present Dean Inge is popular. The surprising fact that his fame had a firm basis in intellect and character was a Christian miracle more impressive to us than many in the New Testament.

Spell-binders of the type of General Booth and Spurgeon passed away with the passing of popular belief in a lake burning with fire and brimstone. Resonant orators like the late Father Bernard Vaughan were referred to with the half smile that we accord our popular comedians several years before they realized that we were not frightened nor impressed by their threats and perorations. And even Billy Sunday appeared to realize that whatever his raucous vulgarities might achieve among the contemporaries of Mr. Babbitt, they would be wasted on an English audience.

THE DISCORDANT NOTE.

The press periodically recognises the problem of why our churches are empty. Every clergyman and minister has put opinions on the subject and takes this opportunity of airing them. For the true answer they should go to the non-religious churchgoer. No one with a sense of humour and a reverence for religion can attend a church service in an ordinary Anglican church in England without being impressed with the hallowed associations of the building, the beauty of the prayers and the sacred music, and the dignity of the ceremonial. And then in nine cases out of ten the whole spiritual experience is marred by the ascension into the pulpit of an ill-read, prejudiced, and insincere preacher, who inflicts on his helpless hearers either a sermon based on the assumption that the first chapters of Genesis are a literal statement of fact, or an attempt to torture scientific discoveries into evidences of the essential truths of Christianity. For thirty minutes he has his unfortunate victims entirely at his mercy. There is no chance of answering back, or asking for a more exhaustive explanation of this or that problem that was skated over so swiftly.

What is wrong with our churches is the clergymen. People are not carried away and converted to-day by the appeals that reached the unsophisticated hearts of our grandparents. Preaching is out of date. It is a relic of the times before the average man could read. To study evidence to-day it is best to have it in print before you to read slowly and carefully. All of which brings us to Dean Inge.

THE TRAGEDY OF A PESSIMIST.

It was the good fortune of the "gloomy Dean" that at the time when the yellower press in Great Britain lifted up its agonized voice and demanded in the name of "anti-waste" that all the promises made to the workers should be broken, that they should be given less wages than before the war, and that in the interests of the country and "big business" their trades unions should be smashed up, and their hours of labour increased, his discourses at St. Paul's should be in exactly the same strain. In the case of the yellower press it was just another stunt, but in the case of the Dean it was a case of what Old Bill used to call "wind up." As might be imagined the popular press welcomed this clerical ally, and in a few weeks Dean Inge was one of that august body of notables whose opinions are published on every question of great and little importance. Since then he has continuously experienced the dreadful quandary of having to be pessimistic on every subject—in the same way that a comedian is always expected to be funny or a tragedian always tragic if his popularity has been won in either of these rôles,—and at the same time conceal from his admirers the awful truth, namely, that his pessimism was only a passing phase and that his unanticipated rise to fame has completely cured it.

DISILLUSION.

It may be imagined from unflattering opinion of the gloomy Dean that we did not expect very much when we attended his recent lecture on "Sin and Modern Thought." Somehow we had made a mental picture of him as a heavy-jowled, thick-set individual, a corpulent Savonarola, and we were surprised to find him a spare common-place looking man with a thin nervous face, and an exaggerated Oxford drawl.

He said that the problem of evil was one that he could make no pretensions to solve. It had been said that if God was omnipotent and permitted evil He was not good; if He could not prevent it, He was not omnipotent. For himself the problem was beyond him. He welcomed the growing disbelief in eternal punishment, but thought that much of modern sentiment on that subject was flabby and insincere. We had no right to do what we liked in the belief that there would be no reckoning after death. If it was true that death did not change us, but only transplanted us into a region where we could only be what we had become, there could easily be eternal punishment. Sin was a relative matter dependent on the degree of temptation and the environment of the sinner. The feeling of self abasement caused by a sense of sin appeared to him to be disproportionate to its cause so long as we confined our opinion of God's purpose to the insignificant part we had to play in this life, but it was not so if we assumed that we were immortal spirits here on probation. From this he drifted on to a denunciation of those preachers who still asserted that the story of Adam and Eve was to be taken literally. It was, he said, a beautiful symbolic story.

DREADFULLY MISUNDERSTOOD.

The whole of this queer hotch-potch was interspersed with innumerable "ifs," and "it seems to me," and almost every sentence—all badly read from a long Ms.—was carefully constructed to provide a retreat if it should be subject to criticism. If the modernists were slated they were also flattered; if the old beliefs were attacked, they were also defended; if the spirit of the age was wrong and dangerous, it was also to be excused. We came away saddened that a purveyor of such inanities should be accepted as a teacher by the Church. Dean Inge is neither agnostic nor atheist, neither Christian nor Buddhist. Should Kipling's picture of the after life be a correct one, we figure him flying forever by the side of the rejected Tomlinson, wagging his arms about in futile gestures as he eternally explains that some mistake has been made and he has been dreadfully misunderstood.

OUR BRITISH COLUMBIA LETTER

Ugly Incidents During Longshoremen's Strike: Return of Red Cross Ladies from Japan: Bishop Roots' Resignation: Geological Finds from Mongolia

From Our Own Correspondent.

Vancouver, Nov. 29.

Begun six weeks ago, the strike of Vancouver union longshoremen is still on. About 1,100 from the ranks of organized labour are temporarily idle owing to the strike but the same number of others who responded to calls when "open shop" on the waterfront was declared by the shipping federation are helping to keep cargoes moving to and from ships' holds. The strike-breakers are working inside a cordon of pickets which is unbroken day and night and through which they must pass to get to and from their work. There have been ugly incidents and a number of arrests. The shipowners have managed to get some of their cargoes, principally of lumber, loaded aboard ships for the Orient and elsewhere by having the lumber placed on barges in their own yards, then towing the barges to other coast points in the vicinity where freighters await the cargoes. The dispute concerns wages and working conditions generally but settlement of the strike is hindered by the two sides standing firm on recognition by the shipping federation of the longshoremen's union, which the former declare to be very red and with which they will not negotiate.

ARRIVALS FROM ORIENT.

Among recent arrivals here from the Orient were Mrs. Annie M. Stabler and Miss Isabel M. Jaffrey, of the British Columbia Red Cross Society, who left Vancouver at a moment's notice with relief supplies for the stricken districts of Japan and who arrived there 18 days after the disaster. Besides bringing back a fund of interesting stories of their experiences they returned with photographs of a first aid station established by the Japanese Red Cross at Kobe. With Mrs. Stabler and Miss Jaffrey in the photograph is Miss H. A. Macfarlane of Shanghai, matron of the International Hospital at Kobe, also Miss Clarke of Shanghai.

Mr. Harry Leon Wilson, of Monterey, California, author of 'Ruggles of Red Gap' and other stories, is back on this coast after spending the past six months in China and Japan gathering material for future stories. Returning to China after spending six months in England with his family was Mr. H. G. W. Woodhead, O.B.E., editor of the "Peking and Tientsin Times." A recent passenger from Quebec to Liverpool, on the Empress of Britain, was Captain W. E. Kent, with Mrs. Kent, of Shanghai.

Advices from Ottawa report the passing at the age of 81 years of Mrs. T. W. Anglin, widow of Hon. T. W. Anglin, a member of the Canadian House of Commons from 1867 to 1888. She leaves four sons, Mr. Justice Anglin, of the Supreme Court of Canada, being among them, and two daughters, Margaret Anglin, Canada's leading actress, and Mrs. T. Hutchins, who resides in China.

The Rev. and Mrs. E. R. Baker, missionaries of the China Inland Mission, sailed to-day on the Empress of Asia for their station in China.

CHINESE CONSUL'S PROTEST.

Mr. Lin Pao-heng, Chinese consul in British Columbia, in a strongly worded telegram addressed to the Speaker of the British Columbia Legislature, protested against the contents of a bill now before the Legislature. The passing of offence for Chinese to employ white girls or Indians in restaurants owned or operated by them. He stated that the bill was not warranted and was an unfair racial discrimination.

BISHOP'S RESIGNATION.

According to advices from Dallas, U.S.A., the House of Bishops, after first accepting the resignation of Bishop Logan Roots of Hankow, China, voted to reconsider this action and next day decided to defer acceptance of the resignation, if at all. Bishop Roots had resigned in order to accept a position on the Christian Council in China. Bishop Thomas F. Gailor, of Tennessee, was instructed to proceed to China to survey the situation of the church there and to report to a meeting of the national council next February.

FINDS IN MONGOLIA.

Mr. Frederick K. Morris, member of the Roy Chapman Andrews party, the third Asiatic expedition of the American Museum of Natural History, was a recent arrival in Vancouver from China. The noted geologist brought specimens obtained by the expedition in Mongolian deserts. Among them were first proof to the world of science of a dinosaur's egg, skeletons of the Titanotheres, formerly the missing link in the great race of reptilian monsters of a pre-historic age, and other fossilized remains of paramount importance. Mr. Morris reports phenomenal success by the mission. Discoveries of remains from the age of reptiles included 10 skulls of deratopsians, a dozen good skeletons of the reptile creatures and about 25 eggs in three nests of brilliant red sand found in Central Mongolia. Mr. Morris, who was married last December to Miss Florence Eddows, of New York City—who went to China for the ceremony—expects to return with Mrs. Morris to China in 1925.

TRANS-PACIFIC TRADE.

Chinese are to a great extent giving up rice for flour and wheat, and although they do not buy the highest grade they seem to prefer the Canadian grain. This is the belief of Mr. George C. Dew, Asiatic freight agent of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Canada's trade with the Orient is steadily increasing each year and has been so good this year that not one of the Canadan Pacific ships has left Vancouver without a full cargo. The business of importing from the Orient has been fairly heavy and steady throughout the year. Christmas goods are a little heavier than last year.

The Canadian Robert Dollar Company, Vancouver, have taken

In conjunction with moon on 29th (day of last quarter).
Rises on 1st at 1.43 a.m.;
" 16th at 0.48 a.m.

VENUS VISIBLE FOR 2 HOURS AFTER SUNSET.

Venus, now in Capricornus, is becoming more and more brilliant, and may be observed in the southwestern, skies for 2 hours after sunset. On the evening of the 9th the planet will be in close proximity to the moon, then 3 days after new, a circumstance allowing favourable observation of both until they are lost in the dim haze of the horizon.

CANOPUS LOW DOWN ON SOUTHERN HORIZON.

As the earth passes in January and February on the southern part of its orbit, some of the constellations of the Southern hemisphere become visible to us in the North. Among these is Canopus, a brilliant star in the constellation Argo. Canopus is near the horizon, and may be observed low down passing the meridian from 10 p.m., to midnight.

SQUARE OF PEGASUS NOW CONSPICUOUS TO WEST.

The great square of Pegasus is a prominent figure in the western skies during this month. The names of the stars are Alpheratz, which belongs also to Andromeda, then the 3 others called respectively Algenib, Markal and Scheat. All are of the second magnitude, and well visible in a small power telescope. The group may be observed at 9 p.m.

THE HYADES AND THE PLEIADES.

The Hyades and the Pleiades are two beautiful clusters of stars situated between Pegasus and Taurus. The former group forms a distinct V in the sky, with Aldebaran, a fiery red star of the first magnitude at the upper corner. The Pleiades, or the Seven Sisters, are further to the north. The cluster contains much nebular matter, worlds in formation, and six stars visible to the naked eye. Alcyone is the brightest of the group. The cluster passes on the meridian at 9 p.m.

THE A. D. C. AND ITS CRITICS

Some Facts and Counter-Criticism

By E. S. Wilkinson.

Now that "Madame Sherry" has made her farewell bow to the Shanghai public I am able to say a few words with regard to the criticism that has flowed so freely through your columns. I have, in fact, been asked by my Committee to clear the air by some sort of official announcement, but I do not feel inclined to couch my thoughts in official words and greatly prefer to inform the public of the facts as I see them in plain unofficial language.

The Shanghai A. D. C. is one of the oldest institutions of the port and the last thing that it should fear is criticism so long as it is honest. The main point about the recent criticism is that its honesty seems open to question.

"Fairplay" looks to me like a disgruntled journalist with a bad attack of Anglophobia. He seems to have hurled his charges at a British newspaper with the certainty of hitting another British institution on the rebound. He gives me the impression of having prepared his attack many months ago, and that this attack would have inevitably been launched even if the A.D.C.'s latest production had been the greatest success or the greatest failure ever seen.

I picture the writer of "Sharps & Flats" as a pale young person with a penchant for the piano and an abysmal ignorance of all else connected with the stage. He begins his denunciation of the A.D.C. by quoting a paragraph recently produced in the N.-C. D. N. This paragraph was a slightly warped version of a conversation between a member of the A.D.C. Committee and a member of the N.-C. D. N. staff. The intent of this conversation was merely to explain that the A.D.C. could not always count on the highest class of play for production. It never was intended as an admission that "Madame Sherry" was a bad play or one that should be apologized for. And yet the writer of "Sharps & Flats" deliberately quotes this paragraph as a statement of the A.D.C. Committee. This writer then proceeds further to illustrate his ignorance and uttter lack of moral stamina by suggesting that the A.D.C. should embark upon a policy of piracy and dishonesty under the cloak of the Copyright Acts. Does this immoral person know that there is not one member of the A.D.C. Committee who would conceive the idea of carrying out what he dares to suggest? The A.D.C. has never yet produced a musical comedy without either buying the rights by private treaty or paying the production fees to the holders of the rights. "The Dairymaids" was purchased by private treaty and the acting fees paid to the holder of the Eastern rights. "Tom Jones" was procured from London and full acting fees paid to Chappell & Co. In the case of the "Belle of New York" rights were purchased in good faith from America and the Club was subsequently threatened with an action which was finally withdrawn. "Madame Sherry" was purchased in America (cost Gold $300) by private treaty.

COPYRIGHT.

"Sharps & Flats" then proceeds to point out to the A.D.C. the sort of play which they should produce. He may be interested to know that last year the Committee cabled to London asking for a number of those he mentions in addition to "The Little Michus," "Tom Jones," etc. In reply, a cable was received "Can secure 'Tom Jones' only." Does this writer think that the Committee is also composed of Sharps & Flats? Does he suggest that they should embark upon a career of crime and burgle the safes of those who hold the rights of these plays? The Club as I know it will always welcome suggestions from anyone interested and competent to assist in its efforts, but it has not yet fallen to the level of the common thief.

His next suggestion calls for Gilbert & Sullivan. These talented authors wrote, if my memory serves me right, about ten well-known operas of which the A.D.C. has produced six, three of them twice. Of the remaining four, "The Mikado" has never been played by the A.D.C. for obvious political reasons; one of the other three was to have been played last year but was withdrawn when the Committee heard that a professional Company was coming to play Gilbert & Sullivan. The same applies to the present season when the same Company again booked dates but subsequently withdrew them. But apart from these facts, is the A. D.C. to become a stock Gilbert & Sullivan Opera Company, with about ten plays to choose from, to please every penny-a-liner who quotes them because he knows of little or nothing else? Men of the "Sharps & Flats" type might be invaluable to the local A.D.C. if they had the grit to put into action what they suggest with a pen, but they generally prove utterly incompetent when it comes to a test of deeds against words.

THE SUGGESTION OF BIAS.

Criticism is requested, expected and respected. It is the greatest free advertisement that a producer can find. But to be of any service to the public it should at least be intelligent and free from bias. I can claim more than 20 years experience of the amateur stage and have never quarrelled with a critic yet. But if the critics are going beyond their job and wish to quarrel with the management of the Theatre, the writers of plays who have already been most efficiently criticized years ago, and other kindred matters which are none of their business, then I fail to see eye to eye with them.

As an example of the value of the criticism indulged in by the genius who is responsible for "Sharps & Flats" let me quote the following passages concerning the Italian Opera Company which appear in the N.-C. D. N. of December 28. "Sharps & Flats" says: "the same old répertoire 'Il Trovatore,' 'Rigoletto,' "La Traviata" etc., is announced. It is time these early Verdi Operas were given a rest." The critic who attended the Company's first performance writes in the same issue: "The crowded state of the Lyceum Theatre on Boxing Night proved the popularity of the Italian Opera. The tuneful nature of Verdi's "Rigoletto" was very much in evidence." Now, any sane man who reads these two sentences in the same paper must conclude either that the writer of "Sharps & Flats" is an incompetent ass or that the Shanghai public is a herd of fools. On the evidence before me I am inclined to the former conclusion. If there are competent men on the staff of the paper able to deal with musical and theatrical matters, why foist the brayings of an ass on the public? That there are competent men available I have no doubt, as many recent criticisms have shown that the writers had intelligence and knowledge of their subject. The gentleman who referred to our priceless dancers as "peglegging the same old steps" must have been blind, but he nevertheless wrote a most capable and amusing criticism of the play under discussion. I wonder if some of our local writers could not be persuaded to study the methods of "The Playful Stallite" in "London Opinion": his criticisms are capable, trenchant and amusing, but he never displays bias or malice.

LONDON'S SOLUTION.

One of the greatest of London Managers whose worst failures were consistently praised and whose greatest successes were equally consistently damned by the best critics in England, solved the problem by withdrawing all invitation to the Press, and told its representatives they could come and see his shows if they paid for their seats, but he did not wish to know what they thought about them. I am far from advocating this view in Shanghai as I value the opinion of the few intelligent and educated journalists we have among us. But I would like to put some bar against the views of jealous and vituperative ink-slingers being foisted on the public in the guise of genuine criticism. With all due deference to the few men who have written clean and thoughful criticism in the past few years I prefer to put my faith in the greatest critic of all. I refer to the Box Office. After all, for every alleged Highbrow who writes to the papers there are five hundred or more plain men and women who want an evening's amusement. If you would like the opinion of this critic here are some recent results:—

Play.	Nett Profit.
"Ann"	$1,756
"Pirates of Penzance"	2,324
"Passing of the Third Floor Back"	2,207
"The Three Twins"	4,893
"The Skin Game"	2,636
"Tom Jones" (Ex. donations)	2,114
"What Every Woman Knows"	420

The worst play of the lot (in my opinion) makes the biggest profit, and possibly vice versa, but I happen to be a business man and I must bow to the superior knowledge of the Box Office. The high-souled contributors to your columns will ask me why; and I will try to explain.

WHAT THE THEATRE STANDS FOR.

Does the average theatre-goer in Shanghai ever ask himself what the Lyceum Theatre is and what it stands for? It is a community theatre, free of all syndicates and financial interests, ready to welcome any professional Company that will come to amuse the community. It is probably the best equipped theatre on the China Coast and can therefore give its public the best value for its money. This theatre costs about $5,000 per annum more to keep up than its income from visiting Companies can produce. The Council and the ratepayers do not provide one cent of this deficit: it is entirely made up by the efforts of the small band of amateurs who work for weeks or months at a time to produce plays. There is nothing to apologize for in their efforts: visitors, both amateurs and professionals, wonder at the efficiency of their productions. The Committee who are responsible take no credit for the results but they cannot help being proud of them. Shanghai not only leads the amateur dramatic world of the East but it provides plays, costumes and scenery, to many other ports. Nobody who takes part in his work gets or expects one cent of pay, they just carry on and say nothing. Without them the theatrical life of Shanghai would be dead. By way of thanks the critics come and throw mud and there are no flowers by request.

Please do not misunderstand me; nobody is such a fool as to expect columns of fulsome flattery. Honest criticism is the spice of an actor's career. He works for the good and if he gets the bad instead, he tries again to do better. But let criticism be honest. Let it be intelligent. Do not let it consist of the backbiting spite of the disappointed advertising agent or the venom of the man who, having tried to shine, has failed and wishes to point to all others as failures.

THE EXPENSES BILL.

Does Shanghai realize that every year the A.D.C. must pay its rent to keep the theatre going and if it fails then the theatre and its attendant Trust will fail? That the support of visiting Companies is so poor that the Club itself must make good the deficit? That this can only be done by producing three plays per annum at a reasonable profit? That every comedy costs about $3,000 and that every musical play costs about $8,000 to produce? That the Committee responsible for all this has to think ahead, and if it cannot find the play to fit its highest ideals it must take the next best thing and make the most of it? That the Club always gives first choice of dates to visiting professionals and thus puts itself at a disadvantage?

After putting these questions let me give you some idea of the money that has to be spent on a production before the curtain goes up.

Here is a typical bill for a cheap three-act comedy:—

Theatre Rental, Light and Heat	$500
Costumes	800
Scenery and Properties	300
Orchestra	250
Advertizing	300
Printing, books etc.	150
Sundry Expenses	200
Total	$2,500

Here are similar costs for a Musical Comedy:—

Theatre Rental, Light and Heat	1,450
Costumes	4,500
Scenery and Properties	1,000
Orchestra	1,000
Hire of Band Parts etc. (incl. Fees)	500
Advertizing	1,200
Printing etc.	150
Sundry Expenses	1,200
Total	$11,000

It may interest the public to know that under the A.D.C.'s lease of the theatre the Club has to pay rent for its own productions and it naturally has to pay the considerable item of lighting and heating. The "Sundry Expenses" shown above look high but it must be remembered that when fifty or sixty young people are kept in the theatre for half a day at a time they have to be fed. All these items mount up in an alarming manner and none of the above estimates are extravagant. Is it to be wondered at that the Club responsible for these productions has to look on the financial side when it produces plays rather than pander to the few critics whose taste probably represents five per cent. of the public who pay money into the Box Office. In the "good old days" before the introduction of Fire Regulations when the theatre had no financial obligations, the "giants of the past" produced anything they wanted and often spent thousands of dollars more than they received; those days are past and financial considerations are now a big factor in the Club's activities.

NO SOCIAL CLIQUISM.

Perhaps if these facts are intelligently considered the Press will give its work of criticism to men who know something of their subject. I can say without fear of contradiction that the Shanghai A.D.C. has for half a century held itself open to receive all comers who can contribute to its efficiency. Far from being a social clique it is the most democratic institution in Shanghai. It measures its helpers by one standard only—efficiency. It pretends to nothing in the nature of high-souled perfection but it does jealously guard its reputation for honesty and decency and not even the whining of a half-baked musician (I refer to the talented author of "Sharps & Flats") can make it depart from those ideals.

The Shanghai A.D.C. has no complaint to make against the support which has been given by the Shanghai public. Shanghai always has supported its A.D.C. and the Shanghai public have always been the most generous and kindly critics. Perhaps it is the knowledge of this fact that gives me the courage to write so freely on this subject. On the other hand I have no apology to make for the fare that the A.D.C. has served to its supporters. When a private Club can give its friends such shows as "The Skin Game," "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," "Tom Jones" as well as Barrie Plays and Gilbert and Sullivan (within reason) it has little to apologize for. No organization in this world can maintain the peak of perfection for ever.

The Club is more anxious today than it has been during the 14 years I have known it, to deserve and keep the good opinion of the Shanghai community. No single word of thoughtful and helpful criticism will be wasted or ignored. But the spiteful mudthrowing of ignorant and incompetent writers who are given the freedom of the Press is neither kind nor helpful and contributes nothing to the good of a community which has to provide 50 per cent of its own amusement.

 This article is dealt with in a leading article to-day.

A NEW YEAR HYMN

The following hymn is by the Rev. William Darwent, father of the Rev. C. E. Darwent now of Tientsin, but, of course, well known in Shanghai. The author of these verses is now in his 94th year.

God has kept his promise
Through the vanished year,
Never has he left us
Through all hope and fear.
When the times did threaten,
And the storms were out,
He, the great unfailing,
Led us safe about.

What tho' now 'tis over,
Shall it be forgot?
All the priceless blessings
Bearing on our lot?
Swift our lives are passing,
Swifter, let us run,
Till we reach the glory,
And the crown is won.

Are we any better?
Have we served him well?
Have we grown more holy?
Let our conscience tell.
Over all our failings
May his mercy rest,
Pardoning our offences,
Taking what is best.

We would brightly enter
On this new-born year,
Strong in God, and fearless
As to what is near.

Christ has made our pathway
Clear, and clean, and bright,
And has gone before us,
Leading into light.
Saviour! Rule the nations,
Banish war and crime,
Let the glad day settle,
Even in our time.
Then peace, like a river,
Flowing but to bless,
All the world together,
With its sweet caress.
Come, Lord Jesus! Hasten,
Bring the longed-for day.
Then earth shall be heaven,
As thy Word doth say.
Nothing shall offend thee,
All shall then be blest,
Christ shall see his travail,
And all be at rest.

WILLIAM DARWENT (1830——)
Bognor, Sussex,
England.

SPECIAL ARTICLES

A CURE FOR CRITICS OF CHRIST

Notes of a Sermon Preached by the Rev. C. E. Darwent in Union Church, Tientsin, Sunday Evening, December 9

Text: Lamentations II.9. "Her king and her princes are among the nations where the law is not."

Jeremiah had something to complain about—something real, not fancied. The Holy City had been destroyed—the city on the site of Abraham's sacrifice, of the great king and Psalmist, David, of Solomon. The temple was gone and all that it meant. The promises of God seemed to have gone by the board. The site of their loved city was a desolation and a byword. More than some capital cities Jerusalem was the nation. Its whole life was wrapped up in her and now she was a ruin. "Her gates are sunk into the ground; he hath destroyed and broken her bars." The conqueror had done his work thoroughly. "How does the city sit solitary! How is she become a widow!"

Those old cities were often built to cover as small a space as possible, so that the walls might be as small as possible in circuit and they would need fewer men to defend them. So these cities were full up with people, nice and lively as a crowded city is with plenty of life going on. As one of the prophets says, the city in the great day of the Lord "shall be full of boys and girls playing in the streets." Those ancient peoples liked it. They had no worrying "traffic problem." They took their time in getting about. They didn't expect, as we foolishly seem to do, that the streets of a city can ever be as free to move about in as the streets of a village.

But the most dreadful thing for her king and priests is not that the gates of Jerusalem are sunk into the ground, that her streets are naked of people and she sits solitary like a widow. All that is no doubt very bad, very distressing for her king and princes. But there is on top of it something much worse. "Her king and her princes are among the nations where the law is not." No doubt Jeremiah means the law of Moses and what he says is, You have come under heathen law instead of under the truer, milder more humane law that God gave to Moses. I dare say that, without being aware of it, we of the present day get a wrong view of the law and of the Mosaic legislation. We read so much of its abuse in the age of Christ that we are apt to think very poorly of it. We read of its externalities, its washings, its "tithing of mint, anise and cummin" that we are apt to think that it was one of God's mistakes ever to have given it. But that is doing it a gross injustice. Never judge anything by its abuse. Remember that the Law of Moses was 2,000 years ahead of its age. Its whole aim was lighter than the finger of the law of the other nations. In the 2,000 years from Moses to Christ abuses had arisen as they will but, make no mistake about it, the Law of Moses is marvellous for its justice and mildness. Blood revenge was a feature of the time.

Moses appointed cities of refuge for the slayer. Did any other code? A man might redeem his house that he had sold in his distress, if within a year. Was any other code so merciful? Is ours? No. You had not to be a mean dog and scrape up every ear of wheat in your harvestfield and every olive. No, you had to leave them "for the poor and the stranger." Beautiful provision of the great God of heaven! I doubt if He admires our patent reapers that lick up everything. Usury was, I think, forbidden under the law and cleanliness was enjoined. There were all kinds of commandments far ahead of the times, to say nothing of the Holy God who gave the Law and who loved His people and blessed them—one God, instead of the mixed up tangle of absurdities that figured as the gods of the nations.

Now, says Jeremiah, you—the king and princes—are away from all the humanities and justice and tenderness of this Law of God and you are "among the nations where the Law is not" but where laws harder and more cruel are in force. Likely enough, they had groused and complained about the Law of Moses. Now, says the prophet, you have something to grouse about in "nations where the law is not." Now you know about it. You will be wishing yourselves back under the just Law that God gave you. If you had only known when you were well off you wouldn't have been where you are now—in heathen lands and under heathen law. Now you know what you have lost. They may have complained that the Law was too strict, that it required too much prayer and worship and sacrifice. Now, says Jeremiah, you have something worse than the ruin of your gates and bars to weep over; you are under the arbitrary will and caprice of a lawless despot and you wish yourselves well back again in Jerusalem. You would give your eyes to be back.

What has all this to do with us? Everything, as I think I can show. To-day there are two classes of critics of the Christian religion and Church. Both find no end of fault with it but we will take them separately. There is the Church itself. How many of its members who have sworn fealty to the Lord do nothing much else but discredit Him? Some think it an act of piety to hold that the world is so bad after all these years of Christian teaching that nothing can be done for it till He comes again. The present dispensation has been a ghastly failure, according to them. And apart from these people there is a general admission that Christianity hasn't been the success it reasonably ought to have been because there is still sin in the world on a large scale.

This autumn I have read in a weekly religious paper to which I subscribe the reports of the annual meetings of the various British religious bodies and it has been in one way a trial, a big dose. "The state of Europe," "The War," "The Consequences of the War!" Poor Europe! One would think all the prayers and preachings of the Gospel in Europe had been wasted breath; that the churches, whether cathedrals or "Little Bethels," had all been built in vain. How Europe catches it! As if the saints and apostles and Christian poets of Europe had nothing to show for their sowing in tears and heroisms in the service of Jesus! Then there is the sarcasm of the unbelieving critics. According to most of them the Gospel has done nothing or little; they point out many evils which ought to have disappeared long ago if Christianity is a divine effort to save the world with the power of God in Christ behind it to make it effective. They have a variety of agencies which they think would be more effective, such as education.

REPLY TO THE CRITICS.

Now, what is our reply, if we are so wise, to all this? Just exactly the idea of this prophet, Jeremiah, in regard to the king and princes of Judah. Only in stead of "Law" insert the word "Gospel" in the text: thus, Let all these people go and live "among the nations where the Gospel is not." Just let them go to the nations and tribes where there has never been any preaching of the Gospel at all—where the New Testament has no influence or very little. Let them go where the story of Christmas is not known and the tragic and moving story of the cross is not known at all; where there are no Bible classes, no Sabbath Schools, no cathedrals, no parish churches, no Little Bethels, then there would be a lightning cure in all these miserable Christians and clever theorists of impotent abstract gospels. Aye, we should see them hurrying by the quickest steamers back to poor old Christian Europe. They would know all about it if they would only go for a spell "among nations where the Gospel is not." It would cure all Christians of all their grousing and dismal jeremiads, and would do a world of good to the literary and aesthetic unbeliever who sniffs at the Son of God, His blood and His love. Aye, they talk about "means of grace." Yes, indeed, this would be a "means of grace" to both classes of dishonourers of our Saviour. They would find that a corner in the most disordered state in Europe is a paradise compared with a palace "among the nations where His word is not and has not been preached," where no one has read His great Sermon on the Mount, where His figure is unknown and gracious revelation of the Father has done nothing to ameliorate the innate sin of man. They would have to double their insurances in such lands, if they could get anyone to take them at all. A couple of years in any country where no Christian law is known, where the Christian value of life and man is not the standard! As a fact, you find that all the unbelieving critics take precious good care to live in and "among nations" where the Gospel is known.

Let us consider a few of these lands. We will begin if we can find them with lands where the Gospel is entirely unknown and no influence, even collateral, has gone out from Christ into the life of the tribe or nation. We may take the centre of New Guinea. I have just read a review of a book of travel in the interior by a hard case of a traveller there. He blesses his lucky stars that he got out at all. There you get human nature "uncontaminated" by the errors of Christianity. Yes, headhunting and all the rest. There are the purely native parts of Africa. Let them go there. As a writer on Africa has said "The history of Africa is drenched in blood: bloody human sacrifices on all occasions, besides witchcraft and all the rest of grovelling superstitions." A spell with old Chaka, the Zulu, would have made such people pray God to take them back to Christendom. Then there is Thibet. It is all very well to publish morocco leather bound copies of the "Light of Asia" in which Buddhism is idealized. But what is Thibet? Generally it is lousiness, filthiness, blank superstition, devil dancing and worship, ignorance and fatuity. Yes, it is true, as Wendell Holmes is reported to have said in words to this effect, "If you can find ten square miles of the earth fit to live in where Jesus Christ is not known at all, I will give up my case."

THE CASE OF RUSSIA.

We may now look at a country of which the rulers seem to be violently anti-Christian though the mass of the people have retained their faith and many have died for it. I mean Russia. Russia has fallen into the hands of bitter and relentless enemies of Jesus. Here is a country where at present as far as the rulers go "The Gospel is not." A few critics of Christ, like Mr. Wells, visit Russia as "specially conducted" trippers—so-called investigators—and have all they see carefully cooked for them. But even they, I notice, seem quite glad to get back to Christendom that still acknowledges Christ as Lord. They do not want to settle where "the Gospel is not." Let them settle in Russia and talk as freely about its rulers as they do under the shadow of St. Paul's, they would know about it. Yes. They would soon find that where the Son of Man is spit on, murder becomes rife. Now we come to a land of which it cannot be said, that the Gospel is unknown but where it is not operative to any extent in its public and social life. I mean China. Why is it that rich Chinese in Peking build sumptuous houses in Tientsin? We rightly call them "funkholes." It is because Peking and other interior places "where Christ's law is not" are not as safe as in Tientsin where Christian law does prevail. The Hon. Bertrand Russell seems to think Chinese civilization is, in some respects, superior to our's. Well, let him build a villa in Honan or somewhere in the interior, as some people want us all to do, and come wholly under Chinese law. He would find out that a cottage in West Ham is better than a sumptuous villa in Honan. All these laudators of Chinese civilization live in the foreign settlements or get back as quickly as they can out of it to Christendom. China! There is the scandalous case of Mr. Elly Widler, one of my old Shanghai Boys' Brigade Boys who still holds the record for the high jump for boys on this coast—it is some 5 ft. 9 in. There he is engaged in legitimate business, yet captured, not by bandits but by an official and thrust into a filthy prison and starved on rotten food. What is the use and where is the justice of the lie that "these things happen in the west." No they don't. In Christendom there are no generals with thousands of troops who yet let bandits in thousands rob and murder under their noses. People who talk as if the Bible, as if Christ had done nothing to create respect for man and law will have a sore time of it when they all "stand before the judgment-seat of Christ" to give an account of themselves, I have in my hand a cutting from a recent paper. An unhappy place called Likwanchiao has been bandited—"2,000 casualties"—and I read of people being soaked in paraffin and set on fire. Yes, it would do good if some of the pundits of culture who come round the world lecturing on the defects of Christian civilization were to have a spell at Likwanchiao and in scores of other wretched Chinese cities. No doubt there are some outrages in Christian lands but the difference is huge. In our lands the law is operative. Here it isn't. It is all pretence.

THE SOWER OF CHRISTIANITY.

There is no time to go into the whole subject of all that the west owes to the Bible and to Jesus Christ. His words, His spirit, His personality have so inter-woven themselves with the thought and everyday life of the west that all these miserable critics seem unaware that nine out of ten subjects of thought and action are what they are through Him. Our commonest presuppositions are not Teutonic, not Celtic but Christian. Christ's idea of things are of the very air we breathe. Take the value set on man as man. Where do we get that? From this that Christ died for us. "Thy brother for whom Christ died" is Paul's standard of value, and it is ours. Honour to women, to children, to the poor and miserable are wholly Christian. Pity for the useless cripple is Christian. I read lately in a book by one of these high-browed superficial unbelievers of his method of dealing with aborigines of lands like Australia. He would give them 20 years to civilize themselves, then "by methods known to us" finish them. That is, put them in lethal chambers like mangy dogs. Yes, as soon as His "law is not," man soon shews what he really is. We talk about "western civilization." Its proper name is Christian civilization. It is absurd to suppose that all modern amenities, discoveries and improvements in the means of living have originated in Christian lands and that never the less Christianity has had nothing to do with them. Why is the east learning from the west? Because the west has had the Christ of God, the Son of Man, the Saviour in it. The power of Christ is always at work cleaning away sins, even in lands where He is not openly acknowledged. They cannot keep Him out. Chinese have denied to me that the destruction of baby girls has ever been practiced in China. They know it has been but they are ashamed to admit it. I have no doubt that hara-kiri, or bowel gashing will soon disappear from Japan. Why? Because of the pressure of Christian ideas of man though Japan is not yet a declared Christian land. We have not to measure the power of Christ by the number of individual conversions that take place but by the constant leavening of the life of the world, by the sweetness, the grace, the humanity, the truth, and love of the Saviour. His kingdon is always coming because he is always present.

CHINA'S SKIES FOR JANUARY

By Sirius.

2 Earth in perihelion, 10 a.m. Distance from Sun 91,341,000 miles.
3 Mars in conjunction with moon, midnight. Mars 4°.4 S.
Mercury attains its ascending node, 4 a.m.
4 Moon in perigee, 6.0 p.m.
Jupiter in conjunction with moon, 9 a.m. Jupiter 4°.5 S.
6 New moon ●, 8.34 p.m.
Slight cold sets in, Hsiao-han 小寒
7 Mercury in conjunction with moon, 7 p.m. Mercury 1°.6 S.
9 Venus in conjunction with moon, 4 a.m. Venus 3°.2 S.
13 Mercury in inferior conjunction with Sun noon.
14 First quarter (moon) ☽, 6.30 a.m.
16 Moon in apogee, 0.5 p.m.
18 Occultation of Aldebaran in Taurus, 4.6 a.m.
21 Sun enters Aquarius 3.20 p.m.
Severe cold commences Ta-han 大寒
22 Full moon ○, 8.43 a.m.
23 Saturn in quadrature, 3 p.m.
24 Mercury stationary in the heavens, 7 p.m.
Neptune in conjunction with the moon, 8 p.m. Neptune 1°.4 N.
29 Last quarter (moon) ☾, 1.39 p.m.
Saturn in conjunction with moon, 3 a.m. Saturn 2°.1 S.
31 Mars in conjunction with moon 2 p.m. Mars 4°.9 S.

PHASES OF THE MOON.

	Day.	Hour.
New moon	● 6	8.34 p.m.	Peking time
First quarter	☽ 14	6.30 a.m.
Full moon	○ 22	8.43 a.m.
Last quarter	☾ 29	1.39 p.m.
Moon in perigee	4	6.0 p.m.
„ apogee	16	0.5 p.m.

RISING AND SETTING OF THE SUN AT INTERVALS OF 5 DAYS.

	Rises	Sets
1	7.0 a.m.	5.7 p.m.
5	7.1 a.m.	5.10 p.m.
10	7.2 a.m.	5.14 p.m.
15	7.1 a.m.	5.18 p.m.
20	7.0 a.m.	5.23 p.m.
25	6.58 a.m.	5.28 p.m.
30	6.55 a.m.	5.32 p.m.

In January, the mornings increase 5 minutes in the latter half of the month, and the afternoons 25 minutes, making a total of half an hour for the latitude of Shanghai.

ASPECTS OF THE PRINCIPAL PLANETS.

MERCURY.—An evening star, visible in the first week of the month. Attains its ascending node on the 3rd; in conjunction with moon on 7th; in inferior conjunction with the sun on 13th; stationary on 24th.
Sets on 6th at 6.16 p.m. (1h. 6m. after sunset).

VENUS.—An early evening star in Capricornus, moving later on into Aquarius. Visible for over 2 hours after sunset, low down in the S.W.
In conjunction with moon on 9th (3rd after new).
Sets on 1st at 7.14 p.m.;
„ 16th at 7.45 p.m.;
„ 30th at 8.18 p.m.

MARS.—An early evening star in Libra, advancing at the end of the month into Scorpio.
In conjunction with moon on 3rd and again on 31st.
Rises on 1st 3.3 a.m. (3h. 57m. before sun):
„ 16th at 2.50 a.m.;
„ 30th at 2.38 a.m.

JUPITER.—A morning star in Scorpio, north of Antares. In conjunction with moon on 4th.
Rises on 1st at 4.40 a.m.;
„ 16th at 3.45 a.m.;
„ 30th at 3.12 a.m.
(3h. 43m. before the sun).

SATURN.—An early morning star in Virgo, visible from midnight till sunrise at the end of the month.

to be a tragedy or a crime.

Under existing conditions the maintenance of the burlesque is profitable to the official caste. The perpetuation of disorder is profitable to those in office and dear to all aspirants; and the existing state of chaos gives perfect liberty to those who have pet theories to work out or fight out, like Wu Pei-fu and Sun Yat-sen, to experiment to their hearts' content at the expense of China's peace and the expense of those who have relations with China. The restoration of peace and something like Government therefore depends very largely upon finding a way of making disorder unprofitable to the troublemakers, a thesis which the writer has stated before and which he shall have reason to reiterate so often before he is finished that it will be very monotonous. Incidental to this root desideratum, however, there are a number of very obvious conditions to the reunification of China and the re-establishment of peace.

PEKING'S BANDITS AND OTHERS.

Somewhere, in Peking or elsewhere, a Government must be set up which will inspire trust and respect throughout the country, so that no party or element will have a legitimate excuse for withholding either financial, military or moral support. One cannot expect the provincial satraps, in their independent position to remit money to Peking when they have reason to believe that this same money would be squandered more recklessly by the Peking parasites than by their own. One cannot expect to re-establish the ancient prestige of Peking in the provinces while Peking's officials have neither the physical nor the moral force to command respect.

The demoralized army, useless alike for national defence and for the preservation of internal order, must be reduced to a minimum before there can be any hope of reforming it and making a compact national army of it. Five divisions of the right kind of troops could restore order in China within a year. One hundred and twenty divisions of armed coolies and uniformed tufei are simply so many useful beasts of burden gone wrong.

To make possible the disbandment of troops a first essential step is the discouragement of banditry. The disbanded soldier who has never known any real discipline in the ranks, now has two alternatives when he leaves the army. One is to go home and work and the other is to turn bandit until he is reinlisted. The first essential towards the restoration of order is to eliminate the second of these alternatives so that when the soldier leaves the army he will have nothing more attractive to do than hunt for work. All this talk of providing soldiers with public work or of opening new fields of colonization to soldiers is criminal nonsense at this juncture. The first task before the military who really want to reduce their armies is to use what forces they have to make banditry so horribly unprofitable that no disbanded soldier will think of turning to it if he can find honest employment. After that, if there is not work for all, it is time enough to talk of new public works and of soldier colonies on the frontiers.

THE CHINESE LOVE OF PRETENCE.

Of course the military commanders will never disband their half trained, half paid, truculent, half-bandit, and wholly useless hordes of armed coolies until they have to. The Chinese are very fond of form and shadow; very fond of "face" and bluff. The magistrate making an official progress through his bailliwick would rather have a hundred recruited beggars, whom the whole world knows to be beggars, carrying his insignia of office than ten decently clad and efficient bodyguards of his own. The Chinese diplomatist would rather be Minister of Foreign Affairs in a Government internationally recognized, though its edicts carried not beyond the city walls, than a provincial commissioner of foreign affairs in a province enjoying millions monthly in revenues and commanding general respect through a perfect administration. The Chinese General would, by the same token, rather command ten divisions of wholly useless and generally mutinuous ruffians with sticks in their hands than one division of the world's best troops with the most modern equipment. While this spirit prevails it is wholly useless to talk of disbandment. This spirit has first to be broken.

Bandit suppression is another task which no official will ever undertake seriously until he has to. First of all the bandits make good recruiting material. Secondly they do not bother the officials much but prey upon the people. Thirdly, it pays to have the soldiers making fein's at the bandits which they do not follow up, because the bandits then abandon their loot in opium and specie which the soldiers seize, thereby enriching themselves at the indirect expense of the people, so that they do not have to be paid so often.

Finally, no military commander wants to tax the endurance or strain the loyalty of his soldiers in bandit suppression when he may be called upon at any time to use the full strength of his cohorts for his own political advancement. Armies, under the modern pernicious system in China have come to be the personal political weapons of their commanders like the voting following of a Chicago ward boss. The strength of these armies must not be dissipated in the public service or they might fail the big chief when his personal interests were at stake. Until this attitude is made unprofitable there is no chance of peace and order in China.

THE POLITICAL SCAVENGERS.

The establishment of a decent Government in Peking which no provincial could conscientiously refuse to support is so much a matter of personality, plus diplomatic attitude, that it is an extremely delicate subject at this juncture. One of the first essentials to such a Government is the elimination of the riff-raff. Tsao Kun's people realize this and are busy working towards such elimination, but the joke of it is that when all the riff-raff is eliminated there will be no one left but Tsao Kun, whereupon Tientsin will have another distinguished resident. In all China there are only two men in line for a dictatorship, benevolent or otherwise, who are not encumbered with huge followings of political scavengers. They are Wu Pei-fu and Chang Tso-lin. Wu Pei-fu does not want the responsibility and has not the executive ability to rule the country if it were thrust upon him. Chang Tso-lin's record is against him. China simply would not tolerate him and, if he were established in Peking, his egotism and selfishness would ruin him within a few months. Tuan Chi-jui and Sun Yat-sen would be hopelessly lost and helpless without their retinues of evil geniuses whom the Chinese people would not abide for a fortnight at this juncture. The immaculate Peking Government is conditional upon the will of some fighting individual with administrative ability and the still rarer ability to discipline his "gang" to seize the capital and cleanse it. Not only is the fighting individual with administrative ability conspicuously lacking at this moment, but the will to live up to responsibilities and discipline the riff-raff does not exist in the minds of the few courageous fighters now adorning the Chinese chequer board. The bearing of the diplomatic attitude upon the state of Peking is most important, but has another place in this discussion. It need only be added, in surveying the existing field, that while neither Wu Pei-fu nor Chang Tso-lin is now encumbered with the political followings which are the curse of other leaders, neither could establish himself firmly in a dictatorship without using as allies a great horde of pernicious military freebooters who would expect the chief to perpetuate the special prerogatives of their class established under the Republic. There is therefore little immediate hope for the evolution of an immaculate Peking Government enjoying anything like authority before the fundamental conditions essential to good order have been met. It all leads back to the original thesis: that disorder must be made unprofitable, etc., etc.

SOLUTIONS BEFORE THE PUBLIC.

The major schemes hitherto broached for the restoration of peace and unity in China all fall under the following heads:—

Reunification by force under the "one strong man."

A conference of the big leaders under the moral check of public opinion.

The restoration of the Manchu monarchy.

The erection of a new dynasty.

Peaceful evolution under the new constitution.

A federation of autonomous provinces.

Foreign intervention.

In the writer's humble opinion no one of these suggestions can be wholly rejected and yet no one of them offers a complete solution. The arguments for and against each would fill a library and would then satisfy no one. An outline of these may serve, however, to stimulate discussion which is what we need if there is to be such a thing as intelligent public opinion.

(To be Continued)

THE FOUR FIGHTING BUDDHAS OF THE CHIHLI PARTY

(八金剛), the four chin-kang or big idols usually found and supposed to stand guard at the entrance of a Buddhist temple).

There are various signs of mutual distrust and jealousy noticeable among the Chihli partisans, remarks the "Shanghai Journal of Commerce." It has been for some time recognized that three distinct factions hold sway in the Chihli fold, to wit: the Paoting, Tientsin and Loyang factions. General Wu Pei-fu, the Loyang leader, is admittedly the one enjoying the strongest military backing. Having emerged victorious from many a military conflict, he has acquired a proud and overbearing manner in his dealings with not only his inferiors, but also his equals.

General Wang Chen-ping, the Tuli of Chihli, is the bulwark of the Tientsin clique, (although Tsao Jui is the real leader.) Wang, having successfully waylaid the Presidential train and secured the Presidential seals and rendered other signal services in connexion with the election of Tsao Kun, was soon appointed Tuli of Chihli as well as Deputy Inspector-General of Chihli, Shantung and Honan; but being still subordinate to Wu Pei-fu, he is by no means satisfied. His chief ambition is to gain the power of control over the norther section of the Tientsin-Pukow Railway.

NANKING'S CRUMPLED ROSELEAF.

Besides these three factions General Chi Hsieh-yuan, strongly ensconced at Nanking, has always thought himself to be the sole trustee as regards affairs in and concerning the southeastern provinces. His promotion to the Inspector-Generalship of Kiangsu, Anhui and Kiangsi has whetted his ambition to such an extent that he is reported to be casting covetous eyes on Chêkiang. In this direction, his aggressive policy is, however, somewhat thwarted by Wu Pei-fu, who considers himself to be the senior among Tsao Kun's counsellors (he often speaks of himself as the eldest son of Tsao Kun), and who has been consistently advocating an alliance with Tuan Chi-jui and Lu Yung-hsiang. Wu is said to have assured a deputation from Chêkiang that no one would have the temerity to attack Chêkiang without his consent, which assurance sounds in the ear of Chi Hsieh-yuan like a challenge to his authority, since Chi has always regarded the southern section of the Tsin-pu Railway and all regions in the lower reaches of the Yangtze River as solely within his sphere of influence, while Wu, being Inspector-General of Chihli, Shantung and Honan, has really had no right to meddle in his (Chi's) affairs

HUPEH'S METEORIC RISE.

Then there is General Hsiao Yao-nan, Tuchun of Hupeh, whose meteoric rise to power has been chiefly due to Wu Pei-fu's patronage and who should of course belong to the Loyang faction. But his appointment to be Inspector-General of Hunan and Hupeh has raised his position to the same level as that of Wu Pei-fu. Although Hsiao appears outwardly to be as willing as ever to defer to the wishes of Wu, yet sometimes he finds it hard to suppress a rising feeling of revolt when Wu, accustomed to treat him as his subordinate, is issuing orders or making decisions without consulting him in the least.

These four leaders are popularly known as the four fighting Buddhas of the Chihli Party. Although Wu Pei-fu of Loyang, Wang Chen-ping of Tientsin, Chi Hsieh-yuan of Nanking and Hsiao Yao-nan of Hupeh are all apparently serving their chief Tsao Kun as loyally as of yore, it is nevertheless an indisputable fact that the Chihli Party has split itself into many petty factions, each working for its own interest or for that of its leader without any guiding principle and regardless of the common good; and that they will some day inevitably fall out and then we may see the end of the Chihli Party, is a foregone conclusion.

THE Kiangsu Educational Association (one of the strongest organizations in China) has lodged a protest with the authorities against the establishment of a long-distance telephone service between Nanking and Shanghai as they fear that the service will be used as a mortgage for a new provincial loan.

A SYSTEM of house tax is being considered by the Peking Municipal Council whereby there will be three classes of houses. Those of the first-class will be charged at the rate of 30 cents per room per month, the second-class 20 cents and the third-class 10 cents. Buildings of more than one storey will be counted as 10 rooms irrespective of the number contained. The levying of such a tax on the homes of foreigners has not yet been decided upon.

WATER BLISTERS ON CHILD'S BODY

Face and Hands. Itching and Burning Severe. Lost Sleep. Cuticura Heals.

"My child's body, face and hands were covered with water blisters which formed sore eruptions. The itching and burning were so severe that she could not sleep, and her face and body were so badly disfigured that she was terrible to see.

"I tried different remedies which were of no avail. I read an advertisement for Cuticura Soap and Ointment and sent for a free sample, which helped her. I bought a further supply which completely healed her." (Signed) Mrs. Margaret Richardson, 24, Diana St., Newcastle-on-Tyne, Eng.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment are ideal for every-day toilet uses.

Soap 1s., Ointment 1s. 3d. and 2s. 6d. Sold throughout the Empire. For sample each free address: F. Newbery & Sons, Ltd., 27, Charterhouse Sq., London, E.C.1. Also for mail orders with price. Cuticura Soap shaves without mug.

The China Mutual Life Insurance Co. Ld.

A BRITISH COMPANY

Registered under the Hongkong Ordinances and with the Board of Trade (England)

With Assets totalling Taels 10,165,190.33.

AGENCIES THROUGHOUT ASIA

Policies free from all unnecessary conditions and restrictions. Reduction of Premiums for Home Residence

HEAD OFFICE: SHANGHAI

We specialize exclusively in:—

Varnishes, Paints, Colours, Distempers, Enamels, etc.

and CARRY LARGE STOCKS to Meet every Requirement

Send for our Catalogue and Tint Books of Specialities

"SYNOLEO" (Colourwash)
"FALCONITE" (Enamel)
Fadeless Greens and other Ready Mixed Paints

All Forwarding, Shipping and Customs work attended to gratis.

Great Britain's Largest Paint Manufacturers

WILKINSON, HEYWOOD & CLARK, LTD.

SHANGHAI HONGKONG

CHINA'S SEARCH FOR PEACE

Can She Hope to Find It? The Causes of Her Falling to Pieces: Facts to Be Faced Before Remedy

From Rodney Gilbert.

Peking, Dec. 25.

This is the season when the minds of all good Christians ought to turn, not lightly but quite solemnly, to thoughts of peace. A good many million so-called "heathen" have been sending out telepathic (one is almost inclined to crowd more into the word and write it telepathetic) prayers for [illegible] past without regard to season and would probably find it difficult to wish more ardently at one time than at another for the restoration of order in the Middle Kingdom. Foreign traders, bankers, [illegible] consuls and diplomats in China all pine for the restoration of order and watch every movement that appears to open a way to peace with such ardour that they are ready to commit any indiscretion in the pursuit of this Will o' the Wisp. If there was ever a Power which fostered disorder in China as a policy, it has long since buried that policy under a mountain of regrets. As a stimulus to peace thoughts Sir Robert Ho Tung has lately spent a great deal of time and energy in an attempt to bring all the disturbers of the peace in China together in a conference upon which public opinion would be focussed with such intensity that they would be forced to come to some agreement or confess that they had no desire for peace. As a further stimulus at this season a contemporary has offered prizes for the best peace programmes. There cannot be too much agitation along these lines, nor too much discussion whether intelligent or otherwise. From a confusion of opinions and expressions of opinion an orderly programme may well be evolved to which all thinking men in China, whether Chinese or outsiders, can adhere. Unless a plan is evolved through discussion of many plans public opinion will never advance beyond a vague yearning which the fathers of disorder in China can safely ignore and peace in China will have to await the slow and painful political evolution of order. Neither the people of China nor the outside world has the patience for this.

The writer of this article, like scores of others who make it their business to think about Chinese affairs, has worked out no panacea for China's ills. Some of the causes of disorder are, however, apparent and it does no harm to review them. Some of the conditions essential to the restoration of order are also fairly apparent. Some of the means by which these conditions may be met can also be pointed out. That these things are worth pointing out, however clumsily, is the writer's apology for entering upon what will probably be a long and tedious dissertation.

DIRECT OPPONENTS OF PEACE

[illegible] squarely it must first be understood that there is a fair-sized army of persons in China who do not want peace, nor reunification, nor the establishment of a respectable Government capable of maintaining order throughout the country. Some of these persons do not want peace on any conditions because they know that there would be [illegible] on [illegible] made an efficient Government. Others want peace on condition that they or their cliques are the absolute masters of the provinces and that they shall monopolize all the privileges, perquisites, powers and profits which Governments enjoy under the "Republic." These conditions are not consistent with the establishment of a permanent and efficient Government because these persons are for the most part wholly unfit to build or manage such a Government. These conditions are therefore unacceptable to the Chinese people and to the outside world. In addition to these two classes there are comparatively unselfish and unambitious persons in positions of great power who have mapped out their own roads to the re-establishment of order, have evolved their own peace plans, often opposed to the ambitions and peace plans of everyone else and who will not consider for a moment the possibility of restoring order in any way but their own. These three classes include practically every military commander, every politician in office and every political agitator of any influence in China. All of these are either wholly opposed to peace or are unwilling to consider peace except on terms acceptable to themselves only.

The men who do not want peace on any condition are the camp followers and parasites of men like Tsao Kun, Sun Yat-sen, Tuan Chi-jui and of each and every Tuchun, because they know that any respectable Government of whatever nature would eliminate them as an essential to its own respectability and permanence. Every Chinese in touch with public affairs knows who these men are in each camp, so there is no need to create bad feeling by making a list of them. The perpetuation of disorder is absolutely essential to the continued power and profit of a great number of persons in both Tsao Kun's and Dr. Sun's camps, for instance.

SPECIAL PRESERVES.

Chang Tso-lin would never consider any scheme of reunification in China which would not leave him absolute monarch of the Three Eastern Provinces. Tang Chi-yao, under certain conditions, might agree to acknowledge the sovereignty of Peking if he were left to rule his own domain as a feudal prince. Chi Hsieh-yuan would never yield absolute obedience to any Government. He is pleased to be the supporter of Peking because he needs Peking's support, but he is not the servant of Peking either as a military commander or as a governor. No matter how clean and benevolent a Government is established in Peking, Canton or elsewhere, he will continue to keep the pot boiling, to foment political conspiracies and feuds and to advocate such piffle as provincial autonomy (meaning autonomy for Chi Hsieh-yuan) until he sees some chance of stepping into his objective, the Presidency, when he, like Tsao Kun, will become a pious advocate of reunification—under himself. No one, in or out of a conference, will ever be able to persuade Dr. Sun Yat-sen and General Wu Pei-fu that they are not "called" to reunite China by force. Each claims, with genuine fervour, to yearn for peace; but each firmly believes that there can be no peace in China while the other is above the sod. Each is ready and willing, in the interest of eventual peace of course, to drain China dry in order to eliminate the other and a lot of lesser lights.

While all these promoters of disorder in China remain in positions of power, or continue to hope for power or continue to believe that in carrying on civil war they are working for China, peace seems very remote indeed. To bring the prospect of peace into the foreground it is obvious that China's whole official caste will have to be disciplined in some way. Some will have to be eliminated, others converted either by suasion or force, but in a more general way the fundamental problem of the restoration of order in China is how to force all the fathers of chaos in China to want peace, to make disorder as unprofitable and as uncomfortable to the official caste as it now is for the Chinese people and for foreign traders. Any scheme which does not take this fundamental problem into consideration goes wide of the mark and is wholly superficial. One must always bear in mind that a great majority of the men now wielding power in China will not find peace and reunification desirable except under the most stringent coercion, whether moral or physical, and in evolving a scheme for the restoration of order one must provide for such coercion in one form or another.

The events and tendencies which have wrecked efficient Government in China, disorganized the army, built up the Tuchun system, made promiscuous civil war profitable, promoted wide spread banditry and pauperized the Peking Government, are fairly familiar to all foreign residents, but a review of suggested cures for this state of things has to be prefaced by a review of causes to make a complete picture.

CHINESE NOT HOMOGENEOUS.

The Chinese people are not nearly so homogeneous as most Occidentals think. The original Chinese in the lower Yellow River valley were surrounded by non-Chinese people of a hundred breeds. Very few of these came into the Chinese amalgamation voluntarily. China was built up into a great union by successive conquests and each accretion was cemented to the whole, partly by a mixture of blood which partially obliterated racial and linguistic differences, but much more through the cultural invasion which followed every invasion by force of arms. This cultural cementing process is still going on and, in a round dozen Chinese provinces is by no means complete. Until very recently nothing resembling a national consciousness or a national spirit existed in China. On the contrary, there has always been a powerful centrifugal force at work in China, fostered by prejudices based on the consciousness of racial and linguistic differences, which has had to be periodically checked by force. Each successive dynasty since the time of Ch'in Shih-huang, builder of the Great Wall, has had to reconquer China and reassemble the flying fragments. The Emperors of each successive dynasty have ruled first as conquerors and then as cultural high-priests and then as the fathers of a large family—the "four hundred million brothers." The Chinese people have under each successive dynasty been first the conquered slaves, then the worshippers and then the children of the Emperors. It was upon these conditions that unity and respect for authority in China have always been built and upon no other. China has never been united in recent centuries through the common consent of its varied factors, or through a common race consciousness or through a common national feeling, but through a common fealty to the reigning Emperor inspired either through fear or respect. Officials throughout the Empire were obeyed and tribute was paid them because they were the personal delegates of the Emperor and therefore shared to some degree his holiness as conqueror, cultural high-priest and all-father of the 400,000,000.

WHEN THE MANCHUS FELL.

It was along these traditional lines that the Manchus conquered China, fathered in the outlying fragments which had broken off, became cultural high priests and fathers of the people. In the latter two rôles they continued to rule long after their real military force had been spent. In the middle of the last century the prestige of the dragon throne received such rude shocks that if it had not been for the tradition of Imperial holiness, the Manchu Dynasty would have been overthrown. The Taiping rebellion was put down, not by the Manchus but by Chinese armies under Chinese generals, assisted by foreigners. The great Moslem rebellion in the Northwest was suppressed by a Chinese general. The French and British forces invaded Peking and forced the Emperor to fly to Jehol. The outcome of the Chinese-Japanese war was a tremendous humiliation to the Manchus and gave great impetus to the growth of anti-dynastic secret societies throughout the country. The Boxer war struck the last blow at Manchu prestige, after which the Dynasty did nothing but attempt to conciliate its many enemies within the realm and started to slide inevitably to its doom. The Revolution of 1911 found the whole nation ready and willing to see the Manchu rulers hounded out of the high places, but really no more ready for the overthrow of the traditional Imperial system and the substitution of a democracy than at the end of the Oun, T'ang or Mongol dynasties. This is a truth which most foreigners, the writer among others, has had to learn since the event when the great majority of us were ardent Republicans and were delighted to find China, as we thought, emerging from darkness into a full appreciation of the blessings of the Occidental brand of democracy.

What the vast majority of the Chinese people were really ready for and willing to concur in at the time of the revolution, was a change of dynasty and not a change of system or an obliteration of old traditions. They did not expect nor want a Republic, because not one in ten thousand had the slightest conception of what a Republic was or how such a Government's affairs were ordered. Not one high official in a hundred had any idea what democracy meant. They haven't now. It happened, however, that the hotheads who took the lead in the anti-dynastic movement were imbued with foreign ideas of democracy and because they had the courage to take the initiative their ideas prevailed. It also happened that Yuan Shih-kai saw an opportunity in the Revolution to get rid of his disreputable and discredited Manchu masters and to make the modern Peiyang army which he had created the ruling element in China and therefore allowed the revolutionaries to win and saw fit to cede them a certain amount of "face."

YUAN'S GREAT MISTAKE.

The only mistake which Yuan Shih-kai made was in crushing the Manchus first and in trying to crush the revolutionaries afterwards. Had he used his Peiyang army, then a solid and invincible organization, to crush the Republican revolution and had he then removed the Manchus, he could have established a new dynasty without much if any fighting and would have satisfied the real aspirations of the Chinese people who really wanted fresh blood in a new native dynasty as opposed to a worn out line of degenerate aliens. By pretending to be "president," by heaping honours upon the half-baked Republicans, by tolerating a parliament of the wild-eyed in Peking, before attempting to set up his dynasty, Yuan Shih-kai gave unlimited "face" to the promotors of the imported and wholly misunderstood "isms" and allowed time for a whole lexicon of imported republican cant to be translated into Chinese and to be made sacred shibboleths within the official caste. Thousands of nobodies in every province in China who memorized this lexicon of cant attained official positions. Thousands of petty persons who could show that they had worn officer's uniform on the revolutionary side were given lucrative administrative posts. The poor old chaps brought up in the imperial mandarinate were utterly bewildered but hastened to conform. They bought foreign clothes, learned to shake hands and to doff their bowler hats gracefully, quickly acquired the necessary republican vocabulary and found that it paid. They, like the upstarts, rose as they could never have hoped to have risen under the Empire. So, when Yuan Shih-kai tried to set up his new dynasty, he found not only the new upstart element against him but that a vast majority of the old boys, who had learned that ignorance, impudence and anarchy—alias democracy—paid, were also determined that real authority and respect for authority should not be restored. These are all home truths about China which the majority of us have fought against believing for many years but which later developments have proved up to the hilt.

THE UPRISING OF THE TUCHUNS.

After Yuan Shih-kai's death, in the late spring of 1916, the next strongest man in the Peiyang military clique took over the control of China's affairs and promptly took the one essential step towards the disintegration of China and the demoralization of the army. He called a Tuchun conference. Immediately after the Revolution certain provinces had come under the control of revolutionary militarists while others had been put under the control of Peiyang militarists by Yuan Shih-kai. The provincial administrations had become military in opposition to China's most sacred traditions; yet the old idea of receiving Peking's mandates with hesitant fingers and of "trembling and obeying" was by no means dead. This idea Tuan Chi-jui killed by calling the first conference of provincial military governors, the first Tuchun conference. The military small fry, who had risen to titles and emoluments beyond their dreams under Yuan Shih-kai, were actually invited to Peking to help to frame Peking's policy. They naturally went back to their provinces with the idea that Peking could not do without them, could not replace them and that Peking therefore owed them a living. These ideas were further fostered under the presidencies of Feng Kuo-chang and Hsu Shih-chang. Peking not only neglected to exact tribute from the provinces, but actually bought their continued allegiance through liberal subsidies paid out of the proceeds of Japanese loans—the loans of the notorious Nishihara series. Under such conditions the Tuchuns regarded their appointments as governors as rights of carte blanche exploitation. They overtaxed their provinces, keeping the entire proceeds and remitting nothing to Peking, and at the same time insisted upon receiving funds from Peking for the payment of their troops, which were no more units in the national army but bands of personal retainers over whom Peking had no control except at the pleasure of the Tuchun. If the Tuchun of Hupeh was moved to Shantung he took his personal army with him. If Peking demurred, he sat where he was and declared his independence, defying Peking to move him.

"PSEUDO."

Without reviewing modern history further, this brief outline of events and tendencies will suffice to show what is the matter with China and why. Before the Republicans and other liberals rise upon their hind legs and start wailing the constitutionalist wail, it might be well to state that this is not an argument for monarchical restoration. Not because a restoration might not be a good thing at that, but because it is not at the moment practicable—worse luck—since so many professional scoundrels have discovered how to make capital out of their adherence to a pseudo-republicanism. Most of the "isms" in China are pseudo-something-or-other. Chinese militarism is pseudo-militarism because militarism implies before anything else discipline, compact organization and loyalty; and because these happen to be the things that are most conspicuously lacking in the disrupted Chinese army. Democracy is pseudo-democracy because only one out of ten thousand individuals in China has the slightest conception of either the rights or the duties of an individual under a democracy. China's sovereign rights are pseudo-rights because neither the official caste, nor the people nor the nation as such (not to mention the various figure-head Governments) has ever done anything to earn or merit sovereign rights. The Chinese Government is most obviously a pseudo-government because it does not govern, does not collect taxes, does not pay debts and does not discharge treaty obligations. Constitutionalism is bogus because no one except those in whose favour the various constitutions have been written (namely, the writers) ever read them or pretend to understand them. In short the whole performance of Government in China is a farce, when it does not happen

WOMAN'S PAGE

NEW THROUGH AND THROUGH

O new, new hope! O sweep and scope
Of the glad, unlying seal
You are new, new, new—with the promise true
Of the dream isles to be.
—R. HOVEY.

By Elizabeth Pepys.

After the joy and sparkle of the Christmas holidays there comes to most of us a bit of a let down, a certain feeling of sad satiety. Not physical repletion, although it is true that in general we have "tried all hors-d'œuvres, all liqueurs defined, judicious drank and greatly daring, dined" which may have much to do with the blasé attitude to life which we adopt with dying December.

1923 is now over. Whether it has been good or bad there is little time left in which to improve it. Instead we look eagerly forward to 1924 and its vague promises in the hope that it will bring a stay to the "strain of the sameness grim," and while we mark time waiting for the forward march of the New Year we inwardly resolve that it shall be a better sort of twelth-month than the last.

When a boon it is that the institution of the New Year and the Fresh Leaf and the Balanced Account has taken so firm a grip of the imagination. What a gift the future is, how glorious a lottery the misty to-morrows! Logically, as well as sentimentally, every day is a fresh beginning; but when all of our world is beginning over again with us there is a great cumulative surge of resolution which sweeps along as if on a tidal wave.

Wherefore, Dearly Beloved, let us not gibe at the despised New Year resolution for there is still considerable motive power in the contagion of mob psychology and why not use it wisely, lining up for individual and community advances easily possible if undertaken with the zest which comes of a vivid outside stimulus combined with personal idealism. Only let it not be said of us as Bliss Carmon says of "The Mendicants:"

Hopeless or witless! Not one heeds,
Is lavish Time comes down the way
And tosses in the suppliant hat
One great, new-minted gold To-day."

VANISHED OLD LADIES

The Youthful Silhouette Holding the Stage

By Elizabeth Pepys.

"Of course a woman of thirty wears only gray or black because by then she has either met him or lost him." In the American Lady's Memorial, dated 1840, this is given as the unvarying rule of conduct. Indeed, the words are capitalized to stress the propriety of such behaviour, the Quakerish raiment underscored to mark the meekness of adventure. Women of a certain age surrendered quietly their chance of romance. They had nothing further to expect.

Thus Margaret Emerson Bailey introduces her poignant study of Mrs. Whitman and the poet Poe, the Dove and the Raven as she names it; but somehow the opening sentence starts us to contrasting the time when a woman of 30 had definitely done with romance with the present period when many of the modern heroines of realistic novels do not begin their careers until after that age.

When it comes to styles one almost thinks that there are no such things as old ladies any more unless one is a very grande dame wishful to accentuate one's dignity or an uncompromising rigid member of the older generation such as figure in Gertrude Atherton's "Black Oxen." Every costume seems to have been designed for the super-emaciated mannequin who must keep herself trained down as rigorously as any jockey. The lithe slim line of youth is apparently the only line of beauty.

HOW TO LOOK SLENDER.

Having decided that nowadays nobody is old, the undesirable fact remains, however, that some figures do look old in that they have ample and matronly curves instead of the angular outlines of our popular beauties. To affect the virtue of slimness if we have it not, a few hints towards mitigating the alarming tightness of the latest models, which certainly were never intended for the portly are herewith bestowed.

The straight, tube-like silhouette may be obtained by drapery cunningly adjusted, a cape-back, the softly floating panel, a vaguely enveloping sash, the apron, loose tunic or the division of the gown into a skirt and tunic blouses. The short cape must be carefully ballanced or else it fails in its mission. The general idea of these devices is to give an entirely flat effect and it is only when in motion or from a side-view that the cape is disclosed as a separate entity.

The long floating panel, bias-edged, is favoured by Worth and those hanging panels in lace are pretty additions to dancing frocks. In tulle of a contrasting colour with the gown they are charming when attached to the shoulder. The afternoon models, too, which have a slight flare at the side take away that exaggeratedly tight effect and still give the straight line in the main, while there are many indications that the full bell shaped skirt will return.

THE PILLAR OUTLINE.

OPEN SEASON FOR SHANGHAI BACHELORS

Big Game Making for Cover:

By Elizabeth Pepys.

As every Shanghai maiden and doubtless most of the eligible men about are fully aware, Nineteen Hundred and Twenty-four is a Leap Year wherein the gentler sex, usually so timid and shrinking, may with propriety lay aside the rôle of clinging vine and appear as the huntress Diana, with bow and spear. Verily Leap Year is a marvellous agency for the equalization of the sexes.

Still as Bernard Shaw, H. L. Mencken and other ungallant gentlemen have pointed out, woman is often the pursuer even in years which are not divisible by four, so man may after all be in not much greater jeopardy during the coming twelve months than he has been before. If men ever read Woman's Pages—and many superior intellects do—they might learn of plots and stratagems aimed against their single state. The ingenuity of high-salaried syndicate writers like Dorothy Dix, Beatrice Fairfax, or Mildred Champagne struggles to disclose to millions of feminine readers the world around: "How to Wear A Wedding Ring" "Why Men Like Widows," or "The Way to the Altar."

A recent article by Dorothy Dix, however, is disappointing. Writes she:

"There is no cut-and-dried follow-this-rule-and-you-cannot-fail way of doing it, because every man, so far as women are concerned, is a bunch of individual idiosyncrasies, and tastes, and prejudices, and must be approached in a different way, and worked by different methods. There is no standardized master-key to the masculine heart."

Hardly a sporting way to accept the challenge of her announced subject, which is "How to Win a Husband." Any inquiring maiden who had bought the paper on the strength of the headline would be justified in demanding her money back. How is she to know what sort of a man she has fixed her affections upon unless she be sufficiently expert in the newest fads to "psyche" her best beloved?

USEFUL HINTS.

But Dorothy goes on with a few suggestions which we haste to broadcast for the good of girls in general instead of keeping them strictly for our own use as we naturally desire to do. "Some men," says Miss Dix, "are won through their eyes. The only thing that appeals to them in a woman is beauty.

A woman's looks are all-in-all to such men, and the only way a woman can win one of them is to be better-looking than her rivals, or else develop such hypnotic powers that she will be able to make him see her as she wishes him to see her, and not as she is."

Not being able to outdistance beautiful rivals, the burning question with us is: How learn hypontism? It hardly seems a subject to be acquired by correspondence and we know of no local practitioners. Mme Palermo seems able to do anything, so it might be well to consult her.

The second type of man according to Dorothy's classification has to be jollied into falling in love with a girl. There are men who never care for any woman unless they know that she cares for them. They like to be flattered, caressed."

Easy as far as it goes but one must be sure the diagnosis of character is correct for as the author later remarks:

There are many other men who are won by a jolt instead of a jolly. To be flouted by a woman rouses their combative instinct and makes them determined to win her. A slap in the face will do more to arouse such men's interest than a kiss would.

SHALL SHE FLATTER OR FLOUT?

Which method is a girl to pursue. To choose wrongly spells failure. To our humble way of thinking we should feel that one is likely to make a fatal error, and if we might differ slightly from a recognized authority we might suggest that the Shanghai Diana study her own type rather than that of the man she wishes to ensnare. Let her say seriously to herself: "Am I a born flatterer or a natural flouter? In my sub-deb days when I refused to attend a rugger game with the next door boy did he take my hated rival and bask happily in her society thereafter, or was he plunged in gloom, only emerging to buy me sweets and beseech my company upon the day of the big match? When I told the first genius I ever met how I adored his poems did he ask to dedicate his next volume to me, or did he remember an engagement with the man across the room?" Unflinching self-examination should reveal the method best suited to her hand.

THE PURSUING WOMEN.

Miss Dix proceeds to state that many men are to be won by women making themselves necessary to them. Some men like to be pursued, and will marry any woman who will stalk them down. Other men prefer to be the hunters. They like coy, illusive women and any woman who appears to run away from them can convince them that she is the Great and Only One.

The tactics to be used depend upon the man and the opportunity, for there are many men of many minds, and they all have a different mind about women.

Which, after all, leaves us pretty much where it found us, doesn't it, except for the emphasis upon the fact that you cannot catch all fish with the same fly. There seems to be grounds for the belief that a nervous man or one of determined character will be able to withstand the perils of 1924 and for the ladies it offers the excitement of difficult quarries, so to the pursued or the pursuing of both sexes, let us only say: with Kipling's Jungle folk Good Hunting!

"SWEARING OFF"

The Favourite New Year's Sport

By Elizabeth Pepys.

Over the egg-noggs of Tuesday some interesting data was collected on that popular amusement known as New Year's Resolutions or more frequently "Swearing Off," and much light thereby thrown on the characters and aspirations of our friends. Of course even more light was let in upon the subject by some of their confidences after midnight the previous evening, but those shall be respected as confidential.

FULNESS CREEPS IN OVER ONE HIP.

A "DUD" CIGARETTE.

The first move in the right direction was reported by an airy damsel who as she maintained that she was "off fags," waved a lighted cigarette to punctuate her remarks. "Looks that way," we remarked cynically, following with our eyes the blue-grey spiral left by her gesticulating weed. "Sure thing," she responded, "there's nothing to this—no niccotine, that is. The French pharmacy has them, for people like me who don't want to look conspicuous because they know enough to give their lungs a rest occasionally. Besides it is more a habit of my hands, anyway. I like to have something to play with."

"What am I giving up"—this from a modishly attired young person, "Why, nothing. It's dead wrong to give up anything. Sacrifice, and abnegation and repressions are out of date. They are positive sins in 1924, not even negative virtues. I'm going in for everything, just as hard as I can, and I shan't give up a thing unless it's taken away by superior force."

"Something in that," assented her escort." I once said I'd give up cocktails. Never suffered so much in my life as the week I forewent them nor drank so many in the week that followed."

THE REFORMED BOOK BORROWER.

"Now why do you always emphasize the swearing-off side of things," asked the Sweet Young Thing, blushingly conscious of having no failings to correct, "My resolution is to return on January first all the books I've borrowed during the past year."

"That's easy enough," spoke up her brother scornfully, "but I'll wager you haven't enough nerve to ask people to return all the books you've lent them. All you do is to grouse about them at home!"

An awkward silence ensued for a moment, as we all examined our consciences, till the hostess broke the embarassing stillness by saying, "Probably I'm one of the offenders,—I never can remember where I got a book unless the owner's name is writ large therein. Suppose you raid my shelves and help yourselves to any volumes that are yours. You might make a pile of any that have strange names in them too. Hereafter I, too, will have an annual 'Help-yourself-to-your-own-book' day in the manner of our American cousins."

ADJUDGED SOCIALLY BANKRUPT.

"As for me," declared another as she sipped her beverage daintily. "I shall neither abjure my faults nor invite new virtues. I shall simply rid myself of worries by declaring a voluntary bankruptcy on all social obligations, especially on correspondence. Owed letters will be redeemed at the rate of one picture post card per letter, preferred creditors being those who write the newsiest screeds. Dinners will be negotiable for one cup of tea and calls are completely washed out. It is such a delight to face my friends a free woman!"

"My resolve," spoke up one whose face glowed with purpose, "is to have a coat hanger for every garment that can possibly be hung up and a dozen over for company. You know how irritating their absence is, and how one never thinks to have the wooden ones properly covered. We all have our fancies. I mean to have 1924 a luxurious year so far as coat-hangers are concerned. Why deny oneself any harmless pleasure?"

And so ran the refrain from grave to gay at all the samplings we attended until one decided that it was plainly manifest New Year's Day was a wonderful time for stock-taking and that despite several riotous resolves we heard voiced Shanghai was bound to be a brighter and better spot for at least several days after the glorious first.

HOME HUMOURS

An Elizabethan Drama.

Faithful Servant: My Lords, the King is hanged!

Queen: Then farewell, Life! [Drinks the posion.]

Villain: Ha! Ha!

Hero: Defend thyself, dog! [Villain falls.]

Faithful Servant: Mistress, I follow thee! [Stabs himself.]

Heroine: Dead! dead! O heavy tidings! [Dies.]

Hero: What, gone, Clarinda? Then die, Florando! [Falls on his sword.]

[Curtain.]

—SELECTED.

No Cause for Alarm.

Barbara's little white, bull terrier, selfappointed traffic policeman, stood in the middle of the street and barked loudly at an approaching motor. The driver kindly slowed up, whereat Barbara reassured him thus:

"He won't hurt you, Mr. Chauffeur, really he won't."

—"HARPER'S MONTHLY."

The Golf Widow's Revenge.

All summer he had been playing golf, leaving his faithful spouse at home, a golf widow, but now the golfing season has ended and he has come back to the bosom of his family. Silence greeted him as he entered the door. The faithful wife was not there. Searching the empty rooms he found a note pinned to the parlour lamp shade. It read: "I have learned Mah Jongg." That was all, but it was enough. "Good heavens;" he cried, "a Mah Jongg widower!"

—"BIRMINGHAM HERALD."

THE BOOK PAGE

GIOVANNI PAPINI

His "Life of Christ"

By [illegible]

"If God will but grant me strength and leave me my sight." A touching, human sentence. If the conditions are fulfilled, Giovanni Papini intends to write another book on a sublime topic, the story of the Mother of Christ. In this aspiration are expressed poignancy and feeling. His eyes are meanwhile opened: he hopes they will remain so. Knowing the nature of man, individually and in groups, to advance, reach culmination and then decay, which is repeatedly evidenced in history and experience, he realizes that what he fears, but what at present may seem absurd, might at a future date be a very formidable actuality.

From being an extremely unorthodox person, who in his early days did not scruple at uttering the most unthought of and original blasphemies, he has become a man with a vision. Grace was given him to write a remarkable book, remarkable under any circumstances, even considered apart from his record to date. Since it was published (the English version only came out this year) this prolific writer has added at least one other book to his list of creations, "Four and Twenty Minds." (Harrap: 10/6). There is recurrence of his former weakness: conceit due to undoubted high talents, which however can never fully atone for it, appears present. His summing up of the score or more great names is bizarre, patronising, playing to the gallery. Shakespeare, Maeterlinck and others are caricatured cleverly but carelessly, if truth is of any importance. But the mental and spiritual state of Papini when he wrote his 'Life of Christ' resembles not a little that of the Wilde of 'De Profundis.'

THE FIRST BEATITUDE.

"Blessed are the poor in spirit," must not be taken to refer to the simple, the foolish, and the idiotic, Papini healthily reminds us in his study of the Sermon on the Mount. Jesus did not particularly summon imbeciles and dullards to the Kingdom. Nor does mere social poverty constitute a passport. It must be vised by a transformation of the soul. The poor in spirit are those who are painfully aware of the moral indigence in which they and the majority dwell. To Christ the highest intelligence consists in understanding that intelligence alone is not sufficient.

Touching Satan, the author of this "Life" writes powerfully. Only the spiritually pure are tempted by Satan. The others do not notice his existence; they habitually obey him from afar. He need never approach: they fling themselves into his arms even before he has called them.

Papini is slightly hysterical in [illegible] to Rich Man. This unfortunate person, he tells us, "has chosen to live in hell, has bartered away his salvation [illegible] he's a mummy, black, deaf, dumb, blind, [illegible] and much more. Complete renunciation of wealth is the sole course. Thus our Fords, Stinneses and Leverhulmes [illegible] might take up street-sweeping. Is Papini at the Square corner selling matches yet?

A noticeable literary fault is Papini's [illegible] already intelligible and beautiful. He adds words which are superfluous and sometimes absurd. Thus, describing the woman with the alabaster box of ointment which she poured over the head and feet of Christ, he informs us:

"She has no napkin of fine linen, and her rose is all unworthy to touch the flesh of her Lord: but suddenly she remembers her hair, her long, beautiful hair that has been so much admired for its silkiness and beauty. Quickly she loosens her braids and removes pins and combs: and the blue-black mass falls about her [illegible]."

The expansion is pretty, but a trifle ridiculous. Why not a few more touches of the imagination? What about the colour of the [illegible] and a short additional list of adjectives about her long, beautiful, silky, blue-black hair?

THE TWO MYSTERIES OF THE TESTAMENT.

This Italian certainly absorbs our attention when he relates in his own way the incidents of the period which followed the Flagellation in the Temple, ('the Temple, the Academy, and the Bank were against Him'). The two Great Mysteries of the Bible he describes as the prayer of Jesus in the Garden after the Supper, and the Mystery of Judas.

He explains them as far as he is able thus: Jesus, when he cried "Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me," thought not to avoid the necessary and logical conclusion to the Sermon on the Mount, but sorrowfully of the schisms and persecutions which would follow [illegible] 'false interpretations of His Gospel by cavillers, captious disputants, visionaries, counters of syllables, weighers of the imponderable, separators of the indivisable, whose learned arrogance disembowels vital things and cuts them to pieces under the pretence of resurrecting them.'

As for the mystery of Judas, he mentions two or three theories why Judas, that particular disciple and man, was the person who had to bear the undying stigma. One is that Judas lost faith in his Master; another, that he believed but thought to force his Leader's hand by compelling Him to assert Himself; a third that knowing somebody had to betray Jesus, he took it upon himself, as a form of great expiation. It remains to us "least" ones a mystery.

QUALITIES OF PAPINI'S WORK.

It is needless to dwell on the superior attractions of a book like this one over the more hackneyed phrases of an at the same time excellent work such as Farrar's "Life of Christ." New viewpoints are given. Proofs that Christ really returned to the earth after three days are outlined. Paul, whose Corinthians was written in A.D. 58, testifies to it, and many were yet alive then who had been among the '500 brethren' or the others who are purported to have seen Him after the Resurrection, who could have disputed the point if Paul's declaration in any way erred from the truth.

Papini's work has excellent qualities. Its chief fault is perhaps expansiveness, which is oft-times out of place, if beautiful as mere description, and a certain lack of restraint, exemplified in the somewhat perfervid [illegible] which acts as an Epilogue to the book.

THE LAST OF THE VIKINGS

THE LAST OF THE VIKINGS. By Johan Bojer. Hodder & Stoughton. [illegible] from the Norwegian by Jessie Muir).

The translator of foreign languages deserves and, it is to be hoped, enjoys our perpetual gratitude. For the task is one of insuperable difficulties. These difficulties are not confined to the details of word expression, differences of idiom, differences of syntax, in languages. Probably the greatest obstacles in translation are in the different attitudes of mind, spiritual outlook, in peoples. The [illegible] task is to make his own people see with the eyes of a foreigner. It is impossible of complete realization. The work of the translator, in face of this impossibility of achievement, commands admiration. Of course the work is not done hopelessly. Nothing can be carried on without hope. The great incentive is to transfer as much as one can of the expression to another medium. No work of art can be the same in two mediums. But it is vastly interesting to try to translate a painter's idea into music or poetry; and the attempt would be appreciated by a blind man. So with languages. It is a matter of art. A work of art is individual expression, original creation. It cannot be translated. The attempts are interesting, but rather as [illegible] of the foreign artist than as translations of his work. That is why no translations live for us as works of art. The exceptions that may be advanced will probably be found to be in all cases new creative work built upon the inspiration received by the author from the foreign work. The outstanding example is Edward Fitzgerald's so-called translation of Omar Khayam. It is in fact an original creative work of art inspired by the Persian.

This book, so carefully done by Jessie Muir, carries the interest that must attend the attempted promotion of new perception. But it has also the inevitable drawbacks. It cannot give complete comprehension of the author's vision. The nebulous effect is bound, sooner or later in the reading, to weary. The tale of the fisherman of Lofoten is a simple one with no exciting events to thrill the reader. Or, if some of the events are exciting in the original, the thrill is lost in the translating. Style, distinction, apparently have to go too. Before we are halfway through the book we feel, as the blind man may feel on hearing a picture put into verse, that we had rather satisfy ourselves with the original creations that we can get than strain in the clouds after something we know we can never really apprehend. Is it ungrateful to let the thought of what we are missing spoil our appreciation of what we obtain? Perhaps. Certainly it is not Jessie Muir's fault if what she gives us of Johan Bojer only irritates because we cannot have the whole of him. However, since a translator is necessarily self-abnegatory, she may feel her aim is served in making us want more.

John Lofting.

IN THE NEIGHBOURHOOD OF THRUMS

Clever Stories of Scottish Village Life

"Bracken and Thistledown." By Robert W. Mackenna. John Murray. 7/6 net.

This is a book of excellent short stories. It seems that there is a new demand for short stories published in collections. If all were of the standard of these the demand would need no explanation. For not since Barrie wrote his tales of Thrums have we had such stories of Scottish village life. Many people consider the short story as an adjunct to the novel-writer's craft, an offshoot, even a waste product. But probably most writers would assert that the moulding and finishing of a short story is a more difficult operation than the writing of a full length novel. The easy-going methods which are permissible in the novel cannot be adopted in this work. The short story comes under much more severe criticism. The outline and the details all come within the same focus of critical vision. Consider the few that live in fame, as compared with the number of novels. Yet there must have been many more short stories than novels written in modern English. And those which remain in the mind are very few. W. H. Hudson's "El Ombu" probably none who has read it [illegible] forget. Conrad's [illegible] and "Youth:" [illegible] "The Lost God:" perhaps [illegible] a dozen more and the number is told.

These tales of R. W. Mackenna's are not all of an equal merit. How should they be? But they have an attribute in common which at once commends them and assures the book being read with pleasure from beginning to end. That is their humanity. The characters are all living people. One feels they must have been taken from life whole with all their foibles, all their failings, nothing suppressed or exaggerated. One or two of the stories are marred by the obtrusion of the author's own religious views, but in most cases the characters are developed naturally and stand without any outside propping. The best tale in the book is probably the one which tells of the Smith's young son who stayed away from church on the Sabbath on account of a "sair heid" and was discovered afterwards by his father to have gone fishing. The righteous Smith goes in search, cutting a stick on his way to thrash the boy with. On coming upon him playing a salmon he is so excited that he shouts instructions and assists in the completion of the landing before giving the boy his thrashing. The story is told extraordinarily well, without a false note anywhere.

Another excellent tale is that of the shoemaker who has a reputation for parsimony and is found after his death to have been giving a hundred pounds a year to the education of poor boys in memory of his own little son who died.

Altogether it is the best collection of short stories we have had for many a long day.

John Lofting.

ROMAN LAW

A Study By His Honour Judge Lobingier

"The Evolution of the Roman Law from before the Twelve Tables to the Corpus Juris." By Charles Summer Lobingier.

The author, who is the well known judge of the United States Court for China, has in this compact volume of convenient size dealt with the subject of which he treats very ably. The chapters in succession summarise and illustrate the evolution, development, continuity and final culmination of Roman Law in the famous codes of Justinian.

As the author states, it is the only system of law which has completed the full normal stages of development viz. infancy maturity and decline. As a natural corollory it furnishes a source of knowledge and inspiration to those who point out, with a view of alteration, the inequalities of the present system of law known to the various civilized countries of the world; in particular it is a concrete justification of the views of the advocates of codification. The Roman Law is the basis of the legal systems of the continent of Europe and the Latin States of South America and has largely influenced those Mahomedan States whose conquests included lands in Asia Minor, Africa and Southern Europe. Though it has not been the source of the two great Anglo-Saxon systems of law—English and American—still many of the conceptions of Roman Law can be traced in those systems and comparison is of undoubted utility.

The subject therefore is of vast interest and education generally beyond the classes of jurists and lawyers to whom it is of the first importance.

This volume is an excellent text book for those desiring to get a primary understanding of Roman Law. It does not claim to be more than, if one may say so, an introduction to the subject, but it fulfils its object in laying a groundwork and stimulating the reader to peruse intelligently the works of the famous commentators of various nationalities who have written on the subject and whose opinions are freely quoted by the author.

We would however desire to offer some suggestions to the author which in our opinion might increase the utility of his book. In the first instance he might with advantage illustrate in the opening chapters, and in fact throughout the book, much more fully, the many resemblances between the Anglo-Saxon and Roman systems of law; and secondly there might be omitted with advantage some of the very numerous quotations from the Institutes of Gaius.

These however are but slight blemishes in our opinion in an otherwise excellent book which we recommend to the perusal of our readers.

G. Carfax.

REALISM WITHOUT REALITY

"Life's Antagonisms." By Harry Tighe. Thornton Butterworth, Ld. London.

The reviewer's detached point of view is a difficult one to maintain after having to traverse the three hundred and more pages of "Life's Antagonisms," as this book has been named in apt ineptitude. One wearies of reading cliches over and over, but when they are used malapropos, one becomes exasperated. Moreover, poor English and a halting style could be the more readily pardoned if the story itself had any attraction. It has not. It is a scrappy account of the lives of two entirely uninteresting lower middle class families in London, who marry, breed, engage in shop keeping, and die—some of them—after a series of petty family quarrels and much nagging amongst themselves. . . . There is no particular ending to the book and certainly no plot.

The stuff of which realism is made is all here. Possibly some devotees of that school may find the book worth reading, since, obviously, Mr. Tighe found it worth writing. But it is realism without reality, or form, or breath of literary life.

Olivia Price.

Mrs. STRATTON-PORTER'S SMALL BEER

"The White Flag." By Gene Stratton Porter. John Murray. 1923. pp. 387. Price 7/6 net.

This book is characterized by a certain physical liveliness. The authoress reminds one of the lady of nursery rhyme who took it out of Dobbin Gray, the borrowed pony: "She whipped him and she slashed him and she rode him through the mire." Mrs. Gene Stratton-Porter treats her characters in a similar way. Within a very few pages she has pitched the village idiot into the water butt for no particular reason, and distributes punches and whippings around with a liberal hand. She has to relieve her feelings by continually jerking her marionettes, and a generation reared on the kinema will rejoice in one who, unlike Henry James and the introspectivists, abhors a vacuum.

After introducing a heroine to win the heart, Makala, a quite delightful girl, she pursues her with misfortune relentlessly to the last page but one of the book, while Jason, who figures for the hero, after a long struggle with fate, disqualifies himself for sympathy by an inexcusable mistake which inspissates the gloom. It is conceivable that America's plutocracy could produce such a devil of a man as Martin Morland the banker, but his vile doings could hardly have been kept secret so long in a village where, as everyone knows, ears are long and tongues are free. How the descendants of Pilgrims and pioneers tolerated this tyranny of mere money both in school and court house passes belief. Indeed, if Mrs. Stratton-Porter wielded the realistic pen of a Zola her book would be a terrible indictment of her native land. She is ready enough with accessory details which show an observant eye within the limits of the obvious, but her treatment of the larger matters is clouded with sentimentality. Her sympathy with Marcia is not very convincing, and her half admiration for "junior" because of his good looks is out of place. There is no doubt a good deal of cleverness in the book, but it is not literature.

A.N.R.

The North-China Herald

AND SUPREME COURT AND CONSULAR GAZETTE

WEEKLY EDITION OF THE NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS

(Tzu-lung-sin-cha chou kan 自 林 新 字 報)

Registered at the Chinese P. O. for transmission as mail matter under Class B.

Vol. CL. No. 2944. SHANGHAI, SATURDAY, JANUARY 12, 1924. Taels 12 Per Annum.

CONTENTS

Chinese Politics
- Peking's Unpaid and Bannermen ... 37
- Canton Customs Revenue, The 37
- Domestic Bonds and the Surplus 37
- Taming the Yellow River ... 38

Leading Articles—
- Brigandage and the Customs 39
- Dominions and Emigration, The 39
- New Cycle, The ... 39
- Other People's Business 39
- French Municipal Elections 40
- Proposed Cotton Surtax, A ... 40
- Disbandment of Chinese Soldiers 40

Notes and Comments 41

News from the Outports—
- Peking's Political Parties ... 42
- Dr. Sun's Northern Expedition 42
- Customs Crux at Canton, The 42
- Auspicious New Year in Anhui 42
- Kiangsu-Chekiang Imbroglio ... 43
- Murder of Father Soenen ... 43
- Batang Captured by Tibetan Raiders 43
- Bolshevist Cry from Canton, A 43
- Quiettist Society of Chekiang 43
- Captain Brandt's Murderers ... 43
- Beautiful and Busy Wusih ... 44
- Shensi's Masked Braves ... 44
- Navigation in the Upper Yangtze 44
- Poppy Cultivation in Fukien 44
- Prophet of New China at Ningpo 44
- Canton's Iniquitous Taxation 45
- Peking Day by Day 45
- Chinese Industrial Commission 45
- Priest's Plucky Act 45
- Attempted Assasination of the Prince Regent of Japan ... 46
- Japanese Imperial Palace Bombed, The 46
- New Japanese Cabinet, The ... 46
- Massacring of Koreans, The 47
- An Aeronautical Enterprise ... 47
- Bishop Roots 49
- Another Bandit Atrocity ... 49
- Share Boom in Hongkong, The 49

Shanghai News—
- Training Ship Hwahjah, The 50
- Epidemic of Motor Thefts ... 50
- Woosung Outer Bar 50
- English Authoress in China 50
- Motor Accident on French Bund, The 51
- Obituary—Mr. O. R. Walter 51
- Mr. Linebarger's Trip to Europe 51
- Russian Ships at Woosung, The 51
- Franconia in Shanghai, The 51
- Robbers Foiled by Amah ... 51
- Italian Opera Company ... 51
- Weddings—
  - White-Fuller 51
  - Toscani-Chadderton 51
- Christmas in the Orphanage ... 51
- "Where Friendships Are Made" 52
- Important Banking Merger ... 52
- Russian Refugees' Christmas Treat 52

Correspondence—
- Libel on Szechuan Missionaries 53
- Mencius Up to Date 53
- China and the Treaties 53
- Dr. Sun Yat-sen 53
- Kiangsu-Chekiang Imbroglio ... 53
- State of Germany, The 54

Commerce and Finance 55

Company Meeting—
- Cheng Rubber Estates, The ... 58

Sports and Pastimes—
- Golf 58
- Paper Hunt Club 58
- Football 58
- Cricket 58
- Yachting 58

Municipal Gazette News ... 58

Law Reports—
- H. M. Supreme Court—
  - Wife Locked Up in Her Bedroom, A 59
  - Bank's Claim for Tls. 8,000 59
  - Reputations of Litigants, The 59
- H. M. Police Court—
  - Maltese Seamen's Outbreak 59
  - Peacemaker, The 59
- U. S. Court for China—
  - Gunboat and a Tug in Collision 60
  - Patent Medicine for Tuberculosis 60
  - Alleged Perjury Case ... 60
  - Café Fracas 60
  - Motor Collision Case, A ... 60
- Mixed Court—
  - Theft of Chinese Bonds, The 60
  - Pilferage of Cloth 61
  - American Express Co.'s Suit 61
  - Alleged Frauds on Local Bank 61

Foreign Telegrams ... 62—66

From the Four Winds ... 67—70

Special Articles—
- Numbering the Days 71
- China's Search for Peace ... 71
- Anæsthesia 72
- China's Baby Race Club ... 73
- Chinese Flower Book, A ... 73
- A Pauper Passes (Poetry) ... 73

Book Page 74

Woman's Page 75

"The scheme is doing more to cement friendship with our Chinese friends than columns of newspaper articles . . ." — "N.-C. D. News" Correspondent

PEKING'S UNPAID AND BANNERMEN

Ancient Armourers, Bowmakers and Archers in a Bad Way: Tls. 2 a Month Before

NOW 17 COPPERS LESS SQUEEZE

From Rodney Gilbert.

Peking, Jan. 4.

Among other feats which the Ministry of Finance accomplished at the end of last month, was the payment to the Manchu reservists of the Eight Banners resident in Peking of a nominal 17 per cent. of one month's pay. The average pay for the able-bodied males on the old military lists was Tls. 2 a month, which now would be little more than a nominal pension, but would serve if paid in full to relieve distress in the families of thousands of ricsha coolies, policemen, day labourers and others without any sort of employment. A few years ago, however, the Government decided that taels were old-fashioned and substituted dollars for taels, so that the average pay on paper is now two dollars. Later a dollar was reckoned at 100 coppers, so that Tls. 2 or $2 amounted to 200 coppers or about one dollar. In paying 17 per cent the Ministry of Finance therefore paid 17 coppers, or a trifle over eight cents on each nominal tael. On even this miserable dispensation there is considerable squeeze as the money passes through various hands down to the humble recipients. The writer yesterday met a shabby young man who was acting as caretaker in an old graveyard of one of the Iron Capped Princes who said that for his nominal one month's pay of one tael he had received six coppers. Back pay is of course ignored and forgotten and these miserable doles are only granted on the modern and old New Year days, and on the 5th and 8th Moon festival days.

The whole system is of course a farce and should either be radically reformed or summarily abolished. As military units, the Eight Banners long since ceased to exist. Ninety-nine out of every hundred men on the lists have never had a weapon of any kind in their hands unless they have served in the police, the gendarmerie or the army. The lists comprise archers, bowmakers, spearmen, armourers, cavalry and artillerymen (the artillery supposedly being old muzzle-loading cannon). None of the men own any of these weapons unless as heirlooms. None have horses unless they happen to be cartmen. The men in even the small units have never seen each other. The officers of this generation have never seen their men.

HEREDITARY COLONEL INSCE. AGENT.

A sprightly young aristocrat, who is an hereditary colonel and makes a living as a fire insurance agent for a foreign firm, recently confessed to the writer that, to the best of his knowledge, he had never seen a member of his rank and file. Yet he sends in to the Ministry of Finance a monthly pay roll with a large seal on it in all solemnity.

If the periodical doles amounted to anything they might be regarded as a laudible Government charity. Obviously the payments are not sufficient to relieve any real suffering among Peking's innumerable poor Manchus and are not made in a spirit of charity. They are only kept up to provide jobs and squeeze for some petty sub-bureau and for the little Manchu banner offices.

Peking, Jan. 10. According to an unconfirmed report, Marshal Wu Pei-fu has suggested that Gen. Ma Chi be appointed Tuli of Hunan, should Gen. Chao Heng-ti persist in his refusal to cancel the autonomy of the province. Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE CANTON CUSTOMS REVENUE

Protests Against Interference Pouring in to Inspector-General in Peking

NO FOREIGN BOYCOTT AS YET

Peking, Jan. 5.

Sir Francis Aglen, the Inspector-General of the Chinese Maritime Customs, has received further telegrams strongly protesting against any misappropriation of Customs surplus funds from Chinese bankers and Chambers of Commerce of Hankow, Chinkiang, Changshu (Kiangsu), Nantungchow and Yangchow.

These show that the Chinese protests are not confined to the treaty ports but are widespread throughout the commercial centre of China.—Reuter.

Canton, Jan. 3.

Cantonese merchants are showing no signs of a boycott of British and American goods so far.

Everything is quiet on the East River and the military operations show no important changes. —Reuter.

Peking, Jan. 5.

Dr. Schurman, the American Minister, left for Canton yesterday afternoon, after which he will return to Peking.—Reuter.

AMERICA'S ATTITUDE.

Peking, Jan. 6.

In reply to questions regarding the alleged semi-official statements anent the Canton situation, Reuter learns from the American Legation that Mr. Hughes, the Secretary of State, replying to inquiries in that connexion, informed the American Legation that the State Department had nothing to do with them and knew nothing of them. The policy of the United States is in no way changed. The State Department considered that solidarity among Powers with regard to the Canton Customs was essential and the American Government refused to deal with anyone but the Peking Government. —Reuter.

DOMESTIC BONDS AND THE SURPLUS

Chinese Bankers' Public Protest against Interference by the Militarists

RESULT OF THE THREAT FROM CANTON

A declaration has been drawn up by the Shanghai Chinese Bankers' Association and the Bankers' Association of the various Provinces with reference to the threats recently current on the part of particular militarists in the country to lay hands on the Customs Surplus. It is in the following terms:

From the first year of the Republic to the present day our Government has issued Domestic Loan Bonds of different kinds amounting to no less than $498,000,000 in toto. Less a portion of about $219,000,000 already redeemed, there are still circulating in the market $379,000,000. Of such bonds the main source of final redemption as well as current payment of interest depends upon the Reserve Fund, and the security of the Reserve Fund rests on the Customs Surplus which is entrusted to the custody of the Inspector-General of Customs, Sir Francis Aglen, by the Chinese Government.

During recent years the circulation of the Domestic Loan Bonds has become much widened whereas they have been freely bought for investment by many Chinese and foreigners. Heretofore, whilst the northern militarists repeatedly strived to lay their hands on the Customs Surplus, the people of the whole country spared no endeavours in their protest. Since the Consolidated Loan Service was established in March, 1921, such security has so far been firmly fixed and should not be interfered with. Lately, however, it is reported that the militarists of the south are contemplating a claim on the Customs Surplus. That the Customs Surplus represents the Reserve Fund of the Domestic Loans is a fact well known to the whole nation. By whomsoever or whichever party, it may under no circumstances be seized nor even temporarily appropriated for any other purpose than what is designated. Anyone violating this condition will be regarded as a public enemy. Moreover, as the bonds are in circulation in the market, the bondholders represent innumerable Chinese as well as foreigners. If any one is allowed to seize the Customs Surplus it means the seizure of the security of the Loan Bonds. And should such action be permissible great injury will be done to the interests of all the bondholders.

Since our Associations represent many financial organizations of this country and especially as the Shanghai market is the centre of international trade, we fear that any misappropriation of the Domestic Loan Reserve Fund will greatly endanger Chinese as well as foreign financial and commercial interests. As we cannot well be silent we have wired to the Chinese Government and to Sir Francis Aglen strictly to safeguard such fund from beginning to end and we hereby publish this announcement in performance of our duty and for the information of all concerned.

Shanghai Chinese Bankers' Association
Bankers' Associations of The Various Provinces.

MAIL NOTICES

INWARD

Per H.A.L.S. Rhineland .. Jan. 5
Per [illegible] .. 5
Per T.K.K.S. Korea Maru ... ,, 6
Per P. & O. S. Sicilia ... ,, 8
Per R.M.S. Emp. of Russia ,, 12

OUTWARD

FOR MARSEILLES, LONDON, ETC.—
Per [illegible] Jan.
Per H.A.L.S. Pruessen ... ,, 7
Per P. & O. S. Khiva ... ,, 8
Per N.Y.K.S. Hakone Maru ,, 12

FOR JAPAN, CANADA, U.S.A. & EUROPE:
Per A.L.S. President Grant Jan. 9
Per [illegible] 12
Per [illegible] 14
Per T.K.K.S. Tenyo Maru ... ,, 15
Per O.S.K.S. Manila Maru... ,, 14
Per P.M.S. President Wilson 16

FOR MANILA, AUSTRALIA AND NEW ZEALAND VIA HONGKONG:—
Per T.K.K.S. Korea Maru Jan. 9
Per [illegible] ..
Per P. & O. S. Khiva ... ,,

PASSENGERS

INWARD

Per str. Hsin Kiangteen, December 25. From Ningpo. Mr. H. A. Powell.

Per str Hsin Peking, December 26. From Ningpo. Mrs [illegible]

Per str. Hsinfung, December 26. From Foochow. Doctor J. Reid

Per str. Suiwo, December 26. From [illegible] children, one Officer and 10 Naval Ratings

Per str. Hsin Kiangteen, December 27. From Ningpo. Mr. R. B. Palmer, Mr. and Mrs. Maingot, Miss Milligan, Mr. Tonen.

Per N.Y.K.S. Kaga Maru, December 26. From Seattle, etc. Mr. and Mrs [illegible] Sugg, Masters W. T. Sugg, R. W. Sugg, Messrs. J. F. Hein, and T. Kikuchi.

Per N.Y.K.S. Nagasaki Maru, December 21. From Japan Miss E. M. Wiser.

Per str. Woo ung, December 28. From River Ports. Mrs. Piguet.

Per str. Suiyang, December 28. From [illegible]

Per str. Hsin Peking, December 28. From Ningpo Sir Ernest Wilton and [illegible]

Per str. Kiangan, December 29. From River Ports. Rev. D. Miquany.

Per str. Hsin Kiangteen, December 29. From Ningpo. Mr. R. S. Benjamin, Mr. H. K. Macpherson, Major V. R. Bachundt.

Per str. Kutwo, December 29. From River Ports [illegible] Mrs. A. H. Stoker, Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Stone and three children, Mrs. L. Grant, Miss Shamples.

Per str. Kaiping, December 30. From Chinwangtao. Mr. A. Haas.

Per str. Szechuen, December 30. From Amoy. [illegible]

Per str. Loongwo. December 30. From River Ports. Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Rosenoff, Mr. and Mrs. Petrenko, Mrs. Govekovsky, Miss Streetoluloff, [illegible]

Per str. Chusan, December 31. From [illegible]

Per str. Wenchow, December 31. From River Ports. Rev. Lindstrom.

Per str. Kwangtee, December 31. From Hongkong. Capt. F. N. Troupe, [illegible]

Per str. Ngankin, December 31. From River Ports. [illegible] G. Kirkham, Miss B. L. Mecker.

Per str. Kanchow, January 1. From Hongkong via Swatow. Miss K. [illegible] Mr. W. E. [illegible] Mr. G. Clark.

Per str. Hsin Ningshao, January 2. From Ningpo. Mr. J. Jessen, Mr. F. Petersen.

Per str. Kiangshun, January 1. From River Ports. Mr. and Mrs. [illegible]

Per str. Poyang, January 2. From River Ports. Mr. Trimer, Mr. Hardy, Mr. and Mrs. [illegible], Miss [illegible], Miss Williams.

Per str. Hsin Peking, January 2. From Ningpo Rev. and Mrs. Wilson, Mr. A. Jacobs, Mrs. Robbins, Miss Mayhew, Mr. J. B. Jordon and Party 20, Miss E. Leitao, Miss G. N. [illegible] A. Leitao, Messrs. C. and J. Remedios, Messrs. C. and L. Souza, Miss M. Carneiro.

Per G. L. S. Glenliffer, January 2. From London. Miss [illegible] Mr. D. [illegible], Mr. [illegible]

Per str Lunsho January 2. From River Ports. Mr. [illegible], Miss O. [illegible], Miss A. M. [illegible], Mrs. S. [illegible], Miss Woodger, Mrs. Abercrombie.

Per str. Kiangwo, January 3. From River Ports [illegible] Mr. R. W. [illegible]

Per P. & O. S. Khiva, January 3. From Kobe. Mr. A. S. Mould, Mr. R. S. [illegible], Mr. E. [illegible]

Per str. Luchow, January 3. From Hongkong. Messrs. [illegible] and Wright.

Per str. Hsinchi, January 3. From Foochow. Mr. T. G. N. Giffen, Mr. R. Schwob, Mr. J. L. Ford, Mr. E. Gossard, Miss H. Gossard, Mr. J. A. Collins, Miss H. Collins, Misses E. and M. Billing, Miss E. Smith, Master H. [illegible], Miss R. Stevenson, Master [illegible] Pfeng, Misses B. and M. Lacy, Mr. R. C. Goertz, Miss E. Goertz, Mr. A. Parker, Miss Bissonete.

Per P. & O. S. Kashgar, January 3 From London. Mrs. Masseurs and two children, Mr. A. Mellor, Capt. and Mrs. McKendrick, Miss Birks, Miss Bourne, Miss Gosse, Miss Campbell, Mr. J. Clarke, Mrs. Mudie and two children, Mr. S. Sherwin, Mr. J. Addis, Mr. G. Bennett, Mr. R. Dalgetty, Mr. S. Keyze, Mr. E. Trodd, Mr. V. Lerald, Mr. A. Mills, Mr. P. Anderson, Lt. Comdr. Jones, Mr. A. Lester, Mr. A. Ranft, Mr. D. Brown, Mr. E. Levelu'k, Mrs. K. Cull and two children, Mr. J. Tabor, Mr. and Mrs. E. Aitkin, Lt. E. Beazley, Mr. and Mrs. J. Inwood and child. From Malta Mr. E. Leach. From Colombo Mr. S. Bond, Mr. A. Knight, Mr. J. Ritchie. From Marseilles Mr. D. Stewart. From Penang. Mr. A. [illegible] From Singapore. Capt. D. Lees, Mr. Evanhecis, Mr. W. H. Perrey, Mr. W. B. Moyshou. From Hongkong Mr. W. Higging, Mr. W. A. Claxton, Mr. K. H. Martin, Mr. W. E. Hargreaves, Mrs. A. Percival, Mr. A. Tebedany, Mr. A. J. Anderson, Mr. F. B. Pitcairn, Mr. E. Hewett, Mr. G. Mackenzie, Mr. E. Hiyama, Mr. and Mrs. R. P. Cole, Mr. L. McNicoll, Mr. H. Gilmore, Mr. Tessier.

OUTWARD.

Per str. Tungtiug, December 28. For Chinkiang.—Miss J. Cumming.

Per str. Hsin Peking, December 28. For Ningpo.—Mr. G. V. Monk, Mrs. Robbins, Miss Mayhew, Mr. J. H. Jordan and party (3).

Per str. Suiyang, December 29. For Hongkong—Mr. R. Whitmore. For Swatow.—Mr. Persen.

Per str. Woosung, December 29.—For River Ports—Mr. Sopp, Mr. W. V. Austin, Capt. A. C. Thomson, Mr. Sherwin, Mrs. A. Terrible, Mr. W. F. [illegible]

Per str. Yingchow, December 30.—For Hongkong—Miss A. Clough, Mr. J. C. Saunders.

Per str. Liangchow, December 30. For Canton—Mr. F. L. Smith and two children, Miss Lucas.

Per str. Tatung, December 31. For Wuhu—Mr. C. Gray.

Per str. Hsin Peking, December 31.—For Ningpo—Mr. A. Gomas, Mr. R. Leitao, Mr. A. Leitao, Miss C. Souza, Miss L. Souza, Miss C. Remedios, Miss L. Remedios, Miss M. Carneiro, Miss E. Leitao.

Per str. Ngankin, January 1.—For River Ports—Mrs. Panoff, Mrs. Oshiverkhon.

Per str. Szechuen, January 2.—For Swatow—Mr. F. A. Johnson.

Per str. Hsin Peking, January 2.—For Ningpo—Mr. C. H. Layers, Miss [illegible] Miss A. Hussey, Miss A. [illegible]

Per str. Poyang, January 3.—For River Ports Mr. and Mrs. T. C. Vollenweiver.

Per str. Kanchow, January 4.—For Amoy—Mr. J. H. Richards, Mr. Anderson. For Hongkong Mr. V. Kevr.

BIRTHS

ALSTON.—On December 25, 1923, at the Memorial Hospital, Nanking, to Mr. and Mrs. John Alston, a daughter.

REBSAMEN.—On January 1, 1924, at St. Mary's Hospital, Shanghai, to Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Rebsamen, a son.

SPENCE.—On January 4, 1924, at the Victoria Nursing Home, Shanghai, to Mr. and Mrs. W. Spence, a son.

STEWARDSON.—On December 31, 1923, at Dr. Fearn's Nursing Home, Shanghai, to Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Stewardson, a son.

WALKER.—On December 29, 1923, at the Victoria Nursing Home, Shanghai, to Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Walker, a son.

WILSON.—On December 28, 1923, at the Victoria Nursing Home, Shanghai, to Mr. and Mrs. E. P. B. Wilson, a son.

DEATH

REIN.—On January 3, 1924, at Dr. Fearn's Sanatorium, Shanghai, Elna Johanne, beloved wife of Bernt O. F. Rein, aged 30 years.

SICCAWEI METEOROLOGICAL REPORT

Day of Month	Barometer 9 a.m.	Barometer Att'ed Therm.	Wind Direction 9 a.m.	Wind Force (1-12)	Hygrometer 9 a.m. Dry	Hygrometer 9 a.m. Wet	Thermometer in Shade Max.	Thermometer in Shade Min	Weather conditions
Dec. 28	30.51	53.1	N N E	2	45.2	42.3	46.4	43.2	O.
,, 29	30.75	46 8	N W	4	27.8	24.5	34.3	25.9	R.
,, 30	30.67	44 2	W N W	3	26.1	21.5	35.1	22.3	O.
,, 31	30.57	44.6	W N W	1	31.1	27.3	42.6	19.0	R.
Jan. 1	30.47	44.6	W	1	35.8	31.8	49.5	25.3	R.
,, 2	30.55	45.2	W N W	1	35 8	32.8	50.2	25.5	R.
,, 3	30.38	45.7	W S W	2	41.9	38.3	54.4	29.1	R.

Explanation

B—blue sky D—drizzle H—hail M—misty (hazy) R—rain T—thunder
C—clouds F—fog L—lightning O—overcast (dull) S—snow Z—calm

SHANGHAI THERMOMETER READINGS FOR THE WEEK

In the open air in a shaded situation in the Foreign Settlement

Date	Thermometer (Fahr.) Minimum 1923	Minimum 1922	Maximum 1923	Maximum 1922	Rainfall Inches 1923	Rainfall Inches 1922
Dec. 28	33.0	38.5	48 8	55.0	0.17	Nil.
,, 29	27.0	35.6	40 8	55.0	Nil.	Nil.
,, 30	24.0	40.0	35 0	59.8	Nil.	Nil.
,, 31	25.8	34 0	42.4	51.8	Nil.	Nil.
	1924	1923	1924	1923	1924	1923
Jan. 1	30.0	34.0	19 2	43.0	Nil.	Nil.
,, 2	31.0	25 6	49 8	34.6	Nil.	Nil.
,, 3	35.0	20.0	58.2	34.4	Nil.	Nil.

Dr. J. Collis Browne's CHLORODYNE

The ORIGINAL and ONLY GENUINE

Acts like a charm in DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY AND CHOLERA

The Best Remedy known for COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS.

The Most Valuable Remedy ever discovered.

Effectually cuts short all attacks of SPASMS. Checks and arrests these too often fatal diseases:— FEVER, CROUP, AGUE.

The only Palliative in NEURALGIA, GOUT, RHEUMATISM, TOOTHACHE.

Convincing Medical Testimony with each Bottle.

Sold in bottles by all Chemists

Prices in England 1/3 and 3/-

Always ask for a "Dr. COLLIS BROWNE"

Sole Manufacturers:

J. T. DAVENPORT, LTD., LONDON, S.E.

EAST ASIATIC Co., Ld.

(Aktieselskabet Det Ostasiatiske Kompagni)

COPENHAGEN

TO THE EAST.

Japan Line:
Sailings from COPENHAGEN, GOTHENBURG, CHRISTIANIA, HAMBURG, ANTWERP to HONGKONG, SHANGHAI, KOBE, YOKOHAMA, DALNY, VLADIVOSTOCK.

Bangkok Line:
Sailings from COPENHAGEN, GOTHENBURG, CHRISTIANIA, HAMBURG, MIDDLESBROUGH and ANTWERP to PORT SAID, COLOMBO, PENANG, SINGAPORE and BANGKOK.

Java Line:
Sailings from COPENHAGEN, GOTHENBURG, CHRISTIANIA and HAMBURG to BATAVIA, SAMARANG and SOERABAYA.

TO SOUTH AFRICA.
Sailings from DENMARK, NORWAY, SWEDEN and BALTIC PORTS to CAPE TOWN, ALGOA BAY, EAST LONDON, DURBAN, DELAGOA BAY and BEIRA.

TO AUSTRALIA
Sailings from DENMARK, NORWAY, SWEDEN, HAMBURG and LISBON to FREMANTLE, ADELAIDE, MELBOURNE, SYDNEY and BRISBANE.

TO NORTH PACIFIC
Sailings from COPENHAGEN, GOTHENBURG, CHRISTIANIA, HAMBURG and ANTWERP to ST. THOMAS (with transhipment to the GREATER and LESSER ANTILLES), CRISTOBAL (with transhipment to CENTRAL AMERICAN PORTS), LOS ANGELES HARBOUR, SAN FRANCISCO, PORTLAND (Oreg.), SEATTLE, TACOMA and VANCOUVER (with transhipment to other NORTH PACIFIC PORTS).

TO SOUTH PACIFIC.
Sailings from COPENHAGEN, GOTHENBURG, CHRISTIANIA, HAMBURG and ANTWERP to ST. THOMAS (with transhipment to the GREATER and LESSER ANTILLES), CRISTOBAL (with transhipment to CENTRAL AMERICAN PORTS), GUAYAQUIL, CALLAO, MOLLENDO, IQUIQUE, ANTOFAGASTA, VALPARAISO, TALCHUANO and CORRAL (with transhipment to other SOUTH PACIFIC PORTS).

For further particulars apply to—
THE EAST ASIATIC CO., LTD., COPENHAGEN
Telegrams: "Orient."
UNITED KINGDOM—JAPAN and BANGKOK LINES: Escombe, McGrath & Co., London, Glasgow, Birmingham, Liverpool, Manchester, Grimsby, Middlesbrough Greenock, Immingham and Southampton.
JAVA, SOUTH AFRICA and AUSTRALIA LINES: J. E. HYDE & Co., London.
PACIFIC LINES: United Baltic Corporation, Ltd., 158 Fenchurch Street, London. Tel.: "Orienteako."
SHANGHAI.—The East Asiatic Co., Ltd

AMATEUR PHOTOGRAPHERS

In the outports can rely on fresh supplies of Films, Plates and Papers and all Photo Sundries by sending to

Mactavish & Co., Ld.

The Hongkew Medical Hall, Shanghai.

Developing and Printing by experienced operators.

OVER HALF A CENTURY REPUTATION
Dr. LE CLERC'S PILLS FOR THE LIVER & KIDNEYS
INVALUABLE for DISEASES of these IMPORTANT ORGANS, GRAVEL, BACKACHE, GOUT, RHEUMATISM.
Price 5s., leading CHEMISTS, or Post Free Dr. LE CLERC Med. Co. Haverstock Rd N.W. 5, London
Dr. LE CLERC'S VEG. APERIENT PILLS. Price 3s.
Dr. LE CLERC'S PILLS FOR ANÆMIA. Price 3s.
SAFE & RELIABLE FOR LADIES AILMENTS
Dr. LE CLERC'S SOAP. 1s. or 6 Tablets 5s.

A GIFT THE RECEIVER NEVER FORGETS

VENUS EVERPOINTED PENCILS

No. 66	Plain, Gold-filled, 5¼" Long, With Clip	$6.00
No. 66C	Chased, Gold-filled, 5¼" Long, With Clip	7.00
No. 66SRC	Chased, Gold-filled, 4⅛" Long, Small, With Ring	7.00
No. 66SRT	Engine Turned, Gold-filled, 4⅛" Long Small, With Ring	10.00
No. 64SRT	Engine Turned, Sterling Silver, 4⅛" Long, Small, With Ring	8.00
No. 63	Plain, Silver-filled, 5¼" Long, With Clip	3.00
No. 63C	Chased, Silver-filled, 5¼" Long, With Clip	3.50
No. 63S	Plain, Silver-filled, 4⅛" Long, Small	2.50
No. 63SC	Chased, Silver-filled, 4⅛" Long, Small	3.00
No. 63SR	Plain, Silver-filled, 4⅛" Long, Small, With Ring	3.00
No. 62	Plain, Silver plated, 5¼" Long, With Clip	2.00
No. 62SR	Plain, Silver plated, 4⅛" Long, Small, With Ring	2.00

Christmas mails may be slow—order at once
When ordering—mention the number, please

EDWARD EVANS & SONS, LIMITED

30 NORTH SZECHUEN ROAD, SHANGHAI. TEL. NORTH 780 AND 792

LEADING ARTICLES

The North-China Herald

Published every Saturday evening.

PREPAID SUBSCRIPTION

(INCLUDING DELIVERY):

Shanghai ... ... Tls. 12 per annum
Other parts of China ,, 13 ,,

All communications should be addressed to the Secretary, NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS & HERALD LD., to whom all remittances should be made payable.

BRIGANDAGE AND THE CUSTOMS

Jan. 5.

No follower of Chinese affairs can fail to be impressed by the unfavourable showing of the returns of Customs revenue for 1923. Ostensibly showing an increase of about four and three-quarter million taels, these receipts when submitted to a simple analysis reveal, if not an actual decline in China's trade, at any rate no advance.

A few figures are necessary to make the position clear, but they are of no difficult nature. The revision of China's tariff up to an effective five per cent. is equivalent to an increase of twenty-five per cent. on the whole returns. On imports that pay an ad valorem tax, there is of course no change in the scale. Such goods represent twenty per cent. of the total imports. In the year 1922 the total revenue from imports was roughly Tls. 30,000,000: as shown above, a fifth has to be deducted from this for ad valorem goods; so that the anticipated twenty-five per cent. increase in revenue would be collected only from Tls. 24,000,000, this realizing an additional six million taels revenue.

The effective five per cent. duty, however, only applied to goods shipped after January 17, which means a three months delay in respect of the most distant countries. And naturally with the impending increase in duty, there was a great speeding up in all countries to get as much cargo shipped before the 17th as possible. It is calculated, therefore, that a deduction of a million or a million and a half taels must be made from the expected increase in revenue, which thus comes down, on the basis of the 1922 returns, to five millions, or perhaps four and a half. In other words, increased duties, and not increased trade, have produced the additional Tls. 4,744,000 in 1923: and when we remember that this advance is recorded on the whole revenue, which also includes export and coastwise dues, the only possible conclusion is that China's imports have been sadly falling away.

For some years past it has been retorted, to all who complained of brigandage and lawlessness in China, that, nevertheless, her Customs revenue continued to go up. This has been the stock argument of the persons abroad who think they are doing China a service by representing her as she ought to be rather than as she is. But this argument they will not now be able to use. The everyday experience of the foreign merchant, that dealers have been chary of buying and holding large stocks, because of the prevailing uncertainty about them, is borne out by that irrefutable index, the Customs returns. Civil war and brigandage are killing China's trade.

Two morals are to be drawn. First, that this revelation of the effect of bad government on the nation's commerce immensely strengthens the case of the Diplomatic Body—if any strengthening were necessary—for not permitting Dr. Sun Yat-sen and other provincial chieftains to make ducks and drakes with the Customs revenue. Secondly, that until China's politicians show that they can so govern her as to enable the effective five per cent. to prove the benefit it was meant to be, it would be sheer folly to grant them a further surtax; and the Powers should therefore take full advantage of the reservation on the time of this surtax coming into effect, which the treaty signed at Washington wisely secured. To allow Chinese officials to impose further taxation on trade, under the conditions of misgovernment prevailing, is merely to hit the merchant without doing an atom of good to China.

THE DOMINIONS AND EMIGRATION

Jan. 7.

THE news that the Canadian Government is giving special rates across the Atlantic to immigrants from Great Britain directs fresh attention to the important question of Empire settlement. Britain is no doubt over-populated, and there are thousands of people in the "old country", either unemployed or at best only making a bare living, who would almost certainly do well if their gifts and energies could be transferred to lands where population is scarce and opportunities of advancement more abundant.

Various schemes have been proposed for bringing out a large and constant stream of people from Great Britain to the overseas dominions and some of them are already in operation. Part of the necessary expense is borne by the Dominions, but it is not at all certain that they are bearing their fair share. One aspect of the situation appears to have escaped the notice of a good many people. The Dominions are doing excellent work in providing houses for, at any rate, a portion of Britain's surplus population; but it must not be forgotten that those who receive any measure of assistance from the overseas Governments are more or less picked men and women. They have to be sound in body and mind, and give proof of having a certain amount of capability and intelligence, the sort of people who, given a decent chance, are likely to "make good." This, of course, means that they have had to be educated at the expense of the British taxpayer; they have been taught a trade or profession and during their training have had to be supported by their parents or friends in Britain: in very many cases they emigrate before they are in a position to refund to their native land all that has been spent either of public or private money on their behalf. In thousands of cases the Dominions get the advantage of the "finished product" while the Motherland has paid all the cost of preparation and training.

More than this, while England sends her best abroad, she gets in exchange people who should never be admitted. Not long ago we read of two vessels lying outside an English port; the one was filled with sturdy hard-working men and women seeking new homes overseas and driven in most cases to do so by the lack of employment at Home, while the other boat brought specimens of the worst scum of Europe coming to settle in Britain, their minds full of the fantastic notions of revolution and their lips ready with the catchwords of continental agitators and outlaws. If the Dominions are to get all the best type of British workers, they should bear the fullest possible share of the expense of "settling" them. But it is deplorable that nothing can be done to keep these British born skilled workers in their native land. They are people who cannot be replaced in a day. Apart from those who go to the Dominions, thousands are emigrating to the United States and thus giving the latter country no small advantage in industrial and commercial competition with Britain. And while she needs to keep her best workmen, Britain might well bar her doors against the alien interloper.

THE NEW CYCLE

Jan. 8.

MOST foreigners have been so busy wishing each other the compliments of the season during the past few days that there has almost been a neglect of what the Chinese are now beginning to look forward to. With their New Year, a short four weeks distant, opens a new cycle of 60 years, and the manner in which it is being regarded is an encouraging feature of the general situation in the country. Tradition suggests that the first year of the cycle will be one of prosperity, with bounteous harvests, cheap rice, peace and all the advantages of good trade, and these prospective features are already reacting favourably upon the community. After one of the worst years in modern business history—which we believe tradition led them to expect—they are in some measure making preparations for a better state of things, and if they can conjure up such an outlook in depressed, materialistic Shanghai, it seems safe to say that elsewhere their views of the future will be still more optimistic. The sentiment is one which ought to be encouraged in every possible way, for its influence on business is bound to be favourable. If one merchant takes his courage in both hands and after months of cautiously feeling his way launches forth more or less boldly on the sea of commerce, he inevitably sets others in motion also.

The thought must have occurred to Chinese, just as much as it has to foreigners, that the carry-over of bad trade from 1923 is going to make it difficult to inaugurate the new cycle auspiciously. The Customs revenue returns are of a nature to deter even the boldest from seeking fresh commercial perils during 1924. We have already pointed the moral to be drawn from the Customs returns for last year, it being obvious that on the old basis this would have shown a bad slump compared with 1922. Moreover the revenue of 1922, although a record, by no means represented the real state of trade in the country, being probably as much due to the overtrading which characterized the post-armistice period as anything else. While that overtrading will be subject of regret for days yet to come, the question may fairly be asked at this juncture whether with only a comparatively slight difference in its condition China could not readily have absorbed all the goods imported during that period as well as giving the utmost scope to all the new industries which the situation brought into being. From every quarter we incline to think, the answer will be strongly in the affirmative, and only the stultifying effect of internal conditions has prevented it. So long as the mills of Shanghai could not get material such as fine Shensi cotton delivered to them because the roads were in the hands of bandits and soldiers, and because the yarn of the mills and the imports of the Treaty Ports could not be exchanged for this cotton and other products for the same reason, there was the nearest thing to a deadlock.

It is obvious that the difficulties noted above have to be overcome before the new cycle can be ushered in on the note of prosperity which is hoped for and anticipated in Chinese business circles. If at the moment we are unable to point to better conditions of Government, which would mean a ruthless campaign against bandits and strict disciplinary measures against militarists and their half-armed mobs, we have yet to realize the wonderful capacity of the Chinese for carrying on trade when people of other nations would find themselves paralysed by the political conditions. So, should harvests be bountiful there may be an interesting development. A year ago, for instance, foreign merchants here acquired the habit of saying that the Chinese would never be able to pay the very much higher rates for goods which Home firms have now to ask. Yet the past twelve months have shown such increases in tael values of many commodities that there ought to be every hope that China will once more be one of the most valued markets which manufacturers can have. It is true that in too many instances values at Home have outstripped by far what Chinese consumers have so far been able to offer, but the fact of supplies in so many departments of commerce being now on a famine basis in the ports has brought about a state of higher prices which has surprised even the optimists. This, too, at a time when almost everything has been against prosperity in trade. We do not yet see that prosperity, but in view of the sentiment of the Chinese towards this new cycle of years and the hopes they have of it, it is surely worth while on the part of foreigners here to assist in giving it adequate scope.

OTHER PEOPLE'S BUSINESS

Jan. 9.

IN their moments of candour, the majority of people will plead guilty to a greater or less curiosity concerning the affairs of others, and when it is possible to represent such curiosity as a virtue great is the joy. Moreover it comes practically to a virtue when official publications are found to deal with other people's business in a fluent and free manner, and there is this additional merit, that the aforesaid publications at once lose the tediousness usually attending documents issuing from government offices and assume a mantle of human interest. These reflexions are induced by the receipt of the "Shanghai Market Prices Report" for the April-June quarter, which has been published by the Treasury Department's Bureau of Markets, the organization which compiles the monthly index numbers of wholesale prices in Shanghai. It may be mentioned, by the way, that a great deal of misunderstanding appears to exist with regard to the Bureau, the people who seek information concerning its work almost invariably approaching the Revenue Office of the Municipal Council. It has no connexion with the Municipal Council, but is a department of the Central Government which inaugurated it in 1919. The report just issued deals with many commercial aspects of importance both to foreign and Chinese merchants, and while certain generalizations have to be expected it is noteworthy how much particularization there has been. In the course of an article such as this we need not specify the different brands or chops of goods to which reference is made, but in spite of this a sufficient indication may be given to show the public the intimate lines on which the report runs.

One of the first points to attract attention is a note respecting the price of wines. For the first two months of the quarter, we learn, imports were small in quantity and the market remained steady. June, however, was a month of heavier imports, but at the same time the condition of the country became more unsettled than previously. Outport customers ceased placing orders and so the market assumed a declining tendency. For instance, we are told, one well-known brandy dropped in price from $27 to $24, while certain brands of champagne, gin and mineral waters also came down. We do not know that connoisseurs would altogether admit the right of grape juice to come into the category of wines, but here it is, and in contrast to alcoholic beverages seems to have become dearer. While on the subject of luxuries we must quote one delightful paragraph which reads like a wholesale condemnation of the Chinese taste in tobacco:—

Cigars: Recently native and German products are very abundant and the market is exceedingly dull. Tobacco shops take a great delight to sell German and native products, since they can get more profit out of these two kinds. Consumers welcome them mainly because of their decoration.

Of course the Chinese were by no means the first to discover that the glittering gold band has

TAMING THE YELLOW RIVER

A Wonderful Modern Engineering Feat: $30,000,000 Damage in One Flood: A Permanent Safeguard for $1,500,000

China is a land of wonders and as so many of them are centuries old and therefore have a romantic interest attaching to them, it is quite possible that an achievement to-day that may be as great as any of them may be passed by with scant notice. Such, for instance, as the taming of the Yellow River. In fact, some might say that it is just like modern utilitarianism, with a few months of skilful engineering work, to replace [illegible] old-standing and sensational headline as "China's Sorrow" [illegible] to believe that, as a direct result of the work completed last year there will be more joy and affluence amongst the peasantry living near the great river in Shantung than ever there was sorrow or poverty caused by the breaking down of its banks. Then again, comparatively few people, unless they are engineers, though they can understand that the Great Wall and the Grand Canal are monumental works, can appreciate also that they are marvellous examples of construction. Still less, if a layman stood on the new bank of the Yellow River and watched the water flowing by in a channel where it might have been running for centuries, would he appreciate what had been achieved. The Culebra Cut arouses a minor enthusiasm in the ordinary traveller and he becomes somewhat more demonstrative when he sees the great locks, but the vast lakes which were a feature of the constructional work of the "canal" through the isthmus of Panama are just pretty stretches of water.

ENORMOUS DESTRUCTION.

The damage caused by "China's Sorrow" in the loss of lives and property through the ages is incalculable, but it will be recalled that, in August, 1921, the river broke through its northerly dyke at Kungchiapa, flooding portions of five hsien and making more than a quarter of a million people homeless. Over 500 towns and villages were destroyed and the material loss must have amounted to many millions of dollars, to say nothing of the loss of life and the sufferings of the people from the resultant famine. The work which has just been completed cost $1,500,000: it has stood very severe tests and is believed by experts to be thoroughly reliable and to be all that is required at that particular part, which is the most dangerous. One estimate of the damage done in 1921 which has been accepted as certainly not too high gives a loss of from twenty to thirty million dollars. Comparing one year's loss in one section with the amount required to make that section safe, one gets a remarkable illustration of how much could be done to make the whole of the Yellow River permanently safe if an amount equivalent to this one loss were spread over a number of years in conservancy work.

A work such as the conservancy of the Yellow River cannot successfully be undertaken by starting operations with a knowledge only of things as they are at the moment. The more that can be discovered of past happenings, even in prehistoric times, the more likely is success to be achieved. The Asia Development Co. was responsible for the clever engineering feat accomplished last year and Mr. P. P. Whitham, the President and General Manager, tells a very interesting story of the development of the region, based on data their engineers have collected.

AN EVER-CHANGING RIVER.

The great northern plain of China, embracing a large part of five provinces, has been built up by deposits carried down by the Yellow River. During the [illegible] years of history recorded, the [illegible] has been changing, when the Huangho has occupied both [illegible] the Gulf of Chihli and at other times into the Yellow Sea. There are indications that on one occasion it emptied into the Lower Yangtze. For nearly 1,000 years prior to 1853 the Huangho entered the Yellow Sea a short distance south of Haichow, but in that year a break occurred near Kaifeng and the river found the course to the Gulf of Chihli that it now occupies.

There is a plausible theory to the effect that at one time the Shantung mountains formed an island, the great northern plain then being a shallow inland sea, which was turned into land by the deposits brought down by the Huangho. As a matter of fact, the process of building up the land in the northern plain was not completed when the early Chinese settlers appeared on the scene more than 4,000 years ago. Nature not having completed the job, the people who occupied the Huangho plains have been in trouble almost continuously, in spite of much ingenuity displayed in combating the forces of the river.

The most destructive break in the Yellow River dyke since 1853 also occurred near Kaifeng, in 1878. A large part of the river flowed southeast into the Huai River basin, causing loss of life and great destruction of crops and other property. The first attempt to close the breach failed, but the following year, conditions being especially favourable, the break was successfully repaired at a cost of about Tls. 6,000,000. This was one of the few occasions in history when a major breach was repaired. The Chinese engineers, beginning with Ta Yu (Yu the Great), 4,000 years ago, down to recent years, have done remarkably well, considering what they had to work with and the limited hydraulic knowledge available. However, they never succeeded in more than a temporary control of the Huangho. In 1923, modern science and engineering were applied to the problem for the first time and the fact is of interest not so much because a major break was repaired but because it points the way to a scientific control of the river systems in China.

On referring to the first two plans printed with this article, it will be seen how the river broke through the main north dyke, in 1921, at the bend of which Kungchiapa forms the lower corner, spreading out over the country and causing enormous havoc, as already described. It was decided then that something really sound must be done and after several months of negotiations on November 20, 1922, the Asia Development Co., Ltd., contracted with Hsiung Ping-chih, Civil Governor of Shantung, to repair the break at a cost of $1,500,000. The Shantung officials, through their representatives in Peking, applied for financial assistance from the International Famine Relief Committee and secured a grant of $360,000 in aid of the work. The remainder, $1,140,000, was raised by the Province and all payments were met promptly on due dates. The work was started on December 1, 1922, and the diversion of the river into the new leading channel took place on May 15, 1923. By July

(Continued on Page 48.)

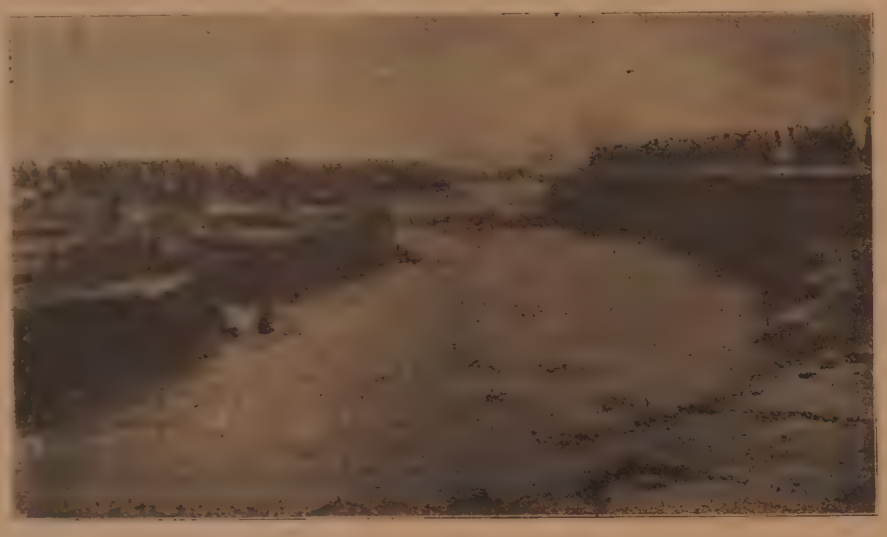
A view of the operations when damming the river, giving a good idea of the magnitude of the work.



The new channel when the barrier was cut so as to let the water through.

The new channel on the day after it was opened, with the water flowing smoothly through to the sea.

The Yellow River in its old bed young friend argues that the people must disband the soldiers. There should be a general strike of students, labourers, and merchants, and a universal strike against all taxation, so as to persuade or compel the militarists to subject themselves to the civil power. Perhaps the people ought to do this, but the advice reminds one of the saying that it is useless for the sheep to pass resolutions in favour of vegetarianism while the wolves remain of a different opinion.

The next important question is what is to become of the 1,370,000 soldiers when they are disbanded? To let them loose without any occupation or means of subsistence would only make the social condition of the country worse. Productive occupations of some sort must be provided for them, and again it is the people who must come to the rescue. Among the occupations suggested are road-building, including railway and highway construction; the opening of mines in the various provinces; farming: many parts of China now barren can be made cultivatable by means of irrigation; forestry: it is estimated that one-third of the area of China can be afforested, and there is the further advantage that afforestation may prevent floods in the future; colonization: there are large tracts of unoccupied areas in Mongolia and Sinkiang which are colonizable and this would bring distant territories into closer relation to China proper. Where is the money to come from for all these enterprises? This important question is rather airily disposed of. "The question of financing this plan need not disturb us. There will be means enough if the attempt is tried." One practical suggestion is that the labourers employed in building railways and in mining should be given shares of stock in addition to their regular salaries. The reverence which the Chinese have for "scraps of paper" is not to be derided, but it is pathetic.

The fact is, China is the very "sick man" of the Far East. As an ancient Jewish prophet said of his own people, "the whole head is sick and the whole heart faint; from the sole of the foot even unto the head there is no soundness." In such a political plight the mere palliation of symptoms accomplishes little. While disbandment of the army is advisable it would not do away with the general political corruption. Get rid of the Tuchuns and other hungry officials will appear on the scene, probably even more exacting and voracious than the military. A sensible patient desperately ill would call in a wise, capable physician, place himself unreservedly in his care, and would not wildly protest against "encroachment upon sovereign rights" if he was compelled to do whatever was necessary to restore him to health. In this connexion the history of the restoration of Austria is most instructive. But China is not willing to call in wise physicians. Dropping all metaphor, her inevitable fate seems to be that indicated by the Chinese sage long ago when he said that it is only by the teaching of calamity and sorrow that a nation learns the wisdom and righteousness that belong to its peace.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Our Beautified Bund

Following his visit to China Mr. Bertrand Russell took it upon himself to be uncomplimentary about certain foreign elements in the place. He said something about the foreign quarter of Shanghai as being an example of ugliness and efficiency, whereas to him the Chinese City represented beauty and much of sentimental import. Then, as now, our Bund was in a transition stage and there were more unfinished than completed buildings probably; but even had it not been so, we doubt whether he would have thought it worth while appreciating. To men of grosser clay, however, the newly fashioned Bund gives satisfaction the more it discards its swaddling clothes. The last bit of scaffolding was removed from the frontage of the "North-China Daily News" building some days ago and we believe that everyone agrees in liking the appearance. Then a great deal more of the Hongkong Bank has just been displayed to public view and it impresses, while already the dome becomes a landmark. It will be years before the Bund is finished; but if the architects continue to do their work properly it ought to be one of the world's noted thoroughfares in spite of all that Mr. Bertrand Russell thinks to the contrary about our style of doing things. Nevertheless this palatial way brings with it certain disadvantages, for the stranger within our gates as often as not fails to recognize the style in which we do business. Within the past year, shortly after one of the new buildings had been opened, an American visitor entered the doorway and after a scrutiny of the hall turned to the Chinese porter with the query, "Say, guy, where's the grill room in this hotel?" No doubt a compliment, considering what hotels have attained to nowadays

A Conservancy Success

The figures which we publish this week showing how at lowest low water there is a through channel giving a depth of 30-ft. at the mouth of the Huangpu may not at first excite the imagination of the man in the street, but to those who have followed Conservancy operations here since their inception they convey a great deal. It means that very great success has attended the work inaugurated almost a score of years ago, and it carries the mind back to what the river was in the first decade of the century. Then there were the Ship and Junk Channels, and Gough Island became an island no more. In order to know the river better the engineers went 20 or 30 miles above Shanghai with instruments for measuring depths, tides and flow of water, and at length it became to all intents and purposes possible to tell what the once wayward channel would do in any given circumstances. When we think that from 1900 onwards the port of Shanghai was gravely threatened, its very existence at stake because of the silting up of the approaches, we begin to realize how much we owe to the skill and patience of the engineers who tackled and carried on the work of conservancy. It is to be hoped that the increasingly good results which we now see will make a due impression on other cities dependent on similar communication with the sea and so ensure that a courageous and enlightened policy will be the order throughout China.

East and West

"K.C.K.'s" entry into the discussion of China's treaties and the trampling thereon did not quite prepare us for the charming letter he sends to-day. He writes as one who would practise what he preaches and has taken the trouble first to study his text. His feeling that he does not particularly admire foreigners as a whole, but none the less numbers some of them among his best friends, is the experience of many of us in respect of other nationalities. In the case of China the problem is complicated by the barrier of the most difficult language and literature in the world and, as K.C.K. observes, by different standards of comfort and etiquette. This applies not only to westerners and Chinese, but through all grades of society. We do not bother ourselves as to how a man made his money: but if he wears the wrong sort of tie or matches the wrong boots to his raiment, he is beyond the pale. It is not that such acts are wrong, but that they imply totally different standards, which in turn mean ignorance of each other's catchwords and stiffness in intercourse. With the Chinese too, the average foreigner is awkward because he does not know what to talk about, what will interest the other; and no doubt the feeling is mutual. Yet there are very few foreigners who, with any knowledge of the Chinese, are not loud in praise of them and we believe that they in turn find foreigners not so black (or should we say red?) as they are painted, on actual experience. The moral is to mix as much as possible, just as a man learning a foreign language must talk for all he is worth, undismayed by mistakes, and the end will be better understanding and sympathy. To which letters like K.C.K.'s help not a little.

Discovering Shanghai

The various messes of the Municipal Police are chuckling tremendously over one of the innumerable Franconia stories. When one of the tenders arrived at the Customs Jetty a certain Inspector was on duty there for the purpose of seeing that even from the palatial Franconia there should land only such persons as could be depended upon not to besmirch the fair name of this innocent city. He is a true born son of Scotia and happens to be one of those who are inordinately proud of the splendid education all Scotsmen suffer from. To him there approached a lady with the remark:—"I don't know, young man, if you speak English, but if it happens that you do, will you tell me the way to the Astor House?" Suppressing his astonishment, he replied, as a polite Watsonian should:—"Certainly, madam. Straight down this road and turn to your right over the bridge. And then, lassie, ye gang richt in." Or something like that. By this time another Shanghai man was in fits of laughter and the lady, turning upon him, indignantly remarked:—"Well, how was I to know? I come to an Oriental country for the first time, and how should I know he wasn't a Chinaman?" Since when the Inspector's companions in mess have positively refused to speak to him in anything but Chinese, and he has been voted by all to be a singularly good looking Chinese.

U. S. Silver Interests

In view of this week's telegram stating that American interests are engaged in an effort to gain more control of silver than hitherto, we cannot do better than refer readers back to our issue of November 14 which contained an exhaustive and illuminating article on this very subject. In view of the large production of silver in the United States it is perhaps only natural that in many quarters there should be something akin to resentment because of London's control of the market, and equally that from time to time there should be attempts to wrest it from the British capital. The value of the article we published, which had previously appeared in the "Engineering & Mining Journal Press", was enhanced by the fact that it was from the pen of an American, Mr. Carpel L. Breger. He showed how American attempts in the past to gain control of silver had failed, and coming to the complaints made against London disposed of them drastically. While American producers suggested that London bought their silver at the lowest rate, India complained that she could never obtain any except at the highest rate, whereas Mr. Berger pointed out that what London did was to adjudicate the price of the metal in the fairest way possible. One striking paragraph in the article deserves again to be emphasized:

> It is those three machinery appliances—cheap money rates, exchange centralization, and superlative brokerage organization (largely the first) that made, make, keep and will keep London in control of the world's silver market. Her imperial trade necessities require that she keep a grip on the silver exchanges, viâ silver. Similarly, the London market rules wheat, cotton, and other commodities which Britain does not produce, but which the machinery of British finance and cheap money permit Britain to "carry," and dominate.

There has been talk for months in America of this silver protection association, but it is gathered from Mr. Breger's article that it will have almost as many enemies as friends in the country.

The Peace Prize

Neither in American nor any other circles here are any particular hopes raised by the award of Mr. Edward Bok's prize for a practicable plan to prevent war through cooperation of the United States with other nations. The author of the plan, who has now received $50,000 for his work, has come to the conclusion that the best way is to bring about a working arrangement with the League of Nations. He stipulates conditions which we do not yet know, and if the American legislature agrees to them, he will receive another $50,000. The "if" is one of the most colossal we have known for a long time, for so many American politicians have put themselves on record against the League and against any anything implying entanglement in European affairs that nothing short of a miracle is likely to produce majorities sufficient to get the plan carried through. We know, of course, that the League has many warm friends in the United States, but everything since Versailles has shown that its opponents are more numerous, and their attitude has not been modified by recent developments in Europe. A man like M. Poincaré has just as bitter critics in America as he has in Germany, and certain British statesmen have not been spared there either. So long as these critics retain their voices and their following, it can only be expected that the prejudice against active participation in politics with European nations—which seems a sine qua non for world peace—will remain.

Genius and Longevity

Genius is often associated in the popular mind with disease and short life. We even recollect reading an article written by a medical man who tried to prove from the illegibility of his signature that Shakespeare was afflicted by a certain disease. Inasmuch as genius is so much out of the common experience of men and is so often associated with an unconventional manner of living, it is perhaps not surprising that plain men and women, dwelling entirely in a prosaic world, should seek for an abnormal cause for a phenomenon to them so difficult to explain. Most of these theories, however, do not bear examination. Take, for instance, the question of longevity. Last Sunday, at the Municipal Orchestra's concert, impressed prima facie by the dates given for birth and death in the case of each composer, we were led to a closer examination with a view to computing the various ages. The result was astonishing. In a programme of only six composers, who were certainly not selected for reasons of longevity, we discovered two octogenarians—Saint Saens and Thomas, aged 86 and 85 respectively—a septuagenarian, Liszt, aged 75, whilst of the others Puccini who is still alive is 66, Rinsky-Korsakoff was 54 and Borodin 53. This completes our list, but of others composers we recall that Handel died at the age of 74 whilst Sir Edward Elgar still enjoys life at the ripe age of 67. Turning to painters, we find that Michel Angelo died at 89, Leonardo da Vinci at 67, whilst among writers may be noted Goethe, who was 83 ere he "shuffled off this mortal coil," and Milton, who breathed his last at 66. Such instances of longevity do not suggest a close connexion between genius and disease.

The Lost Dixmude

Various theories have been advanced from France to account for the loss of the airship Dixmude, one that she was caught in a storm, having failed to pick up the meteorological reports, another that she was struck by lightning, a third that she came to grief because of a shortage of petrol. So far, however, there has been silence respecting the inherent weakness of these gigantic craft. The Dixmude was probably about 600 ft. in length—that is the envelope, which is made rigid by the use of metal beams and girders, naturally of light weight. Inside this envelope is a series of ballonets which, filled with hydrogen—helium as yet being too expensive for general use—provide the lifting power. Unfortunately no means has yet been devised to make these partitions absolutely air-tight, and sooner or later an appreciable escape of hydrogen is observed. In such circumstances, with the object of maintaining the rigidity of the structure, air has to be pumped into the compartments, and the propelling engine is fitted with a device to operate the pumps. Should for any reason the engines be put out of action, it will be seen that the compartments in the envelope will become more and more deflated, and the strain on the metal work, now lacking its former internal support, will become enormous. Ultimately the breaking point is reached, the whole structure crumples and there is an end to the machine. In the case of the Dixmude it is more than doubtful whether it can ever be ascertained what the actual cause of diasaster was, but in considering what airships have to contend against the above possibility must not be lost sight of.

The Canton Compromise

For weeks past Dr. Sun Yat-sen and General Chen Chiung-ming have been hammering each other in Kuangtung. Only a short time ago the tide of war had turned in General Chen's favour and his army reached the outskirts of Canton, when, apparently, his blow seems to have spent its force. Since then there has been little fighting, for Chen Chiung-ming discreetly withdrew and the two armies have probably been doing little more than watch each other. Now there is talk of compromise between the two leaders, and so apparently all the fighting has been in vain. It is a case of history, especially military history, repeating itself. Nations have fought for years in the past without reaching a decision and through sheer weariness both sides have given up the struggle, while as often as not commanders, with all the strategical and tactical advantages possible in their pocket, have agreed to an inconclusive peace rather than risk a final appeal to battle. A knowledge of war's uncertainties has spoiled many a general's career through inducing an untimely timidity. There is no doubt that the best thing for the majority of China's militarists would be a fight to a finish and all the consequences thereof, but in the light of history we cannot blame the Kuangtung factions if they now seek an easier way of settling their differences. The unfortunate phase in this case is that they do not seem to be compromising for peace but with the hope of a more ambitious war.

PEKING, Jan. 10.—The Ministry of Education has issued an order that, owing to the absence of Chancellor Tsai Yuan-pei in Europe, Dr. Chiang Mon-lin has been appointed Taili Chancellor of the Government University of Peking.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

among certain people more influence on their choice of a cigar than all the virtues of the leaf itself, but it is one of the things worth while bearing in mind in studying the psychology of business. To proceed, however. We learn that the felt hats imported by a particular British firm have the largest sale of any in Shanghai, but little business was done in the summer. We see also that the sale of handkerchiefs, usually at its greatest in the summer, underwent a considerable decrease. Such items could be multiplied indefinitely from the report, but enough for the moment.

Although perhaps not of the same human interest, other features have probably a greater general importance. One is the growing consumption of native-manufactured goods which we see exemplified in articles such as towels, cotton shirts and underwear, and socks and stockings. Regarding the last mentioned the report says that the market is full of Chinese products of fine quality and moderate price which are almost able to replace foreign imports. The same with regard to Chinese matches, the sale of which has increased so enormously in the past few years that nearly the whole demand of inland cities is furnished by native factories. "In fact," says the report, "there is no need of foreign matches." A different story, however, is told in respect of other and very important commodities. China, it is pointed out, is rich in timber resources, but owing to difficulties of transportation and poor methods of manufacture, the market is full of foreign timber. Equally is the country well dowered with mineral resources, but except for coal very few of the minerals are of any direct use to the people. On account of poor methods in metallurgy most of the ores are sold to foreign countries and China buys manufactured products from them. Young China has for quite a long time been excited over such a state of affairs, but, of course, the remedy is in the hands of the Chinese people. The notes given above will show that the report of the Bureau may be regarded as a useful adjunct to the Customs publications, and it will not be out of place to congratulate the Commissioner of Markets on his interesting work, which incidentally he places at the disposal of large business houses, schools and other institutions both in China and abroad.

FRENCH MUNICIPAL ELECTIONS

Jan. 10.

ALTHOUGH less than a week hence, the Municipal elections are exciting little activity in the French Concession. Four seats have to be filled, those vacated by Messrs. Le Bris, Tulasne, Speelman and Sheridan, and so far only four candidates have come forward. M. Tulasne is not offering his services again, but the other three are, and for M. Tulasne's seat a candidate has been found in M. Fano. All appearances at the moment indicate that there will be no actual contest, but the French method of doing things differs so much from ours that this fact should give no ground for apathy on the part of the ratepayers. One of the two French candidates is due to serve for two years, the other for one only, and the same is the case in respect of the foreign candidates, and the voting on the day of the poll will decide who of the four are to remain in office for the longer period.

At the present juncture the absence of special activity on the part of the public may quite well be taken as evidence of satisfaction with the work of the Council during the past year. The candidates elected a year ago had for their platform strict economy, no increase in the rates, improvement of the electricity and water services and development of the Concession commensurate with the needs of the population but not beyond. The same spirit has animated the whole Council, and we see the result to-day. In spite of increased expenses due to road and other extensions, meaning heavier Police and Public Works bills, the ordinary budget has been balanced. To do so in the circumstances of the case was no easy task, and only the very conservative financial policy of the Council, which kept a strict watch on all expenditure, enabled it to be done. The result has been to avert any increase in the rates. In constructive work the record is equally satisfactory. Most of last year's Council meetings were devoted to discussions with the Tramway & Electric Light Company (which has also the monopoly of water), and it is known that these were of a very arduous description. Finally the Council decided to adopt drastic measures in order to see its policy carried out, and it declined to pay bills amounting to Tls. 25,000 to the company. Following this struggle the company came into line with the wishes of the Council, and is now engaged on a programme which should meet the needs of the case. Immediate betterment of the electricity supply can, of course, not be expected, but the Council has positive guarantees that within the next year the voltage will be satisfactory throughout the Concession, not only for street but equally for private lighting. The company is now carrying out an extensive programme adequate to the growing needs of the place, including the installation of a group of Diesel engines of 3,000 K.W., which ought to be completed and in running order by the end of 1924. In its contract with the makers the company has offered a very high premium —20,000 francs per week—for delivery before contract date, and preparations are being made to order another group of equal power. Several additional transformer stations are to be constructed immediately in various parts of the Concession to ensure a better distribution, and due to the insistence of the Council the company has spent Tls. 500,000 on new copper feeders to better the voltage.

As stated, the work of the Council so far as electricity is concerned will not come to fruition for some time to come, but in the case of the water supply definite progress has already been made, so much so that for years to come the position of the Concession should be completely satisfactory. During the past Municipal year the water tower in Route Ghisi has been completed and with other additions the result noted in the previous sentence has been achieved. The present members of the Council in conjunction with the candidates now before the public have similar constructive policies in their minds, and the intention is to pursue them during the coming twelve months. In finance their policy will be a conservative one, with a veto on what appears to be unnecessary expense and waste, while the discussions with the Electric Company will be continued with the object of ensuring that the full requirements of the Concession are met. At the same time development of new roads will continue on the programme, and this is a matter which ought to call for attention by the ratepayers. Not so long ago there was the hint of a very ambitious scheme for extensions in what is known as the extra-Concession, and it had to be pointed out that this involved a capital outlay for which no immediate return was visible. The present policy of the Council is to lay out roads only where building is taking place, and in this way the convenience of the residents will be consulted as well as economy assured. Such policy is endorsed by the candidates for office, three of whom have been active in its pursuit for the past year.

A PROPOSED COTTON SURTAX

Jan. 11.

A MESSAGE from Peking received a few days ago contained the news that cotton traders in Shanghai had asked for the imposition of an export surtax on cotton, the proceeds "to serve as the basis of a loan to help the cotton interests at Shanghai." The request went to the Shuiwuchu which referred it to the Cabinet, and we are informed that it is unlikely that a ruling on the subject will be given for some time to come. As there have from time to time been requests to Peking from the Chinese cotton interests of Shanghai for assistance, this present proposal must be regarded as of importance, although it will be seen that only a very indefinite statement is made as to the application of the proceeds of the surtax. About a year ago, it may be remembered, Chinese spinners here sought to have an embargo on cotton exports imposed, as they were suffering from a shortage of supplies, but an examination of the conditions then ruling showed how little such a measure was called for in view of their previous operations in the raw material. Since then, we believe, further appeals for assistance to the industry, which is admittedly suffering from the severest depression, have been forthcoming, and it would have been only natural to conclude that the surtax suggestion had been put forward with a similar end in view. Inquiry in well-informed circles does not support this view, and the statement is made that the intention is to devote the proceeds to the work of cotton improvement under the auspices of the South-eastern University at Nanking. On the face of it this is an admirable object, but the surrounding circumstances call for a very careful investigation.

When some five years ago the foreign mill-owners of Shanghai resolved to inaugurate the work of improving cotton grown in China, it was suggested to Chinese interested in the trade that they should equally co-operate and provide a proportion of the funds required. Although lavish in promises, that financial co-operation by the Chinese was never forthcoming and the foreign interests had to bear the burden of the work, and they have been doing so ever since. The work at Nanking University succeeded in impressing the Chinese so strongly that subsequently they brought into being a similar scheme of operations under the auspices of the South-eastern University, and there is no doubt that it has been productive of good results. What must strike everybody is that one great effort would surely have been better than two separate ones working towards the same end, and now, when it is proposed on the part of the Chinese mill-owning interests that one should be subsidized by Government we are surely entitled to have the other point of view brought to notice in as strong a manner as possible. First of all it must be emphasized that China owes her modern cotton industry to foreign enterprise, and that the Chinese who later entered into it did not, to start with, assist in the fostering of this particular phase of it. Secondly the demand for Chinese cotton from abroad has been of material assistance in promoting the cultivation of the staple in the country, and the present proposal is to penalize this source of consumption for an object which originally did not commend itself to those who now make the suggestion of a surtax. And it should be remembered that when an industry is in its comparative infancy, as is cotton spinning and weaving in China to-day, there is nowadays always a cry for Government assistance, but it has generally been found that the industries of the greatest benefit to any country are those which have fought their own battles without artificial aid.

The normal export duty upon cotton comes roughly to four mace (local currency) a picul, and we learn that the present proposal to the Shuiwuchu is that the surtax should be a mace and a half. In recent years the export of cotton has varied considerably in quantity, but an average for the past five years would be about 500,000 piculs. At a mace and a half this would yield Tls. 90,000 per annum. Had there been such enthusiasm for cotton improvement five years ago and a sum of this magnitude been forthcoming, there is no saying what developments would already have taken place in cotton-growing in these districts, but unhappily nothing of the kind has been the case. Nanking University has done great work on the small subvention which it has been within the power of the foreign mill-owners to offer, but there has been no fund in any way commensurate with this suggested subsidy. Why there should be this enthusiasm for cotton improvement at the present moment is, however, not too hard to realize. Cotton is very dear just now, in fact many mills find it ruinously so, and if the price can be brought down it will help matters considerably. An embargo on export would be the best thing, but the proponents of this have on a previous occasion been defeated. The next best thing is obviously an export supertax, made the more attractive because of the public-spirited suggestion behind it, and there may be a faint hope that it will gain official sanction. The Treaty Powers, however, will certainly have something to say on the subject, Japan in particular as the largest consumer outside the Republic, and it is easy to envisage the question as one inconvenient in a high degree for the Cabinet.

DISBANDMENT OF CHINESE SOLDIERS

Jan. 12.

THERE can be no progress and prosperity in China until all in the land, high and low, are compelled to submit to the law and to observe the good traditions and customs which knit together Chinese society. At the present time Chinese armies are the greatest cause of the general lawlessness. As to the Tuchuns, or military governors of provinces, President Li Yuan-hung said in 1922:

"During the last ten years the militarists have made use of their military strength to bully the government, taking advantage of its weakness. Extorting money from the people they have fattened themselves, building up their fortunes out of the ruin and devastation of the public. They have made fearful sacrifices of the lives of their troops in order to obtain glory and to acquire more power. The people are living in continual fear and consternation."

None can deny the truth of this statement. The private soldiers in their way are just as bad, for nearly all, when the opportunity presents itself, are bandits and robbers. What is to be done? Disbandment seems the only course but it has many difficulties. In political matters we are not much inclined to consider the opinions of the student class, but in the last number of "St. John's Echo", the magazine published by the faculty and students of St. John's University, Shanghai, there is a carefully written article by a student which deserves attention. He has read all that has been written on the subject by foreigners and Chinese, and at the least what he says may serve the useful purpose of letting us know what many of the more intelligent of the Chinese are thinking.

There are nearly 1,370,000 soldiers in China. Very many are men from cities and towns who had become "beggars, idlers, tramps, rogues, robbers or bandits" because too lazy or incompetent to follow their former occupations. As soldiers they remain morally what they were before. The remainder come from the country having been forced to enlist in order to escape the hunger and death threatening them in time of flood and famine, or because their fields were becoming barren and uncultivatable or did not yield a living after the excessive taxes had been paid. All the soldiers are mercenaries, neither knowing nor caring what they fight for and without a spark of true patriotism. When their wages are paid, which seldom happens, they receive seven dollars a month; they are ill-fed and ill-clothed. As the armies serve no useful national purposes they should be disbanded. The first question is, who is to disband them? The Tuchuns will not do it. The Central Government is powerless. Foreign nations will not interfere. Our

KIANGSU-CHEKIANG IMBROGLIO

Marshal Chi Shieh-yuan in Favour of the Neutralization of Shanghai

"I heartily agree to the proposal to declare the district of Shanghai neutral territory and favour the removal of all troops from its vicinity. I favour the proposal of Chinese and foreigners in Shanghai for the removal of the Kiangnan Arsenal, and, should the Sung-Wu District be restored to Kiangsu, to which province it rightly belongs, I will follow public opinion in either having the Arsenal removed or later transformed into some kind of industrial works. The people will have to decide this for themselves."—Thus spoke Marshal Chi Shieh-yuan, Military Governor of Kiangsu and High Military Inspecting Commissioner of Kiangsu, Kiangsi and Anhui, in an interview with a special representative of the "North-China Daily News."

NO WARFARE LIKELY.

In discussing the political situation, Marshal Chi stated that he did not believe there would be warfare in this section of the country. He urged the writer to try to impress upon the people of Shanghai the futility of believing war-scare rumours which were intended to draw him into a conflict with his neighbouring province. "Kiangsu will not attack Chêkiang," he stated. "Why should we? There is no ground for such an attack. We will certainly have to defend ourselves if attacked, but I can assure you that there will be no military movements on our part until we are actually attacked. We are not going to the initiative in such a fight because it will not be for the benefit of the people in whose interests we are trying to work. Neither I nor my military leaders want to fight Chêkiang and Chêkiang does not want to fight us. I have given my word of honour not to begin fighting and I will keep my word. I am not one who easily breaks his word. Why I am the subject of constant attack I cannot tell and I cannot understand why some newspapers in Shanghai are trying to force a fight between me and Chêkiang. I have been afraid of causing misunderstanding and troubles, so I have not for the past four months moved a single soldier nor have I increased my army."

GEN. HSU KUO-LIANG'S DEATH.

Questioned in regard to the appointment of a Director of Shanghai and Woosung Native Constabulary in succession to the late Gen. Hsu Kuo-liang, Marshal Chi said that this was a matter which was under the control of the Civil Governer of the Province of Kiangsu, Mr. Han Kuo-chun.

Gen. Hsu Kuo-liang's death and its cause was an open secret, continued Marshal Chi. Gen. Hsu was in the way of a gang of official opium smugglers. He tried to stop the smuggling but met with little success. In fact, his efforts to expose those connected with the affair resulted in his death. He managed, however, to report the affairs of this official gang to the Civil Governor just before his death and made it plain that those in charge of the affairs of the gang wanted the money for war purposes and wanted to murder him. Without this opium smuggling income, they would be unable to carry on warfare. Marshal Chi drew attention to the fact that Gen. Hsu's murderer was still alive and had not been tried publicly.

He then referred to the neutrality of Shanghai and made the statements mentioned above, suggesting that all troops at present here be removed forthwith and that no new troops be permitted to come here. He suggested further that this district be placed under police control (which was civil jurisdiction) and nothing else.

"I look upon the Russian problem and the arms problem in Shanghai with the greatest concern," said Marshal Chi, "because both are growing more serious and menacing daily. There are now thousands of Russian refugees in Shanghai and many of them are a danger to the Chinese and foreign residents there. It is high time that some action should be taken to repatriate them. Strong action should also taken to suppress the importation of arms and ammunition, large quantities of which are being brought into Shanghai daily from the Russian vessels at Woosung and from other places, and distributed to various military and political parties for continued warfare, as well as to robbers, tufei, bandits, and all kinds of undesirable persons. Strong action should be taken immediately to cope with the situation."

MURDER OF FATHER SOENEN

A Crime Prompted Only by Desire to Embarrass Local General

Peking, Jan. 5.

Later reports from Suiyuan state that 40 disbanded soldiers entered Father Soenen's residence without warning, shot the priest and then looted the house. The reports do not mention other looting.

The outrage is attributed to a desire to embarrass Gen. Ma Chi as apparently there was not the slightest animosity against the priest. The French Legation has protested to the Waichiaopu.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

The Procureur of the Belgian Mission sends us the following details of the crime:—

On December 25, after supper, when Father A. Soenen and Father J. Leemans were in their house at Hokiao, four men entered and asked for medicine. Father Soenen got up to go and fetch some, and Father Leemans, with no suspicion whatever of what was to happen, strolled out of doors.

Suddenly he heard gunshots in Father Soenen's room and then a regular fusillade began around the big door of the house and in the village to frighten Christians and prevent them from coming to rescue. Hidden by the darkness Father Leemans watched, powerless, the pillaging of the house and residence, which lasted for an hour. When the murderers departed, he ran in to find Father Soenen mortally wounded in the forehead, breast and stomach. He administered the Sacrament and cared for him as best he could all night. At 8.45 next morning the martyr passed away. He was buried on the following day.

The authors of this wholly unexpected crime were some 30 or 40 disbanded cavalrymen.

BATANG CAPTURED BY TIBETAN RAIDERS

Assurance to American Missionaries: Town at the Mercy of Outlaws

Peking, Jan. 7.

It is reported from Chungking that Tibetan hordes captured Batang on November 17. The leaders have assured the American missionaries, who are the only ones there, that they will not be molested.

The American Consul at Yunnanfu on December 23 received a telegram from Likiang saying that bandits had captured Batang. A party of American missionaries recently arrived at Yunnanfu with the intention of going to Batang, but was stopped by the Consul.

Batang has for years been at the mercy of Tibetan outlaws operating in Chinese controlled territory, who are in no way connected with Tibetans of Tibet proper.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

A BOLSHEVIST CRY FROM CANTON

Manifestos to Proletariat of Five Powers from China Agitators

We are in receipt of the following two manifestos from the "Citizens' Association of Diplomacy for the Canton Government of China on the Revenue Surplus" and give extracts uncorrected.

TO THE WEAK NATIONS OF THE WORLD!

"Brothers and sisters! We are in the same camp of weak nations. We should fight hand in hand against the exploitation and oppression on the part of the imperialist states which have formed an imperialistic united front in the struggle against the liberation and nationalist movement not only of China, nor of Asia but of the weak nations of the world.

"The imperialistic America, England, France, Japan, and Italy work energetically in the matter of give and take, in close co-operation with the small clique of notorious feudalists, bankrupt bureaucrats, and profiteerly politican which are the important political factors in the militarism regime. They support the counter revolutionist clique for a reign of feudalism in every corner of China. They get the revolutionary government, the only government that fights for the interest of the population against the clique as a whole, bound hand and foot in her hour of hard of counter-revolutionist and struggle of re-actionary miltarists, by holding unpaid the revenue surplus that she should have. They oppress the revolutionary faction in China in the form in which they have oppressed you. They let the civil war live long through the support of dollars and guns to the reactionary Peking Government, that has not shot workers to dead, imprisioned students, killed-people delegates, closed press and done dozens of evils at the sacrifice of people interest. They create fight in China among different factions, but with peace in their lips. They turn to pieces the mask of friendship. They hold out aggressive hands openly. They rob.

"The Canton government gets in close touch with the imperialists states right now in a spirit not of peace but of struggle. The battle ships of America, of England, of Japan, of France and of Italy Station in Pearl River in the form of armed demonstration. The time comes when you should stand firm for the right of China. Get up!

"Forward to the make-up of an anti-imperialistic united-front of weak nations of the world against the exploitation."

TO THE PEASANTS AND WORKING CLASS OF AMERICA, ENGLAND, FRANCE, JAPAN, AND ITALY ON THE REVENUE SURPLUS.

"The peasants and workingclass of America! The imperialistic capitalist America has broken open her mask in the relation between China and America. The so-called Open Door means the turning of China into a free marcket for the open robbing work by the blood-soaked imperialists of the world. The policy stands not for the interest of the Chinese toiling masses but for the interest of America, and not for the interest of the peasants and workingclass of America, but for the interest of the capitalists and bourgeaisie class of America.

The capitalist Democrats and Republicans find ways for their capitals into China with the slogan of "Good friend to China." But what means good friend when this month witnesses the fact that the American battle ships station in the Pearl River in Canton in the form of armed demonstration on the taking of Revenue Surplus to the administration of the Canton Government? The Republican administration fights not for the interest of the peasants and workingclass of America, but for the interest of the bank-capitalists of America. You should stand in opposition to the Republican Administration in her relation to China, especially in her participation in Chinese affair.

"The peasants and workingclass of England! The Conservative Party policy gives harm and no good to the peasants and workingclass of England in regard to her policy to China. The policy of participation in Chinese Affair on Revenue Surplus will result in a rising of economic boycott movement. The peasants and workingclass of England have everything to lose and nothing to gain in the armed demonstration.

"The peasants and workingclass of France! The imperialist French government has given an oppression to your brothers and sisters in Germany in the taking of Ruhr, and the imperialist France oppress Chinese toiling masses in a military way.

"The workingclass of Japan! China remains in a state of feudelism. The feudelistic militarist clique oppress the masses in co-operation with the imperialistic Japan and with the world imperialists at large. The Canton government under Dr. Sun Yat-sen fights for the overthrow of the work of militarism and imperialism in China.

"The workingclass of Italy! You should fight against the Facist Government in her participation in the military oppression on the Canton government, the government that works for the freedom of the toiling masses of the Far East.

Canton, China.

QUIETIST SOCIETY OF CHEKIANG

Meditation and the Sacred Books Membership Eagerly Sought

From Our Own Correspondent.

Shaohing, Chê., Jan. 2.

The Dong Shan Dzwe is in a flourishing condition in this district. Representatives go about securing new members. In genera the claim is presented in the following manner. First of all a recital is made of the names of the prominent people who have already joined. Then attention is called to the different places in which societies have been established. Casual mention of the cost of joining is followed by a discussion of the advantages of such periods of meditation as the society encourages. In city and country the membership is large. On passenger boats members are very active in preaching the merits of their order. In Hangchow a book room is maintained which does a thriving business. The circulation of literature is very large.

The Dong Dzwe is an eclectic society composed largely of officials and ex-officials who are attempting to preserve all that is good in Confucianism, Buddhism, and Taoism. Its source of strength is in the use which it makes of the Sacred Books of China and its emphasis upon meditation.

Once more the sound of the beaters of spirit-money is heard. For several weeks the men were out on strike. Although a large number of men were involved the strike was carried out without disorder. The men gained their contention for an increase in pay, but the wise ones say that most of the increase goes to the strike leaders and that the men will be but little better off than they were before.

MANGLED VICTIMS OF BANDITS.

One of our number who returned from Hangchow this morning reports a most distressing incident at the river bank opposite Nansinchiao. Great crowds of people ware gathered around the badly mangled remains of a bandit victim. One man was dead and another badly injured. From the somewhat jumbled account received it appears that the outrage occurred not far from the great road where hundreds of people pass each day.

CAPTAIN BRANDT'S MURDERERS

Fresh Details of Upper River Outrage: Bandits on Board Ship as Passengers

Fresh news has been received regarding the death of Capt. F. J. Brandt, master of the str. Tzesui, owned by the Hanyang Co., whose ship was boarded by bandits and looted and he himself murdered with two Chinese. When a "North-China Daily News" representative called at the Robert Dollar Co. yesterday morning he learnt from Mr. C. A. Perkes, who had just received a fresh cable, that the body of Captain Brandt, which had been thrown overboard, had been recovered and information was being sent to the Captain's wife to that effect.

"How was the surprise effected?" asked our representative.

"I have not the full details of the story to hand yet," replied Mr. Perkes, "but apparently it was carried out in the usual way. On these boats the Chinese simply crowd on and receive their tickets after they get on board. Probably, the bandits boarded the ship as ordinary passengers with concealed arms."

In addition to the Chinese reported killed Mr. Perkes stated that two Chinese had been wounded.

A Reuter's message from Ichang dated January 6 gives the following version of the story:—

"The str. Tzesui, which sailed on January 1 for Chungking and anchored on the night of January 4 at Kuochiacheng, 30 li below Fungtuhsien, was attacked by brigands, who killed Capt. Brandt and a shroff, throwing both bodies into the river. They also wounded one quartermaster, one passenger and one coolie.

"The extent of the losses will not be known till after an examination has been made.

"The steamer proceeded to Chungking to-day in charge of pilots."

COLLEAGUE OF CAPT. PLANT.

Capt. Brandt, who was born at Hongkong, was 45 years of age. He was for some time an engineer at the docks and also has been an engineer employed by the China Merchants' Steam Navigation Co. and most of the other lines plying the China coast. He joined up with Capt. Plant about 14 years ago and was associated with him until the latter retired, when he succeeded him as master of his ship.

The deceased captain was a keen footballer, having played for the Engineers and the Recreation Club as fullback.

An interesting sidelight was thrown on his character by his brother, Mr. R. J. Brandt with Messrs. Jardine, Matheson & Co.

"Capt. Brandt was always a daredevil and absolutely reckless. He had often been warned, for he took no means of protection and, curiously enough, unlike most others who did the run, had never had a single shot fired at him.

"On two or three occasions, however, there were reports that he had been captured and once he was said to have been shot."

Capt. Brandt married about 10 years ago, and leaves a wife and three sons.

Few Further Details

Ichang, Jan. 8.

Later information says that the brigands travelled on board the Tzesui from Wanhsien and started their attack on the ship at 10 o'clock in the night.

Capt. Brandt's body is reported to have been recovered. The shroff's body was not thrown into the river. One more Chinese has since died.

An assistant river inspector, travelling down the river on board the steamer Pakiang, met the Tzesui, heard of the tragedy, transferred to the illfated vessel and took her up Chungking.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

MR. H. P. KING has been elected a fellow of the Royal Geographical Society.

NEWS FROM THE OUTPORTS

PEKING'S POLITICAL PARTIES

Mr. Wang's Interview With Marshal Wu: Government's Neutral Attitude

Peking, Jan. 4.

Gen. Wang Chang-yuan, who accompanied Mr. Wang Ko-ming to Loyang, leaving here on January 1, has returned to Peking. It is expected that Mr. Wang Ko-ming will return to Peking very soon.

According to unofficial Chinese reports, Mr. Wang sought an interview with Marshal Wu Pei-fu in order to explain the attitude of the Government regarding the various political parties into which the House of Representatives is grouped, particularly the membership in the Constitutional Party of the Ministers of Communications and Justice and the Chief Secretary of the Presidency, about which Marshal Wu recently telegraphed to the President.

It is asserted that Mr. Wang gave Marshal Wu an assurance that the Government intended to follow a neutral policy in regard to these groups in future, explaining that the establishment of the Constitutionalists was necessary to prevent the complete domination of the House of Representatives by Mr. Wu Ching-lien. As Mr. Wu had ceased to be a factor in the House there was no longer any need for organized opposition.

LIMITED RESOURCES.

These reports add that Mr. Wang also wanted to explain to Marshal Wu the limited resources of the Ministry of Finance and the impossibility of the Government handing over the funds he asks for to meet the expenses of the Szechuan expedition and the operations in Hunan. Finally it is said that Marshal Wu gave a sympathetic hearing to Mr. Wang, with the result that a complete understanding on these matters was reached.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

MR. WU CONVALESCENT.

Peking, Jan. 4.

According to messages from Tientsin, Mr. Wu Ching-lien left hospital before the New Year and took up his residence at Tsao Park, the home of Mr. Tsao Jui. Bodyguards for the protection of Mr. Wu are reported to have been supplied by Gen. Wang Chen-ping and Gen. Yang I-teh.

Gen. Chao Heng-ti, Commander-in-Chief in Hunan, has sent Gen. Tsao Li to Loyang to report to Marshal Wu concerning the cancellation of Hunan's autonomy. Gen. Tsao will come on to Peking after interviewing Marshal Wu.

A reception is being held at the Spanish Legation this afternoon in honour of Senor Vicente Blasco Ibanez, the famous Spanish novelist now visiting Peking.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Dr. Yen and the Premiership: Probable Retirement of Acting Ministry

Peking, Jan. 6.

Some of the Peking Chinese newspapers state that Dr. W. W. Yen will undertake the task of forming a Cabinet within a few days, but official quarters consider that this is not likely and express the opinion that it would take Dr. Yen some weeks to select a cabinet.

It is generally stated that President Tsao is in favour of appointing Dr. Yen Premier, and according to a fairly reliable source Marshal Wu Pei-fu has now telegraphed to the President urging the appointment of Dr. Yen. Political circles point out, however, that the main difficulty in the way is the nomination of Mr. Sun Pao-chi, which has not been withdrawn, but it is believed that this difficulty would be overcome by Mr. Sun formally declining to accept the Premiership.

Meanwhile it is foreseen by the Chinese press that Mr. Kao Ling-wei and his Acting Cabinet will retire before the Chinese New Year. It is considered most probable that Mr. Wang Ko-ming will be a member of the next Cabinet.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Mr. Sun Nominated by Large Majority in House of Representatives

Peking, Jan. 9.

At the conclusion of an informal meeting this afternoon the House of Representatives held a formal meeting which passed the nomination of Mr. Sun Pao-chi as Premier.

Three hundred and five Members were present, of which number 283 voted, 250 in favour of Mr. Sun. Ten votes were irregular.

It was resolved to report to the President on the matter this evening. As the Seal of the House is still in the hands of Mr. Wu Ching-lien, it was resolved to use the Senate's seal.

The nomination must go to the Senate, which will probably vote on it on Friday.

It is expected that the present Acting Cabinet will resign en bloc to-morrow.

ACTING CABINET RESIGNING.

Jan. 6.

The dispatch from the House of Representatives reached President Tsao Kun this morning, whereupon the President sent the Chief Secretary of the Presidency to Mr. Sun Pao-chi to report the action of the House. There seems to be no doubt that Mr. Sun Pao-chi will accept the Premiership.

The Members who yesterday thought that it would be necessary for the Senate to pass the nomination have since discovered that the Constitution does not require such procedure, so the President can issue a Mandate accepting the resignation of the Acting Cabinet and appointing Mr. Sun Pao-chi as soon as he likes.

Several Cabinet lists and much other propaganda are circulating, but it is officially stated that such lists are premature. Mr. Sun Pao-chi has not yet selected the Ministers. The resignation of the Acting Cabinet Ministers will probably reach President Tsao Kun this evening.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Peking, Jan. 10.

With regard to the personnel of the Sun Pao-chi Cabinet, rumour is rife that Mr. Liang Chi-chao will be appointed as Minister of Justice, Mr. Hsiung Hsi-ling as Minister of Finance, Mr. Wang Yu-chi as Minister of Home Affairs, Dr. W. W. Yen as Minister of Foreign Affairs, and Mr. Wu Yu-lin as Minister of Communications.—Eastern News Agency.

The Withdrawal of the Police Guards

Peking, Jan. 6.

The House of Representatives is holding an informal meeting this afternoon, which will be attended by all parties. The two items on the agenda are: Discussion regarding withdrawal of the police guards and restoration of the Parliament Guards, and selection of January 7 for the next formal meeting.

Admiral Yang Ching-hsiu, who was recently appointed Commissioner for Coast Defence of Fukien and Kuangtung, arrived here yesterday and was received in audience by President Tsao this morning. Marshal Wu's delegate, Gen. Li Tso-min, was received by the President this afternoon. He submitted a report regarding affairs in Hunan and Szechuan.

The Ministry of Finance has paid the Manchu House $100,000, part of the regular allowance.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

DR. SUN'S NORTHERN EXPEDITION

A Move to be Made at Once: Hunan and Honan Troops to be Mobilized

Canton, Jan. 5.

Last night, at the headquarters of Dr. Sun's troops, an important meeting was held with leaders of the Canton Government as well as commanders of the Cantonese troops present. As a result of the meeting, resolutions were unanimously passed that a stable national Government be established, that Dr. Sun Yat-sen be designated as President, and that the scheme for the subjugation of the North be put into force without delay. According to sources near to Dr. Sun, his plan of despatching expeditionary forces against the North was originally to be executed after completely defeating Gen. Chen Chiung-ming, but owing to the fact that General Chao Chih, Chu Tung-feng, Pah Wen-wei, Chen Kuang-ta and Tan Yen-kai recently arrived here and urged Dr. Sun to effect the subjugation of the North without delay, and in view of the strained relations between Fengtien and Chihli, and between Chihli and Chêkiang, it has been decided first to mobilize the Hunan and Honan troops into Kiangsi Province as a preliminary step towards the subjugation of the North.—Eastern News Agency.

Conferences with View to Compromise Gen. with Chen

Peking, Jan. 8.

Canton telegrams report that Gen. Chu Tung-feng (Anfuite), Gen. Pah Wen-wei, Gen. Chang Kuang-kuai and Gen. Hsieh Yuan-han arrived there on December 25 and that they have since had many conferences with Dr. Sun Yat-sen.

It is also reported that negotiations with a view to a compromise between Dr. Sun and Gen. Chen Chiung-ming are proceeding in Hongkong.

It is reported that Dr. Sun has made any agreement with Gen. Chen conditional upon the latter leading an expedition against the North in which his (Gen. Chen's) troops would participate and also upon Gen. Chen issuing a circular telegram to the provinces denouncing President Tsao Kun and Marshal Wu Pei-fu.

A big conference was held at Canton on January 4 and was attended by more than 40 prominent personages. The conference is reported to have reached a decision to support Dr. Sun's plan to send an expedition to the Yangtze.

As a preliminary it was resolved to employ Gen. Tan Yen-kai's force of about 12,000 and to collect and equip the scattered forces of Gen. Chen Kuang-yuan's 12th Division who are still in Kiangsi. If an agreement with Gen. Chen Chiung-ming should be reached he would be placed in supreme command with instructions to take Hunan and Kiangsi.

The financing of the proposed expedition, however, proved a difficulty which none present could solve.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

AN INTERVIEW WITH DR. SUN

Canton, Jan. 7.

"I have decided to establish a national Government and am now making necessary preparations," stated Dr. Sun Yat-sen in the course of an interview with a representative of the Eastern News Agency. As a result of Mr. Yeh Kung-cho's visit to Chêkiang and Mukden, a triangular alliance is now well under way, Dr. Sun said, and a decision having been reached for the subjugation of the North, Southern expeditionary forces are soon to be despatched to Kiangsi. It is also expected, Dr. Sun added, that Hunan, Honan, Anhui and Shansi will also simultaneously rise in revolt against Gen. Wu Pei-fu.

THE QUESTION OF THE CUSTOMS.

Dr. Sun went on to state that with regard to the Canton Customs question, he had an interview yesterday with the American Minister to Peking, as a result of which the Minister could perceive the rightfulness of the demand of the South and declared he would take the trouble to mediate in the question. Such being the case, Dr. Sun said he believed that the question would be settled amicably before long.—Eastern News Agency.

THE CUSTOMS CRUX AT CANTON

Will Dr. Sun Take Action?—At Present No Hint that Force Will be Used

From Our Own Correspondent.

Canton, Dec. 31.

Since the sending of the demand to the Commissioner of Customs in Canton for the handing over to the local authorities of the Customs funds on December 19, there have been no abortive steps taken by Dr. Sun Yat-sen's Government. His demand for the handing over of the money for transmission to the Inspector-General in Peking stated that if a favourable reply was not obtained from the latter in 10 days, i.e., by the 29th ultimo, Dr. Sun Yat-sen's Government would take over the Service, dismiss the officials and appoint new ones, or else set up another Custom House. There is no hint that force would be used and it is unlikely that any will be used.

During the last few days there has been a good deal of propaganda spread both in Canton and Hongkong in the form of leaflets urging the people to do their utmost to force the Powers to give the Customs Surplus to the South, and in some cases even urging a boycott of English and American goods. At the same time big public meetings, attended chiefly by Labour and student elements, have been held. Processions have also been arranged to demonstrate the determination of the people to obtain the Surplus.

One of the largest parades took place on the 24th. The procession, which consisted of representatives of many Labour unions and students from a large number of the schools, marched through the principal streets of the city, carrying banners and attended by bands. The prime mover in the organization of the people is the M.P., Mr. Hsieh Ying-po. Throughout these demonstrations and meetings the local government officials have advised the demonstrators to be careful not to provoke any Diplomatic complications.

LULL IN THE FIGHTING.

For the past few weeks there has been little, if any fighting. All attention has been centred on the question of the Customs. The Constitutionalist forces appear to have the situation well in hand, and now it is being proposed that the Hunanese troops of Tan Yen-hai should be sent back to Hunan to attempt to drive out Chao Heng-ti. It therefore would appear that local military circles are quite satisfied with the state of affairs.

The Commander of one of the Yunnanese Divisions, Gen. Yang Ting-pi, met his death the other day under circumstances which are not known for certain. He was arrested on suspicion of having embezzled funds intended for the pay of his troops, and it is believed that he was drowned whilst trying to escape from his guards whilst on the way to the place where he was to be tried.

AMERICANS residing in China will have until June 15 to make their returns under the income tax law. The U.S. Treasury Department ruling 3284, permits this but reminds those who are affected if the tax is paid in instalments, that at this date two quarters are due and payable.

AUSPICIOUS NEW YEAR IN ANHUI

For Once a Period of Peace: An Exciting Battue of Bandits by Soldier's

From Our Own Correspondent.

Pochow, An., Jan. 1

I am glad to be able to report all quiet on this bright New Year Day. It has been so in the main for two or three months—in fact the departure of Lao Yang Jen and his crowd seems to have been the signal for settling down to better order. It seems also quite certain that the local military people have determined to tackle their job more seriously than they have done for a long while. I have made three trips into the country in the past month or more, two of them to Jungcheng where I found the north and south gates open for the first time for more than a year. This was done, I learned, just after that pest, Lao Yang Jen, had been removed.

I heard while in Jungcheng that a fight had occurred between six doubly armed bandits and a band of local soldiers not very long previously. The six men were pursued into a temple compound, the soldiers in one room and the bandits in another, but in such relation that neither could damage the other much. The soldiers finally succeeded in setting fire to that part in which the bandits were and then stationed themselves so as to shoot down each as he emerged. They had killed five, when, as the captain of the soldiers stooped to get a gun off one of the dead bandits, the last of the six pulled a revolver from under his gown and shot the captain dead. The soldiers had thought this man unarmed and did not mean to kill him, but after this performance, you can be sure they did not spare him long.

OPIUM THE ATTRACTION.

This incident shows how rapidly the soldiers can dispose of these fiends when they really wish to do so.

While quiet reigns, to the joy of everybody, people are afraid that it will not last long for much more opium is planted than last year and everybody says that it is largely for the prospective wealth in the opium that the bandits organize. Only this week I heard that deputies were here from Anking ostensibly to destroy the poppy, but people generally are convinced that the intention is only to frighten them so that when a little later, the deputies come to assess taxes the people will be the readier to pay up. I hear that in Jungcheng the officials are already assessing some ground at $40 per mow.

I would emphasize again if people of other nations wish to inspect the opium situation they should not wait later than the latter part of April or early in May. At that time it will be perfectly apparent what it is and still early enough to succeed in destroying the crop.

HIGH WAGES AND PROSPERITY.

People seem quite happy, if not grateful for the excellent crops of the past year. Quantities of grain are rushing south and further west where so much ground was under opium as seriously to affect the output of grain. Prices are far higher here than they ought to be but for that condition, and thus all wages are much higher than ever before here and the people seem generally in better condition than when everything was so very cheap. Better conditions are also reflected in much more building and of a better class than I have ever seen before here.

MRS. Sun Yat-sen on New Year's Day pinned medals upon the breasts of the bodyguards who saved her life when Dr. Sun Yat-sen was overthrown by Gen. Chen Chiung-ming and his men some 18 months ago, states the "Journal of Commerce."

CANTON'S INIQUITOUS TAXATION

Innumerable Levies for Military Purposes: Clashes Between Troops and Civilians: Many Businesses Suspended: An Opium Monopoly

Canton, Jan, 5.

The year 1924 opens in Canton without the excitement expected. For a time it was thought here that Dr. Sun Yat-sen would attempt at the beginning of the year to replace the present staff of the Chinese Maritime Customs Service in Canton with a new one designated by him as a reply to the refusal of Peking to allot to Canton the share of Customs Surplus from Kuangtung. The Commissioner of Customs in Canton, however, has been instructed by Peking to acknowledge no other authority than Peking relative to the Customs issue, thus ignoring the order of Dr. Sun to the Commissioner to retain the collection here in Canton instead of remitting it as usual to the Inspector-General. As it is unlikely that Dr. Sun will carry out his threat to seize the Customs House, for the preservation of the integrity of which six foreign Powers have stationed gunboats in Canton Harbour, the American and other governments are gradually withdrawing their naval forces. The anti-foreign agitation staged in Canton a fortnight ago to influence the Customs Surplus issue is not being followed up, as the merchants and the better element among the Cantonese do not believe that any unreasonable means should be employed for an end which does not appear important towards the re-unification of the Republic.

ADDITIONAL WAR LEVIES.

The Cantonese rose early on New Year's morning to find themselves heavier taxpayers. Among the long lists of war-taxes for the benefit of the military régime are included the following; a surtax of 25 per cent. on ricsha and motor-car service; $3.20 a day a table for playing "sparrow" games; a tax of 30 cents for distributing every 100 circulars on the streets, and a charge of 50 cents to two dollars for every gun-carrying permit, every person possessing arms of any description being compelled to take out a permit, with penalty for infringement of this regulation of a heavy fine or imprisonment. Several other taxes are being enforced and collected by individual commanders or troop units.

New taxes proposed in Kuangtung include special licences for the sale or manufacture of wood alcohol, matches, rubber soles, and other articles. Another item being mentioned is a special tax on the sale of sugar.

DIFFICULTIES OF COLLECTION.

Magistrate Jue Chock-man of Heungshan and Commandant Chan Chak of the Kuangtung River Defence, both under the Canton military régime, had a clash over the collection of certain taxes during the last fortnight, the fighting spreading from Chinshan to Shekki. The troops of these chiefs looted several towns and burned one to the ground. Dr. Sun, being a native of the Heungshan district himself, is investigating the matter. It is understood that the present conflict is the fourth one since the return of Dr. Sun to Canton last February, and in every case it has been one of Dr. Sun's followers trying to take advantage of another in Heungshan.

On account of the war the price of rice in Canton is at present exceedingly high. Paddy is being sold at $7 a picul and husked rice of the best quality at $11 and above.

SILK INDUSTRY STIFLED.

The silk factories in Canton are suspending operation as a protest against double taxation, throwing more than 10,000 operators out of work. The factories were ordered to pay their likins in advance some months ago, when the Government was in need of cash, upon an understanding that subsequent payments would be made only against receipts issued by the Bureau of Finance. Now the Department of War has taken over the collection of the silk likin and is ignoring the previous arrangements by which all silk dealers have paid much in advance.

In similar case to the silk dealers, the restaurants in Canton may have again to suspend business to avoid the annoyance caused by rival tax collectors, which is greatly detrimental to their business. The Civil Governor of Kuangtung has authorized one syndicate and Gen. Chu Pei-teh of the Kuangsi army another to collect war-tax from the same source. The syndicate backed by the militarists is enforcing its collection by arresting the shopkeepers refusing payment. The restaurant-keepers are in favour of the syndicate authorized by the Civil Governor of Kuangtung, but nowadays in Canton armed troops are everything and civil authorities nothing.

A BLESSING IN DISGUISED

Internal war and destruction of cities in Kuangtung are in some respects a blessing in disguise. Shiuhing City, a scene of recent engagements, will be rebuilt in accordance with a modern plan, and the old wall will be demolished forthwith. Upon reconstruction, a municipal government will be installed to administer the affairs of the city. The leading citizens and gentry of Shiuhing are behind the scheme.

MILITARY OPPRESSION.

The province of Kuangtung is still divided up amongst the militarists, Dr. Sun Yat-sen's Hunanese mercenary forces are occupying the upper part of the North River territory with the Yunnanese in the lower section. Both have ordered the Kuangtung Yueh-Han Railroad to charge an extra passenger rate of 30 per cent. and to increase its freight tariff by 20 per cent. for their support. They thus realize from $2,000 to $3,000 daily exclusively for themselves, aside from whatever may be received directly from the war-chest of Dr. Sun Yat-sen. The West River above Samshui is within the sphere of influence of the Cantonese troops friendly to Dr. Sun.

EXORBITANT RAILWAY FARES.

At Wuchow, Kuangsi, up the river, Dr. Tai En-tsai, a son-in-law of Dr. Sun, is presiding as Superintendent of Customs and Commissioner for Foreign Affairs. On the West River below Samshui and along the Canton-Samshui Railroad Yunnanese troops are stationed, the troops having taken over the management of the line, the tariff of which is exorbitantly high. From Canton to Samngankiu, a distance of but three miles, a third-class fare of 25 cents is being collected. In the Linchow circuit of Kuangtung the Northern and Kuangsi troops opposed to Dr. Sun are in control. The southwestern districts of Kuangtung and the island of Hainan on the southern coast are being controlled to a large extent by forces friendly to Gen. Chen Chiungming. Eastern Kuangtung up to the present is still in the hands of Gen. Chen Chiung-ming.

AN OPIUM MONOPOLY.

Mr. Yang Sae-narm, also known as Mr. Yang Wai-bun, former Chinese Consul at Honolulu and more recently Commissioner of Finance of Kuangtung, has been appointed by Dr. Sun Yat-sen as director to inspect the sale of opium. It is understood that the opium traffic will be given over to a syndicate as a monopoly, with a stated revenue to be paid annually to the Government.

THE NORTHERN EXPEDITION.

(Delayed.)

A movement is developing in favour of reorganization of Dr. Sun Yat-sen's General Headquarters, Dr. Sun resuming the Presidency of the Government, styled "the Government of Consolidated China."

Dr. Sun has called for popular support for a Northern Expedition against Peking and also for reunification of Kuangtung finances.

Shensi provincials residing in Canton view unfavourably the sale of the Shansi and Shensi Joint Guild's property to enable the financing of Shan-Shen military expeditions.

The Customs Administration is carrying on without interference.

The National Kuomintang Convention will open at Canton on January 15.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

PEKING DAY BY DAY

No Provincial Help for Peking: Bandit Raids on a Railway: Russian Recruits Chinese

From Rodney Gilbert.

Peking, Jan. 7.

It will be remembered that some little while ago the Government "ordered" the provinces to remit surplus revenues to Peking for the support of the administration and that the first rebuff came from Shensi. The majority of the provincial leaders addressed in this circular appeal did not reply at all. Kiangsu has now replied, however. Tuchun Ch'i Hsieh-yuan and Civil Governor Han have notified Mr. Wang K'o-min that Kiangsu's finances are low and that they have nothing to spare. They promise to study the problem, but close by admonishing Mr. Wang not to send any more appeals of this character. The exact measure of Tsao Kun's control over this wing of the Chihli party is therefore of the amount which he had been able to collect in revenues—which is nil.

***

The Chinese press reports that during three successive bandit raids made in the vicinity of the Ch'inghua end of the Tao-Ch'ing Railway in Honan the railway police and the local defenders of the law were conspicuously absent. On December 27 the bandits raided and looted Ch'inghua station after having seized and bound all the railway employees. Hsiuwu station, on the same line, was also looted. The Honan authorities recently withdrew all the garrisons from this district and when the soldiers departed they took with them three-fourths of the police rifles so that the majority of the police are unarmed and take to cover when the bandits appear.

***

Tuchun Sun of Kirin alleges in a message to the Peking Government that a Russian named Hata-fu-ko is recruiting Chinese soldiers in the Tungning district and already has more than 2,000 enlisted. The Tuchun says that he sent an agent to object but that the Russian sent him about his business in an abrupt manner. The Government is therefore asked to make representations to the Soviet Mission in Peking and to warn Mr. Karakhan that if recruiting is not stopped the Tuchun will send an expedition against this person Hata-fu-ko.

***

It was announced some little time ago that an experiment in local self-government was to be made in Peking, commencing from the first of this year. Police, gendarmerie, public works and other institutions, all more or less independent now, would be subordinated to this new municipal government so there have naturally been strenuous objections and the Government has announced the postponement of the experiment till April.

***

According to the "Ch'en Pao," Wu Pei-fu is planning another invasion of Kuangtung under Shen Hung-ying, who is now in Kuangsi, and wants Kiangsi and Hunan each to contribute one division and one brigade to the expedition.

Conditions would not seem to warrant such an exploit now. Kiangsi has not a division and a half of respectable troops and Hunan is on the defensive, while Shen Hung-ying's northern correspondents say that he has no more than 3,000 troops about him and has little ambition to return to Kuangtung, but would like to sit on the Kuangsi-Hunan border, whence he could conveniently raid several provinces from time to time as opportunity offered.

***

Mr. Wu Ching-lien, the notorious Speaker of the Lower House, who recently fled to Tientsin after the acting Premier, Mr. Kao Ling-wei, had removed the parliamentary police and substituted municipal police for them, has recently been telling interviewers that he is preparing to go abroad and tour America and Europe. He still holds the parliamentary seals, much to the Government's satisfaction, because the Ministry of Finance can refuse to pay the members their salaries until the seals with which the receipts are chopped are recovered. Many of the members are now clamouring for the return of their own police, but the Premier says he will not permit them to function again until he has received a petition signed by a majority of the members.

CHINESE INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION

Courteous Reception in England

London, Jan. 6.

The Chinese Industrial Commission, headed by Mr. Chang Chien, Junior, arrived to-day from France. The Mission will remain in Britain for three weeks. It will specially investigate coal-mining, the cotton industry, the agricultural credit and hydraulic works.

Mr. Chang Chien, interviewed by Reuter's representative, stated that the Commission had gathered valuable data which would prove helpful to China as giving a correct idea of the commercial and industrial situation abroad. —Reuter.

London, Jan. 7.

The Chinese Industrial Mission to-day visited the London docks. They will meet at the Chinese Legation to-morrow representatives of British manufacturing houses, officials of the Overseas Trade Department and of the Port of London Authority and representative Chinese residents in London.—Reuter.

London, Jan. 8.

The Chinese Industrial Commissiner, Mr. Chang Chien, JR., interviewed by a representative of Reuter's Agency, said that he was impressed by what he was seeing in England and he was especially grateful for his courteous reception.

The Commission to-day inspected the Underground Railway developments and the improvements in motor transport. A reception in their honour at the Chinese Legation was attended by prominent British and Chinese personages, including representatives of the Foreign Office.—Reuter.

Advancement of Anglo-Chinese Trade Co-operation

London, Jan. 10.

Mr. Chu Chao-hsin, presiding at a dinner last night at the Chinese Legation in honour of the members of the Chinese Industrial Mission, expressed the hope that the visit of the Mission would advance Anglo-Chinese trade co-operation. He looked forward to seeing a similar mission from Britain visiting China.

The guests included representatives of the Department of Overseas Trade, the London Chamber of Commerce and of the leading industrial firms.

The High Commissioner expressed gratitude to Britain and hoped that there would be everlasting friendship between Britian and China.

Sir William Clark said that the Department of Overseas Trade was glad to co-operate with the Mission.

Sir John Jordan said that the history of Britain and China was one of the finest in the world for honesty. He had great hopes for China. It was necessary to stabilize the situation, but the economic position would influence the political situation.

The Chief item of the Mission's programme to-day was an important conference with Sir William Clark, the Comptroller-General of the Department of Overseas Trade. The morning was spent in inspecting road-making and factories. Afterwards there was a private lunch given by the British Industrial Federation.—Reuter.

PRIEST'S PLUCKY ACT

Routed a Robber Horde With a Shilallah and a Few Followers

From Our Own Correspondent.

Kanchow, Ki., Dec. 28.

The city of Lungnan in the extreme south of this province has had a very severe time lately. Some 10 days ago it was invaded by about 200 more or less bandits, who had previously paid extremely unwelcome visits to one or two rather well-to-do families a few li from the city. Having entered the city, they immediately began bargaining and, I presume, this not turning out successfully, they started to set the place on fire, daring anyone to come to the rescue on pain of being shot. Something like 20 shops were demolished in this way. A great deal more damage would doubtless have been done, but for the presence of mind of a priest, a native of the Green Isle of the West, who when he could bear it all no longer, took his shillalah in hand and with a few of his followers put to rout these invaders, and ordered the populace to come to the rescue of the burning buildings. This they at once did, and the conflagration was stopped.

It was a brave act and should be long remembered in that place, as in case anyone in that crowd had fired one shot there is no telling what might have happened.

Kanchow has again been treated to a change of protectors, there having arrived during these last days a goodly number of the Tuchun's troops. One of these told me a few days ago that they were here for the protection of the city and were not going south. Strange as these are the troops which were got rid of some time ago in case of certain eventualities.

MORE MILITARY EXACTIONS.

During the last week or so there have been several visits paid to wealthy establishments in this city, resulting in the firms being relieved of a considerable amount of ready money. These visitors are armed with a certain kind of weapon which only certain high officers can carry, thus making the circumstances appear rather strange. There has been no public mention of these happenings —those concerned have just had to take it lying down.

Quiet prevails outwardly, just now, but everyone fears the spring when there is said to be fun in store for this district. Trade could not be more depressed, all boats are now commandeered and are not at present wanted, but are to await orders, which is very hard on these boat people. The schools have been shut since the summer, owing to the presence of the troops. This is a very great mistake and one which will be felt by the whole district in the future.

BANDITS' CAPTIVE RELEASED

Peking, Jan. 10.

The Rev. E. W. Schmalzried reached Tung-jih on January 7. He was thin and wasted, but otherwise was alright. Local Chinese paid 18,000 strings of cash for his ransom.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

BEAUTIFUL AND BUSY WUSIH

The Great Mill-Centre of Kiangsu Set in Fairy-land Surroundings

From Our Own Correspondent.

Wusih, Jan. 4, 1924.

Though founded about 900 years ago, it is only within the last 18 years, or since the building of the Shanghai-Nanking Railway, that Wusih has assumed a place of any importance in the eyes of the foreign residents in China.

Prior to 1906, the only Western influence was represented by one cotton mill, one Western-trained Chinese physician, two mission stations, with Chinese only in residence, and a large Roman Catholic Mission outside the North Gate.

Wusih is fortunate in its situation, both from an aesthetic and a commercial point of view. Just behind the city is the beautiful Wei San, or sacred mountain, at the foot of which lies "The Second Most Famous Spring under Heaven," a most lovely garden, and some interesting temples. Many poetic myths are connected with this mountain and its environs. Wusih also is within an easy ricsha ride of the Great Lake, and many residents of Shanghai know the charm of week-ends in that portion of "up country." The region abounds in charming temples and groves.

THE COMING OF THE MILLS.

From a commercial angle, the Grand Canal has always been a factor in the prosperity of Wusih, and the coming of the railroad put the city very definitely on the map as a business centre.

From the one mill of 20 years ago, we have now grown to over 30, including cotton, silk, flour, and fabric dyeing. The latest addition is a large cement mill, now under construction.

The stone bridges in and about the city are rapidly being leveled to allow the passage of rickshas and ricsha roads extend in all directions into the neighbouring country.

Soon after the revolution, a new gate was cut through the wall, rendering access to the railroad easier to the dwellers within the city. A few years ago a portion of the wall near the East Gate fell down, and rumours were rife that the wall would all be taken down and a motor road built round the city. But to the relief of those who love the beauty and the haunting sense of mystery of the old brick wall it has been decided merely to take advantage of this partly open breach to a new water gate which is now in process of construction.

Missions are represented by the Roman Catholic, Anglican, Methodist, and Baptist Churches. All of these missions have schools and churches and the Anglican has in addition maintained for the last 17 years a steadily increasing medical work, which is housed in a modern hospital building. This mission also includes the S. N. Pott Memorial Orphanage, the land for which was given and the cost of building and maintainance assumed and faithfully carried out by Chinese Christians of that Church.

A USEFUL TECHNICAL SCHOOL.

A recent development of great interest is the Wusih Technical School under the auspices of the Southern Methodist Mission. This plant undertakes and executes to the great satisfaction of its patrons building contracts, furniture making, and various industrial activities. It also has a delightful toy shop.

St. John's Alumni School is an interesting institution of Wusih. It was opened six years ago and has graduated two classes into St. John's University.

The local Chinese feel no apprehension with regard to the present political unrest. They expect war in the spring, but do not anticipate fighting near Wusih.

Rain or snow is greatly needed and the canals are very low, but the winter wheat looks flourishing and the general air of prosperity which distinguishes this city is distinctly in evidence.

PROTECTION OF FOREIGN RESIDENTS IN CHINA

Peking, Jan. 7.

In view of the fact that upward of 80 bandit outrages have been committed since the Lincheng incident, and for fear lest some serious diplomatic issues may be created, the Waichiaopu has wired to the provincial authorities, instructing them to take steps for the protection of foreign residents and to make a report thereon. The Waichiaopu has also ordered the provincial authorities to notify foreign Consuls once more, throughout the country, of the districts in which foreigners are prohibited to travel.—Eastern News Agency.

SHENSI'S MASKED BRAVES

Fresh Wave of Lawlessness in the Province: Foreign Refugees in the City

From Our Own Correspondent.

Sianfu, Dec. 28.

Sianfu has been kept in a flutter of excitement for some time by the news that Lao Yang-jen with his robber army is in the hills in the south of Shensi. The people of this province well remember the awful havoc wrought by White Wolf about 10 years ago, and with the report that Lao Yang-jen is another of the same kidney, much concern has ensued. Foreigners have been instructed by the authorities to see that their colleagues in the affected area are removed to a place of greater safety, and at present some refugees are in the city.

It would seem as if there were a new wave of lawlessness in the ascendancy, for the districts to the south and east are infested with tufei, so much so that men are afraid to leave their homes even for a short period, lest during their absence, a visit may be made to their villages by these masked warriors of the night.

CARNAGE AT KAOLIANG.

Kaoling, a town 23 miles to the north, has recently been a scene of carnage. Gen. Tsao Chun-fu, who was formerly the officer in command in this area, departed about a year ago to aid Wu Pei-fu in Honan. Recently, however, he returned to Kaoling, with the intention of taking a large draft of Kaoling men back to Honan. But this plan did not quite meet with the approval of the officers and men concerned, with the result that there was a fight. The clash of arms, unfortunately took place in the city. As was inevitable, much damage was done and many civilians killed in the fray. Gen. Tsao is said to have brought with him a ying of soldiers. I believe he had to return whence he came, with these alone, or all that was left of them.

The winter so far has been wonderfully mild, and well it is that it should be so, as everything necessary to sustain life is so terribly dear. The poor must be having a desperate struggle to exist. Snow or rain is anxiously awaited by the farmers.

Chinese Gift to Hongkong University

Hongkong, Jan. 9.

Mr. Fung Ping-shan, a merchant and banker, has donated $50,000 to the general funds and $2,500 to the library funds of the Hongkong University.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

PEKING, Jan. 7.—Five southern warships arrived at Tsingtao yesterday. It is reported that Marshal Wu Pei-fu intends to use them as the nucleus of a special squadron which will be stationed in the Gulf of Pechili.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

NAVIGATION IN THE UPPER YANGTZE

Accidents Owing to Shallow Water: Japanese Boycott Almost Abandoned

Ichang, Dec. 29.

The low water season brings with it its own difficulties in the navigation of the Upper Yangtze, as some of the steamers have already found. The Yungkiang happened to hit a rock and lost a propellor, as well as having her rudder bent. She managed to have the rudder straightened out here, but had to wait till a new propellor came from Shanghai. She has now gone up again, but it is thought that she will only ply between Wanhsien and Chungking for the remainder of the low water season.

The Kikin was very anxious to make one more trip to Chungking and left here when there was only about four feet of water. She is just a little bit longer than the winter ships and she found that she had attempted one trip too many. Above Wanhsien, when trying to turn, she struck a rock and lost rudder and propellor. Fortunately nothing more serious happened and the captain managed to bring her down here again all right. She has now gone to Shanghai for the winter.

It will be remembered that the N.K.K.S. Tehyang Maru was in trouble when the 1st Szechuan Army took Chungking and drove Gen. Yang Sen out. She has lain here ever since with the exception of two or three trips with kerosene to Wanhsien. But the other day, having heard that Gen. Yang Sen is now master of the upper river, she changed her colour in a night and has now left for Chungking. In her disguised condition it is hoped she will be able to get through all right.

COMPETITION IN SALT TRADE.

There is very little heard of the Japanese boycott now, and the steamers of the N.K.K. are very busy carrying salt from Hankow to Shasi and Ichang. This is the salt that is being sent here in the hope of driving Szechuan salt out of the market. There is going to be a tussle for the trade, but the Szechuanese have themselves to blame, for through soldiers and brigands the demands on the salt junks have been so extortionate that they could no longer engage in the trade. It is now learned, however, that the Szechuanese are determined to hold on to this market, and so salt is said to be coming down, which they are prepared to sell here at a considerable loss to themselves. Then in the spring the arrangements which were made last summer for the transport of salt by steamer will again be brought into force and it is expected that this will keep the market. But if the Tuchuns and others are financially interested in Tientsin salt coming here, it will be very hard for the Szechuanese to hold their end up.

THE TRAFFIC IN OPIUM.

The opium trade continues to flourish. An Ichang branch of the International Anti-Opium Society has been started and the committee wished to arrange for a popular demonstration against the nefarious traffic. Personal visits were made to the schools, asking for co-operation in such an event; but the military got wind of the invitation and sent word to the schools that they should not take part in the procession and no one turned up to make arrangements.

The price per lamp was formerly reported to be $1 per month, but it should have been $3. Even this taxation goes to the military and it is learned from good sources that neither the magistrate nor the local police get a cent of all that is raised from the opium trade.

BANDIT ACTIVITIES.

The China Inland Mission here had a letter from Chungking a few days ago, in which it was mentioned that communication had been received there from Kueiyang, the capital of Kueichow, stating that a missionary and his little boy had been taken by bandits in the far-off province. No confirmation, however, has been received of this report.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

HUPEH'S TERROR OF BANDITS

Peking, Jan. 3.

Despatches from Hankow report that in the interior districts there is much alarm as to the activities of the bandits, especially those of the notorious Lao Yang-jen. When this brigand leader was driven out of Hupeh into Shensi he met other scattered bandit forces who joined him, with the result that he has returned into Hupeh with a greatly increased following, burning and plundering as they go. Tsaoyang was visited by him at the end of the year and despoiled for the second time, the previous visitation having been in August last. Reuter.

POPPY CULTIVATION IN FUKIEN

Planting of Seed Enforced by Military Authorities: A Doubtful Report

Peking, Jan. 4.

The International Anti-Opium Association has received the following telegram from the Right. Rev. Bishop Hind:—

"Foochow, Jan. 3: Kienningfu reports widespread distribution of seed by military and enforced cultivation of opium especially in Chingho, Sungki and Pocheng counties. All classes of civilians indignantly protest and earnestly ask your assistance."

The Association issues the following:—

"In a recent issue of the Peking "Yi Shih Pao" the following appears in Chinese: "The Waichiaopu telegraphed to the Civil Governor and Commissioner of Foreign Affairs of Kiangsu saying that an English deputation headed by one named (? Tower) has just finished the investigation of poppy planting in Chêkiang and other places, and will proceed in a few days' time to the different districts of Kiangsu for the same purpose. Thereof take due notice."

Neither the British Legation, the Waichiaopu nor the International Anti-Opium Association have any knowledge of such an investigation under foreign supervision.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

OPIUM ON PACIFIC SHIPS

Japanese Offenders and Others

Peking, Jan. 3.

The International Anti-Opium Association issues the following:—

Several of the trans-Pacific liners of the Toyo Kisen Kaisha have been subjected to heavy fines at San Francisco lately because of opium being found concealed on board. The traffic is said to have been especially brisk since the earthquake, and the "Kobe Shimbun" reports that one of the liners has been subjected to a fine of $152,650. The total of the fines inflicted on this company since July last year is $235,400 (gold) according to the same paper.

During 1923 the China Pacific Mail (a Chinese company) went into liquidation largely as the result of opium fines imposed in San Francisco which amounted to over $250,000 gold.

Some Japanese papers allege that the U.S.A. is endeavouring to drive Japanese vessels off the route, and suggest that other vessels are operating freely in opium, but that only the Japanese are seized. This is entirely untrue as seen by the instance of the China Mail.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Cattle Disease in China

Peking, Jan. 3.

It is understood that the Government has decided to submit regulations governing the prevention of contagious disease among cattle to Parliament for ratification.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

PROPHET OF NEW CHINA AT NINGPO

Lecture by Former Governor of Kuangtung on the Three Aims of Modern China

From Our Own Correspondent.

Ningpo, Jan. 4.

Ningpo has been honoured by a visit of Gen. Hu Han-ming who delivered an interesting speech to a great audience in the theatre in Railway Road.

Gen. Hu, formerly civil governor of Kuangtung, is one of the chief movers of the Nationalist Party and the Southern Government and his speech threw much light on the aim and end of the section he represented. He began his speech by comparing a weak nation to a sick man; since the latter must receive special medical attention, so a weak nation needs the special support of its people.

To the people of nations like England or France patriotism is not enough; being strong themselves, their regard must pass beyond their national boundaries, the good of general humanity must be their care and international welfare a great part of their concern.

Thus a healthy man who only takes care of himself may justly be deemed selfish, while a sick man must not only be self-regarding but should really receive help from others.

Now (Gen. Hu continued) China is in the latter condition and as a consequence the Chinese have need to be highly patriotic. A patriotic man, however, is of little use unless he is guided by a fixed principle. Of all the patriotic parties of China to-day, the speaker maintained that the Nationalist Party alone had a fixed principle, the principle covered by Dr. Sun Yat-sen's "Three Aims of the People" viz "The People's Peace, the People's Right and the People's Living"

Dealing with the first of these, Gen. Hu said that under the Manchu régime the chief question was a racial one between the Manchurians and China Proper, but since the establishment of the Republic it has been between the Chinese and other races of the world, mostly the Japanese and the Western peoples.

Until the Chinese nation has taken its proper place among the civilized nations of the world this first aim can never be fully realized.

With regard to the second aim, Gen. Hu laid it down that there should be a clear line drawn between central and local governments in China. In the central government system there should be five independent sections: namely, the legislative, the executive, the judicial, the civil service examination section and the censorate. As to local government, the district should be the unit.

The last but not the least of the three aims concerns itself with the people's livelihood, upon which all Chinese students of economics should concentrate. This was necessary for the good of the country in general and the welfare of the poor in particular.

In this speech Gen. Hu expounded Dr. Sun Yat-sen's political theory so lucidly, that, in less than two hours he had given of it a complete résumé. The students of most of the colleges and schools of the city were present at the meeting, the Ningpo Methodist College, the Fourth Middle School and the Fourth Normal School fully represented.

BANK FUNDS EMBEZZLED IN MANILA

Manila, Jan. 10.

Lucio Torralba, a former bookkeeper in the local branch of the Yokohama Specie Bank, has escaped to Macao after alleged embezzlement of amounts from the Bank variously stated at between 168,000 and 400,000 pesos. It is alleged that the defalcations had been in progress since 1921.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

intendent of the Metropolitan Police; Mr. N. Akaike, to be Vice-Minister of Home Affairs; Mr. Fumio Goto, to be Director of the Police Bureau.—Eastern News Agency.

PRESS DISSATISFACTION.

Tokio, Jan. 8.

Commenting on the formation of the Kiyoura Cabinet, the press, expressing its dissatisfaction with the Cabinet, is of opinion that it is feared that the Kiyoura Cabinet will open the way for aristocracy and arouse class animosity. The "Asahi" says that a serious political confusion will, it is feared, be created some day as a reaction of the monopolization of political power by this small portion of the peerage. The "Jiji" writes that the rash and unconsidered action taken by a section of the peerage is greatly regretted. The "Yomiuri" states that it is to be regretted that the new Cabinet can not be looked forward to, though the accusation that the Kiyoura Cabinet places its stand upon a political party in the Upper House may be withheld for the time being.—Eastern News Agency.

Tokio, Jan. 9.

The following appointments were officially published to day:

Lieut.-Gen. Ichisuke Tsuno, to be Vice-Minister of War; Mr. Raizaburo Hayashi, Vice-Minister of Justice; Mr. Chinjiro Matsuura, Vice-Minister of Education; Mr. Narakichi Yoneda, Vice-Minister of Communications; Mr. Noboru Okano, Vice-Minister of Railways; and Mr. Sakio Tsurumi, Vice-Minister of Agriculture and Commerce.—Eastern News Agency.

THE EARTHQUAKE MURDERS IN JAPAN

Peking, Jan. 8.

Dr. C. T. Wang, interviewed by a representative of the "Peking Daily News," said: "Several hundreds of Chinese were murdered during the earthquake. Some were killed by mistake and others were murdered either intentionally or because of hatred." Dr. Wang did not know what action the Government will take. With regard to the report that he went to Japan to negotiate with Japan regarding Russia, Dr. Wang said that his business was to negotiate with Russia and not with Japan over Russia.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

JAPANESE EARTHQUAKE RELIEF FUNDS.

Tokio, Jan. 8.

The balance of $4,500,000 of American Red Cross funds has been handed over to the Japanese Emergency Relief Bureau by the American Chargé d'Affaires. One-third of this amount is for direct social service, one-third for the construction of a hospital and the balance for the endowment of the hospital.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

C. P. R. WAR MEMORIAL IN HONGKONG

The Unveiling Ceremony

Hongkong, Jan. 8.

In the presence of distinguished personages, including Admiral Sir Arthur Leveson, General Sir John Fowler and the Bishop of Victoria, the Governor to-day unveiled a beautiful war memorial in the form of a bronze tablet to the members of the staff of the Candian Pacific Railway Service who fell in the War.

The ceremony was most impressive. Representatives of both Services were present. After a dedicatory service the Last Post was sounded.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

MORE than two million horsepower is being generated in electricity from the waterfalls of Canada. Because of this, Canadian industries are conserving coal on a broad scale.

THE MASSACRING OF KOREANS

After the Earthquake in Japan: Government's Slowness to Make Proper Amends

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tokio, Dec. 28.

Accusing "high officials within the Government who formerly served in Korea and who anticipated serious consequences to arise from the mistaken policy they pursued while in that country" of having circulated exaggerated reports relative to alleged crimes committed by the Koreans immediately after the earthquake; waving duplicates of the telegrams the Home Office sent out to prefectural governors on this subject immediately after the earthquake; and blaming the administration of Korea generally since the annexation as being the true cause of the misunderstandings that have ever occurred between Japanese and Koreans and which resulted in the wholesale massacres of Koreans in the early days of September, Mr. Ryutaro Nagai, a member of the Kenseikai (Opposition party) made startling revelations in the Diet, in the course of an interpellation regarding the slaughter of Koreans.

THE OFFICIAL TELEGRAMS.

In exposing the fatal official messages which resulted in such terrible repercussions on the unfortunate Koreans living in the quakestricken areas, Mr. Nagai also coupled a demand that the Government should express "heartfelt regret and do its best to give relief and consolation to the bereaved families of the unfortunate victims, because such would be not only what justice and humanity dictate, but is also in accord with inborn human sentiment."

Among the official warnings read in the Diet by Mr. Nagai was one sent out on Monday, September 3, at 5.30 a.m., addressed to the Governor-General of Korea, Admiral Baron Saito, the sender being the Director of the Metropolitan Police Bureau. This message reads as follows:—

> "Some Korean residents attempt to commit incendiarism, bomb outrages and other criminal acts, taking advantage of the situation caused by the earthquake. Tokio-fu has already been placed under martial law. Such being the case, you are requested to exert strict control over the Koreans at home and to check the departure of Koreans for Japan."

A second message was despatched, also by the Director of the Police Bureau, an hour later, addressed to the Adjutant of the Kure Naval Station, to the following effect:—

> "Please telegraph to the Governor of Yamaguchi Prefecture to the effect that Koreans are going to act in a disorderly manner. In Tokio, they are showing much activity, attempting to set fire to houses and to throw bombs. In view of this situation, martial law has already been proclaimed over Tokio-fu. You are requested to see that the authorities of your prefecture keep all Koreans coming to Japan under strict surveillance prohibiting the landing of Socialist Koreans. At the same time you are requested to keep a strict watch over low-class Koreans arriving from Shanghai and take such steps as the occasion may demand."

A third telegram, sent out the same day, also by the Director of the Metropolitan Police Bureau, addressed to the commanders of all naval stations, reads:—

> "Please telegraph to the Governors of all prefectures thus:—Koreans are trying to attain their sinister ends by setting houses on fire in many places, taking advantage of the situation created in and around Tokio by the earthquake. In Tokio some Koreans have been carrying bombs and petroleum and setting houses on fire. Tokio is already placed under martial law. Such being the case, you are requested to keep a strict surveillance over all Koreans and exert strict control over their movements."

FORMER CABINET BLAMED.

The instructions to the prefectural Governors were thus not sent direct, but through naval stations. These cables were filed on September 1 and 2, although despatched through the naval wireless station at Funabashi on September 3, and consequently it was not the present Cabinet which sent them out, but the previous one, of which Dr. Midzuno, who was formerly Civil Governor of Korea, was the Home Minister Mr. Nagai thus thinks that the former Cabinet should bear a great share of the blame for the massacres of Koreans, since Dr. Midzuno, as Home Minister, authorized the sending of these cables.

The prefectural governors who received the telegrams transmitted the purport of these instructions to the district offices under their respective jurisdiction which, in their turn, conveyed them to the towns and villages under their jurisdiction. These instructions, which were thus broadcast, led to the formations of corps of Vigilantes.

WHERE WORST SLAUGHTER OCCURRED.

In certain prefectures, the local officials improved on the instructions of the Home Minister, and this was particularly so in the Saitama Prefecture where the worst slaughter of Koreans took place. The Japanese population of this district received telephonic (where available) and written circulars to the following effect:

> "There is great fear that many of the Koreans who have committed crimes in Tokio and Yokohama may come here, and as the present police force of the city is not sufficient, each town and village is asked to take up guard duty in co-operation with the local members of the Ex-Soldiers' Association, the Fire Brigade and the members of the Young Men's Societies, and that suitable action be taken when deemed necessary."

Thus the organization of the Vigilantes would seem to have been largely prompted by officialdom, and Mr. Nagai insisted that the authorities responsible for sending these instructions shall be impeached, beginning with the former Home Minister.

PREMIER'S ADMISSION.

Count Yamamoto, the Premier, has publicly stated on two occasions that the killing of Koreans was due largely to the wild canards regarding them which were being circulated with an assiduousness that was worthy of a far better cause. On September 12, in a press interview, he declared this to be so and again at the commencement of the present session of the Diet. If canards were at the bottom of these murders as the Premier admits, Mr. Nagai wanted to know why the Government now refuses to take responsibility for the groundless reports which the authorities themselves set afloat.

In concluding his speech, Mr. Nagai remarked: "It is a moral duty of the present Cabinet to express heartfelt regret over the slaughter of the Koreans and to console the bereaved families of the unfortunate victims. If, on the contrary, the reports of Korean misdemeanours were founded on fact, the Premier should tell us who is responsible for the feelings of the Koreans towards Japanese having become so dangerous. I believe that the Japanese authorities in Korea, the Governor-General in particular, must answer for the changed sentiments of the Korean people. In spite of the fact that it is its bounden duty to make reparation, the Government has hitherto done nothing to express regret, to disclose the truth of the regrettable affair or to do anything for the families of the innocent murdered. Even to an interpellation of a member of the House on a previous occasion, the Government has made no response."

THE CHINESE CASE.

It was generally expected that, once the Diet came into session, the disgraceful incidents that occurred during the earthquake would be fully aired. As a matter of fact, so far, only two members have broached the question of the murder of Koreans and Chinese—Mr. Nagai of the Kenseikai and Mr. Tagochi, an Independent. On the contrary, there has been much praising of Captain Amakasu, the gendarmerie officer who murdered Saka Ohsugi, the well-known Japanese Socialist, and his wife and whose instructions were responsible for the murder of their seven-year-old, American-born nephew, which incidentally indicates that the Diet, upon which devolves the duty of correcting the misdeeds of the authorities, is hardly alive to its responsibilities. The proposal made by Mr. Taguchi for an expression of regret by the Diet in connexion with the murders of Chinese and Koreans was treated with silent contempt by the Legislature.

While there has been some exposure of the wrongs done the Koreans, there was little evidence of a concrete nature in regard to the slaughter of Chinese.

ONLY FAINT INTEREST EVINCED.

When asked in the Diet whether Dr. C. T. Wang and his party were here on a mission of investigation into the number of Chinese killed and to find out whether these were murdered by Japanese mobs, Baron Ijuin, the Foreign Minister, curtly denied that Dr. Wang was on any sort of a mission here. Your correspondent called on Dr. Wang the same afternoon, and Dr. Wang told him that he was really here to inquire into the killings of Chinese after the quake.

Considerable pressure is being put on the Japanese press by the authorities and quite a number of subjects have been listed as matters on which discussion is prohibited, the penalty for violating this regulation being instantaneous suppression. The Diet is the only body that can expose the deplorable occurrences that have occurred for some time past, but the Diet is in a state of lethargy worse than that of any previous Diet.

PHILIPPINE ANTAGONISTS OF GEN. WOOD

Fantastic Charge of Graft

Manila, Jan. 5.

Charges published in the United States that Governor-General Wood has been using his official position to influence the exchange rate of Chinese taels through the Philippine National Bank and that he has also been permitting his backers in the 1920 campaign to recoup their losses through investments here have evoked the following from Governor-General Wood:—

"I hope there will be a full and complete investigation, the sooner the better, and that they hew to the line, let the chips fall where they may. The only member of my staff with Philippine investments is one constabulary officer who has a few shares in the Davao plantation."

Sources near to Governor-General Wood have made a statement that the charges that Governor-General Wood benefitted through the speculation of his son, Lieutenant Osborne C. Wood, are a baseless falsehood.—Reuter.

Japan and Tsingtao

Peking, Jan. 6.

The Chinese Chamber of Commerce of Tsingtao has telegraphed to the Government calling attention to the action of the Japanese Consulate there of sending out police patrols on the pretext of protecting Japanese merchants. The Chamber calls on the Government to protest to the Japanese Legation. — Reuter's Pacific Service.

Japanese Mine Explosion

Sapporo, Hokkaido, Jan. 6.

More than one hundred miners are entombed and are believed to be dead owing to a gas explosion in a coal mine at Utashinai near here. Nine are known to be dead and 12 fatally injured.—Reuter.

Another Big Fire in Japan

Tokio, Jan. 8.

Last last night, the Medical College of the Tohoku University, with the exception of the hospital attached thereto, was burnt down. The total damage is estimated at some Y.500,000.—Eastern News Agency.

AN AERONAUTICAL ENTERPRISE

Offer of 'Planes by German Firm to a Chinese Military Leader

The following are extracts from a letter addressed by a representative of a number of German industrial works of first standing, including "aeroplane-works of unexcelled products," to a leading Chinese military leader and a provincial governor. The latter, in transmitting the letter to us, states that he is not in the field to purchase arms, ammunition or aeroplanes either for military or commercial purposes. When the country is at peace, the military leader in question may bring up the matter of the purchase of aeroplanes for commercial purposes with the local gentry who shall decide, but while there is trouble in the country he absolutely refuses to take the matter up.

Extracts of the letter follow:—

"Your Excellency ruling over such a great part of China is surely in need of quick communication with all places within your provinces and therefore I beg to be allowed to offer the aeroplanes of my German firm, of which I enclose a few fotos—photos——. The pattern as shown is easy to steer, very light, with splendid motors, very fast, all in all the best of this kind what German workmanship produces.

"My firm makes several different kinds of aeroplanes as the intentions and purposes of the buyers require it, but all are proved by experts, for the chief of the firm as well as all his constructing engineers are men of highest skill and experience as they served during the great war as flying officers of the army.

METHODS OF ACQUISITION.

"Perhaps your Excellency allow me to make a suggestion. There are three ways of acquiring these aeroplanes:

"1. Only to buy same. The price for one as the photos show is $9,000, besides freight from Hamburg to China.

"2. To buy some and order at the same time a German mechanician and a German expert flyer, to serve Your Excellency as instructor for becoming Chinese officer-airmen.

"3. To buy some and to start a factory of aeroplanes at....., which would be not very expensive, as parts would come from Germany, with my home firm together.

"If Your Excellency would place an order for a few such aeroplanes as shown on the pictures by telegraph I can guarantee arrival of two machines, an mechanician and an expert flyer from Germany, to be here at ..... within three and a half months. The rest of the order a month later.

"Letter or orders from Your Excellency will reach me through the German General Consulate at Shanghai.

TRAINING IN GERMANY.

"Finally I beg to be allowed to make a fourth proposal:

"If Your Excellency would despatch one of Your Excellency's flying-officers with me to Germany I promise to introduce him personally to all industrial works and factories which he himself likes to inspect, not only to my firm, as we Germans are filled with the desire to sell our Chinese friends only the best that we produce and the kind of goods which the Chinese want themselves.

"Our principle is: Come and See and choose the Best.

"By this way Your Excellency have the surest guarantee of getting the quality and the kind Your Excellency want."

CAPTAIN A. L. Gordon of the Blue Funnel steamer "Lycaon" was the recipient on his arrival here on the 1st instant of a letter of thanks and a very handsome piece of silver suitably inscribed, from the Chinese Earthquake Relief Committee and the Chinese Life Saving Association of Kobe and Osaka. This was presented to him on behalf of the Chinese refugees rescued, amongst others, by himself, officers and crew during the earthquake at Yokohama on September 1, 1923.

ATTEMPTED ASSASSINATION OF THE PRINCE REGENT OF JAPAN

Carriage Window Smashed by Bullet Fired Near the "Tiger Gate": Would-be Assassin Badly Man-Handled: Elaborate Police Precautions: Cabinet Held Responsible for the Crime

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tokio, Dec. 27.

For the first time in the more than 3,000-years' history of Japan, an attempt was made to assassinate the Heir to the Throne. The regular session of the Diet was to be convened today and His Imperial Highness, the Prince Regent, graciously consented to officiate at the ceremony and to read the Imperial message. Accompanied by several officials including Viscount Iriye, Grand Chamberlain to the Prince Regent, who was seated in the same car as the Prince, the procession left the Akasaka Palace, where His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales lived during his stay in Tokio, at 10.35 a.m., the scarlet painted and chrysanthemum-embossed car of His Imperial Highness leading. The roads were packed with dense crowds who cheered the Prince as he passed, His Imperial Highness responding to the people's ovations by a salute and a graceful low bow.

As the cars swung round the Toranomon (Tiger Gate) bend, which is situated near the Old Russian Embassy, two men suddenly jumped out of the crowd, one of whom levelled a stick-pistol at the Prince's carriage and a shot rang upon the air. The bullet smashed the glass window, grazed past the Prince's neck and passed out through the other window. Viscount Iriye was badly cut about the face by the flying glass, but the wounds are believed to be superficial ones.

The Prince's chauffeur immediately put on speed and the machine flew round the corner, skidding at a very uncomfortable angle. At the moment the bullet was fired, His Imperial Highness was bowing to the multitude. If such had not been the case, the result would have been too dreadful to contemplate.

CROWD SEIZES ASSAILANT.

The would-be assassin of Japan's Heir to the Throne was immediately seized by the crowd who clamoured to have the man instantly lynched. He was badly man-handled before a strong force of police and gendarmes practically tore him away from the grasp of the infuriated onlookers. Your correspondent was on his way to the Foreign Office, which is a few hundred yards from Toranomon, and was a spectator of the attempted assassination.

His Imperial Highness proceeded to the Diet as though nothing had occurred, convened the 48th session of Japan's parliament, read the Imperial Message in a clear, distinct and sonorous voice and then returned to the Akasaka Palace. He received several high officials who afterwards reported that the Prince conversed cheerfully with them and was quite composed.

The news was immediately flashed to Numadzu where the Emperor and Empress are spending the winter.

CABINET RESIGNS.

The immediate result of the dastardly attempt to kill a very popular young Prince was that the Chief of the Metropolitan Police immediately resigned on the ground that he was responsible for the policing arrangements and that any hitch, in whatever manner it happened, was his fault.

The immediate rumour following the attempted assassination was the not unusual report that the perpetrator was a Korean. Your correspondent was detained by the police and not allowed to move until more than a half-hour had elapsed. The same was done to the rest of the crowd who were in the neighbourhood of Toranomon at the time.

Later in the afternoon the entire Cabinet resigned, but the Prince Regent bade the Premier carry on till further instructions had been received from His Imperial Majesty the Emperor. The resignation of the Cabinet is really a matter of form, but as the present Cabinet has as Home Minister Viscount Goto, whose flirtations with Soviet officials is well known and as the would-be assassin was of distinct radical tendencies, the present Cabinet is held responsible on the ground that the attitude of the Home Minister towards the Soviet officials has been responsible for the dissemination of radical propaganda.

WOULD-BE ASSASSIN A JAPANESE.

Immediately after the confusion that followed the shot fired at the Prince Regent, the report spread that the perpetrator of the deed was a Korean. In view of the recent massacres of Koreans during the chaos that followed the earthquake, it was feared that a Korean, stung to desperation, might possibly do some such rash act.

Your correspondent hurried to the Metropolitan Police Station whither the would-be assasssin and an accomplice were taken, and there elicited the fact that the evil-doer was a Japanese. The room just opposite the chamber in which the foolish man was being put through the third degree was packed with newspaper camera men and press reporters and the slightest opening of the door resulted in the lighting of magnesia flares as the press photographers attempted to get the first "picture scoop" of the man who wanted to take the life of Japan's future sovereign.

EXTRAS SUPPRESSED.

Extras telling of the attempt on the Prince's life were out in the streets a few minutes after the deplorable occurrence, but these were suppressed by the Police as fast as they appeared. In the afternoon, however, the Press Bureau of the Imperial Household Department issued a statement to the effect that an attempt had been made on the life of the Heir to the Throne, and thereafter the papers were allowed to print the occurrence and the details.

That the Police had some presentiment that something dangerously unusual might possibly occur seems to be borne out by the elaborate precautions that were taken, at least in the number of police and gendarmes patrolling the streets. I have seen 5,000 police collected in an area of less than two acres in the neighbourhood of the Diet when the Suffrage Bill was being debated in previous years, and noting that to-day there were even more police than then, I remarked to a Japanese friend that I was not aware that the Diet was going to debate the suffrage issue on the very day the two Houses of Japan's parliament were convened. He assented to my remark and declared that the Suffrage Bill was not on the agenda for the opening day. A few minutes after this conversation came the attempt on the Prince's life.

MARRIAGE THIS MONTH.

His Imperial Highness is to be married to Princess Naga-ko Kuni on January 29, and preparations are already in hand for the royal nuptials. As a result of the earthquake disaster, the ceremonies, while solemnly impressive, will be shorn of a great deal of the magnificence that would otherwise have characterized the wedding of the Heir to the Throne. The nuptial knot will be tied in the sanctuary of the Imperial Palace and after the solemnization of the marriage, the Prince Regent and his bride will return to the Akasaka Palace in the same automobile. The Emperor and Empress will not be present at the ceremonies, and the newly-wedded couple will leave on January 31 to visit their Majesties at Numazu. After a short stay in Tokio, the royal couple will proceed to Western Japan where a portion of the honeymoon will be spent. Princess Nagako, after her marriage, will be known as the Crown Princess.

Punishment of Officials

Tokio, Jan. 7.

The following officials, who are held responsible for the incident involving the outrage committed by Daisuke Namba upon the Prince Regent, have been punished as under:—

Mr. S. Tsukamoto, ex-Vice-Minister of Home Affairs, has been reprimanded; Mr. T. Okada, ex-Director of the Police Bureau, is to have his salary reduced by 10 per cent. for two months: Messrs. Kurahei Yuasa, ex-Superintendent of the Metropolitan Police, M. Shoriki, Chief of the Section of Police Affairs, and K. Hirota, Chief of the Atago Police Station, have been dismissed.—Eastern News Agency.

THE JAPANESE IMPERIAL PALACE BOMBED

No One Hurt: Bomber Arrested

Tokio, Jan. 5.

There was a demonstration tonight outside the Imperial Palace, which is not now occupied by the Imperial Family. A bomb was thrown by a Korean, but it did not explode. It is reported that the man arrived from Shanghai this morning. Three bombs were found in his possession and he was arrested on the spot.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Jan. 6.

It is becoming more apparent that the bomb-thrower was prompted by a desire to protest against the formation of a House of Lords Cabinet, though the police declare that he is a Korean. A veil of mystery is shrouding the affair.—Reuter.

Decided Movement in Japan Against Imperialism

Tokio, Jan. 6.

The Korean attempt, combined with the recent attack on the Prince, now indicates that there is a decided movement in Japan against Imperialism and is causing a greater sensation than the earthquake.

It has been revealed that a Korean plot was discovered recently at Shanghai to assassinate the Prince Regent on his wedding day.

Speculation is rife regarding the drastic measures that will be taken to prevent further attempts. Sensational developments are expected.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

RELIGIOUS FANATICS IN THE PHILIPPINES

Manila, Jan. 9.

Two thousand religious fanatics are terrorizing Surigao. They have killed two police and five constabulary and abducted two school teachers. The constabulary is being reinforced.

Later.

It is learned that the total number of victims is 19, including a captain and a lieutenant of the constabulary who were slain yesterday.

Governor-General Wood has ordered 100 constabulary to Surigao from Manila.

It is said that the fanatics are nearer 1,000 in number than 2,000.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE NEW JAPANESE CABINET

Baron Fujimura, Well Known in Shanghai, as Minister of Communications

Tokio, Jan. 4.

The Kenkyukai, the majority party in the Upper House, have agreed to support Viscount Kiyoura, who is proceeding to form a Ministry, the members of which will chiefly be drawn from the Kenkyukai, according to a "Nichi Nichi" extra edition.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Tokio, Jan. 5.

The Kenkyukai Party this morning submitted Viscount Kiyoura's tentative Cabinet as follows. It is believed that it will be approved to-day.

Home Affairs, Dr. Rentaro Mizuno;
Foreign Affairs, Baron Yoshiro Fujimura;
Finance, Mr. Kazuye Shoda;
War, Gen. Masataro Fukuda;
Navy, Admiral Kantaro Suzuki;
Justice, Mr. Kisaburo Suzuki;
Education, Mr. Senshi Egi;
Agriculture and Commerce, Viscount Toshisada Maeda;
Communications, Mr. Kenjiro Komatsu;
Railways, Count Yenkichi Oki.

Mr. Kisaburo Suzuki was formerly Vice-Minister of Justice and is now the Procurator-General.

Viscount Toshisada Maeda was Minister of Communications in the Kato Ministry.

Baron Yoshiro Fujimura is a business executive and a former director of the Mitsui Bussan Kaisha in Shanghai and London. He has never held political office before and has been a Member of the Upper House since 1918.

The tentative Cabinet is composed of four members of the Kenkyukai Party and four members from the Minority Parties. The Ministers of War and the Navy are not Members of Parliaments.

Later.

The Cabinet outlined this morning has been accepted. Its installation will probably take place on Sunday.

Viscount Kiyoura this morning visited Viscount Takahashi, the President of the Seiyukai Party, and Viscount Kato, the President of the Kenseikai Party, asking for the support of both Lower House parties. He has made a statement that no party can carry on without such support. Neither Viscount Takahashi nor Viscount Kato would promise to support the new Government.

The consensus of opinion is that the Cabinet will live only until after the imperial wedding. The selection of Baron Fujimura is viewed with amazement as it is an unprecedented action. Heretofore the Foreign Minister has been chosen from an exclusive group of trained diplomats, but now an amateur has been selected.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Jan. 6.

Owing to strong opposition to Baron Yoshiro Fujimura, Viscount Kiyoura will hold the post of Foreign Minister as well as that of Prime Minister for the present. The Cabinet definitely decided upon to-day is as follows:—

Prime Minister and Minister of Foreign Affairs,
Viscount Keigo Kiyoura;
Home Affairs, Dr. Rentaro Mizuno;
Finance, Mr. Kazuye Shoda;
War, General Issei Ugaki;
Navy, Admiral Kakuichi Murakami;
Justice, Mr. Kisaburo Suzuki;
Education, Mr. Senshi Egi;
Agriculture and Commerce, Viscount Toshisada Maeda;
Communications, Baron Yoshiro Fujimura;
Railways, Mr. Kenjiro Komatsu.

Gen. Ugaki is at present Vice-Minister of War.

Admiral Murakami is a Member of the Admirals' Council.—Reuter.

Tokio, Jan. 6.

Baron Keishiro Matsui, Ambassador at large, at 7 p.m. to day consented to be Minister for Foreign Affairs under the Premiership of Viscount Kiyoura. It has been definitely decided that the inauguration ceremony of the Kiyoura Cabinet will be held tomorrow morning at 11 o'clock.—Eastern News Agency.

Tokio, Jan. 6.

Baron Keishiro Matsui, the former Ambassador to France, has accepted the post of Foreign Minister.—Reuter.

Viscount Kiyoura Faced With Complications: Changes Due to Party Objections

Tokio, Jan. 6.

Viscount Kiyoura, newly appointed Premier, in forming his new Cabinet, at first made Mr. Yeigi Arimatsu undertake the business of bringing the Kiyoura Cabinet into being. Owing to opposition, however, on the part of the Kenyukai, the majority party in the Upper House, Viscount Kiyoura resolved to decline the first Imperial command for the formation of a new Cabinet, but as a result of the second Imperial command given him by the Prince Regent, Viscount Kiyoura immediately proceeded to form his Cabinet, this time causing the Kenyukai to choose the Cabinet members, and Viscount Aoki and Dr. Rentaro Midzuno being solely engaged in this task.

Though the personnel, with Dr. Rentaro Midzuno as Minister of Home Affairs and concurrently as Vice-Premier, was thus originally decided upon, the Cabinet makers were at a loss where to place Baron Yoshiaki Fujimura and finally decided to transfer him to the portfolio of Minister for Foreign Affairs. This decision having been met with strong opposition by the other Cabinet members and diplomatic circles a deadlock ensued. To make matters more complicated, the entry into the new Cabinet of Mr. Senshi Yegi having become a fait accompli through the good offices of Count Ohki, there appeared one surplus member on the personnel, with the consequence that Count Ohki, taking the responsibility upon himself, declined to join the new Cabinet.

ELEVENTH HOUR CHANGES.

Notwithstanding the above complications, the personnel was at length settled, with Mr. Kenjiro Komatsu transferred to the post of Minister of Railways and Baron Fujimura to the office of Minister of Communications. On the suggestion of Gen. Tanaka, Lieut.-General Ugaki, Prince Regent, have been punish- to Minister of War, and Admiral Murakami has been given the portfolio of Minister of the Navy through the recommendation of the Naval and Military State Councillors.

The personnel of the Kiyoura Cabinet thus chosen, with a vacancy of the portfolio of Minister of Foreign Affairs, was submitted to the Throne, but with the approach of the Imperial wedding, Viscount Kiyoura, being desirous of filling up every post of his Cabinet, suddenly commenced negotiations with Baron K. Matsui, asking him to take up the vacant portfolio. Now that Baron Matsui has consented to comply with this request, the new Cabinet has been completely settled. — Eastern News Agency.

Jan. 7.

This morning at 11 o'clock the installation ceremony of the Kiyoura Cabinet was held in the Imperial Palace. Count Yamamoto, ex-Premier, and Viscount Goto, ex-Minister for Home Affairs, have been specially accorded by the Throne the treatment due to their late offices.

Simultaneously with the formation of the Kiyoura Cabinet, the following appoointments were officially published:—Mr. Chinjiro Matsu-ura, to be President of the Bureau of Legislation; Mr Itta Kobashi, to be Chief Secretary to the Cabinet; Mr. Asakichi Yasukochi, to be super-

The average number of labourers employed for the seven months of construction was about 7,000, and the greatest number employed at one time reached 23,500 men. At one time 12,000 were at work in the leading channel alone. Famine conditions in Shantung had passed, so it was not easy to secure sufficient labourers, and though good pay was given it was necessary to develop a large recruiting organization to obtain the men.

The company made a special effort to look after the health and welfare of the workmen. A hospital with medical service was established and sanitary rules were enforced, for which purpose a special semi-official sanitary inspection corps was organized, these precautions no doubt helping to produce the splendid health record. With an average of more than 7,000 labourers over a period of seven months and a maximum at one time of more than 23,000 men, only three deaths occurred from sickness.

C. L. C WORK REPEATED.

With the co-operation of the General Committee of the Y. M. C. A. an experiment was made which turned out very satisfactorily, the Y.M.C.A. undertaking a work among the thousands of labourers somewhat along the lines of that performed with the Chinese Labour Corps in France. Messrs. Charles C. Shedd and Henry Tan were assigned to the Yellow River encampment and their efforts contributed much to the success of the project as well as to the comfort and welfare of the men. The mission organizations in the field assisted the Y.M.C.A., in particular the Rev. R. E. Grecning, of the British Baptist Mission, Chowtsun, who contributed not a little of his time to the work.

The river was diverted on May 15 1923, and all the dyke protection and other works were completed and officially accepted miles of land were reclaimed and on October 20. Then 1,800 approximately 250,000 people reoccupied their homes. Crops were planted in June and a bountiful harvest was reaped in the Autumn. Much credit is due to the progressive Civil Governor of Shantung, Hsiung Ping-chih, for putting this work through and financing it. All the payments were met promptly. On the contractors' side, special credit should be given to the chief engineer, Mr. L. Fred Patstone, for his able handling of the big job.

BISHOP ROOTS

His Work in the National Christian Council

In view of the fact that the House of Bishops in America has not accepted the resignation of Bishop Roots from his diocesan responsibilities as Bishop of Hankow, the Chairman and Secretaries of the National Christian Council wish to state their position as follows:—

1. That the position which Bishop Roots has taken in the National Christian Council since his first call has been explicitly stated by himself and recognized by the Council to be subject to the action taken by his own Church, and that he has been giving a large part of his time to the diocese pending a decision by the Church.

2. That the decision of the House of Bishops does not carry with it Bishop Roots' withdrawal from the work of the National Christian Council.

3. That Bishop Roots has not, as a matter of fact, withdrawn from the National Christian Council.

4. That pending a final settlement of the matter Bishop Roots is continuing to carry his work as diocesan Bishop and will carry it until some other arrangement is made, giving only a minimum of his time to the National Christian Council.

The Chairman and Secretaries are very hopeful that a plan may be discovered whereby Bishop Roots can continue to serve the National Christian Council while retaining the full support of the Episcopal Church.

ANOTHER BANDIT ATROCITY

Little Boy's Ear Cut Off

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tsingkiangpu, Ku., Dec. 31.

Four or five days ago I wrote telling you of having just admitted to the hospital a youth who had had one ear cut off by bandits. Yesterday a man came with his little nine year old boy whom he had just received back from the bandits and who had also had one ear cut off. The father paid $6000 (six thousand dollars) for his release but the money was not forthcoming quick enough. The mutilating of captives is evidently becoming more common to hasten the delivery of the ransoms.

THE SHARE BOOM IN HONGKONG

Unprecedented Appreciation Accompanied by Frenzied Speculation

Hongkong, Jan. 5.

The most recent among the group of companies controlled by Messrs. Shewan, Tomes and Co. to boom is the Green Island Cement Co., Ld., the shares of which stood at $26 last month and appreciated to $30 to-day, with a keen demand for forward delivery.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Hongkong, Jan. 9.

A scene relatively to be compared only with the height of the rubber boom in London is being witnessed to-day outside the Stock Exchange premises. The frenzied appreciation of the shares of the group of local companies, of which Messrs. Shewan, Tomes & Co. are General Managers, is reaching its zenith with a further phenomenal advance in Green Island Cement shares, the quotation of which was 26½ for buyers on the opening day of the New Year and reached 40 this morning. Excited biddings for forward purchases are lifting up the rates by leaps and bounds.

Bears for March are reported to have been badly squeezed. More than one firm of jobbers are reported to have netted a quarter of a million during the week's boom. Experienced persons regard the condition of the market as perilously speculative and are forecasting a crisis in the near future. The March settlement is expected to be crucial. The aggregate appreciation within the week runs into several millions of dollars and is without precedent in the history of the local Stock Exchange.

Later.

The shares of the eight companies, mostly local industrials aggregating $25,000,000 paid-up capital, have appreciated by $14,000,000 from December 31 to date. The advance is wholly without precedent.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

A PEACE ENCOURAGEMENT ASSOCIATION

Peking, Jan. 6.

A group of Members of Parliament, mostly representing the three Manchurian Provinces, have organized a Peace Encouraging Association with the object of working for peace between the Central Government and the Manchurian Provinces. The Association, which is being inaugurated to-day, will in a day or two issue a circular telegram setting forth its aims, while representatives will be despatched to Mukden to talk over the situation with Gen. Chang Tso-lin. Among the promotors of the Association are Messrs. Wang Hung-shon, Ku Chia-yin and Pi Wei-yuan.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

LOYAL NAVY'S LACK OF FUNDS FOR EXPENSES

Peking, Jan. 6.

Admiral Li Ting-hsin, Minister of Navy, gave a reception last evening at the Naval Club in honour of Admiral Yang Ching-hsiu, Commissioner for the coastal defence of Fukien and Kuangtung. Admiral Yang has come to Peking in the hope of persuading the Government to furnish funds with which to pay the expenses of the naval force which recently declared its loyalty to the Central Government.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

TIDING OVER THE NEW YEAR

Peking, Jan. 6.

Mr. Wang Ko-ming returned yesterday from Loyang and attended a meeting of the Cabinet in the afternoon, at which he submitted plans for tiding over the new year. Press reports declare that Mr. Wang's visit to Loyang was most successful, an understanding having been reached whereby there will be no Cabinet change before the New Year.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

PEKING, Jan. 7.—The Government is reviving Mr. Chang Kung-chien's former scheme to declare the Kokonor district a special area for agricultural development where people of overpopulated regions will be assisted to settle.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

JAPANESE TRADE WITH CHINA

Tokio, Jan. 10.

The Finance Department announces that for the month of December Japan's trade with China amounted to Y. 16,370,000 in exports and Y. 18,760,000 in imports, the balance being Y 2,380,000 in favour of imports, and that the total amount of Japan's trade with China for the last year is Y. 246,510,000 in exports and Y. 176,570,000 in imports, the former exceeding the latter to the amount of Y. 69,930,000.—Eastern News Agency.

JAPANESE STEAMER IN DISTRESS

London, Jan. 4.

The steamer Empress of Russia wirelesses via Alaska that the Japanese steamer Kyosei Maru, bound for Yokohama from Victoria is in a sinking condition at Lat. 49.30 N. Long. 174.10 E. The Empress of Russia is proceeding to her assistance.—Reuter.

Manila, Jan. 5.

The motorship, Nakashima Maru, from Japan to the Pelew Islands, has arrived at Tarragona, Davao, after drifting for many days owing to engine trouble. The crew of six suffered great hardships. There were no casualties.—Reuter.

LONDON, Jan. 1.—The "Daily Mail" urges the Government to announce in the King's Speech the withdrawal of the Singapore scheme.—Reuter.

THE STANDARD OF EXCELLENCE THROUGHOUT THE EAST

Varnishes, Enamels, etc.

Large Stocks Kept in China

Wilkinson, Heywood & Clark

SHANGHAI—HONGKONG

HIMROD'S ASTHMA CURE

Over 40 years ago the late Lord Beaconsfield testified to the benefits he received from Himrod's Asthma Cure, and every post brings similar letters to-day.

FAMED FOR 50 YEARS

Sold in this by all Chemists and Stores throughout the Country. BEWARE OF IMITATIONS

"BECHSTEIN"

Concert and Miniature Grands

USED BY THE GREAT ARTISTES

ROBINSON PIANO CO./LD.

Taming the Yellow River

(Continued from Page 45.)

15, 1926, the work of diverting the river and closing the breaks was completed, and successfully too, as has been proved by the fact that the works stood the tests of the high flood waters which came down in the latter part of July and the first half of August.

The third and fourth plans will show the method of turning the river, closing the break, cutting off a huge bend in the old river's course and diverting the stream through a new and straight course of about three miles. The river broke through at a very short bend. In order to straighten this out a new leading channel, 6,000 ft. in length, was excavated across the bend, 500 ft. in width and from 12 to 15 ft. in depth. A portion of the excavated material was used to build "A" dyke, about 200 ft. wide on top. The ordinary dyke is from 30 to 40 ft. wide on top. The most difficult problem was to dam the river and divert it into the leading channel. This was accomplished by first building a timber pile trestle or temporary bridge across the river, which at that time was 800 ft. wide and had a maximum depth of 25 ft. Oregon pine piling and timbers were used. Upon this trestle light railway tracks were laid and by means of push cars the rock for the dam was transported from the storage piles and dumped into the river, 13,000 fang of rock being required. When the rock had been brought up close to the top of the water, on May 15, the river was let into the leading channel and by the next morning about two-thirds of the water flowed that way. Nearly two months more were required finally to seal the dam and make it completely watertight.

SUCCESSFUL TESTS.

The groin shown on the plan was built for two purposes—one to direct the river into the leading channel and the other to cause silt to be deposited in front of the dam. It served both these purposes well and now a large mass of earth has accumulated in front of the dam so that when the high water passes it will be dry land. The dam stood the tests of the floods without leaking a drop of water. A channel about 900 ft. wide was excavated extending from the lower end of the leading channel a distance of seven miles down stream. This scouring channel was for the purpose of securing a proper hydraulic gradient and served its purpose satisfactorily, as the river flowed freely on to the sea. "D," "A," "B" dykes and the dam thus form the new main northerly dyke of the river. As a secondary defence, "E" dyke was built, joining the broken ends of the old dyke where the river broke through. "C" dyke was built at the request of the Yellow River Bureau, with the idea that eventually they may widen the channel at that section by removing the point of the bend in the old dyke. The leading channel was not large enough to carry the flood waters of the river, so it was arranged to break the small former dykes, "F" and "G," and dig a small channel to the south of the "spoil-bank." This would have assisted in washing away the "spoil-bank" and have enlarged the channel to a size which easily would have carried the flood waters. On several occasions the company attempted to do this, but the people from the south side beat and drove off the company's labourers, in spite of orders to the contrary from the officials. The south side interests prevented the cutting of the local dykes until after the first water had come and subsided. As a result, a terrific strain was put on to the new 600 ft. wide channel which had to carry the entire flood waters of the Yellow River. It is not likely that ever before in its history has the river flowed through such a narrow space.

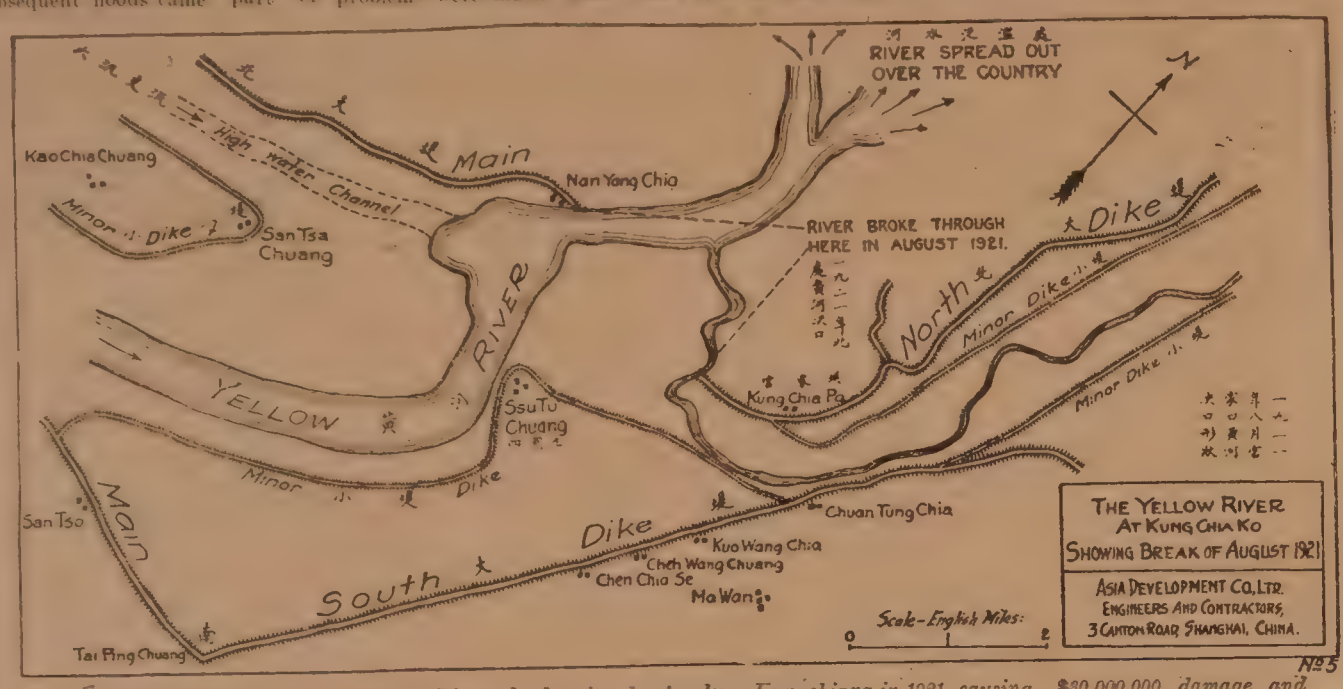
The water quickly widened the river to more than 1,000 ft. and to a depth of from 25 to 40 ft. A slight reverse curve developed, causing the rushing water to cut into "A" dyke along the downstream portion. However, the dyke being 200 ft. in width the river cut without causing danger until the channel became sufficiently large to carry the water easily, after which scouring practically ceased. In the meantime, the company, as a safeguard, reinforced the farther side of the dyke. After the first high water, the local dykes, "F" and "G," were cut so that when subsequent floods came part of the water flowed on that side. During the time the river was enlarging the leading channel, many false reports were circulated in the papers to the effect that the dykes had broken or that the water had gone over the top. Actually, never was there any danger of this. The dykes built by the company are larger and higher than the old dykes. During the floods the water came within 2 ft. of the tops of some of the old dykes, but the new dykes were from 6 to 10 ft. above the water.

SOME BIG SIDE ISSUES.

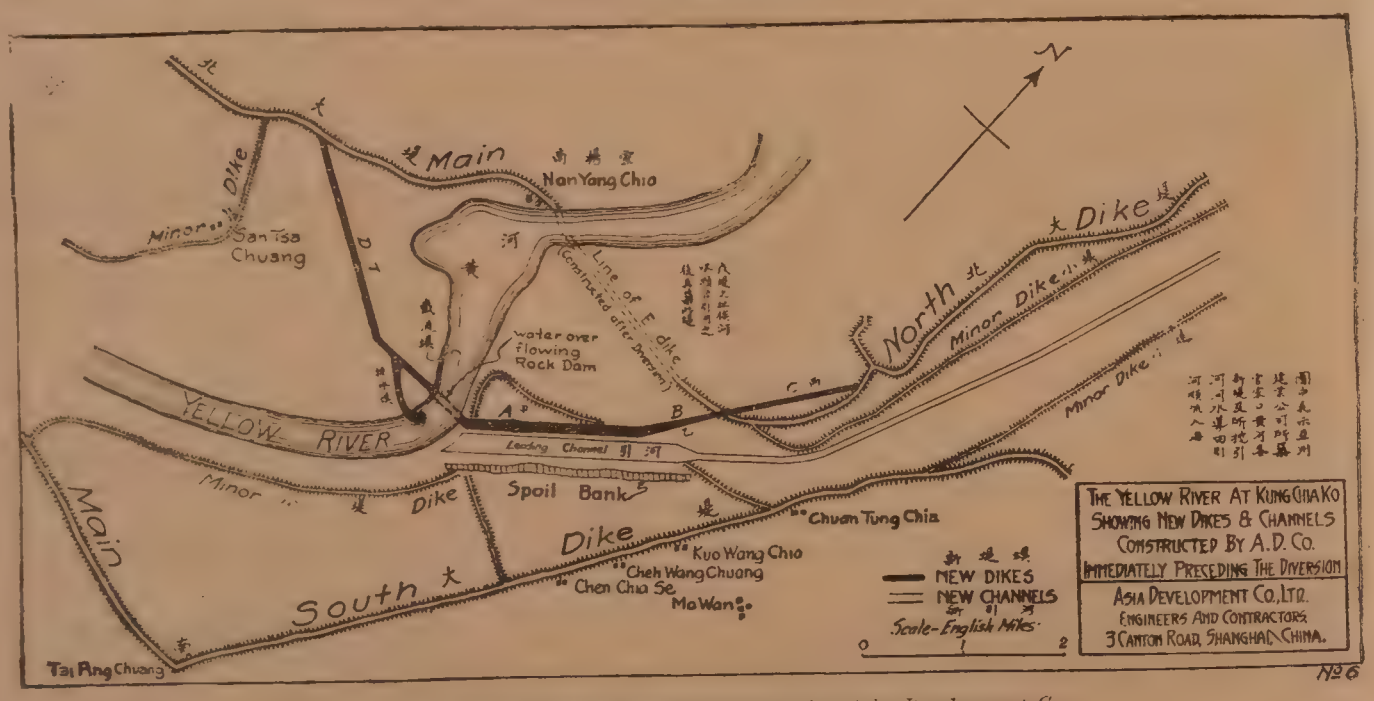
The transportation and labour problems were much more difficult than the purely engineering considerations. For instance, 14,000 fang of rock were transported to the works from near Tsinanfu, a distance of over 100 miles. Four hundred native boats had to be assembled for this purpose, as it had to be done after the spring thaw and within the short time of less than three months. All the heavy supplies were shipped by the river.

For quick communication motor cars were used. In 1922, the Asia Development Co. built a motor road from Chowtsun, on the Tsinan-Tsingtao Railway, a distance of 40 miles to the south dyke of the Yellow River. As soon as the contract was signed, the company put labourers to work re-conditioning this road, and from its termination the south dyke was used for the remainder of the distance of 37 miles to the camp at Kungchiakow. A maintenance crew was employed continuously keeping the road and the top of the dyke in a usable condition. Although it was a dirt road, the trip of 77 miles frequently was made in three hours. A Dodge car, a Ford car and a Ford combination truck and bus were used in this transport service.

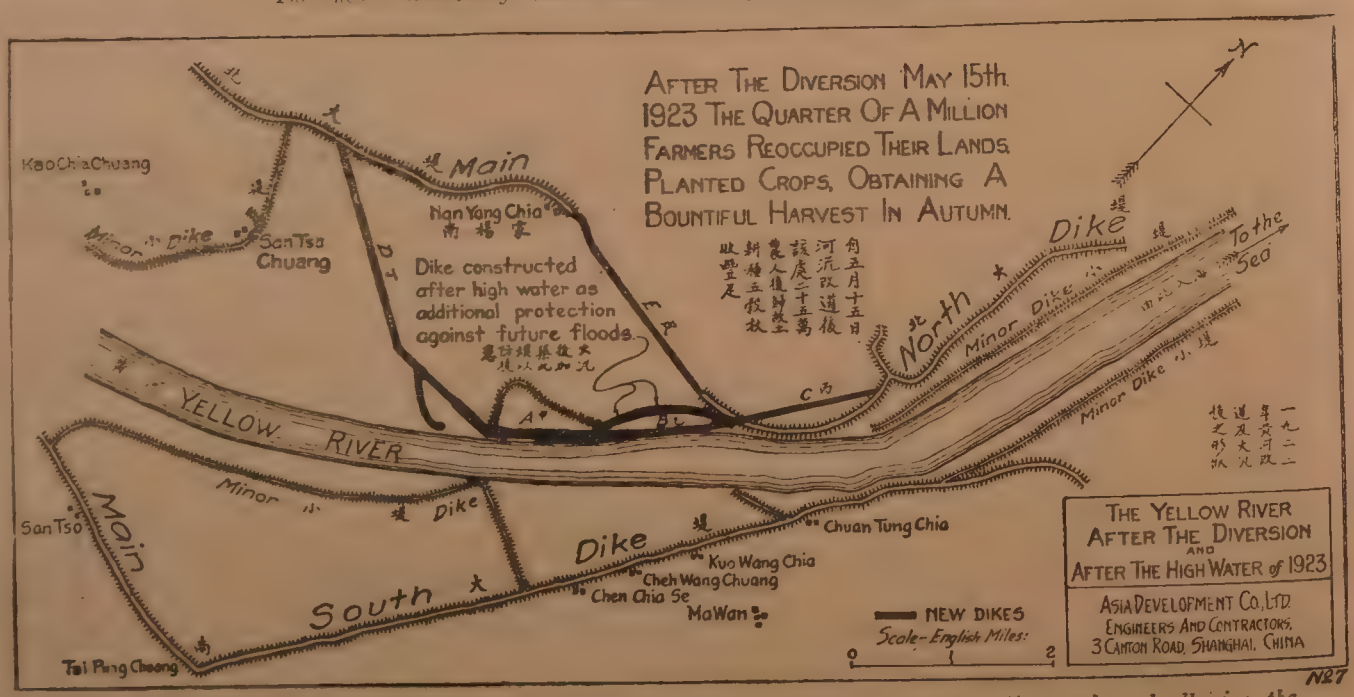
The labour problem resolved itself into human engineering.



A plan showing how the Yellow River broke its banks above Kungchiapa in 1921, causing $30,000,000 damage and the loss of thousands of lives.



The new conservancy works constructed by the Asia Development Co.



The new straightened and shortened course of the Yellow River, assuring the safety of the people and allowing the reclamation of much land.

THE MOTOR ACCIDENT ON FRENCH BUND

Condition of Russians Improving: New Story of the Affair

It has been ascertained that the condition of the Russians who were injured in the smash-up on the Bund early on Sunday of last week is better. Though one of the cadets has a compound injury and fracture of the leg, no serious results are anticipated. The chauffeur also has a badly injured leg, but one of the cadets got off with no injuries whatsoever. It now appears that the gentleman to whom the car belongs, had dismissed his driver at the French Club and told him to return later about midnight, and that in the meantime he had gone off and taken some of his cadet friends for a drive and was evidently returning them to their quarters on Avenue Joffre when the accident took place, which according to an authentic report happened because a ricsha got in front of the fast speeding machine. In avoiding the ricsha the driver went into the post. Examinations have proved the wrecked car valueless.

OBITUARY

Mr. O. R. Walter

His friends were very sorry to hear of the somewhat sudden death of Mr. O. R. Walter, a familiar figure in the Settlement for many years and a man who was universally popular. Mr. Walter came to Shanghai about 20 years ago and at one time was submanager of the Sino-Belgian Bank. Later he was admitted to the Shanghai Exchange Brokers' Association and he remained an exchange broker up to the time of his death. He was a very keen and clever musician and displayed particular ability as an organist. He was the organist at St. Joseph's Cathedral and the German Church for many years. Deep sympathy is felt for Mrs. Walter and her two daughters. She only arrived in Shanghai a few days before her husband's death, bringing with her their elder daughter, who had just finished her education.

The funeral service at the Bubbling Well Cemetery on Monday was conducted by Pastor Muller and was attended by a large gathering of friends.

A TRIBUTE TO THE DECEASED.

A correspondent signing himself "A.R." asks us to publish the following tribute to the late Mr. Walter:—

I beg permission to use the columns of your valued paper to place before the community a loving testimonial in memory of a good man, who has closed his eyes to eternal slumber—Otto Richard Walter—Dick Walter, as so many of us knew and called him. We laid him to rest this last Monday, and when the earth closed over him, it closed over a man of singular sweetness of character and soul. His family mourn the loss of a loving husband and father, his friends the death of a staunch and ever helpful comrade, his business associates that of a man of the highest integrity. But there are in Shanghai hundreds and hundreds of men and women who never knew him, but who owe him a debt of lasting gratitude, to whom he brought solace in the hour of sadness, courage in the hour of trouble, joy in the hour of adversity. They are all those who worship in St. Joseph's Cathedral and in the German Lutheran Church.

Year in, year out, Otto Walter every Sunday and holiday was to be found in the organ loft of these churches, giving his time and his splendid musicianship to the glorification of God's worship. During 14 years he never missed a service. Often he was weary in body and soul, often his friends advised him to take a much needed rest and always they received the same answer: "I must play the organ on Sunday and I cannot go away."

And he did not do this for gain, but only for the love of his art and for the glory of God.

And the sweetness of his music entered into his very soul and became part of the man. I doubt if any one ever heard him say one bad word about any man or woman. If he could not say anything good, he kept silent. In a world full of strife and hatred, he set an example of kindness and goodness.

He was not an ordinary man, good, but devoted to his own family and interests only, like most of us, but he gave himself freely and unstintingly to the common weal. I am only speaking for all those whom he served so unselfishly, when I say that life is poorer for his having died, but that his memory will live in the hearts of many who will always remember him as one of "God's own gentlemen."

MR. LINEBARGER'S TRIP TO EUROPE

Some Interesting Features of Long Travel

Mr. Paul Myron Linebarger after visiting some 20 countries during the last 18 months, returned to Shanghai on Monday by the M.M.S. Amboise.

Mr. Linebarger states that the most interesting features of his long travel was first the visit to the great ruins of Baalbeck in French Syria, and second, his witnessing the coming in of the motor car buses from Bagdad to Damasous.

According to Mr. Linebarger this connecting up of Bagdad with the European railroads is an event of great importance, since it brings the East and the West so very much nearer. At the present time for £50 motor fare one can get to India some three weeks earlier than by Suez. The journey is very safely accomplished in two days running, with no night travel on account of fear that the Bedouins will take advantage of the helplessness under motor-light conspicuousness. There are very few blow outs since the way is over a desert of level dirt, although a sort of a cactus sometimes gives them tire trouble.

Mr. Linebarger waited for two motor-cars to come in, and although the travellers were rather worn out, they were delighted with the trip.

In the event that a car does not come in on time the Royal Air Forces go out and look for them. The drivers are all seasoned service men from the old British forces and are sanguine that they are pioneers in a transportation development which when fully established will be of momentous value to both the East and the West.

THE RUSSIAN SHIPS AT WOOSUNG

The wholesale trade in arms and ammunition seems to be passing through a period of depression locally, the Russians at Woosung still having a quantity of goods not yet disposed of on Wednesday a party of Chinese, in foreign dress, visited two of the vessels and were cordially received as prospective purchasers without any question being asked as to their identity or where they came from. The guns, field and machine, rifles, hand grenades, wireless equipment, etc., were duly exhibited, and the desired information having been obtained, the visitors discreetly withdrew without laying too much stress on the question of purchase. It was observed that the vessels, after their long anchorage in the river, present none too pleasing an appearance, and are overcrowded with men and boys.

This visit seems to indicate that those in charge of the vessels are ready to do business with all and sundry, and accordingly it becomes more urgently necessary that official action should be taken.

THE FRANCONIA IN SHANGHAI

Many Sightseers from Different Lands

The Cunard liner Franconia, chartered by the American Express Co. for a world-tour, arrived at Woosung on Monday afternoon at one o'clock. About 100 of her passengers landed by tender in Shanghai just before dark.

Among the passengers who are going round the world on this vessel are citizens of the principal European countries,—France, England, Germany, Italy and Russia—but the bulk are from America.

Mr. P. W. Whatmough, general agent for the Cunard Line in America, is making the cruise, also Sir Edgar Bowring of St. John's, New Foundland. Mr. Thomas E. Kilby, former Governor of Alabama and Mrs. Kilby, Mrs. John Winston and Miss Marguerite Winston (Mr. Winston is a large owner in the Bradbury mines in Mexico where there has been so much trouble of late), and Mrs. Amelia Bixby and her two sons, David and Stephen, (California pioneers) are also numbered among those on the passenger list.

Special arrangements of transportation were made to facilitate transit throughout the Settlement. Motors ,cars, and ricshas, at least 200 of the latter were on hand to serve the guests on the shopping and shorter sight-seeing tours.

The Franconia, of 20,000 tons displacement, has been chartered by the American Express Co. for five years and has been entirely remodelled under their direction in order to be fit especially for these world cruises. Details have been altered so that nothing shall be lacking to the comfort and convenience of those who desire to see the world de luxe.

Having left New York on November 15, the vessel has kept well to her time-table and arrived at Woosung 12 hours in advance. She will be back at her starting point on March 17.

ROBBERS FOILED BY AMAH

Three or four Chinese attempted to commit an armed robbery at 36 Kashing Road on Tuesday, but despite the fact that they cut a telephone wire to prevent communication with the police, they were obliged to leave without obtaining any plunder. One of the robbers was armed with a pistol, another had a knife.

Entrance into the premises, which belong to a widow, Dzung Sze, was effected through the front door. The men went upstairs intending to enter the bedrooms, but the attempt was foiled by the prompt action of an amah who closed a trap door. Retracing their steps it is alleged that the robbers bound with string the hands of two servants who were sleeping on the ground floor, while they decamped without stealing anything. No alarm was raised, consequently the police knew nothing of the affair until 55 minutes after the gang had left.

ITALIAN OPERA COMPANY

"Cavalleria Rusticana" and "Pagliacci"

"Cavalleria Rusticana" and "Pagliacci"—a combination dear to the hearts of all opera-goers—drew a large crowd to the Lyceum Theatre last Friday, and an audience which appreciated in no half-hearted manner the dramatic value and the exquisite melodies of these popular operas. In "Cavalleria Rusticana" the rôles of Santuzza, as sung by Signorina Impallomeni and Alfio by Signor Scamuzzi, stood out pre-eminently, while in "Pagliacci" Signor Chiaia made an impressive Canio and Signorina Ambroso both as singer and actress took the part of Nedda very convincingly. The swift-moving tragedy with Signor Scamuzzi as Tonio, Signor Bigardi as Silvio and Bernaroli as Arlecchino was given with force and expression and well merited the enthusiastic plaudits of its hearers.

"Trovatore" and "Ernani"

The Italian Opera Company under the management of M. Carpi, on Thursday presented "Ernani," another of Verdi's works in the best manner of the company. "Il Trovatore" who rendered the evening before and earlier in the week "Aida" and in each of them the tragedy came in the last act. It would be a boon to Shanghai music-lovers to be able to enjoy a sympathetic harmony, feel a spirit of melody and undergo an emotional reaction without always being reminded that death is ever omnipresent. Death is but the end of life and comes once in a lifetime to each and the normal human being is not continually thinking of his departure from this sphere. Let us have something not tragedy. If a company coming to Shanghai could include in its répertoire light opera or lyrics it would find a merited approval.

As has been said before the chorus work of the company is good and the individual work of Scamuzzi and Chiaia pleasing to the average listener, so much so that some of the others lose by comparison. The two former as Carlos, King of Spain, and the other as Ernani, the bandit chief sung their difficult rôles in a manner which showed their training.

To-morrow evening Giordano's "Fedora" will be the attraction. Russian characters are portrayed and the first act is set in the land of snow, but the rest of the action takes place in Paris and Switzerland, the suicide, Fedora, praying that she be forgiven.

WEDDINGS

White—Fuller

A quiet but very pretty wedding was solemnized at Holy Trinity Cathedral on Tuesday afternoon by the Very Rev. Dean Symons, when Mrs. M. A. Fuller became the bride of Mr. Edmund S. White, D.S.O., of the Hankow International Export Co

The bride, who was given away by Dr. H. Chatley, wore a gown of beige brocaded georgette, with a cape and hat to match. She was attended by Miss J. McGeachie as bridesmaid, and Messrs. Belton and Copley acted as best man and usher, respectively.

Toscani—Chadderton

St. Joseph's Church, artistically decorated with white chrysanthemums, poinsettias and arches of waving bamboo, was the scene of a pretty wedding on Saturday afternoon, when Miss Helen Chadderton, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Chadderton was married Mr. Steno Toscani, of the indoor staff of the Chinese Maritime Customs. The Rev. Father MacDonald took the service.

The bride, who was given away by her father, wore a becoming gown of white silk lace skilfully draped over satin crepe, the skirt caught up with orange blossoms. The long sleeves were banded with white fur and a long embroidered tulle veil completed the costume which was designed and made by the Salon Bella. White carnations formed the bridal bouquet. The maid of honour, Miss Katheen Lynch, was picturesque in peach-coloured taffeta, with flounces of silver lace, a wreath of silver leaves for the hair and a posy of tea roses. The bride's mother wore grey silk trimmed with blue and carried a shower bouquet of pink carnations.

Mr. A. C. Hyde Lay attended the bridegroom as best man and the ushers were Messrs. C. Chadderton, brother of the bride, and C. T. Hall. After the ceremony a reception was held at the residence of the bride's parents, 33 Yangtszepoo Road, which was prettily decorated for the occasion with poinsettias and bamboo. Mr. and Mrs. Toscani received their many friends beneath a bamboo arch from which hung a floral bell of green and white. On leaving for the honeymoon, which is be spent in Hangchow, the bride wore a three-piece suit of brick-red gabardine, with hat to match.

CHRISTMAS IN THE ORPHANAGE

A "Real Dinner" for the Little Russian Girls

On Monday, the date which Russians still observe as Christmas, the little orphanage of Mme. Dieterichs near Siccawei Convent, celebrated the Nativity with joy and thankfulness to the friends whom they have found in this strange country. At half past nine in the morning, in the simple little chapel which has been fitted up in the central hall of their Chinese home, the Christmas service was sung, with candles burning before the sacred ikons which have shared their exile from "holy" Russia.

The religious devotion which seeks expression through the ritual of the Greek Orthodox Church seems a very natural and simple accompaniment of the Russian life, the traveller there in former years being impressed by the shrines found everywhere, little chapels in the railway stations, holy pictures in every store and hotel room. Therefore it was not surprising to hear that these children had been insisting upon keeping the fast which precedes the Yule-tide holidays, denying themselves even the meagre fare they usually have.

But on Monday they had a real dinner. Only fancy, a dinner with meat! Not a turkey-pheasant-capon 10-course dinner, but a substantial meal, with meat. The emphasis they placed on that phrase brought out the unusualness of the event. At six o'clock the tree was lighted and a very few invited guests assembled. The girls were in Russian costumes, embroidered by themselves. Some one had lent a gramophone, and it was seldom idle. They sang the old folk songs and trod the intricate measures of the Russian dances. They received simple gifts, and exclaimed and laughed and cried over them and were thoroughly happy. At seven they had tea, with sandwiches and cake and fruit, and then more songs. Truly a wonderful Christmas and behind it all the reassuring thought that through the generosity of friends in Shanghai and the outports the support of the Orphanage is assured for perhaps four months to come.

THE FUNERAL OF MRS. B. O. F. REIN

The funeral took place at Bubbling Well Cemetery last Friday of Mrs. Rein, wife of Mr. Bernt O. F. Rein, manager of Messrs. Wallem Co.

There was a large gathering of friends at the cemetery. Mr. F. J. Blom, Mr. O. C. J. Gad, Mr. C. Knipschildt, Mr. G. S. Jensen, Mr. S. Froland and Mr. R. Johanessen acted as pall bearers. The deceased lady's husband and Mr. H. J. Wallem were the chief mourners.

Many beautiful floral tributes were sent.

SIR Robert Ho Tung left for Hongkong last Friday by the M.M.S. Paul Lecat. Among those who said farewell to him on the jetty were Mr. Hsu Yuan, Commissioner of Foreign Affairs, a representative of the local Military Governor, and deputations of students from the Fuhta University, the National South-eastern University, and Chinese Girls' School.

SHANGHAI NEWS

THE TRAINING SHIP HWAHJAH

Reception Held To Explain To Cadets the Object of the Trip

At a reception held on board the str. Hwahjah on Saturday, Marquis Li Kuo-jeh, Chairman of the Board of Directors of the China Merchants' S. N. Co., and Rear-Admiral C. C. Hsu, adviser to the company on navigation matters, addressed the Chinese cadets about to depart on a year's tour of the world for a course of practical training in seamanship.

The ship has been lent for the purpose by the Ministry of Navy and the cadets number about 40 in all, 15 of whom are naval midshipmen while the remainder are students drawn from Nanyang College, St. John's University and Soochow University who have had theoretical tuition and must round off their training with practical work. The ship will be commanded by Capt. B. W. S. Pritchard, who has had 42 years experience of the sea. With him are associated Chief Officer Elvidge and Chief Engineer W. Dryden, who have been colleagues of Capt. Pritchard's for the past eight years.

MARQUIS LI KUO-JEH.

Upon the arrival of the party at the ship's side they passed through two lines of cadets drawn up on the quayside. The reception was held in the dining saloon of the vessel and among those present were:—Mr. Fu Siao-en and Mr. Shuo Tse-yu, directors of the company, Mr. K. T. Gaston Li, secretary of the Naval Hydrographic Dept., Woosung, Mr. Li Tsung-je, Wuhu manager, Mr. Chang Tsung-tso, Chinese secretary of the company, Mr. Eric Moller and his secretary Mr. V. Xavier, Mr. C. A. Perkes, representing the Robt. Dollar Co., Mr. E. Morris and Capt. H. Le Yang, who retires from the command of the Hwahjah.

THE SPEECHES.

Marquis Li, addressing the cadets, dwelt on the great importance of the enterprise. Capt. Pritchard, he pointed out, was a man of many qualifications who took a great interest in the project which opened up a great future for Chinese cadets. He promised them equal treatment when well qualified for seamanship. They must not think the life on board too strenuous but must work hard and be faithful to the men who had put the enterprise on a good footing. In conclusion, he exhorted them to bring the project to a successful conclusion as it was a matter of national interest.

Rear-Admiral Hsu gave as one of the reasons why China's international status was so low her inferior position in mercantile marine. China had no charts made by her own nationals but depended on those made by other countries. She could not navigate her territorial waters because she had not her own national pilots. She had no observatories, no port examiners, no ship's officers. It was for reasons such as these, among others, which made foreigners seek extraterritoriality and other treaty rights. Such a state of affairs existed in no other country. The China Merchants' Steam Navigation Co., therefore, proposed to send cadets abroad to study the methods of other nations to find out wherein they differed from China's. The students must prove themselves worthy of the promoters' energy both in the eyes of the passengers on board and by gaining the esteem of the general public. They must pay close attention to the manifold duties and qualifications required for steamship officers—questions of maritime law, ship construction, commercial relations and matters of international importance. It was only by understanding such questions thoroughly that they would be able to pass the examinations they would have to undergo on returning from their trip.

NO FOREMAST DUTIES NOW, BUT—

Capt. Pritchard drew a picture of the rough method of training in force when he first went to sea. At that time it was the custom to set cadets to do all the dirty work of the ship such as "cleaning brass work, greasing masts and holy stoning decks and much worse than that." He did not propose to put them through the same course but he expected them always to assist the officers and crew in mooring and unmooring ships and making themselves generally useful when not receiving instruction in other ways. He warned them that it was to their own interest to do their best as he had been requested from time to time to report on their individual progress. They were there to learn a noble profession and he hoped one day in the near future to see them officers and masters of ocean going ships of their own country.

He impressed on them the necessity for discipline and respect for superior officers and the fact that they were not on a pleasure trip but out to study hard. When they became officers they must be sure never to give to others work which they could not do themselves. In conclusion, he hoped that they would treat him as a friend and if they were in any difficulty they were to bring the matter to him and he would endeavour to help them to the best of his ability.

After the speeches group photographs were taken on deck of the cadets and those present for the occasion. On leaving the ship Marquis Li and Rear-Admiral Hsu were given three hearty cheers by the cadets assembled on the quay.

An interesting paper on the stamps of Cape Colony was given by Mr. J. A. Smallbones before the Philatelic Society at the Royal Asiatic Society's on Wednesday. After the paper [illegible] 70 sets of stamps [illegible] by Mr. D. Fraser, Times" correspondent at Peking, were put up to auction. The total amount realized was $65 and the most spirited bidding occurred over a set of eight Chinese 1894 issue which, starting at 25 cents, reached $9

EPIDEMIC OF MOTOR THEFTS

Cars Rifled of Spare Parts: Future Attitude of Insurance Companies

An epidemic of motor car thefts has been enveloping the public of Shanghai for the past six months and after suffering a welcome relapse through the late fall seems to have been revived again with the advent of colder weather. The petty larcenies have fallen off to some extent by reason of the vigilance of the police though occasional thefts of gasoline and spare parts occur in various stands for parking throughout the Settlement.

It will be remembered that a Hupmobile roadster belonging to Mr. E. W. Torrey was stolen from the road fronting one of the cabarets in the Western District last summer and after a complete description of the missing vehicle had been published in the "North-China Daily News" the police of the French Concession located it on Rue Montauban the next day in a considerably damaged condition. It was thought at the time that a shipment of opium had been introduced to the vicinity of Shanghai viâ the Soochow Creek and that the theft was manipulated to provide a means of conveyance. On December 16 Mr. Torrey's motor was again stolen.

The owner had attended the concert given by the Municipal Orchestra in the Town Hall and had left the Hupmobile at five o'clock parked securely, as he thought, on Kweichow Road between Nanking Road and Kiukiang Road. At the conclusion of the entertainment he had gone across the road to do some Christmas shopping and after a few minutes returned to the spot where he had left the car, but no car was there. The police were notified as were the insurance agents and a thorough search was instituted, but nowhere in the Settlement nor in the French Concession could the missing motor be located. It was only after several days that a report was received from the City authorities that a vehicle answering the description of the lost one had been standing near the Arsenal and a constable from that police came to the insurance office and told of the find. He was asked if the car would run and he replied. "No, it won't walk." With some trepidation a motor lorry was despatched to bring it in to a garage.

Upon examination it was found that a few parts were missing namely, the electric starter, the battery, magneto, spare tyre and bracket, side curtains, lamps both front and rear, wiring (copper) and all the brass fittings, as well as the fuses. Further investigations disclosed that the horn had been broken and the control levers too—everything that could be quickly lifted had been removed and such portions that stood in the way of quick removal of valuable instruments had been smashed to facilitate the theft of the remainder. "It was well cleaned out," stated an expert. The total cost of replacing parts and repairing the broken ones runs well into two ciphers with a preceding digit of more than five. It seems that the thieves worked in haste for they failed to remove the four rims and tyres, or else they were well satisfied with the loot as it was.

A DARING THEFT.

This theft was particularly daring in that it took place at a crowded thoroughfare and at a time when many people were about and before darkness had actually set in.

Another gentleman reported that during the first week in December his car had been taken from near the Victoria Theatre, while he was inside attending the performance, again at a time when many other motors were in the vicinity and when many people were nearby. However, in this instance the property was recovered the next morning, the machine having been left on the Bund just opposite the Palace Hotel. Though the thieves had plenty of time, as it would appear, to get away with extensive plunder, they only removed the speedometer, the battery and the starting handle, and they were not in the best of fortune in this case, for the speedometer was already broken probably beyond easy repair.

Still another theft has come to light, though the details are meagre. A small car had been taken from within the Settlement to Chapei and after as many spare parts were taken off as could easily be removed, had been left at the roadside in a badly damaged condition. After some persuasion the Chapei authorities permitted it to be brought to its rightful owner though in this, as in the others, none of the stolen pieces have been recovered.

The insurance companies have in the past been more lenient as to premiums on cars that have been owner driven, because they considered such machines less likely to be broken or damaged than those driven by Chinese chauffeurs. But with the changing conditions it is doubtful whether this procedure will be continued for it has been owner driven cars that have been taken and not those where an attendant has been left in charge. It is highly advisable, according to the representative of a leading insurance company, for owners to provide some means of safe locking their car, not only with the key to the switch, for Mr. Torrey's machine last autumn was so locked when stolen. The suggestion has been made that the gear lever be locked, rather than the switch inasmuch as in the latter instance a grounding of the wires because a magneto was present rendered this lock valueless. An inexpensive hinge lock has been designed by local men which can be easily applied and manipulated, which nothing less than a file, a bolt clipper or a key fitting the lock can circumvent. Though many have been so advised and recommended to procure one it is stated that but one owner has followed out the suggestion. Should this method be found inconvenient by any individual, it is a very simple matter to provide a length of chain, not more than three feet being necessary, and a padlock, which can then be wrapped round the front axle and the steering gear or round the axle and the spokes of any wheel. This is a matter to the interest of each owner to tend to, not only for the sake of preventing the theft of his own car, but to let the thieves know that a united effort is being made to prevent further repetitions of these cases. Otherwise, if more cars are stolen, it is axiomatic that rates of insurance will increase.

WOOSUNG OUTER BAR

Record Depth at Extreme Low Water

The maps of the Whangpoo Conservancy Board now show for the first time a through channel depth of 30 ft. at lowest low water in the reach in the Huangpu mouth where formerly the Woosung Outer Bar was. The importance of this result will be at once apparent to the shipping community, and the table of records given below will indicate how much the port has benefited from these operations. The records available are as follows:—

1858	19 ft.
1871	24 ft.
1887	22 ft.
1900	13 ft.
1906 (immediately before start of Conservancy work)	15 ft.
1910-12 (on completion of Shanghai side breakwater)	21 ft.
1914 (on completion of Pootung side breakwater)	27 ft.
1920	29 ft.
1923	30 ft.

MR. T. ADDIS, the eldest son of Sir Charles Addis, arrived in Shanghai last week. Mr. Addis, who was educated at Oxford and is a barrister, is joining the firm of Messrs. White-Cooper, Master & Harris. During the war he served with the Field Artillery, subsequently being attached to the Trench Mortars.

ENGLISH AUTHORESS IN CHINA

Mrs. Alec Tweedie on a Hurried Trip Through the Country: Some of Her Impressions

Mrs. Alec Tweedie, one of England's distinguished women, versatile in her accomplishments and winning in her personality, has been making a rapid trip through China on her way round the world, prefactory to returning next year for an extended residence in the Far East. When seen at the Kalee Hotel yesterday morning by a representative of the "North-China Daily News" Mrs. Tweedie said that while she might publish some sketches of her world-circling tour, they would be simply the impressions of an interested traveller and that upon her return she should hope to get into intimate touch with life of China which interested her greatly. She left for Hongkong on Wednesday night.

PUBLIC SERVICE.

When asked whether she had been able to do any painting in China, for Mrs. Tweedie is an artist as well as an author, she replied that she had hastily sketched bits glimpsed from the railway carriage, taken a few colour notes in Peking and elsewhere or made a few drawings hoping to be able to work them up later for an exhibition in London. After covering 50,000 miles from the Himalayas to Central Africa during two and a half years she exhibited 300 water colour impression-sketches at the Alpine Gallery, Bond Street, in July, 1921.

Mrs. Tweedie is a great traveller and many of her publications are concerned with different countries which she has visited, especially Mexico, Italy, America, Iceland, Norway and Finland. Her active war service finds reflexion in "Women and Soldiers" and "A Woman on Four Battle Fronts." Early in the war she collected money to put up over 40 Y.M.C.A. huts, sent half a million books to France and received the Navy League Special Service Medal.

A GOOD TRAVELLER.

Mrs. Tweedie's home has always been a hospitable centre, not only for extensive entertainment during the war but to all interested in the varied interests wrich appealed to her. As a member of various government committees she has been closely in touch with different foreign representatives and one of the pleasantest things about this visit to China, she said, has been the renewal of friendship formed with China's diplomatic envoys to England. "Everywhere along the line they have been waiting to entertain me, to give me an insight into China which I could never have obtained otherwise. On Wednesday evening when I stepped from the Peking express, Mr. Li, son of Lord Li Ching fang, the former Chinese Minister to Great Britain, was waiting for me and took me off at once to see the great actor Mei Lan-fang. To-day I shall have tiffin with him and meet more of China's leading men in an informal way."

One of Mrs. Tweedie's hobbies is ice-sports on which she has written considerably. Although a devoted home-maker and mother of two sons, the younger of whom was killed near Ypres in 1916, she has made time to serve on numerous committees of the International Council of Women, on philanthropic and charitable objects, and the Pension Fund of the Authors' Society. She is a Members of Council Victoria League; Life Member Overseas League; on the Councils of the Women's Institute; Divorce Law Reforms Union; Cremation Society; C.B.C.; Professional Classes War Relief Council; Eugenics Society (retired); Vice-President Women Journalists (London); Vice-President Navy League, and the like

CORRESPONDENCE

THE LIBEL ON SZECHUAN MISSIONARIES.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—In regard to my article which appeared in the issue of December 20, I have a letter from Mr. Yard which I am glad to quote, in reference to the two "Advocates." He says:

"There is no relation between the two papers whatever except that they are both Methodist publications. Dr. R. Y. Lo is Editor of The Chinese Christian Advocate and I am Editor of The China Christian Advocate. One is in no way a translation of the other: in fact very seldom do the same articles appear in both papers.

The original article which has stirred up all this discussion was first published in the Chinese Christian Advocate. Dr. Lo gave to both Dr. Rawlinson and myself an English translation of the article. Dr. Rawlinson apparently published it or commented upon it as it stood. Having been a missionary in West China for 12 years I knew that the facts as stated by the prominent evangelist were not true and that sentence was cut out from the article when it appeared in The China Christian Advocate. If you had taken the pains to read that paper you would have discovered that this offending bit was left out. . . . ."

When the offending article first appeared in the "Recorder" as an editorial from the "Chinese Christian Advocate" I was not aware of the existence in Shanghai of two "Christian Advocates." On being informed of the fact some weeks later I borrowed a copy of the English edition and found there what was apparently the identical article that was quoted in the "Recorder." In not comparing it word for word with the quotation I failed to see that Mr. Yard had cut out a sentence. I very much regret the error. In assuming that the "Chinese Christian Advocate" was the paper of which he is editor I have unwittingly done Mr. Yard an injustice, for which I am glad to offer a sincere and public apology.

I am etc.,
T. B. GRAFTON

Haichow, Dec. 26, 1923.

MENCIUS UP TO DATE.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—Well over 2,000 years ago the famous Chinese sage Mencius (Mang-Tze) wrote as follows about conditions in China at that time:

Quotations from Legge's "The life and works of Mencius":

"A host marches (in attendance on the ruler), and stores of provisions are consumed. The hungry are deprived of their food, and there is no rest for those who are called to toil. Maledictions are uttered by one to another with eyes askance, and the people proceed to the commission of wickedness. Thus the royal ordinances are violated, and the people are oppressed, and the supplies of food and drink flow away like water. The rulers yield themselves to the (bad) current, or they urge their (evil) way (against a good one); they are wild; they are utterly lost."

And then again:—

"Sage kings cease to arise, and the princes of the States give the reins to their lusts. Unemployed scholars indulge in unreasonable discussions. The words of Yang Choo and Mih Teih fill the empire. If you listen to people's discourses, you will find that they have adopted the views either of Yang or of Mih. (Now), Yang's principle is—"each one for himself," which does not acknowledge (the claims of) the sovereign. Mih's principles is—"to love all equally," which does not acknowledge (the peculiar affection due to) a father. But to acknowledge neither king nor father is to be in the state of a beast. Kung-ming E said, "In their kitchens there is fat meat. In their stables there are fat horses. But their people have the look of hunger, and on the wilds there are those who have died of famine. This is leading on beasts to devour men." If the principles of Yang and Mih are not stopped, and the principle of Confucious not set forth, perverse speaking will delude the people and stop up (the path of) bevevolence and righteousness. When benevolence and righteousness are stopped up, beasts will be led on to devour men, and men will devour one another."

Truly history repeats itself. If you replace "rulers and princes of the states" by "Tuchuns," "Scholars" by "M.P.'s and other politicians," "Yang" by "the man in the street" and "Mih" by "the quarter-boiled republicans" we have present day conditions before us. Sage kings or rather sage Tuchuns are as scarce to-day as they were then. Even the causes of Bolshevism were apparently not unknown to good old Mencius.

Let us hope that someone or other will soon appear who will be able to grease the wheels of history and produce repetitions of better times than those of which Mencius wrote. We all are, or have been, "in ze consomme," as the French say, and there is still hope also for China, which only 15 years ago was still a good place to live in.

I am, etc.,
HOPEFUL.

Shanghai, Jan. 4, 1924.

CHINA AND THE TREATIES.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR.—A reply from Mr. Gordius Nielsen was expected, as none who would dare cross swords with him may hope for an easy victory, if victory may be permitted at all, where his is the versatile pen opposing. But I have little to say further on the subject to him, since I also am particularly averse to a controversy on a question which, as he says, is vexed and which will lead nowhere. I have gained the admission I sought, which is that Mr. Nielsen is not one of those critics of the so-called opium war who fastens "all guilt for that incident on the foreigner." My letter was more of a feeler than anything else. All I wanted was an admission that it was not simply the hateful drug traffic that caused the war, but greater issues. No, opium was no more than an incident in the cause of the conflict.

Of these larger issues, an eminent authority on things Chinese says, speaking of the Chinese people: "In all their intercourse with their fellow men, they had mainfained a patronizing, unfair, and contemptuous position, which left no alternative but withdrawal from their shores, or a humiliating submission that no one feeling the least independence could endure." Perhaps a spirit of humble submission should have been shewn, and we should have withdrawn from their shores? I feel unable to answer, though to have withdrawn would seem to have been a chivalrous thing to do.

Mr. Nielsen is unquestionably right when he says that many of the foreigners' methods must have shocked the Chinese; but were they any more shocked than we were when we learned of the text of an Emperor's decree (in accepting a British embassy) written to King George as from an overlord to a humble vassal, which contained the amazing statement that "the distinction between Chinese and barbarian is most strict"?

I admire Mr. Nielsen's eulogy of the excellent qualities of the Chinese as much as I have always admired those qualities themselves. I think highly of the Chinese and hope it may ever be possible for me to be so minded.

I am called upon to make answer to "K.C.K." and I would briefly say that I quite appreciate the distinction between theology and religion, and that I will not accept his challenge to prove to your readers "that there was no religion in China before missionaries came," for the simple reason that I heartily agree that there was. I am a staunch admirer of the ethics of the Chinese, born of that charitable regard for the truth of the excellent maxim that "All within the Four Seas are brothers." In mentioning the introduction of Christianity to China, I had simply in mind to instance that here was a case, at least, where the motives of the foreigner were not wholly bad, as some would have it. Nor did I mean to class his "sausage" with "obnoxious opium." But may I ask why, if the "sausage" trade was a "moral and legitimate" one, should the Chinese have refused to eat of them?

I am. etc.,
SPECTATOR.

Shanghai Jan. 4, 1924.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—Some of your readers might think it a divagation from the point at issue that Mr. Gordius Nielsen, in his letter appearing in your yesterday's paper, should write about social relations in a discussion of treaty rights. To me, it is another illustration that Mr. Nielsen is one of the few foreigners who take pains to go to the root of the matter.

There are foreigners in China, whose opinion of the Chinese people as a whole is none too flattering, but who nevertheless will not suffer any stigma to be cast on the few Chinese friends whom they know well and to whom they are attached by long associations and mutual services. On the other hand, among the Chinese, there are some, like myself for one, who have no exalted idea of the foreigners as a class, and yet who reckon among their best friends and regard as gentlemen in every sense of the word, quite a few foreigners. The simple explanation of this paradoxical state of mind is that "we cannot be just even to our neighbours unless we love them." In the best of us, whether foreigners or Chinese, there is a tendency to magnify the mote in the eyes of others and to drive a hard bargain with those who are weaker than we. This partial moral blindness and this streak of a bully in our composition can only be held in check by affection and respect, and we can conceive an affection and respect for the people of a different country race, only when we really know them either by personal experience through the means of social intercourse, or by serious studies in their literature, arts and sciences.

The spread of western education among the Chinese has done a great deal towards removing one of the chief obstacles in the way of free and equal social intercourse between Chinese and foreigners, namely the ignorance of Western languages and customs. A new class of Chinese has sprung up who have business dealings and other reasons of association with foreigners and who can meet the foreigners on equal social footing and can invite their foreign friends to their homes, where only, as Mr. Nielsen rightly points out, friendships should be made. But in the homes of most of us, there are still traces of the 150 years of Mongolian Reign combined with the austere tastes inherited from the Puritan Ages of the Sungs, that will be disagreeable to the comfort-loving and highly hygienically sensitive Westerners. Love of creature comforts is said to have made an empire; the lack of them in the Chinese houses has certainly stood in our way of getting into more intimate terms with our foreign friends. There have been, however, in the recent years, two very significant developments in the social lives of Chinese and foreigners which will go a very long way to break down the barriers that exist between the East and the West. I mean, the efficiency Chinese athletes have acquired in foreign sports and the eagerness foreigners are showing in mastering the skill of mahjong. The convivial bond is the chief instrument of society; when people can play together, it will not long before they can be friends together

But it will be only meeting the difficulty half way if the efforts of gaining a better understanding are confined to the Chinese. If they are to bear the full result, foreigners must also emulate the Chinese in their attempts. For those who have no opportunity of coming into direct or frequent contact with the Chinese, a good substitute would be for them to study the Chinese people in their literature, arts and sciences. In this respect, a caution is necessary to avoid disappointment. Whoever undertakes to make these studies must have no thought of making money by them. Dr. Giles of Cambridge University once told Mr. Ku Hung-ming that he had lost money by studying Chinese. There may be many people like Dr. Giles who will study the Chinese literature, arts and sciences for the love of the thing, but who are unable to afford like Dr. Giles to lose money by it. I would suggest to those foreign countries which have not yet decided what to do with the balance of the Boxer Indemnity, that the best use they can make of it would be to set it aside to help these people of their own to study Chinese, and I would venture to assure them that they would reap greater profits out of it than spending it on educating Chinese in western knowledge.

There is a fashion in everything, even in the making of friends. The more cultured classes on both sides would take the initiative to cultivate intimate relation, between foreigners and Chinese, the others will follow. When the day comes that equal and free social intercourse between the two peoples are a matter of course and the acquiring of the knowledge of Chinese literature and arts is no longer the self-set task of an ardent few, it may also be the last day of imposition of treaties by superior brutal force. As Mr. Nielsen says, the work involved will mean a sacrifice of time and even money, but the harvest in view is worth the labour and trouble.

I am, etc.,
K. C. K.

Shanghai, Jan. 5, 1924.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—The bearing of the Chinese authorities and people at the time was no doubt such as appears from the passage which "Spectator" quotes, with the reservation that they exhibited such conduct towards a hundred foreigners and not towards the rest of their fellow men. That is a huge exaggeration. But I believe that the majority of students of the period will agree that the conduct of the Chinese authorities was not surprising.

What would "Spectator" say if Chinese living abroad would attempt to imitate the foreigners of 1837? Would they not have to withdraw from the countries wherein they live or submit to humiliating conditions?

I am, etc.,
GORDIUS NIELSEN.

Shanghai, Jan. 7, 1924.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—Mr. Nielsen has evidently read into the words "fellow men," the meaning "fellow countrymen as well as foreigners." This was not the meaning of the authority I quoted. He is here referring alone to foreigners: otherwise wherefore the "withdrawal from their shores." i.e. the shores of China?

Mr. Nielsen limits the foreigner in China to "a hundred"; but the true position is better realized if it is made clear that "a hundred" represented all foreigners.

I am not so sure as Mr. Nielsen is, that "the majority of students of the period will agree that the conduct of the Chinese authorities was not surprising." Of course what was a surprise in those days, nearly a hundred years later may appear a very different thing.

I am by no means a defender of expediency at the sacrifice of all other qualities; but certainly expediency had to play a large part in the dealings of the foreigner with the Chinese nearly a hundred years ago. We know one another better now, and there is less call for the dictates of expediency to determine a course of action. Both foreigners and Chinese can now have regard for the finer feelings engendered of a better knowledge of one another.

I am, etc.,
SPECTATOR.

Shanghai, Jan. 9, 1923.

DR. SUN YAT-SEN.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—The leading article in the "North-China Daily News" of January 29 deals with the Canton Customs issue. I agree with practically every word you say therein. I do not however agree with the censure you have passed on your Tientsin contemporary.

The attitude of the Hongkong Government if one can rely on what one reads in the newspapers seems, to say the least of it, silly.

However the Hongkong Government are not the only offenders.

Sun Yat-sen can thank the British for many things. It was a British doctor who saved his skin many years ago in London.

Again it was the British who saved his skin when last he cleared out of Hongkong. If I am not much mistaken, he left Canton for Hongkong on a British gunboat and Hongkong for Shanghai on the Empress of Russia.

On his arrival at Shanghai he went to his residence in the French Concession, where the French Police afforded him all protection.

And he has shown his gratitude, has he not? In 1914 the same Dr. Sun Yat-sen showed his gratitude to Britain and her Allies by trying his hardest to persuade the Japanese to join hands with the Germans, as he put it, in order to drive the British out of Hongkong and the French out of Indo-China.

We cannot afford to back up Sun Yat-sen or any other party in China. The only Government we ought to know is the Peking one, being the only one the Foreign Powers recognize. Dr. Sun tells us that the Peking Government does not represent the people. May I ask Dr. Sun how many out of China's provinces would recognize him?

Even inside his beloved Canton the majority of the people would certainly rather see his heel than his toe.

I have so far never read of anybody in the Chinese Press clamouring to have Dr. Sun elected President for the whole of China. Even supposing that the people of China were allowed to vote without outside interference, I wonder very much if they would elect him.

Dr. Sun Yat-sen has been given too much advertisement already. He should be treated in the same way as a naughty child. And if that were done, it would conform with Chinese ethics.

I am, etc.,
BAMBOO.

Up country, Jan. 2, 1924.

KIANGSU-CHEKIANG IMBROGLIO.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH CHINA DAILY NEWS."

Sir,—Certain remarks made by Marshal Chi Shieh-yuan, reported by your representative in the "North China Daily News" of the 8th instant, cannot fail to cause uneasiness in the minds of those who hope that peace will be preserved in this part of the country. The marshal has already several times asseverated his pacific intentions and this determination to remain quiescent he now reiterates in the interview with your representative. Moreover, he asserts as his belief that the neighbouring province of Chêkiang "does not want to fight us."

"WHERE FRIENDSHIPS ART MADE"

The New American Club: U. S. Minister on American Solidarity and Cordiality

The corner-stone of the new American Club building was laid on Thursday at noon in the presence of a large gathering of members, the general committee and representatives of the Consular Body and Municipal Council. Dr. John G. Schurman, the U. S. Minister, was the official guest and carried out the appropriate ceremonies.

Assembled on the makeshift platform surrounding the stone were gathered, in addition to the speaker, Messrs. de Ross, Dyer of the local Consulate, S. Barton, H. M. Consul-General, Edwin S. Cunningham, U. S. Consul-General, S. Yada, Japanese Consul-General, T. O. Tsukasaki, Swedish Consul-General, N. Aall, Norwegian Consul-General, Lodge, U. S. Legation, of the American Club, Mr. Ely Anderson, Mr. F. W. Seccomb, past president of the club, Mr. W. T. Findlay, president of the three clubs, Messrs. W. A. Adams, past secretary, O. P. Spier, secretary, E. C. Stocker, Vice-president, several directors, Mr. V. G. Lyman and Mr. A. Bassett.

A large battery of motion picture men and still cameras gathered at favourable points of vantage as did representatives of the press.

Shortly after the hour Mr. E. C. Stocker advanced to the edge of the platform and with a few short words regretted the absence of Mr. J. H. Dollar, President of the Club, and gave a [illegible] of the activities of the Club.

It was, he said, barely half a dozen years since the Club had been organized with about 100 members at the old premises at 33 Nanking Road. In 1921, the Committee found it necessary to prepare plans for a larger and more spacious establishment.

Finally after a lengthy search they decided on the present site on Foochow Road, just opposite the Municipal Building, for their new home.

Commenting on the new building the speaker said that it would have all the conveniences of the most modern club in the capitals of Europe and America, and one which would be easily able to accommodate a much larger membership.

In presenting the silver trowel to Dr. Schurman, Mr. Stocker expressed his great pleasure in being able to intercept the Minister on his Northern trip, if just for the few moments necessary to add the finishing touches to the pivotal block.

THE MINISTER'S SPEECH.

After speaking of the pleasure it gave him to be present on such a memorable occasion, Dr. Schurman said it was to him symbolic of the development of the American community in Shanghai. When he first came to China 25 years ago in 1899 (on Washington's Birthday) the number of his fellow citizens was small indeed but now the local population [illegible] around 3,500, a splendid increase.

"This growth has been paralleled in Tientsin, Peking, Hankow [illegible] in connection. There are now 200 Americans resident in the [illegible] Shanghai as a business centre. As this growth is symbolic of that [illegible] so in similar manner for all China.

"It is here that American friendships are made, here it is where the spirit of good fellowship will be fostered and promoted. I look forward to one great community here in China, developed through such intercourse. The spirit shall be united and [illegible] and exchange with the Legislature in the United States.

"We Americans in China, in Tientsin, Hankow, Yunnan and all other ports must develop a common policy, a community of interests throughout the country. What I want to see is all Americans working together and keeping to the common wise policy, to maintain a unified policy transmitted to Pekin. That is what I want. I will pledge the Legation and the Government at Washington, as far I can, to look after you and assist you in this united programme. We are one family united, sailing in one boat and we must go ahead.

Turning to the metal block he expressed his pleasure and said, "Stone of the American Club I now pronounce well and truly laid," and smiling to the movie men, "Has trowel I shall cheerish and hand to my children."

IMPORTANT BANKING MERGER

The Asia Banking Corporation to be Absorbed by the International

The announcement was made in Shanghai on Thursday of an important merger between two American banks well known in the Far East. The news arrived by telegram from New York as follows:

"Asia Banking Corporation has entered into an agreement for the sale of its assets and business to International Banking Corporation subject of approval of its stockholders and a special meeting of such stockholders has been called to act upon such sale. A subsequent announcement will be made as to the date when its business will be transferred the International Banking Corporation. It is felt that this action will be helpful to American banking interests in the Far East."

This constitutes the most important banking amalgamation which has affected China for some time. The International Banking Corporation was started in 1901, and its capital is G.$50,000,000 with surplus of G.$5,000,000. The capital of the Asia Banking Corporation, which opened its office here at the beginning of 1919, is G.$4,000,000. Both banks do a large business locally and have branches throughout the Far East, while the International [illegible] on its work still farther afield.

Pending further advices from New York it is impossible to say how soon the effect of this merger will take effect. It is anticipated that the meeting of stockholders of the Asia Banking Corporation in New York will be held at a very early date and immediately after that steps will be taken to transfer its business to the International Bank.

RUSSIAN REFUGEES' CHRISTMAS TREAT

A Distribution of Food and Toys at the Community Kitchen

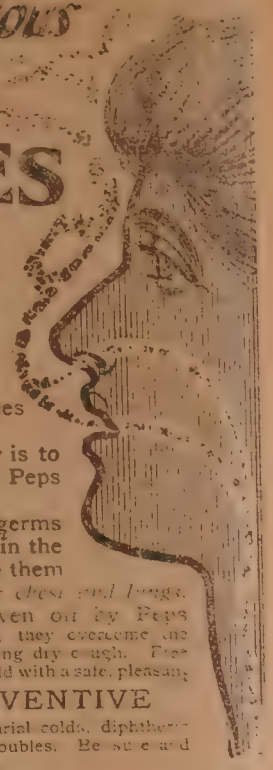
Seven hundred and fourteen Russian refugees received extra Christmas food parcels at noon on Monday the Russian Christmas according to the old calendar, at the Community Soup Kitchen, now in a building kindly given by Mr. Rangel, off the end of Szechuen Road. The additional gift was not elaborate but, when a person has been eating only one real meal a day, consisting of [illegible] a little meat and vegetables, half a pound of black bread and some tea, to have a meat pie, an apple, an orange, [illegible] makes a real festivity of what otherwise might [illegible] Eight hundred children were included in the distribution and they received simple toys as well.

This soup kitchen was started by the American Red Cross and supervised by a committee of ladies from the Community Church. When the Red Cross [illegible] withdrawn, the Refugee Advisory Committee took up as support the [illegible] continuing their [illegible] The Community Committee has supported this work, which is conducted with the utmost frugality and special Christmas contributions, which will be acknowledged later in detail, made it possible to provide this extra food. It may be mentioned, however, that Japanese friends gave 100 lb. of shelled peanuts and a large quantity of rice cakes. Another gift made it possible to add a little tea to all food rations given out to families.

The soup kitchen, which began its operations on North Szechuen Road, in quarters kindly lent by the Christian and Missionary Alliance, next moved to rooms near Darroch Road, when it was no longer possible for the Alliance to give them space urgently required for their own use. This location proving unsuitable, the committee found it very difficult to secure quarters and were very glad to accept Mr. Rangel's kind offer of an outbuilding on his property.

Through long residence in Russia, Mr. Rangel became much interested in its people and since July, 1923, has been feeding a number of refugees from funds of his own and money collected from friends and raised from lawn parties and the like. Many of these refugees have now found positions but there are still 32 who receive one meal a day from the kitchen, but have a special dining room of their own. The Rangels are housing two Russian families and also allow the Union of Army and Navy men space on their premises for their bakery which is making the bread used in the Community Kitchen and sold to members of the Union at practically cost price.

Beware Infectious THROAT TROUBLES



When your throat feels raw, sore and inflamed, you may be sure that the trouble is due to infectious germs. These infest our dust-laden atmosphere and especially the fetid air of mosques, and churches, and all concert rooms, theatres, meeting halls and conveyances where people crowd together.

The best and most effective remedy is to occasionally dissolve in your mouth a Peps infection-killing tablet.

Just as you breathe in the dangerous germs of throat disease, so you must breathe in the Peps remedy to reach and exterminate them before they can carry trouble into the chest and lungs. The soothing, germicidal vapours given off by Peps quickly allay the inflammation and soreness, they overcome the hoarseness, difficulty in swallowing, and irritating dry cough. Free from all harmful drugs Peps provide young and old with a safe, pleasant for coughs, colds, night chills, influenza, malarial colds, diphtheric colds, tonsilitis, laryngitis and other throat troubles. Be sure and ask for Peps the real infection-killing tablet.

IDEAL REMEDY & PREVENTIVE

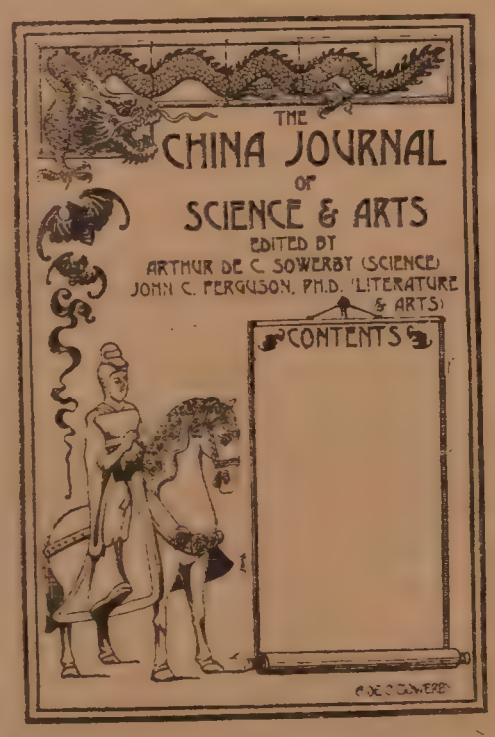
Of chemists and [illegible] everywhere. Agents: Messrs. Wakefield & Co. (China) Ltd. S. Y. Soo's Building, Szechuen Road, Shanghai.

Get PEPS To-Day

THE CHINA JOURNAL OF SCIENCE AND ARTS



1. Holds its own with any magazine of its kind in the WORLD.
2. Has been enthusiastically commented upon by critics and reviewers in the leading journals of England, America and the Orient.
4. Contains a mass of interesting and valuable information presented in an easy and readable style upon all subjects to do with China and neighbouring regions.
4. Is profusely illustrated.
5. Is absolutely authentic and reliable.
6. Is the medium of expression for students and research-workers in China.
7. Goes everywhere.

No Home in China should be without it.

No Library is complete without it.

No Educational Institution can afford to be without it.

ORDER NOW FOR 1924

"THE CHINA JOURNAL OF SCIENCE AND ARTS"
102 The Ben Building, Shanghai

To the Manager:—

Please enter my name as a subscriber to "The China Journal of Science and Arts" for the period of one year for which I enclose ten dollars ($10.00) Shanghai Currency.

Name .....

Address to which Journal is to be sent .....

Postage Free

COMMERCE AND FINANCE

Money and Exchange

OFFICIAL RATES.

Shanghai, Jan. 11.

Bank's demand selling rate for £1 at 3/3⅛=Tls. 6.13 at 7.18=$8.54

Bank's demand selling rate for G.$100 at 70=Tls. 142.86 at 7.18 =$198.97

Mex. Dollars, market rate	72.025
Native Interest	09
Copper Cash	252,500
Bar Silver	33⅛
Bank rate of Discount	4%
Paris on London	Frs. 88.10
New York on London	G.$4.28½

BANK'S OPENING SELLING RATES.

	Per Tael
LONDON—
Telegraphic Transfer	3/3
Demand	3/3⅛
NEW YORK—
Telegraphic Transfer	69¾
Demand	70
PARIS—
Demand	1438
INDIA—
Demand	229
HONGKONG—
Demand	72¼
JAPAN—
Demand	64½
BATAVIA—
Demand	192
SINGAPORE—
Demand	72½

BANK'S OPENING SELLING RATES.

LONDON—
Demand	3/3⅜
4 m/s. credits	3/5
4 m/s. Docs.	3/5½
6 m/s. credits	3/5½
6 m/s. Docs.	3/6
NEW YORK—
Demand	70½
4 m/s. credits	73
4 m/s. Docs.	73½
PARIS—
4 m/s. Docs.	1515
Closing business done at
London T.T.	3/3⅛
New York T.T.	70

CUSTOMS EXCHANGE RATES FOR JANUARY.

Hk Tl. 5.44 @ 3/3⅝	£1
„ 1 @ 1370½	Frs. 15.27
„ 1.24 @ 72⅛	Gold $1
„ 1 @ 66⅜	Yen 1.68
„ 1 @ 230½	Rupees 2.57
„ 1 @ 1.50	Mex. $1.50
„ 1 @ 16.40	It. Lire 18.27
Marks and Roubles no quotation

Sino-Italian Bank Quotations

Selling Rates, Jan. 11.

It. Lire 16.05	Tl. 1
Swiss Frs. 4.02	Tl. 1
It. Lire 10.00	Y. 1

French Bank Rate

Paris, Jan. 10.

The Bank of France has raised its discount rate one half per cent. to 5½ per cent.—Reuter.

Week's Exchange Notes

Jan. 12.

At the close of business on the 10th instant the stock of silver in Shanghai was Tls. 23,350,000 and $31,550,000.

These figures include Tls. 6,800,000 and $16,540,000 in Chinese banks in which there were 517 bars.

BAR SILVER.

Arrivals were:—

1,377 bars from	America
1,104 „ „	London
2,481 bars

Shipments were:—

259 bars to	Nanking
175 „ „	Hangchow
434 bars

SYCEE.

Arrivals were:—

Nil

Shipments were:—

Tls. 1,150,000 to	Hankow
400,000 „	Hangchow
350,000 „	Nanking
80,000 „	Foochow
30,000 „	Dairen
Tls. 2,010,000

DOLLARS.

Arrivals were:—

$900,000 from	Chinkiang
600,000 „	Hangchow
520,000 „	Nanking
380,000 „	Ningpo
300,000 „	Wusih
170,000 „	Foochow
30,000 „	Kashing
$3,200,000

Shipments were:—

$1,200,000 to	Dairen
900,000 „	Hankow
400,000 „	Tientsin
300,000 „	Tungchow
290,000 „	Kiukiang
150,000 „	Changchun
100,000 „	Soochow
$3,340,000

SILVER.

The price of London ready silver has declined 1⅛d. during the week and forward 1/16d., the quotation on Thursday being 33⅛d. spot and 32⅝d. forward, as against 34 1/16d. and 33 3/16d. for the respective deliveries on the 3rd instant. India and China have both bought and sold, China operations were most likely on account of speculators whose exchange position is reported to be about square or probably slightly overbought. The price of silver in America on Thursday was 63½, small business done. The New York/London cross rate comes as 428⅝.

EXCHANGE.

Business has been very quiet during the week. Very little export paper has been offering, which is rather unusual at this time of the year in view of the near approach to China New Year. The closing quoted rate on Friday last was 3/4d., but dropped on opening on Saturday to 3/3¾d., opening unchanged on Monday, it went down to T.T. 3/3½d. in the afternoon and shortly after opening on Tuesday the rate dropped to T.T. 3/3¼d. at which it remained till Wednesday, when the opening rate was 3/3d. the present level. The market is steady with small sellers at ⅛d. over the quoted rate for cash. Gold $ T.T. is quoted 69¾, but there are small sellers at 70 for cash, and T.T. 69¾ January. 4 m/s L/C are quoted 3/4d. January, and 4 m/s L/C G.$ 72 January.

LONDON BULLION

Messrs. Samuel Montagu & Co.'s Report

The report on the London bullion market issued by Messrs. Samuel Montagu & Co. under date November 28 states:—

Gold—The Bank of England gold reserve against its note issue on the 21st instant was £125,940,915, as compared with £125,858,740 on the previous Wednesday.

Indian and Continental demand still continues on a small scale, and it is probable that most of the fair amount of gold on offer this week will go to the United States of America.

Gold valued at $7,330,000 has arrived in New York from London.

The Southern Rhodesian gold output for October, 1923, amounted to 52,019 ounces, as compared with 57,144 ounces for September, 1923, and 54,670 ounces for October, 1922.

The gold reserve of the Federal Reserve Bank is showing no tendency to increase. The "Times" New York correspondent under date of November 23 thus comments upon the gold reserve of the Bank:—" . . . . It is now nearly $4,000,000 less than at peak in June, though since then the country has imported $140,000,000 and produced about $20,000,000. Most of the gain has gone back into general circulation in the form of gold certificates. Federal reserve notes, which they partly displace, decreased by $40,000,000 in the week."

We give below figures relating to Indian trade (private account) for the month of October last:—

(In lakhs of rupees)	Exports.	Imports.
Merchandise	2,555	2,060
Gold	½	244
Silver	31	254
(In lakhs of rupees)	Net Exports.	Net Imports.
Merchandise	495	—
Gold	—	243½
Silver	—	223
Tottal Net Exports		26½

RUSSIAN GOLD COINS.

The Russian Soviet Government is engaged in reminting the whole of the gold reserve against the chervonetz issue (which amounted on the 1st instant to ch. 8,693,707.7) into a chervonetz gold coin nominally equal to 10 roubles, and containing 119.4826 grains of pure gold—equal to £1-1-1½d. or $5.14½ as compared with the mintage rate of the sovereign and the dollar. The obverse has a vigorous figure of a man sowing grain, on his left is the rising sun behind a plough and on the right factories with smoking chimneys. The reverse has in the centre the sun's rays behind a wreath of wheat-ears encircling a sickle and hammer. The rim is lettered, not milled, and, altogether, the coin is of a pleasing appearance.

SILVER.

China has been the dominating factor during the week, and considerable purchases have been made for early shipment. These consignments will reinforce the very large shipments from San Francisco and elsewhere. The steady tone of the market, arising from these purchases, has been accentuated by the firmness of the value of the U.S. dollar. China sales have been made of silver for forward delivery. The Indian Bazaars have both bought and sold and there has been some bear covering.

The amounts of silver on the way to China are so large that it would not be unreasonable to expect a measure of redundancy when the settlements usual at the Chinese New Year are completed. In that event, it will be interesting to watch what is going to become of the speculative stock now accumulated in Bombay—whether the up country demand will absorb it without any setback of prices, or whether difficulty will be experienced in the process of unloading.

The Austrian Minister of Finance has announced that, subject to the approval of the National Assembly, the Government will shortly put into circulation a silver "shilling" of the value of 10,000 Kronen. Other coin will be struck of 20,000 and of 5,000 Kronen. He stated that the object was to encourage frugality and saving, and that the name of the coin was prompted by a desire to revive an old German word universally applied to a piece of money, and to avoid any term which might be considered to possess political meaning.

SHANGHAI MARKET REPORT

Greater Strength of Piece Goods Indicating Substantial Rises after China New Year

Jan. 12.

Several important features have developed in the local markets during the present week. Piece goods have shown great strength at the auctions, and the indications are that after China New Year we may expect to see a great advance in prices. In the meantime, however, the difference between Shanghai and Manchester is too great to allow of any business worth mentioning.

Chinese cotton has remained steady during the week, but there has been more movement both in yarn and cloth.

More activity is being shown in the export market. While inquiries for produce have been received, these are entirely overshadowed by the business which has been put through in silk, the latter showing a big advance in volume compared with recent weeks.

PIECE GOODS.

The outlook in piece goods has brightened considerably during the week. Demand from many quarters has been noted, which may be put down to several causes. In the first place money is easier, and accordingly speculators and dealers have had the opportunity to give freer play to their ideas of prices. Goods bought at this week's auctions do not require to be taken up until after China New Year, and the hoped-for better financial facilities have been a factor to induce a larger volume of business. In addition the continued strength of the auctions for several weeks past has given great confidence, for dealers realize the shortness of stocks here and have undoubtedly come to the conclusion that there is no chance of any break in prices in the immediate future.

The statistical position is all in favour of higher quotations, for stocks here are only about half of what they were a year ago. At that time they were regarded as being very small, and in comparison they must be considered today as on an absolutely famine basis. Such conditions strongly support the view that we shall see important price developments after the settlement. Meantime, however, dealers are not in a position to place any but the smallest orders with the manufacturers, as too great a margin still prevails.

Auction clearances have been good during the week, and the shortage of stocks is emphasized by the fact that a considerable proportion of the Greys which have been purchased will be cleared before China New Year. In certain lines the position is so strong that speculators are finding it difficult to compete with dealers who have orders in hand.

Woollen Goods.—This department of business continues dull, and whatever purchases are made are on a speculative basis. The Home market continues steady at the late rise, and no concessions in price appear to be offering.

COTTON AND YARN.

China Cotton.—Steady during the week, China cotton has closed somewhat easier. Not a great deal has been offering. The quotations on the Chinese Cotton Goods Exchange are:—January 47.25; February 47.30; March 47.40; April 47.55; May 47.55; June 47.55. Spot quotations are as follows:—Tungchow 48; Shanghai 46; Shensi 47; Hankow 44.

Local Yarns.—A certain amount of demand for yarn has been forthcoming during the week, but business put through with the mills has been of comparatively small dimensions and at unchanged prices. Interest centres in events after China New Year. Small sales of cloth have also taken place, but as with yarn the tendency is to wait until after the settlement. On the Chinese Cotton Goods Exchange the prices current are as follows:—January 177.60; February 179.60; March 181; April 181.40; May 181.50; June 181.30.

SILK.

During the week an active business has taken place in silk, both for America and Europe and prices of certain silks have even registered some considerable advances. Local stocks have been reduced by about 2,500 bales, and dealers are therefore again more confident.

	Tls.
Steam fil. middling grades	1360/1420
Szechuan fil. middling grades	1200/1260
Tussah fil. best	735/780
Tsatlee Rds. new style Blue Dragon, Fly. Horse	1145/1175

PRODUCE.

Sesamum Seed.—Little interest is shown. Holders in China continue to value their cargo at rates above the ideas of Home buyers who are confining their interest to afloat parcels.

Groundnuts.—There is a steady demand from Europe but at reduced prices. Future prospects of the market seem uncertain.

Wool.—American buyers are purchasing steadily from Tientsin, but locally the lack of supplies has resulted in prices here for Shanghai grades being nominally quoted at prohibitive levels.

Feathers.—Unchanged. Local stocks of merchantable qualities are low and holders in the country are at present evidently determined to hold out for higher prices than the parities of limits from Home markets.

Goatskins and Hides—Supplies are small as yet and in view of the situation in U.S.A. prospects of business with that market are at present decidedly remote.

Raw Furs.—Some small forward contracts have been made for sundry raw skins, the season for which is drawing near.

CHILE-CHINA TRADE

Chilean Consul in Shanghai

The Chilean Government has appointed Don Alejandro Arce as a special representative in China to establish direct trade between this country and his own, most of it formerly having passed through Japan and America. One steamer already is running on the direct route and more soon will be put on, with Shanghai as the eastern terminal and Chile's representative proposes to establish his head office here. Attention chiefly will be concentrated on nitrate of soda, which is Chile's most important export, and is being sold in ever-increasing quantities all over the world. There also will be an attempt to develop the export of China silk and cotton to Chile.

HONGKONG SHARE BOOM

A Comparison of Prices

The following cable quotations were received on Thursday by Messrs. Benjamin & Potts from their agents in Hongkon:—

		Quotations Jan. 4.
Hongkong, Canton and Macao Steamboats	H.$ 53	47½
Hongkong and Kowloon Wharves	H.$185	152½
Hongkong Docks	H.$170	153½
Hongkong Trams	H.$ 25¾	24¼
Hongkong Hotels	H.$ 27	25
Hongkong Lands	H.$ 96	88
Green Island Cements	H.$ 42	26¾

Hongkong Bank Dividend

The local office of the Hongkong & Shanghai Banking Corporation is in receipt of telegraphic advice from its head office stating that, subject to audit, the Directors will recommend at the forthcoming meeting:—

A final dividend for the year of £3 and bonus of £2 subject to deduction of Income Tax.

Added to Silver Reserve, 10 Lakhs.

Write off bank premises account, 10 Lakhs.

Carried forward to next year, 33¾ Lakhs.

Royal Dutch Petroleum Extensions

The Hague, Jan. 5.

The Royal Dutch Petroleum Co. is about to instal 41 large new tanks at Curacoa with a capacity of 1,268,000 barrels. They will be ready in October.—Reuter.

Cuticura Heals Rashes
Bathe with plenty of Cuticura Soap and hot water to cleanse and purify. Dry lightly and apply Cuticura Ointment to soothe and heal.
Soap 1s., Talcum 1s. 3d., Ointment 1s. 3d. and 2s. 6d. Sold throughout the Empire. British Depot: F. Newbery & Sons, Ltd., 27, Charterhouse Sq., London, E.C.1.
Cuticura Soap shaves without mug.

Under these circumstances the recommendation that the district of Shanghai shall be declared neutral territory seems wholly unnecessary and even dangerous to that peace which it is so desirable to preserve. If neither the new Chekiang [illegible] intention of violating the territoral rights of the other, the setting apart of this particular zone [illegible] certain to be resisted by Chekiang which is vitally interested in preserving the district under its sway. Anyone familiar with recent developments [illegible] must surely know this. Besides, who is going to guarantee the inviolability of the neutral zone? A guarantee by the two military leaders would clearly be absurd inasmuch as one of them at least would have broken the existing pacific compact between them if hostilities broke out, and he would therefore in the nature of things treat the other compact with similar contempt. The Central Government has no power whatever to ensure the neutrality, which could only be made effective by the introduction of troops by the Foreign Powers.

One must deal with the situation as it really presents itself and not as interested parties would like it to be. The internal troubles which have harassed China during late years have brought about certain abnormal conditions in the distribution of authority which cannot be changed at the moment without fighting or until a readjustment of authority takes place in a general settlement. For some years the native city of Shanghai and the Arsenal, which geographically form part of and formerly were under the jurisdiction of the province of Kiangsu, have been under the jurisdiction of Chekiang. The pacific marshal of Kiangsu now advocates the removal of the arsenal and the troops garrisoned there.

Do people realize that the mere suggestion of such a step aims a vital blow at Chekiang and that it is a direct challenge to Gen. Lu Yung-hsiang? If Marshal Chi Shieh-yuan desired trouble he could have hit on no better [illegible] removal of the arsenal and the troops would be equivalent to cutting off Gen. Lu Yung-hsiang's right hand, and neither that military satrap nor Gen. Ho Feng-ling would willingly submit to such an amputation at the present time.

For the sake of completeness it may be of interest to mention that, although the conditions are such as described, the arsenal is still under the administration of the Board of War. It manufactures war material and sells it with great impartiality to various contending tuchuns including Wu Pei-fu, Chi Shieh-yuan and Lu Yung-hsiang as long as they pay cash for what they get.

I am etc.,
GORDIUS NIELSEN.
Shanghai, Jan. 9, 1924.

THE STATE OF GERMANY.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR.—Mr. Joseph Rice in the "N.C.D.N." dated December 20 is a new champion of the Germans. That of course is his business. As a Briton, I, however, take strong exception to his remarks to the effect that the Britons are gluttons compared with the Germans.

To say the very least, this is a gross libel.

In all Continental caricatures of the Briton, he is invariably pictured as a lean, bony individual and according to the Germans themselves, the mental and bodily superiority of the Briton to the German is because the average Britons (at least [illegible] per cent.) do not over-eat themselves.

Probably the majority of the business men in the City of London have a luncheon which simply consists of a ham sandwich, and, if the funds allow it, a pint of ale with it.

The German [illegible] on the other hand never miss a big meal at noon. The English dinner (the working classes only have supper) is to my mind not big enough to feed a canary. When home on leave I personally, after having lived East of Suez for some 20 years, could never get enough in the ordinary boarding-house meals.

If any of your readers in pre-war days have taken a meal at the local German restaurants, they would probably feel quite astonished at the several pounds of various kinds of chow a German can put down. Hence the fact, that a German is always caricatured either as a beer barrel or a leg of pork with a turned up moustache.

The Germans have even invented two separate words for the verb "to eat." One is "essen" and is used by those, (and they are in the minority) who can plead guilty to eating like the ordinary human being. The other is "fressen," used when speaking about the way the average Germans eat.

Mr. Rice's remarks re Lloyd George are childish. Needless to say had we lost the war, we would not have been as well off as now, but even had we lost it, we would not have come to the state Germany, as stated by Mr. Rice and others of the same faith, is in. None of us would have let our politicians or our war profiteers bring us to such a state.

When Mr. Rice tells us that there are no people starving in England, he is unfortunately talking through his hat.

The words of Queen Victoria carry us no further. I have certainly also at times enjoyed myself in Germany like many other people. Had Queen Victoria been able to visit Peking, I should say, she would have enjoyed that as well.

That Mr. Rice is of Anglo-Saxon descent makes no difference to the argument. Mr. or Herr Houston Chamberlain was the son of a British Admiral. He, however, found Germany a far nicer country than England, and the Germans far nicer people. Good for England that there are only very few of that breed.

In conclusion the unemployment figures of Britain are far greater than those of Germany and taxes in Britain higher than in Germany. Now then!

I am, etc.,
TROUSERS.
Up-country, Dec. 25, 1923.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR.—I see in this morning's paper that "Trousers" (and his wits), are "up-country." Probably he dwells in a region where the aborigines have some of them already commenced to hear that there has been a bit of a quarrel, or war, or such-like, in Europe, but I dare swear that he, as a relatively superior intelligence, has sensed the fact that active [illegible] operations are practically over.

Three-quarters of the space occupied by this correspondent's letter is devoted to refutation of the [illegible] opposite of one of my statements. I said that eating is the German foible; and the fact that despite this, the consumption of meat in Germany has fallen to a mere fraction of its pre-war amount is incontestable proof of great privation in Germany, especially when it is remembered that there was much less margin or overplus above the limit of subsistence in pre-war Germany than in England or France. "Trousers" devotes himself to showing that the Germans love to eat, and gives himself up, unrestrainedly and offensively, to the licentious employment of a few of the hateful and petty banalities, the ignorant mendacities, and grotesque grimaces—the outworn, stale and effete Ministers of War-propaganda—with which we are familiar.

I see no controversial point properly raised in this letter, "Trousers." It is true you utter a denial or so, but a bare, unsupported contradiction is not enough. If it be a simple-minded inference of yours that because the Germans love eating better than the English, therefore German people are necessarily better fed than the English—if this be your assumption, then I say that it is new, startling, but hardly important as an economic thesis. Truth to tell, Homunculus, your confusions are immense, pervasive. You must pardon me if I have no wish to delve more deeply and generally into such inexhaustible, if interesting, topics as Queen Victoria, Lloyd George, Stewart Houston Chamberlain, etc., etc.

I am, etc.,
JOSEPH W. RICE.
Shanghai, Jan. 9, 1924.

AT the request of the Minister of Finance, Mr. Wang Ke-min, President Tsao Kun has issued a Chihling Mandate forbidding the issue of so-called savings society bonds, reports the "Journal of Commerce."

THE ROMANTIC STORY OF ZAM-BUK

World Search for Rare Herbs Used in Great Skin-Cure

It is not commonly known that countries so far apart as China and Spain, Japan and England, and Tasmania and France, have to be searched for the right species of herbs which are used in the various processes of manufacture of the natural healing balm bearing the world famous name of ZAM-BUK. These herbs are, many of them, rare and costly, and neither skill nor expense is spared to see that they are gathered just at the right season of the year when their natural juices and medicinal contents are at their best.

Zam-Buk is the only true successor of those herbal balms used by the gladiators of Ancient Rome: with this important advantage—Zam-Buk, in addition to its pure and rare herbal composition, has behind it twentieth century medical knowledge and manufacturing skill. This knowledge and research have brought Zam-Buk to a pitch of perfection probably never equalled in the annals of healing. It instantly soothes pain, swiftly allays swelling and inflammation, expels deep-seated disease, and grows new, healthy skin.

The different medicinal qualities in Zam-Buk are beautifully balanced: the healing side with the antiseptic, the soothing with the germicidal; it is penetrative yet not to stimultating, and has just the right lubricity for removing superficial swellings, sprains and pains.

Thus Zam-Buk is a useful reliable, and highly concentrated medicinal product specially suited for use in hot climates and it may be applied with the perfect confidence and knowledge that it is a refined herbal skin balm and not a pore-clogging "dressing" or ointment composed of rancid animal fats and crude mineral drugs.

Zam-Buk's unequalled power and effectiveness is thoroughly proved in cases of eczema, Dhobie's itch, prickly heat, ringworm, piles, ulcers, boils, abscesses, foot sores, poisoned wounds, scalp diseases, etc. Its swift antiseptic healing makes Zam-Buk indispensable for burns, scalds, cuts, insect bites and stings, etc. Of chemists and dispensaries throughout China and The East or from the Agent, Messrs. Wakefield & Co. (China), Ld., S. Y. Sheng Building, Szechuen Road, Shanghai.

Dr. J. Collis Browne's CHLORODYNE

The ORIGINAL and ONLY GENUINE

Acts like a charm in DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY AND CHOLERA

The Best Remedy known for COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS.

The Most Valuable Remedy ever discovered.
Effectually cuts short all attacks of SPASMS. Checks and arrests these too often fatal diseases:—
FEVER, CROUP, AGUE.
The only Palliative in NEURALGIA, GOUT, RHEUMATISM, TOOTHACHE.

Convincing Medical Testimony with each Bottle.

Sold in bottles by all Chemists

Prices in England 1/3 and 3/-

Always ask for a "Dr. COLLIS BROWNE"
Sole Manufacturers:
J. T. DAVENPORT, LTD., LONDON, S.E.

A·HAPPY·BABY·MAKES·A·HAPPY·MOTHER
Mrs. S. W. says: "I myself derived great benefit from Glaxo during the months before Baby was born, and was always in perfect health."

You can nurse Baby yourself

If the greatest privilege of motherhood is to be yours; if you would know the joy of having Baby dependent on you alone for health and strength, make sure now that you will be able to nurse him yourself.

Very many mothers who could not otherwise nurse their babies have been enabled to do so by taking Glaxo themselves every day. Taken regularly two or three times a day (both before and after Baby's arrival), Glaxo enriches and stimulates the flow of breast milk, and maintains the mother's strength without taxing her digestion.

Glaxo

The Super-Milk

"Builds Bonnie Babies"

The safest, purest form of milk for every milk purpose

Write to The British Medical Imports Co., 432 Kiukiang Road, Shanghai for Free Sample of Glaxo and booklet.

Proprietors: Joseph Nathan & Co., Limited, London & New Zealand.

The China Mutual Life Insurance Co., Ld.

A BRITISH COMPANY

Registered under the Hongkong Ordinances and with the Board of Trade (England)

With Assets totalling Taels 10,165,190.33

AGENCIES THROUGHOUT ASIA

Policies free from all unnecessary conditions and restrictions. Reduction of Premiums for Home Residences

HEAD OFFICE: SHANGHAI

Singapore, January 9, 1924.

Smoked Sheet	49⅜ cents
Jan./Mar.	51¼ ,,
Apr./June	52½ ,,

Market steady but quiet.

DEBENTURES.

LOANS	Term in years	Last business recorded	Loan Amt.	Int %	Payable
S'hai Municipal Council	1903 6 to 20	26-9-22	T98¼ b T490,500	6	June-Dec.
	1904 do.	11-1-23	T98¼ c 214,500	6	do.
	1905 do.	12-5-22	T96½ d 320,000	6	do.
	1907 do.	24-1-22	T91 500,000	6	dc.
	1908 do.	6-12-22	T100 650,000	6	do.
	1909 do.	15-3-23	T99 300,000	6	do.
	1910 do.	11-5-23	T99 313,800	6	do.
	1911 10 to 30	8-1-23	T95 350,000	6	do.
	1912 do.	3-1-24	T99 310,000	6	do.
	1913 do.	3-3-23	T100 756,300	6	do.
	,, 10 to 30	8-5-22	T78 500,000	5½	do.
	1914 10 to 30	9-1-23	T91 650,000	5½	do.
	1915 do.	22-3-23	T91 800,000	5½	do.
	1916 do.	4-12-23	T99½ 1,400,000	6	do.
	1918 10	18-10-23	T103 507,300	7	do.
	1919 10	4-12-23	T104 1,793,300	7	do.
	1920 10	17-11-23	T105½ 2,240,000	7	do.
	,, 10 to 30	3-10-23	£105¼ £750,000	6	do.
	1921 do.	9-9-23	$112 $1,000,000	8	do.
	1921 do.	17-11-23	T112½ T5,096,400	8	do.
	1922 do.	9-1-24	T105½ T8,000,000	7	do.
	1923 do.	11-1-24	T99 T6,000,000	6	do.
French Municipal Council	1911 do.	8-10-23	T96 400,000	6	May-Nov.
	1914 do.	12-2-23	T88 500,000	5½	June-Dec.
	1915 do.		350,000	5½	do.
	1921 do.	20-11-23	T108½ 2,000,000	8	do.
	1923 do.	17-12-23	T95 T800,000	6	May-Nov.
S'hai Waterworks Co., Ltd.	1921 10 to 30	2-10-23	T112 2,000,000	8	June-Dec.
	1922 do.	6-6-22	T108 T500,000	‖	do.
	1922 do.	2-10-23	T105 T1,000,000	7	do.
S'hai Gas Co., Ltd.	1909 do.	29-11-23	T94 800,000	6	do.
	1903 6 to 20	26-9-22	T98¼ b T490,500	6	June-Dec.
	1904 do.	11-1-23	T98¼ c 214,500	6	do.
	1905 do.	12-5-22	T96½ d 320,000	6	do.
	1907 do.	24-1-22	T91 500,000	6	dc.
	1908 do.	6-12-22	T100 650,000	6	do.
	1909 do.	15-3-23	T99 300,000	6	do.
	1910 do.	11-5-23	T99 313,800	6	do.
	1911 10 to 30	8-1-23	T95 350,000	6	do.
	1912 do.	3-1-24	T99 310,000	6	do.
	1913 do.	3-3-23	T100 756,300	6	do.
	,, 10 to 50	8-5-22	T78 500,000	5½	do.
	1914 10 to 30	9-1-23	T91 650,000	5½	do.
	1915 do.	22-3-23	T91 800,000	5½	do.
	1916 do.	4-12-23	T99½ 1,400,000	6	do.
	1918 10	18-10-23	T103 507,300	7	do.
	1919 10	4-12-23	T104 1,793,300	7	do.
	1920 10	17-11-23	T105½ 2,240,000	7	do.
	,, 10 to 30	3-10-23	£105¼ £750,000	6	do.
	1921 do.	9-9-23	$112 $1,000,000	8	do.
	1921 do.	17-11-23	T112½ T5,096,400	8	do.
	1922 do.	9-1-24	T105½ T8,000,000	7	do.
	1923 do.	11-1-24	T99 T6,000,000	6	do.
	1911 do.	8-10-23	T96 400,000	6	May-Nov.
	1914 do.	12-2-23	T88 500,000	5½	June-Dec.
	1915 do.		350,000	5½	do.
	1921 do.	20-11-23	T108½ 2,000,000	8	do.
	1923 do.	17-12-23	T95 T800,000	6	May-Nov.
	1921 10 to 30	2-10-23	T112 2,000,000	8	June-Dec.
	1922 do.	6-6-22	T108 T500,000	‖	do.
	1922 do.	2-10-23	T105 T1,000,000	7	do.
	1909 do.	29-11-23	T94 800,000	6	do.

LOANS	Term in years	Last business recorded	Loan Amt.	Int %	Payable
	1905 5 to 20	31-8-22	T96½ T250,000	6	June-Dec.
	1909 do.	27-3-23	T98 750,000	6	do.
	1911 do.	26-9-22	T92 250,000	6	Mar.-Sept.
	,, do.	27-3-23	T93 250,000	6	May-Nov.
	1912 do.		250,000	6	Jan.-July
Shanghai Land Investment Co., Ltd.	1913 do.	3-4-23	T93 250,000	6	June-Dec.
	,, do.	3-4-23	T98 250,000	6	April-Oct.
	,, do.	11-1-24	T94 250,000 g	6	April-Oct.
	,, do.		250,000	6	April-Oct.
	1914 do.	22-3-23	T93 250,000	6	June-Dec.
	1916 5 to 25	21-8-22	T90 f 500,000	5½	do.
	1922 do.	12-2-23	T95 750,000	6	Mar.-Sept.
	1922 do.	10-1-24	T93 500,000	6	May-Nov.
Shanghai Club	1907 20		450,000	6	do.
Country Club	1901 Perpetual		139,000	6	June-Dec.
Lane, Crawford & Co., Ltd.	1914 5 to 20		130,000	6	May-Nov.
	1915 do.		110,000	6	Mar.-Sept.
Anglo-French Land Invest. Co., Ltd.	1906 do.		250,000	6	June-Dec.
	1911 do.	7-6-23	T93 300,000	6	do.
S'hai Hotels, Ltd.	1916 30	6-1-23	T88 h 805,000	6	do.
S'hai Mutual Tel. Co., Ltd.	1923 10 to 20	27-2-23	T95½ h 270,000	6	do.
S'hai Race Club	1923 25	7-1-24	T100 1,200,000	6½	Mar.-Sept.
Culty Dairy Co., Ltd.	1915 10		50,000	7	Feb.-Aug.
Asia Realty Co., Inc.	1914 5 to 20	14-10-22	$92 h 230,000	7	Jan.-July
	1922 5 to 20	.. ..	T500,000	7	Jan.-July

*Plus interest accrued since last half-yearly payment. †See also under section headed "Companies' Notices, etc."

a—Now Issuing; Redeemed or Purchased:—b—Tls.65,100; c—Tls.51,100; d—Tls.34,100; e—Tls.68,500; f—Tls.262,400; g—Tls.189,800; h—Tls.12,300; i—$18,900.

RUBBER OUTPUT STATISTICS.

Company	Authorized Capital	Financial yr. closes end of	Output last 2 fin. year: Year before	Output last 2 fin. year: Last year	Estimated output present fin. year	All in cost per lb.	Output from end last fin. year to 30-9-23	1923: Oct.	1923: Nov.	1923: Dec.	Total output this fin. yr. to date
			lb.	lb.	lb.	d.	lb.	lb.	lb.	lb.	lb.
Auna	Fls. 630,000	Sept.	292,500	259,100	246,648	8.87d.	..	22,000	21,000	25,000	68,000
Amberst (New)	,, 500,000	Oct.	72,382	81,440	80,500	*8.34d.			9,784	9,236	19,020
Anglo-Dutch	£200,000	Dec.	760,000	650,000	600,000	0/6.92d.	364,700	64,500	55,900	60,000	535,100
Anglo-Java	£250,000	Dec.	1,511,575	1,521,711	1,550,000	6.95d.	1,116,100	163,600	189,000	183,000	183,000
Ayer Tawah	Fls. 300,000	Sept.	369,417	68,012	300,000	†0.24.41		..
Batu Anam	,, 400,000	Dec.	221,030	258,510	185,793	0/7.31d.	142,992	..	12,450	8,200	102,712
Bukit Toh Alang	,, 500,000	Mar.	309,254	305,645	345,000	7.54d.	139,189	30,893	26,000	26,000	222,082
Buto	,, 300,000	Dec.	253,300	230,067	159,516	10.11d.	121,250	17,700	16,600	18,800	174,350
Chemor United	,, 360,000	Dec.	271,636	340,794	246,192	0/7.15d.	194,558	..	26,044	25,800	246,412
Chempedak	£35,000	Oct.	145,760	162,500	..	10.15d.			14,000	16,700	30,700
Chenz	Fls. 675,000	June	151,923	145,338	..	11.09d.	52,730	18,010	15,574	15,700	102,014
Consolidated (1914)	,, 375,000	Dec.	591,033	680,890	574,680	0/6.58d.	166,199	62,349	56,543	58,552	633,632
Dominion	,, 350,000	Dec.	301,042	271,150	300,867	11.04d.	211,506	28,111	25,596	27,925	323,140
Gula-Kalumpang	£500,000	Dec.	1,023,606	1,113,030	1,215,000	1/0.7d.	755,000	98,000		85,000	938,000
Java Consolidated	£85,000	Dec.	739,736	675,800	..	7.08d.	411,100	67,995	70,000	72,000	620,400
Kapayang	,, 150,000	Dec.	176,890	139,239	..	†20.90	110,683	11,782	11,648	12,597	146,710
Kuran	,, 250,000	Mar.	114,879	104,783	84,000	8½d.	41,012	6,623	5,574	6,858	60,067
Kota Bahroe (1921)	,, 390,000	June	138,330	339,970	..	..	78,957	24,885	27,143	29,933	160,918
Krowcock	£70,000	Dec.	493,730	449,000	549,000	0/7.24d.	366,800	61,000	62,000	59,000	549,800
Langkat	Gs. 2,500,000	Oct.	843,589	943,000	975,000	Gld4.0.28			86,900	92,500	179,300
Padang	Fls. 500,000	April	209,711	220,232	..	10½d.	66,300	17,205	17,000	20,000	120,500
Pengkalan (1921)	,, 150,000	Mar.	172,022	135,253	176,088	†10.19	..	..	..	..	..
Permuta	,, 250,000	Oct.	98,303	86,299	..	0/8½d.			9,012	..	9,012
Repah	,, 275,000	Dec.	27,000	68,584	440,000	1/3½	153,578	24,886	19,521	20,200	217,185
Sarangata	,, 600,000	Sept.	381,816	250,813	..	..	..	..	..	..	..
See Koe (1918)	,, 100,000	June	179,663	142,000	115,183	11.37d.	97,613	..	10,896	12,000	120,509
Semanon	,, 300,000	Dec.	179,192	164,105	158,264	0/9.37d.	119,529	..	15,267	10,300	245,596
Senawang (1921)	,, 375,000	Jan.	106,500	272,500	..	*7.35d.	180,900	28,100	23,400	21,700	254,000
Shanghai Kedah	,, 400,000	Sept.	313,414	246,742	..	8.12d.	..	22,827	21,112	23,650	67,627
S'hai-Klebang	,, 315,000	Dec.	113,352	126,106	..	0/9.35d.	84,115	8,000	8,400	8,500	109,015
S'hai-Malay	,, 600,000	Dec.	413,633	373,111	392,000	..	223,531	23,850	20,336	21,439	289,156
S'hai Pahang	,, 200,000	June	209,881	188,016	..	9½d.	52,721	20,430	15,618	12,204	109,973
S'hai Seremban	,, 325,000	Dec.	176,588	173,213	..	0/8.67d.	103,486	13,998	13,650	15,900	147,034
S'hai-Sumatra	,, 650,000	Oct.	661,338	670,716	650,000	Glds.0.38	..	..	50,239	61,102	111,341
Sua Manggis	,, 200,000	Dec.	182,000	144,880	..	..	..	14,200	13,500	..	27,700
Sungala	,, 100,000	Mar.	30,271	165,757	..	17.20	6,126	..	..	..	6,126
Sungei Duri	£10,000	June	308,073	296,598	220,000	11.61d.	64,560	23,302	18,774	19,773	126,409
Taiping (1913)	Fls. 200,000	Dec.	705,550	107,011	90,000	*$30	79,652	8,065	3,573	..	95,290
Tanah Merah	,, 750,000	Mar.	415,000	395,000	..	7.92d.	162,200	27,500	23,400	21,800	234,900
Tebong	,, 750,000	Jan.	634,590	630,838	717,725	0/7.66d.	450,500	66,500	67,000	72,000	656,000
Zlangbe	£750,000	Dec.	616,432	514,566	600,000	7.24d.	352,500	45,800	49,100	46,200	523,600

*Excluding Depreciation and Shanghai Expenses † Straits 8 cents.

Company	Authorized Capital	Financial yr. closes end of	Output last 2 fin. year: Year before	Output last 2 fin. year: Last year	Estimated output present fin. year	All in cost per lb.	Output from end last fin. year to 30-9-23	1923: Oct.	1923: Nov.	1923: Dec.	Total output this fin. yr. to date
			lb.	lb.	lb.	d.	lb.	lb.	lb.	lb.	lb.
Auna	Fls. 630,000	Sept.	292,500	259,100	246,648	8.87d.	..	22,000	21,000	25,000	68,000
Amberst (New)	,, 500,000	Oct.	72,382	81,440	80,500	*8.34d.			9,784	9,236	19,020
Anglo-Dutch	£200,000	Dec.	760,000	650,000	600,000	0/6.92d.	364,700	64,500	55,900	60,000	535,100
Anglo-Java	£250,000	Dec.	1,511,575	1,521,711	1,550,000	6.95d.	1,116,100	163,600	189,000	183,000	183,000
Ayer Tawah	Fls. 300,000	Sept.	369,417	68,012	300,000	†0.24.41		..
Batu Anam	,, 400,000	Dec.	221,030	258,510	185,793	0/7.31d.	142,992	..	12,450	8,200	102,712
Bukit Toh Alang	,, 500,000	Mar.	309,254	305,645	345,000	7.54d.	139,189	30,893	26,000	26,000	222,082
Buto	,, 300,000	Dec.	253,300	230,067	159,516	10.11d.	121,250	17,700	16,600	18,800	174,350
Chemor United	,, 360,000	Dec.	271,636	340,794	246,192	0/7.15d.	194,558	..	26,044	25,800	246,412
Chempedak	£35,000	Oct.	145,760	162,500	..	10.15d.			14,000	16,700	30,700
Chenz	Fls. 675,000	June	151,923	145,338	..	11.09d.	52,730	18,010	15,574	15,700	102,014
Consolidated (1914)	,, 375,000	Dec.	591,033	680,890	574,680	0/6.58d.	166,199	62,349	56,543	58,552	633,632
Dominion	,, 350,000	Dec.	301,042	271,150	300,867	11.04d.	211,506	28,111	25,596	27,925	323,140
Gula-Kalumpang	£500,000	Dec.	1,023,606	1,113,030	1,215,000	1/0.7d.	755,000	98,000		85,000	938,000
Java Consolidated	£85,000	Dec.	739,736	675,800	..	7.08d.	411,100	67,995	70,000	72,000	620,400
Kapayang	,, 150,000	Dec.	176,890	139,239	..	†20.90	110,683	11,782	11,648	12,597	146,710
Kuran	,, 250,000	Mar.	114,879	104,783	84,000	8½d.	41,012	6,623	5,574	6,858	60,067
Kota Bahroe (1921)	,, 390,000	June	138,330	339,970	..	..	78,957	24,885	27,143	29,933	160,918
Krowcock	£70,000	Dec.	493,730	449,000	549,000	0/7.24d.	366,800	61,000	62,000	59,000	549,800
Langkat	Gs. 2,500,000	Oct.	843,589	943,000	975,000	Gld4.0.28			86,900	92,500	179,300
Padang	Fls. 500,000	April	209,711	220,232	..	10½d.	66,300	17,205	17,000	20,000	120,500
Pengkalan (1921)	,, 150,000	Mar.	172,022	135,253	176,088	†10.19	..	..	..	..	..
Permuta	,, 250,000	Oct.	98,303	86,299	..	0/8½d.			9,012	..	9,012
Repah	,, 275,000	Dec.	27,000	68,584	440,000	1/3½	153,578	24,886	19,521	20,200	217,185
Sarangata	,, 600,000	Sept.	381,816	250,813	..	..	..	..	..	..	..
See Koe (1918)	,, 100,000	June	179,663	142,000	115,183	11.37d.	97,613	..	10,896	12,000	120,509
Semanon	,, 300,000	Dec.	179,192	164,105	158,264	0/9.37d.	119,529	..	15,267	10,300	245,596
Senawang (1921)	,, 375,000	Jan.	106,500	272,500	..	*7.35d.	180,900	28,100	23,400	21,700	254,000
Shanghai Kedah	,, 400,000	Sept.	313,414	246,742	..	8.12d.	..	22,827	21,112	23,650	67,627
S'hai-Klebang	,, 315,000	Dec.	113,352	126,106	..	0/9.35d.	84,115	8,000	8,400	8,500	109,015
S'hai-Malay	,, 600,000	Dec.	413,633	373,111	392,000	..	223,531	23,850	20,336	21,439	289,156
S'hai Pahang	,, 200,000	June	209,881	188,016	..	9½d.	52,721	20,430	15,618	12,204	109,973
S'hai Serembau	,, 325,000	Dec.	176,588	173,213	..	0/8.67d.	103,486	13,998	13,650	15,900	147,034
S'hai-Sumatra	,, 650,000	Oct.	661,338	670,716	650,000	Glds.0.38	..	..	50,239	61,102	111,341
Sua Manggis	,, 200,000	Dec.	182,000	144,880	..	..	..	14,200	13,500	..	27,700
Sungala	,, 100,000	Mar.	30,271	165,757	..	17.20	6,126	..	..	..	6,126
Sungei Duri	£10,000	June	308,073	296,598	220,000	11.61d.	64,560	23,302	18,774	19,773	126,409
Taiping (1913)	Fls. 200,000	Dec.	705,550	107,011	90,000	*$30	79,652	8,065	3,573	..	95,290
Tanah Merah	,, 750,000	Mar.	415,000	395,000	..	7.92d.	162,200	27,500	23,400	21,800	234,900
Tebong	,, 750,000	Jan.	634,590	630,838	717,725	0/7.66d.	450,500	66,500	67,000	72,000	656,000
Zlangbe	£750,000	Dec.	616,432	514,566	600,000	7.24d.	352,500	45,800	49,100	46,200	523,600

Sehawang Rubber Ests. (ord. Co. (1921), Ltd. (12% Cum. Pref.	T	1.05	1.02½	1.07½	63)	300,000		T1	a (Loss) 20,075	Jan.	....
Shanghai Kedah Plantations, Ltd.	T	1.10	1.10		67)	100,000		T1
S'hai Klebang Rubber Estate, Ltd.	T	0.60	0.65		31)	400,000		T1	a T1,183	Sept.	T0.05, 1919 .. .. ..

COMPANIES' NOTICES, MEETINGS, ETC.

The Senawang Rubber Estates Co., Ltd.—A General Meeting will be held at No. 10 Canton Road, Shanghai, on Monday, January 14, 1924, at 4 p.m.

The Chempedak Rubber and Gambier Estate, Ltd. The 14th Annual General Meeting will be held at No 10 Canton Road Shanghai, on Thursday, January 17, 1924, at 4.30 p.m.

The Transfer Books will be closed from January 14 to 17, 1924, both days inclusive.

The Hongkong & Shanghai Banking Corporation.—Subject to audit, the Directors will recommend at the forthcoming meeting:—

To pay a final dividend for the year of £3 and bonus of £2 subject to deduction of Income Tax.

To add to Silver Reserve, 10 Lakhs.

To write off bank premises account, 10 Lakhs.

To carry forward to next year, 33⅓ Lakhs.

The Tebong Rubber & Tapioca Estate, Ltd.—A General Meeting will be held at No. 10 Canton Road, Shanghai, on Tuesday, January 23, 1924, at 11.45 a.m.

The Gula Kalumpong Rubber Estate Ltd.—Holders of 5/- in the £ paid shares who have not paid the Call advertised by Call Letter dated October 15, 1923, are reminded that same is payable on or before January 15, 1924, and that all calls unpaid on that date will bear interest at the rate of 10% per annum from that date until the date of payment.

The Cheng Rubber Estates, Ltd.—An Extraordinary General Meeting will be held at No 10 Canton Road, Shanghai, on Monday, January 21, 1924, at 4.30 p.m.

Share Report for Week Ending January 11, 1924.

No. 24 2

J. P. BISSET & CO.

Telegraphic Address: "BISSET SHANGHAI"
Codes in use A1 Code
A.B.C. 4th, 5th and 6th Editions
H. Broomhall's Imperial Combination Code
Bentley's Complete Phrase Code.
Telephone Cent. 171

Share and General Brokers.
Land and Estate Agents.
1 The Bund,
Post Office Box No. 244
Shanghai.

The local share market opened this week with a little more life in evidence but rates generally do not show any marked tendency to improve at the close to-day. "Rubbers" have been more in demand but buyers are reluctant to pay more than to-day's quotations while the price of rubber remains only steady. "Cottons" opened with a fair enquiry but close easier. Langkats, Shanghai Loan and Shanghai Excavation are all wanted at prices which seem attractive. Hongkong & Shanghai Bank shares have improved to $1,060. Buyers during the week. Yangtsze Insurance, Shanghai Docks, S. & H. Wharves, Lands and Shanghai Gas Co. are all wanted at higher prices.

London market quotations have improved slightly throughout the week and the following are the latest prices offered to us by cable this week:—

Chinese Govt. 5% Reorg. Gold Loan 1913, B.I.	£ 72. 0. 0	(Mean)
" " " " " " R.I.	69 0 0	ex B.I.R.S.
" " " " " " R.I.	64 10 0	(Sellers) "
" " " " " " R.I.	64 5 0	(Mean) cum "
Chinese Engineering & Mining Co., "B"	8. 7. 6	"
Gula Kalumpong Rubber Estates, Ltd. (Fully)	1 13 6	"
" " " 5/- pd.	0. 8. 0	(Buyers)
Shanghai Electric Cons. Co., "B"	£ 13. 3	(Mean)
Shell Transport & Trading Co., "B"	3. 15. 9	(Sellers)
British-American Tobacco Co., "B"	5. 0. 7½	"
Chartered Bank of I. A. & C.	10. 11. 3	"
Mercantile Bank of India	12. 0. 0	"

Sterling Quotation.—The opening T.T. Rate on London to-day is 3/3.

Shanghai, January 11, 1924.

Following is the official business recorded on the Shanghai Stock Exchange:—

JANUARY	5th		7th		8th		9th		10th		11th
	Cash	Mar	Cash	Mar.	Cash	Mar.	Cash	Mar.	Cash	Mar	Cash	Mar.
RUBBERS
Anglo-Java Est., Ld. .. Tls.	..	..	6½	6.90	6.60	..	6½	7	..	..	..	..
Ziangbe Rub. Co., Ld. .. "	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	8½	..	..	..
Sungei Duri Rub. Est. Ld .. "	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	8½	..
MISCELLANEOUS STOCKS
S. & H. Wharf Co., Ld. .. Tls.	180	..	..	..	..	..	72½	..	..	..	73	..
S'hai Mutual Tel. Co., Ltd. .. "	72½	..	72½	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..
Hall & Holtz, Ld. .. .. $	..	..	6.90	..	..	..	2/4½	..	..	..	..	..
Singapore Trams .. .. .. £	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	1065	..	..	..
H. & S. Bank .. .. .. $	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..
COTTONS
Ewo Cotton Mills, Ld. (Ord) .. Tls.	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	12½
DEBENTURES
S. M. C. 6% 1923 Debs. .. Tls.	99	..	..	..	99	..	99	..	99	..	99	..
S'hai Race Club 6½ %,, .. "	..	..	..	100	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..
S. M. C. 7% 1922 Debs. .. "	..	..	..	105½	..	105½	..	105½	..	..	..	..
S'hai Land 6% 1922 ,, .. "	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	98	..	..
S'hai Land 6% 1913 ,, .. "	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	98	..

FORWARD SETTLEMENTS FOR 1924.

January 29, Tuesday. February 26, Tuesday. March 25, Tuesday.

CLOSING QUOTATIONS, JANUARY 11, 1924.

STOCK	Last business done.	Buyers	Sellers	No. of Shares	Paid-up Value	Reserve, etc.	Finan. year ended	Last Dividend etc.	Paid or Due
BANKS.
Hongkong & Shanghai Banking Cor.	$ 1,065	1,060		61) 40,000	H $125	(a H $83,350,214 (c H $65,123,831)	Dec.	Int. £3 for 1923 deduction of I/T††	7-3-23
Chartered Bank of I., A. & C. London	£ 19½			600,000	£5	(d £224,201 (c £3,000,000)	Dec.	Final 7s. & Bonus 6s. 3d. (mkg. £1 0s. 3d.), free of I/T, 1922	5-4-23
INSURANCE.
Union In. Society of Canton, Ld.	H $ 232½			55) 200,000	d $4	(ae £137,386 (c 600,000	Dec	Final 16s. (mkg. 40s.) ex 1921 Work. a/c., Interim 24s. & Bonus to Contributors, 20%, ex 1922 Work a/c	26-5-23
North-China Insurance Co., Ld. ..	T 138			10,000	c £15	(ae T610,687 (c T4,782,885	Dec.	Final 15s. (mkg. 50s.) ex 1921 Work a/c. and Interim 15s. ex 1922 Works. a/c.	30-6-23
Yangtsze Insurance Association, Ld. ..	$ 25½	26½		45) 250,000	$10	(ae $1,921,999 (ae $2,405,635 (c $1,003,212	Dec.	$2 (or T1.46) ex 1922 Work. a/c. payable in Taels at Exchg. 73	30-5-23
Far Eastern Insurance Co., Ld.	T 22			1) 50,000	T20	(ae T518,346 (ae T204,093 (c T9,301	Dec.	T1.20 ex 1922 Work. a/c.	30-5-23
Canton Insurance Office, Ld.	H $ 626	725		10,000	f H $100	(ae H $2,172,375 (c H $0,649,892	Dec.	Final H $22 (mkg. H $40) ex 1921 Work. a/c., and Interim H $18 ex 1922 Work. a/c. ..	11-5-23
Hongkong Fire Insurance Co., Ld. ..	H $ 550			5,000	g H $50	(ae H $631,693 (c H $3,870,385	Dec.	H $32 ex 1921 Working a/c.	28-3-23
China Fire Insurance Co., Ld.	H $ 127	140		20,000	h H $20	(ae H $1,325,920 (c H $5,223,750	Dec.	H $7 and Bonus H $3 ex 1921 Work. a/c. ..	26-4-23
Assurance Franco-Asiatique	F 500			14,000	F500	(a F401,365 (c F3,734,330	Dec.	None. Floated 1919	....
SHIPPING.
Indo-China S.N. Co., Ld. .. (6% cum. pref. / def. ord.	H $ 38 / H $ 140	38½		2) 120,000 / 2) 120,000	£5 / £5	(a £2,187 (c £2,105,152	Dec.	Prof. 6s. at Exchg.—$2/4 London Warrants less I/T a/c., 1922. Def. Ord. Nil	15-6-23
Shell T'sport & Trading Co., Ld. .. (ord. / 5% cum. pref. / 7% cum. 2nd pref.	"B" £ £		£3:19:6	£4:2:6	38) 30,000,000 48) 300,000 57) 10,000,000	£1 £10 £1	(a* £2,029,050 (c £5,000,000	Dec.	Interim 2s., free of I T. Coupon 42	5-1-24
Shanghai Tug & Lighter Co., Ld. .. (ord. / pref.	T 75 / T 53			20,000 / 10,000	T25 / T58	(a T22 (c T470,000	Dec	(Int. Ord. T2.50 a/c., 1923) .. .. (Int. Pref. T1.75 a/c., 1923)	9-1-23
DOCKS AND WHARVES.
Shanghai Dock & Engineering Co., Ld. ..	T 88	95		10) 55,700	T75	(a T102,335 (c T1,515,998	Apr.	T7.50, 1922-23	27-7-23
Hongkong & W'pao Dock Co., Ld.	H $ 154½	153½		60,000	H $50	(a H $583,650 (c H $1,081,695	Dec.	Interim H $3, 1922 .. .. Final H $5 & Bon. H $3 (mkg. H $12, 1922) ..	11-10-22 27-3-23
New Eng. and Shipbuilding Works, Ld. .. .. (ord. / 8% pref.	T 0.40 / T 5.20	0½		85) 500,000 / 85) 500,000	T5 / T5	(a £42,417 (b T300,000 (c T1,290,000	Dec.	Ord. T0.00, 1922 .. .. Prof. T0.40, 1922..	10-3-23 10-3-23
Shanghai & H'kew Wharf Co., Ld.	T 180	181		‡4) 40,000	T100	(a T12,229 (b T200,000 (c T1,041,791	Dec.	Final T12 (mkg. T15, 1922) .. .. Int. T3 a/c., 1923	13-3-23 30-8-23
H'kong & K'loon W. & G. Co., Ld. ..	H $ 155½	152½		80,000	H $50	(a H $250,000 (b H $250,000 (c H $100,000	Dec	H. $6 & Bonus H. $3 (mkg. H $9 1922) ..	20-2-23
MINING.
Oriental Consolidated Min. Co., Ld. ..	£ 12/-			24) 500,000	G. $10	——	June	G $0.50, 1920-21	26-7-23
Chinese Eng. & Mining Co., Ld. (Bourse). London	T 19	19		††64) 2,000,000	£1		June	Final 5s% (Coupon No "23") free of I/T, 1922-1923	11-12-23
Rand Australian Gold Min. Co., Ld. ..	£ H $ 5.20	£3:0:0	£3:9:0	200,000	£1	(a £23,613 (c £1,573	Mar.	1s. 3d., 1909-10	21-5-10
LANDS AND HOTELS.
Shanghai Land Investment Co., Ld. ..	T 116	116½	118	‡) 78,000	T50	(a T25,559 (b T250,000 (c T2,166,533	Dec.	(Final T3 & Bonus T2 (mkg. T3, 1922) .. .. (Interim 1923, T3	23-3-23 26-7-23
H'kong Land Invest. & Agcy. Co., Ld. .. (New Reg.)	H $ 90	88		240,000	H $25	H $3,221,700	Dec.	Int. H $6 a/c., 1923	24-7-23
Humphrey's Est. & Finance Co., Ld. ..	H $ 23.00			150,000	H $10	(a H $250,000 (a H $123,746 (b H $50,000 (c H $557,903	Dec.	H $0.80 and Bonus H $0.70, 1922	10-2-23
Weihaiwei L. & B. Co., Ld.	T 6			3,874	T20	(a T2,808 (c T7,090	Dec.	T1.20, 1922	24-2-23
Anglo-French Land Invest. Co., Ld. ..	T 120	120		‡3) 18,000	T100	(a T7,548 (b T250,000 (c T350,000	Feb.	Int. Divid. T3½, 1923-24	21-9-23
The Shanghai Hotels, Ld.	$ 40	50		‡45) 150,123	$7.50	(a $475,121 (c $2,465,534	Dec.	$3 on 50,000 shs; Scrip Div. 199 now Ord. shs. for ea. 123 Founders shs., 1920 Interim, $3.50 on 74,000 shs., 1921, Final, Nil ..	11-6-21
Carlton, Ld.	T 53			14) 10,000	T50		Mar.	Floated April 1, 1922	....
Asia Realty Co., Inc.	G $ 100			‡18) 10,000	G $100		Dec.	Incorporated under the laws of Delaware Ord. 1922, 7%	4-1-23
Raven Trust Co., Inc. .. .. .. (ord. / pref.	G $ 10 / G $ 10			100,000	G $10 / G $10			Pref. 1st gr. 1923, 1½%	4-1-23
PLANTATIONS.
Alma Estates, Ld.	T 6½	6½		70,000	£1 at T9	(a T28,940	Sept.	T0.50, 1922-23	19-12-23
New Amherst Rubber Estate, Ld.	T 0.50		0.50	‡62) 500,000	T1		Oct.	....	....
Anglo-Dutch (Java) Plantations, Ld. ..	T 2.90			12) 400,000	10s.	(a T32,505	Dec.	T0.30, 1919 ††	7-4-20
Anglo-Java Estates, Ld.	T 6½	6.60		4) 500,000	10s.	(a T129,151 (c T375,570	Dec.	Interim T0.25 a/c. 1923	14-9-23
Ayer Tawah Rubber Co., Ld.	T 21	22½		27) 30,000	T10	(a T16,223 (b T22,000 (c T69,960	Sept.	T2.00, 1922-23	28-12-23
Batu Anam (Johore) Rub. Ests., Ld. ..	T 1	1.03½	1.07½	400,000	T1	T30,789	Dec.	T0.05, 1919	10-4-20
Bukit Toh Alang Rubber Ests., Ld. ..	T 1.12½	1.07½	1.12½	500,000	T1	T29,402	Mar.	Final T0.25 (mkg. T0.50, 1916-17)	25-7-17
Bute Plantation (1915), Ld.	T 0.75	0.85	1	300,000	T1	(Loss) T13,076	Dec.	Final T0.05 (mkg. T0.10, 1916)	29-3-17
Chenor United Rubber Co., Ld.	T 1.07½	1.05		400,000	T0.90	T37,697	Dec.	Interim T0.05, 1923	6-11-23
Chempedak Rub. & G'bier Est., Ld. ..	T 6		39)	35,000	£1	(Loss) T13,435	Oct.	2nd Interim, T0.50, (mkg. T1, 1916-17)	16-10-17
Cheng Rubber Estates, Ld.	T 1.40	1½		135,000	T5	T4,120	June	T0.20, 1916-17	1-11-17
Consolidated Rubber Estates (1914), Ld. ..	T 2½	2½	2½	25) 500,000	2s.—T0.75	T23,192	Dec.	T0.10, 1922	20-4-23
Dominion Rubber Co., Ld.	T 2	2		19) 350,000	T1	T30,000		Interim T0.00, 1923	15-10-23
Gula Kalumpong Rubber Ests., Ld. ..	T 9½	9½		‡48) 750,000	(21;450,000 5s;200,000	T13,813	Dec.	T0.40, 1919	13-5-20
Java-Consolidated Rubber & Coffee, Est., Ld.	T 14	14½		8) 85,000	£1 at 2/3½	T54,465	Dec.	2s. less I/T at 5s. in £1922, "B" Coupon 20) ..	28-3-23
Kapayang Rubber Estates Co., Ld. ..	T 12	13		35) 15,000	T10	T650,113	Dec.	Interim, T0.50, 1923	3-9-23
Karan Rubber Estate Co., Ld.	T 6	4½		25,000	T10	T6,977 T4,023	Dec.	(T0.50, 1922 .. .. (Interim 1923, T0.50	19-4-23 17-7-23
Kota Bahroe Rubber Estates (1921), Ld. ..	T 1.05	1.05		390,000	T1	T3,908	Mar.	T0.60, 1922-23	1-6-23
Kroewoek Java Plantations, Ld.	T 14	14½	20)	70,000	£1 at T1.80	T30,000 (Loss) T16,284	June	(T0.60, 1922	17-4-23
Padang Rubber Co., Ld.	T 6½			50,000	T10	T35,490 T55,350	Dec.	(Int. T0.50 a/c., 1923	7-9-23
Penggelan Ayer Estates (1924), Ltd. ..	T 5.10			150,000	T1	T2,410	Apr.	T0.05, 1919	3-5-20

LAW REPORTS

A WIFE LOCKED UP IN HER BEDROOM

More Stories of Life at the Crest: Half Share in Cafe Valued at $10,000

The action brought by Lloyd E. Brown against Frank H. Hyde, proprietor of the Crest Hotel—a case which his Honour Judge Grain described (when the matter first came before him) as due to a wrangle between two women and which never should have been brought into court—was continued at H. M. Supreme Court on Monday, Mr. Reader Harris informing his Lordship that the parties had been unable to arrive at a settlement. The case for the defence was accordingly proceeded with. Plaintiff (formerly manager of the Crest Hotel) claimed, under a contract in writing, three months and 19 days' salary, at $500 per month $1,816; and three months and 12 days' board and lodging, at $250 per month, together with $151 costs.

Mr. Tycho Wing appeared for plaintiff and Mr. Reader Harris for defendant.

Mr. Reader Harris, in opening the defence, alleged that plaintiff had been negligent in carrying out his duties as manager, had used insulting language, and had behaved in such a manner as to endanger the licence of the hotel. On April 20, plaintiff struck his wife a blow which rendered her unconscious and defendant had to assist in carrying her to her room at the hotel, and on another occasion he went to the Del Monte during business hours and had to be fetched back. One night Brown and his wife returned to the hotel at 12.30, demanded that dinner be served, and, on being told that it was too late, went to the defendant's room, where plaintiff used abusive and threatening language. Brown asked to be paid off and to be allowed to go, and Hyde agreed. The two then left the room, and a few minutes later defendant went downstairs and found everyone in the garden, where Mr. and Mrs. Brown were quarrelling fiercely. Some sheets and a quilt were hanging from Mrs. Brown's window, and she appeared to have got down into the garden by this means. When defendant spoke to Brown about the incident, the latter told him to be careful or he might find himself in hospital. Mrs. Brown was in a raving temper and defendant decided to fetch the police, an Inspector coming on the scene and conducting Mrs. Brown, who had continued to rave, out into Avenue Haig, where she calmed down. The Inspector told defendant that if such incidents were repeated he would lose his licence.

A $10,000 HALF SHARE.

In this way, said counsel, the conduct of the Browns had been injurious and prejudicial to the interests of the hotel. Counsel suggested that the whole trouble arose in connexion with a proposal that plaintiff should purchase a half share in the business. He agreed to do so for $10,000, and paid $100 down, it being understood that he would complete the purchase within a month. He failed to do so and asked for a 10 days' extension, which was granted. At the end of that period, he was still unable or unwilling to complete the purchase, then suggesting that he should be allowed to pay the balance by instalments from his salary. This proposal was refused, and the refusal was the cause of the ensuing trouble. From that time onwards, plaintiff began to neglect his duty, and little annoying incidents occurred, culminating in the bed-room window scene.

Inspector P. Kersulec, of the French Police, who was called to the Crest on the occasion described, stated that Mrs. Brown was raving and yelling and appeared to have been drinking. Brown was doing his best to quiet her.

Mr. Wing pointed out that, according to law, misconduct on the part of a wife did not constitute misconduct on the part of her husband.

Defendant gave evidence bearing out his counsel's statement. Speaking of the occasion when (he alleged) plaintiff struck his wife and rendered her unconscious, witness said this was because of Mrs. Brown's jealousy of her husband dancing with one of the Russian girls. When she saw him in the ball room she went to the bar and ordered a brandy and soda, drinking this and calling for another, which the bar boy refused to serve. Her husband then came in and struck her. Witness denied that he backed out of the proposed half-share agreement upon finding that it might be a bad bargain for him.

Three Chinese witnesses were called to support defendant's story as to the conduct of Mr. and Mrs. Brown.

THE CONTROL OF A WIFE.

Counsel then addressed his Lordship, who asked Mr. Wing whether he went so far as to say that a master could not break the contract of an employee whose wife went on the premises and created a disturbance.

Mr. Wing—It depends on the circumstances. It may be so, but in this case plaintiff cannot be held responsible for what happened. He did everything possible to keep her quiet.

Counsel went on to say that apparently defendant regarded his manager as a menial servant without power or discretion to do the smallest thing except stand on his hind legs in the ballroom. It was a natural thing for him to go and see what was doing at a rival establishment. Plaintiff was not responsible for the garden scene. It might not have been the best thing to do, but clearly he had locked his wife in her bedroom for the sake of peace and quietness.

His Honour announced that he would give judgment in a few days' time.

BANK'S CLAIM FOR TLS. 8,000

Defendant's Offer of Arrangement

His Honour Judge Sir Skinner Turner had before him on Monday a claim by the Hongkong & Shanghai Bank against Messrs Schiller & Co., for Tls. 8,187.18, money lent, with interest at 8 per cent. Mr. G. H. Wright appeared for plaintiffs and Mr. P. W. Goldring for defendants.

Mr. Goldring informed the Court that the bank held certain land which had now been taken over by the Municipal Council, and as soon as negotiations were completed defendants would be able to come to some arrangement with the Bank. They consented to judgment for the amount claimed.

His Lordship gave judgment accordingly, with 8 per cent. interest to date, and costs.

THE REPUTATIONS OF LITIGANTS

Supreme Court Judge's Comment When Asked to Read a Detective's Report

In H. M. Supreme Court on Thursday, before his Honour Judge Grain, Dr. R. A. Thompson brought an action against C. P. Rakusen, of the Oculists' Institute Co., 49A Nanking Road, to recover $50 for shares and $79 for services rendered.

Mr. Reader Harris appeared for defendant.

Plaintiff told his Honour he was suing for money due for the time he was a partner in defendant's business. He gave defendant $50 for shares and stock in the business, and was a partner from February 10 to April 10 last year. Witness also engaged an oculist. There were from 10,000 to 12,000 shares, and defendant sold witness 50 of them at $1 each, witness paying the money and obtaining a receipt. Shortly afterwards he left defendant because he found him to be the biggest thief and swindler in Shanghai.

ALLEGED BLACKMAIL.

Mr. Harris—Your Honour, that is the whole of plaintiff's case. It is what he has brought it for. He only came into court in order that he might make that statement. He has simply brought this case for purposes of blackmail.

Plaintiff—That is not true. He is exactly what I have said he is.

Mr. Harris—Would you like to see the detective's report upon yourself?

Plaintiff went on to say that the money claimed was due to him because he dissolved the partnership. Upon leaving, he wanted the money for the shares back again because he was not getting any retainers or profits from the business. There were no shares issued. Of course, when he left the business he wanted his money back. The $79 was due to him on an arrangement he had with defendant with regard to the oculist, having guaranteed that he would be paid money received from patients whom he attended. This money, however, was paid to defendant and he had refused to hand it over, saying that he did not understand. The oculist had not been paid, and witness was claiming because he was now in partnership with him and considered the money to be his also.

His Honour pointed out that in these circumstances it would be the oculist who should claim against Rakusen.

Witness—The oculist is now my partner, and I guaranteed him the money.

WHEN SHARES GO WRONG.

His Honour—I do not see on what grounds you want your $50 back. You have your receipt for them, and if they are now of no value that is your misfortune.

Plaintiff—Well, the business is paying nothing and I want my money back.

His Honour—There are lots of us who want our money back when our shares go wrong, but we cannot get it and have to put up with our losses.

In answer to Mr. Reader Harris, plaintiff said that a receipt for the shares was sent to him by chit book and he gave defendant $50 next day, in cash, but no one saw him do so. Witness admitted that he issued a writ for and took into court three Chinese employees who sued defendant for $20 wages.

His Honour observed that he did not see that plaintiff had made out a case at all.

Mr. Harris—That is so, your Honour. The whole thing is malicious. Plaintiff has been suing Rakusen and trying to ruin his business in every way. His only reason for coming into court was for the purpose of making the statement he has made, and I would ask your Honour to intimate to the reporters that it should not appear.

His Honour replied that he could not direct the reporters in the matter, but added that he had always found the discretion given them was well used.

Mr. Harris—Plaintiff knows that he has got no case. I can prove that the $50 was never paid, though plaintiff was always saying he would send a cheque.

His Honour (to plaintiff)—You have taken shares which you say are worth nothing now, but that cannot be helped. Here is a receipt duly signed and it refers to an agreement entered into between you.

A DIFFERENT PART OF ACTION.

Plaintiff—I never had the shares.

His Honour—It may be a matter for an action for fraud, if the shares were fraudulent or you were fraudulently persuaded to take them.

Plaintiff repeated that he had not got the shares.

His Honour—Then it is an action for delivery of shares. As to the $79, there is no evidence the oculist has not been paid.

Mr. Harris—Your honour has said that it might be an action for fraud, but I take it you do not mean on the evidence before the court this morning.

His Honour—Oh, not at all. (To plaintiff)—You have made out no case whatever.

Plaintiff—I would like your honour to read evidence of this man's reputation which I have obtained from detectives in America.

His Honour—I do not want to hear it. If I spent my time inquiring into the reputation of people coming to this court I should have to sit here all day long. Judgment for defendant, with costs.

MALTESE SEAMEN'S OUTBREAK

Thrilling Story of Attack in the Str. Rio Azul: Chief's Narrow Escape

When the hearing was resumed by Mr. G. W. King at H. M. Police Court of the charge against the seven Maltese firemen of wounding with intent to cause grievous bodily harm three engineer officers of the str. Rio Azul, the prosecution withdrew their case against Emmanuel Vella, George Gatt and Emmanuel Zara. They were discharged. The other four prisoners, Luizo Baldacchine, Carmelo Chircop, Emmanuel Sciberras and Joseph Busitill, were further remanded.

Mr. A. E. Seddon (prosecutary) said that he had been in conversation with Dr. Parsons, and learned from him that the chief engineer's condition was precisely the same. It was unlikely that he would be able to give evidence for several days. The prosecution had finally come to the conclusion that the charge against Zara, Gatt and Vella had not been proved. There had been no evidence to show that they actually struck any of the officers. The other four were clearly implicated and counsel applied for a remand in their case until the chief engineer was well enough to come to Court. His ship was sailing on or about Monday next.

In reply to the Magistrate, the master of the ship, Mr. John Peterkin, said he would be unable to leave port without the chief engineer. He would be obliged to wait here until that officer recovered.

Remarking that the whole situation was most unfortunate, no definite evidence having been heard against the three men counsel had just referred to, the Magistrate said they would be discharged and the other four prisoners remanded until Monday. He would then attempt to deal with them summarily, unless the chief engineer were to die before then, in which case they would of course have to go before the Chief Justice.

Accused Convicted

Proceedings were continued on Monday.

The Chief Engineer, Mr. J. T. Crozier, who came from hospital to give evidence and appeared to be in a weak and nervous condition, told a story which showed that an ugly tragedy had narrowly been averted on board the Rio Azul. He stated that about 7 a.m. on the Saturday morning in question the second engineer looked in to his room and said that the men wished to see him. Witness promised to go below an hour later, but the officer returned with a message demanding witness's immediate appearance in the engine room, otherwise the men would not "turn to." Wearing only his trousers and a pyjama jacket, witness at once went below, and asked the men what they meant by sending for him at that time in the morning. Chircop, acting as spokesman for the whole engine-room staff who were standing around, said: "We have been to the British Consul and he has told us that you are the cause of all the trouble, and that you are the man we ought to get at."

THE ATTACK STARTS.

"I told them not to talk rubbish," witness continued, "whereupon the first accused spoke something in Maltese to the second, who slightly nodded his head, whereupon the first man dealt me a severe and violent blow in the face. I went down on my knees and, upon trying to rise, I received another severe below on the back of the head, numerous blows being then rained on my head and body. It seemed as if somebody had jumped on my head, and I lost consciousness. When I recovered somewhat, and was being assisted out of the place, a spanner flew past me, and I am almost sure it was thrown by Chircop. This seemed to clear my brain and, thinking another attack was about to take place, I took up a hammer, determined to use it and to sell my life as dearly as possible; but the chief officer said that it was all right, and that the men had scattered. At that moment, however, two scaling scales were hurled down the tunnel."

THE ENGINEERS ON DECK.

Witness went on to say that, upon being assisted to the deck, he there saw three of the accused and another man, armed, and told them to lay down their weapons, as they were on their way to the officers' quarters, possibly for an attack. Chircop, who carried a big spanner, said, "Yes, we'll put it down! We'll put it into a — head." This was all witness remembered of the affair.

In reply to his Worship, witness said he never attempted to strike any of the men before this trouble started, and he could give no reason why he should have been specially singled out for attack, as appeared to have been the case. There had been some discontent, and it was known that the men were going to see the Consular authorities, but no one knew what for.

The accused did not question the officer, and two of them admitted the evidence: one saying that he struck because complainant had called the engine room staff "a lot of rubbish," and another admitting that he pushed one of the officers (who was going to complainant's assistance) out of the way, but could not remember if he kicked the officer.

HEAVIEST POSSIBLE SENTENCE.

His Worship, after reviewing the facts of the case, passed the heaviest sentence the court had power to give, viz., three months with hard labour for each of the accused.

THE PEACEMAKER

The Usual Reward of Good Intentions

A Sikh rough and tumble in Avenue Road on Tuesday afternoon led to the appearance of three of the participants before Mr. G. W. King on Wednesday. In the case of Chanan Singh and Beer Singh, charged with having been drunk and disorderly. Inspector Sinclair said that he saw them fighting in the midst of an appreciative crowd of Chinese—several hundreds of them—the two men rolling on the ground and pulling each others hair and beards. The fight having been stopped, they went quietly to the police station.—Fined $5.

Gulam Nabi, who summoned Juan Singh for having assaulted him, told his Worship that while the fight was in progress he ventured to intervene, telling Juan that if the man whose beard he was pulling died Juan might be hung for it. Juan responded by hitting witness of the head with a big stick.

His Worship—You simply acted as peacemaker?

Witness—Yes.

His Worship—And you got what the peacemaker usually gets.

Defendant was fined $5, and the whole party warned that the bill would be heavier if they persisted in these street displays.

THE Chinese press notes with satisfaction the results of the female operators in the Nantao Telephone Co., stating that the venture has been very successful and the operators are being sent to other stations to teach other women the work.

Company Meeting

THE CHENG RUBBER ESTATES

Extraordinary General Meeting

An extraordinary general meeting of shareholders in the above-mentioned Company was held last Friday.

Dr R S Ivy presided, supported by Messrs A K Craddock, Hugo Reiss and A J Welch (Directors), and Mr C J L Stewart, representing the Secretaries and General Managers. The total number of shares represented was 19,950.

The Secretary having read the notice convening the meeting, the Chairman said:—

Gentlemen, The circular convening the meeting has been in your hands for the requisite period and fully explains the reason why your directors recommend writing down the Company's capital as outlined, and the reconstruction of the Company for the benefit of its shareholders.

The usual method of reconstruction that has hitherto been employed here has been to liquidate the old company and to float a new one, shareholders in the old company exchanging their shares for shares in the new company of a smaller face value. The method of reorganization that we now propose is different, although the ultimate result will be exactly the same, and it has the great advantage of saving a large percentage of the fees and expenses incidental to liquidation and reflotation, and more especially that expensive item of transferring title deeds.

The procedure will be as follows:—Instead of liquidating the present company, whose issued capital is Tls. 675,000 in 135,000 shares of Tls. 5 each, we are asking you to consent to each share being split up into five shares of the nominal value of Tl. 1 each, of which you will retain two shares in exchange for each present share of Tls. 5, surrendering the other three shares to the company. This will have the effect of reducing the issued capital from Tls. 675,000 to Tls. 270,000, thus leaving Tls. 405,000 unissued. Of this Tls. 405,000 we are asking you to take up Tls. 27,000, that is one new share of Tl. 1 for every five old shares you hold, which will provide sufficient money to enable the company to pay off all its debts and place it upon a dividend paying basis. It will probably never be necessary to issue the remaining 378,000 shares, but as we are not liquidating the company or reducing its authorized capital they have to remain in existence in the company's books.

The issued capital of the company as it now stands is much too large to admit of the payment of adequate dividends in the altered conditions of the rubber industry. This company, as you are aware, has not paid a dividend since 1917; prior to that it paid dividends:—

	s. d.
in 1912 of 5 per cent the average price realized for its sales being	4 8
1914 of 4 per cent	2 3
1915 of 8 per cent.	2 0
1916 of 8 per cent.	2 4½
1917 of 4 per cent.	2 4

and I am afraid that without reconstruction, shareholders cannot except to receive anything in the way of dividends for some considerable time, as it will be necessary to accumulate a reserve to meet any emergencies that might arise. During the past two years the secretaries have very kindly made advances to enable the company to meet part of its liabilities, but we cannot always expect them to do so, should the necessity arise.

Your directors feel that your best interests will be served if you agree to give up a portion of the paper value of your shares, the market quotation for which has been for years past under Tls. 2 per share, so that by your consenting to exchange your present Tls. 5 shares for two shares of Tl. 1 each, you will be getting more than the equivalent market value, with the prospects of receiving dividends and placing the company in a sound financial position.

That is all I have to say, but before putting the resolution which is proposed by myself and seconded by Mr A. K Craddock, and which I will ask you to pass, I shall be pleased to answer to the best of my ability any questions you may put forward. The resolution reads:

"That each of the existing 135,000 shares of Tls. 5 each in the Company's capital, numbers 1 to 135,000 inclusive be divided into five shares of Tl 1 each, and that three out of every five shares of Tl 1 each resulting from such sub-division be surrendered to the Company for future issue and that 270,000 shares of Tl. 1 each resulting from such sub-division and not surrendered be credited as fully paid up and be numbered 1 to 270,000 inclusive and that out of the 405,000 shares of Tl. 1 each resulting from sub-division and surrendered to the Company 1 share of Tl. 1 each be offered for subscription at par to each member of the Company in respect of every five old shares of Tls. 5 held by him, but if the reduction of issued capital proposed to be effectated hereby shall not be confirmed by the Court on or before June 30, 1924, this resolution shall on that day be void and of no effect and this resolution shall be conditional on a scheme of arrangement between the Company and its members for giving effect to the provisions of this resolution being adopted and sanctioned under Section 121 of the Companies' Ordinance (Hongkong), 1911."

Should the above resolution be passed by the requisite majority it will be submitted for confirmation as a special resolution to a further extraordinary general meeting and such meeting will be held on Monday, January 21, 1924.

The resolution was carried.

PEKING, Jan. 9. It is reported that the Cabinet has approved the plans of Mr. Wang Ko-ming, Minister of Finance, to issue [illegible] bonds secured on the Peking Octroi. According to an unofficial report, it has been suggested that the service of these bonds shall be placed under the Inspector-General of Customs.—Reuter.

SEVERAL members of Parliament have addressed themselves to Kao Ching-wei protesting against the reported leasing of the grounds of the Temple of Agriculture for a period of eight years for tree and plant cultivation. The Parliamentarians object to the rental figure, claiming that there is something underhand in the deal. At the same time they advocate the use of the property as a workshop for the poor.

DESPITE the recent protest filed by the Ministers in Peking for Japan, Great Britain and France, the military authorities of Hunan Province are still intervening in the salt administration of that province. Consequently, the foreign Ministers concerned have once again demanded that the Chinese Government exercise more strict control, pointing also to the seizure of salt revenue in October last by the military authorities of Hunan. It is reported that the seized salt revenues of Hunan amounted to $800,000 in September and $520,500 in October.

MR. Ernest Bruce Smith, first officer of the str. Leung Kwong was found dead in his cabin at Hongkong on December 30 last with a bullet wound in his head. It is thought to be a case of suicide owing to mental derangement. At the time of the discovery the vessel was lying at her wharf, opposite the new Fire Station. The late Mr. Smith had been engaged for many years on the China Coast as a ship's officer, and was well known in the Yangtze district. He was formerly in the service of the Indo-China Steam Navigation Company, but latterly he has been employed on river boats running in and out of Hongkong.

Sports and Pastimes

GOLF

Junior Golf Club Championship

The annual championship of the Junior Golf Club was contested at Hongkew Park on Sunday morning. C Richards and C. Hopkins participated, the former winning at the 27th hole by 10 up and nine to play.

PAPER HUNT CLUB

The Kiangwan Hunt

The paper hunt on Saturday resulted as follow:—

1—A J Rea on Hairpin.
*2—W. D. Fiddes Wilson on Blazing Corn.
3—R Moon on Dreamland.
4—H Maitland on Grey Cloud.
5—C G S. Miller on Accelerator.
6—J H Teesdale on Cape Horn.
*Heavyweight winner

A LADIES' HUNT.

Another ladies' hunt took place on the same afternoon, beginning at Burnham Beeches and ending in Billy Cautts's line.

Miss Billy Cautts, riding astride, came in first and Mrs. Sparke was the first in of those riding side-saddle.

RUGBY FOOTBALL

Tientsin Interport Match

We are informed that the Tientsin Rugby Football Club has now decided definitely to send down a team to Shanghai for an Interport encounter during the Chinese New Year Holidays.

The Tientsin team will leave for Shanghai on Tuesday, February 5, and it is expected that the Interport match will take place on Saturday, February 9.

Cricket in Australia

Melbourne, Jan. 5.

Victoria beat South Australia in a cricket match concluded today by 98 runs.

In their first innings Victoria made 221, Ponsford contributing 81. Whitty took five wickets for 49. In the second innings Victoria scored 357, Ponford making 159 by graceful and brilliant batting lasting three hours and 23 minutes. Love contributed 106.

South Australia made 309 in their first innings, Arthur Richardson contributing 144 and Victor Richardson 100. Liddicut took six wickets for 62. In their second innings they scored 171, Hartkopf took five for 56.—Reuter.

British-American Yacht Championship

New York, Nov. 29.

British yachtsmen have challenged America to a series for the British-American Cup, emblematic of the international six-metre yacht championship, to be held off Long Island next summer. The challenge was sent to the Seawanhaka-Corinthian Club, which is expected to accept. The series probably will be held in September.

The trophy has been competed for annually since 1921, alternately in British and American waters. British yachtsmen have triumphed twice in the contests so far, winning in 1921 and this year, when the races were held in the Solent, while this country scored in the 1922 event, held off Oyster Bay.—Reuter.

THE Vladivostok authorities are levying a tax on consignments of goods and on passengers leaving Vladivostok, for educational purposes. The object of the tax is excellent, but it will be impossible to bring up the children with an open mind on the subject of free trade.

Municipal Gazette News

Shanghai War Memorial.

With regard to an application from the Shanghai War Memorial Committee, requesting the Council to contribute half of the cost of the foundations and bunding of the Memorial site, provided that the French Council will do likewise, it has been decided to reply expressing acquiescence. The total amount required is Tls. 16,823.38, of which the Council will pay one-half.

Motor Omnibus Services.

Correspondence with the Shanghai Ratepayers' Association, in continuation of that published in the Gazette of May 14 last:—

Shanghai, November 13, 1923.

DEAR SIR,—I am directed by my Committee to call your attention to the request in my letter of April 26 for information regarding the comparative contributions to the Public Revenue of the Railless Tram Service and the lately sanctioned Motor Bus Service which information the Council did not feel disposed to give.

My Committee would now refer the Council to the letter of the Shanghai Electric Construction Company of August 30, appearing in the Municipal Gazette of October 11, wherein they state that the contribution per omnibus works out at only about half the amount of the contribution per Railless Tram.

My Committee feel that if the above figures represent in any degree the existing conditions of the terms it is of the utmost importance the public should be informed of the reasons which influenced the Council to grant such favoured terms to the Motor Bus Company, involving, as they do, such a heavy loss to the public.

My Committee requests that this letter shall be printed in the Municipal Gazette for the information of the Ratepayers.

CAMPBELL HENDERSON,
Secretary, Shanghai Ratepayers' Association.

E. S. B. ROWE, Esq.,
Acting Secretary,
Municipal Council.

Council Chamber,
Shanghai, December 12, 1923.

SIR,—I am directed to acknowledge receipt of your letter of November 13, continuing your previous correspondence on the subject of the relative contributions to revenue by trams and motor buses.

In reply, I am directed to point out that with reference to the final sentence of the first paragraph of your letter, the information available was communicated to you in my reply of May 7.

I am directed to repeat that tram services, even in the form of railless cars, cannot properly be compared to motor bus services; the former constitute a practical monopoly in that the overhead equipment precludes any similar service being run on that particular thoroughfare, whereas, several services of the latter may be run over the same roads, wholly or in part.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
E. S. B. ROWE,
Acting Secretary.

CAMPBELL HENDERSON, Esq.,
Secretary,
Shanghai Ratepayers' Association.

Mixed Court Report for November.

Jurisdiction.—During the trial of Lee Dah-sung for the attempted murder of General Hsu, who died after the trial, application was made on behalf of the Chinese Government that the accused should be handed over for trial to the Native Authorities on the ground that the pistol was bought and the crime planned outside the Settlement. The Court, however, overruled this plea because the crime had actually been committed within its jurisdiction and sentenced the accused to execution, which was, as is usual, to be carried out by the Military Governor.

Opium.—During the month the Assessors and Magistrates came to the conclusion that the infliction of fines in the majority of opium cases was successful neither as a deterrent nor as a punishment and consequently decided to impose imprisonment with or without fines in addition. This has caused a certain amount of consternation among those interested. In one case when application was made for the term of imprisonment to be commuted to a fine, it was stated by the defence that although the Court was not bound to give notice of its intention of being more severe, yet it would have been fairer to have done so. This plea had no effect on the Bench which in refusing the application pointed out that according to the Criminal Code there is no offence under the opium category which can be met by a fine except poppy cultivation, opium smoking or being in possession of any apparatus only used for the purpose of smoking opium.

Unrepresented Foreigners.—45 persons under this category were before the Court on criminal charges, the most important of which were two women sentenced to ten months and deportation for attempted murder, and one man to six months for false pretences.

Civil Cases.—There has been a decrease in the number of Chinese and Foreign Civil Cases filed but the number of cases awaiting a first hearing has increased under the former category by 15 to 28? and under the latter by 4 to 59.

Sealing Orders.—82 of these orders were issued but the Court was only called upon to execute 11 of them.

OFFICIAL NOTICE

AMERICAN citizens resident in the Shanghai Consular District are informed that income tax forms for the calendar year 1923 may now be had on application to the Shipping Office, American Consulate-General, Shanghai. Requests by mail should state whether the form desired is one for an income of over U. S. $5,000 or for an income of U.S. $5.000 or less.

EDWIN S. CUNNINGHAM.
American Consul-General.

EAST ASIATIC Co., Ltd.

(Aktieselskabet Det Ostasiatiske Kompagni)

COPENHAGEN
TO THE EAST.

Japan Line:
Sailings from COPENHAGEN, GOTHENBURG, CHRISTIANIA, HAMBURG and ANTWERP to HONGKONG, SHANGHAI, KOBE, YOKOHAMA, DALNY and VLADIVOSTOCK.

Bangkok Line:
Sailings from COPENHAGEN, GOTHENBURG, CHRISTIANIA, HAMBURG, MIDDLESBROUGH and ANTWERP to PORT SAID, COLOMBO, PENANG, SINGAPORE and BANGKOK.

Java Line:
Sailings from COPENHAGEN, GOTHENBURG, CHRISTIANIA and HAMBURG to BATAVIA, SAMARANG and SUERABAYA.

TO SOUTH AFRICA.
Sailings from DENMARK, NORWAY, SWEDEN and BALTIC PORTS to CAPE TOWN, ALGOA BAY, EAST LONDON, DURBAN, DELAGOA BAY and BEIRA.

TO AUSTRALIA.
Sailings from DENMARK, NORWAY, SWEDEN, HAMBURG and LISBON to FREMANTLE, ADELAIDE, MELBOURNE, SYDNEY and BRISBANE.

TO NORTH PACIFIC.
Sailings from COPENHAGEN, GOTHENBURG, CHRISTIANIA, HAMBURG and ANTWERP to ST. THOMAS (with transhipment to the GREATER and LESSER ANTILLES), CRISTOBAL (with transhipment to CENTRAL AMERICAN PORTS), LOS ANGELES HARBOUR, SAN FRANCISCO, PORTLAND (Oreg.), SEATTLE, TACOMA and VANCOUVER (with transhipment to other NORTH PACIFIC PORTS).

TO SOUTH PACIFIC.
Sailings from COPENHAGEN, GOTHENBURG, CHRISTIANIA, HAMBURG and ANTWERP to ST. THOMAS (with transhipment to the GREATER and LESSER ANTILLES), CRISTOBAL (with transhipment to CENTRAL AMERICAN PORTS), GUAYAQUIL, CALLAO, MOLLENDO, IQUIQUE, ANTOFAGASTA, VALPARAISO, TALCHUANO and CORRAL (with transhipment to other SOUTH PACIFIC PORTS).

For further particulars apply to—
THE EAST ASIATIC CO., LTD., COPENHAGEN.
Telegrams: "Orient."
UNITED KINGDOM—JAPAN and BANGKOK LINES: Escombe, McGrath & Co., London, Glasgow, Birmingham, Liverpool, Manchester, Grimsby, Middlesbrough, Greenock, Immingham and Southampton.
JAVA, SOUTH AFRICA and AUSTRALIA LINES: J. E. HYDE & Co., London.
PACIFIC LINES: United Baltic Corporation, Ltd., 158 Fenchurch Street, London.
Tel.: "Orientcake."
SHANGHAI.—The East Asiatic Co., Ltd.

bonds (he often carried money and bonds) in a ricsha and reached the alleyway in question when two men overturned his ricsha and another held him by the throat, when he fainted. When he recovered, the bonds and the bag were gone. The ricsha coolie was reviving him and told him to report to his masters while he, the ricsha coolie, (the first accused) chased the robbers. Witness could not identify any of the robbers, but the one who held him by the throat wore a small cap.

Evidence was given by Det.-Insp. Yorke and Det.-Sub-Insp. Hunter, for the prosecution, and the case was remanded until Monday afternoon next. The four men referred to by Mr. Maitland were discharged, but the others will remain in custody.

Four Chinese Sentenced to Death: Police's Magnificent Work

The accusal were brought up for sentence on Wednesday. The prisoners were found guilty by Mr. Martin and Magistrate Kuan and ordered to be sent to the Arsenal for execution.

After commenting on the fact that absolutely no precautions were taken by the Tung Yih Trust Co. who did not even trouble to ascertain the number of the bonds and entrusted them to an 18-year-old employee earning $3 a month, the Bench characterized the work of the police in the case as above all praise. "The Magistrate and I," said Mr. Martin, "consider it a wonderful testimony to the efficiency of the police force and take this opportunity of expressing our appreciation of this work."

The Assessor expressed surprise that this appreciation was not shared by the Chinese Bankers' Union and the Native Bankers' Association, who came to the conclusion that, in order to preserve the tranquillity of the Settlement, fresh precautions should be taken by the Council to diminish the chance of robbery. "I must admit that I am unable to see how the Council can do more than they do to protect native bankers from the results of their own gross negligence in failing to take any precautions whatever in conveying valuables through the streets," said the Assessor.

The Bench also drew attention to a letter received by the Court from the Chinese General Chamber of Commerce in connexion with the case which the Assessor described as a criminal attempt to interfere with the administration if justice.

The full text of the judgment was as follows:—

We have found Tsung Ah-san, Zee Tse-kuei, Tsiang Vee-keu and Tsang Ah-foh guilty of highway robbery. The penalty for highway robbery by three or more is death. This penalty may be reduced, but in this case we see no circumstances which justify mitigation of the sentence. These men will therefore be handed over to the Defence Commissioner for execution in accordance with law.

AN EXTRAORDINARY CASE.

This is in many ways an extraordinary case.

On November 29 last the Tung Yih Trust Co. sent $500,000 worth of Chinese Government Internal Loan Bearer Bonds from the China Merchants' Stock Exchange in Hankow Road to the Tung Yih Trust Co.'s premises in Peking Road in charge of an employee, Koo Tsoo-vong, aged 18, whose salary is $3 a month. No precautions whatever were taken and no note was even taken of the numbers of the Bearer Bonds before they left the China Merchants' Stock Exchange. The employee Koo went in a private rickshaw belonging to the Tung Yih Trust Co. pulled by Tsung Ah-san, the first accused, who had conspired with Zee Tze-kuei, the second accused, likewise a ricksha coolie employed by the Tung Yih Trust Co., and with Tsiang Vee-keu and Tsang Ah-foh, the third and fourth accused, and with others not in custody, to rob the contents of the leather wallet in which the bonds were carried and which, they state, they believed to contain opium in transit.

This was done without difficulty. The Chinese passer-by seems constitutionally averse from interfering to prevent robbery and in fact such interference is often dangerous. The robbers appear not to have been armed in this case, but in many cases of robbery in the past few months robbers have been in possession of firearms and have not hesitated to use them. The robbers in this case had chosen the scene of the robbery at a place adjoining an alleyway and got clear away up the alleyway with their booty.

The assistant manager of the Tung Yih Trust Co. reported the loss to the Central police-station at 10.45 a.m. on the same day and within 24 hours the police had recovered 379 of the 500 bonds.

UNEXAMPLED EFFICIENCY OF POLICE.

Mr. Maitland, prosecuting counsel, has stated that he doubts whether this performance could be equalled by any other police force in China. The Magistrate and I consider it a wonderful testimony to the efficiency of the police force and take this opportunity of expressing our appreciation of their work, of which this is only one example which has been brought to our notice in the past few months. It seems to me remarkable that this appreciation is not shared by the Chinese Bankers' Union and the Native Bankers' Association, who held a meeting on December 8 and came to the conclusion that in order to safeguard the tranquillity of the Settlement precautions should be taken by the Shanghai Municipal Council to diminish the chance of robbery. I must admit that I am unable to see how the Council can do more than they do to protect native bankers from the results of their own gross negligence in failing to take any precautions whatever in conveying valuables through the streets.

I should not have referred to this, but that as a result of this meeting a letter was addressed to this Court by the Chinese General Chamber of Commerce urging that the robbers caught in connexion with this case and the case of robbery of funds of the Shanghai Nanking Railway Company be handed over to the Chinese Authorities in order to frighten other robbers.

This Court, as is well known, only hands over Chinese convicts in cases where it is of opinion that the death penalty should be inflicted, and it only does so after a careful trial in which the prisoners hear all the evidence against them and have the opportunity of calling evidence on their own behalf and pleading before the Court all circumstances which can be urged on their own behalf.

ATTEMPTS TO SUBVERT JUSTICE.

The attempt by such a letter as this to prejudice the trial of the 10 suspects who were arrested by the police in connexion with this robbery is a criminal attempt to interfere with the free and impartial administration of justice by this Court, and Mr. Maitland has very properly requested that the letter be handed to him in order that the guilty parties should be brought up on a charge of contempt of Court. I regret to say that this is not the only case in which similar attempts have been made to influence the decision of this Court and that letters have been addressed to this Court by the same parties on behalf of influential litigants in civil cases. Assurances have been given that the practice will cease and in view of the fact that the practice appears to be tolerated by certain other Chinese Courts in spite of the theoretically independent status of the modern Courts in China no proceedings are ordered to be taken against the offenders in this case. But any similar offences in future will be dealt with in accordance with law.

The unfairness of prejudging a case without thorough investigation is strikingly illustrated in the present case. Ten persons were originally charged by the police. The charge against four of these was withdrawn by the police at the beginning of this trial because they were satisfied that these four persons had no connexion with the robbery and the Court after hearing all the evidence against the six persons tried has found two of them not guilty.

Having delivered their judgment Messrs. Martin and Kuan directed that the attention of the Commissioner of Police be called to the excellent conduct of Det.-Sub-Insps. Yorke and Hunter, who were engaged in the case.

PILFERAGE OF CLOTH

Attempt to Re-sell Stolen Property to Sincere's

The Sincere Co. figured last Friday as complainants in a case at the Mixed Court in which two Chinese were charged with the pilfering of three rolls of cloth valued at $2,014.

Det.-Insp. Yorke, representing the Police, outlined the case for the prosecution, Mr. Wong Chee, managing director of the Sincere Co., was present for his company, and Mr. S. A. Moss and Mr. J. E. Lemiere represented the defence.

Det.-Insp. Yorke stated that as soon as the loss was discovered, the Sincere Co. immediately lodged their claim within the prescribed period. Several days afterwards a man came into the Sincere Co. and offered to sell them a kind of cloth which appeared to be similar to the stolen cloth. Comparison was made and it was found that what was offered was actually the stolen cloth. The police were notified and accused, through the admissions of two brokers, were located and arrested. The second man admitted that he had a couple of rolls of the cloth in his possession which he had bought from the first accused. The first accused told the Police that he had been commissioned to sell the cloth by a third party, but inquiries made by the Police failed to substantiate his story.

Mr. Wong Chee, having given evidence that a theft had been discovered, Tsang Chien, a department manager, told the Court that when a man offered to dispose of the cloth, he thought it was like the cloth which had been stolen and he informed the manager accordingly. Witness stated that he could not say definitely that the cloth was that which had been stolen, but it was very much the same. He would have to compare the cloth with that in stock before he could give any definite statement.

Accused both denied having any knowledge of the affair, but the Bench was disposed to think that both of them had more knowledge of the affair than they cared to state: hence they were sent to prison for two months each.

AMERICAN EXPRESS CO.'S SUIT

Tls. 201,479 Involved: Verdict for Plaintiff in Mixed Court

Judgment was handed down in the Mixed Courtt on Monday by Messrs. Allman and Li in favour of the American Express Co. in their suit against Messrs. Wei-Luke-chune and Wei Pei-tsai, the Court ordering "that plaintiff recover from defendants such an amount as an accounting may show to be due." Plaintiff alleged that Tls. 201,479.12 was rightfully due them. Messrs. Schuhl & Schoenfeld appeared for plaintiff and Messrs. Fessenden & Holcomb for defendants.

The judgment in part stated that plaintiff and defendants entered into an agreement on May 17, 1918, whereby defendants would act as compradores for the American Express Co., and that compradores had guaranteed certain indent orders, 11 in number, which were due and owing, though defendants denied inter alia that they had guaranteed, but whereas plaintiff had alleged that contracts were guaranteed, defendants stated that they had acted only as middleman or introducer.

The evidence was to the effect that Wei was informed by plaintiffs that unless he were willing to guarantee the credit application on a consignment of indigo with the Greywoll Trading Co. through Teng Kong they (plaintiffs) must make other arrangements.

It was not denied that the parties were acting pursuant to the compradore agreement. Defendant was conversant with both English and Chinese languages and knew the English documents. Under these circumstances Wei acted and led the American Express Co. to rely on his acts.

Judgment was accordingly rendered favouring plaintiff.

ALLEGED FRAUDS ON LOCAL BANK

Tls. 30,000 Involved: Mixed Court Proceedings

Woo Ching-nye was charged in the Mixed Court on Monday before Messrs. Martin and Kuan, with having taken a deposit box from the vaults of the Asia Banking Corporation, where he was employed in a subordinate position. It was alleged that the box, which was taken on May 21, contained money, jewellery, papers and securities to the total of $10,000, most of which were in the form of travellers' cheques which had to be filled and countersigned before being valid.

The arrest of accused was brought about in a novel manner and it was through the information of another official of a friendly bank that it was found out that certain of the papers might be in the possession of Woo. The latter had been suspected of the theft at the time it took place but he would give no light on the matter nor could it be definitely laid to his charge. He had left the employ of the bank and had since been with the Chinese American Publishing Co. Several weeks ago a wallet containing some of the lost travellers' cheques and some of Woo's calling cards was found on the premises of another bank but defendant could not be located, and on Saturday a representative of the Asia Bank saw defendant making purchases in a foreign shop and asked that guards be placed at the door until the arrest might be effected. This was done and the prosecution is the result.

THEFTS OF MAGNITUDE.

Several other alleged thefts and embezzlements of considerable magnitude also came to light, one involving Tls. 10,000 and the other three times that amount. In the first instance, it is alleged that three Chinese, Sze Voong-ching, aged 41, Dzai Waung-see, aged 37, and Tsang Woo-sze, aged 61, had made off with Tls. 10,000, embezzling this sum on February 2, 1923, from the Yu Dah Bank.

Det.-Sub.-Insp. Yorke, outlining the case for the prosecution, said that it would take considerable time to settle and asked for a special hearing, which was so granted.

Accused were admitted to bail—Tls. 1,000 for the first, Tls. 1,000 for the second and Tls. 8,000 for the last-mentioned.

In the other of the three bank affairs the Dah Tsong Bank was the victim and the thefts were perpetrated on October 26, and since. Messrs. Musso & Fischer, representing the plaintiff, asked for a remand until Friday from Messrs. Whitamore and Tsang which was granted. Dzung Yoh-kuang, accused, is alleged to have taken at various times sums totalling Tls. 30,465.03 and $2,338, as well as 40 shares of the International Gold & Silver Currency Stock & Produce Exchange with a face value of $500.

BAG SNATCHERS IN THE CENTRAL DISTRICT

With the arrest of Wong Ming-nyo, who was taken into custody at 6.20 p.m. on Tuesday, it is hoped there will be no more bag snatching in the central district. Though a determined effort had been made ever since the beginning of the episodes, special constables and plainclothes men having been detailed to the task of apprehending the culprits, it was not until the recent arrest that success rewarded the efforts of the police.

Accused appeared at the Mixed Court on Wednesday morning, when Insp. Elliot told the Court that the man had been found in Ningpo Road near Kiangse Road with a hand bag in his possession for which he could not account. The container was opened and within were found several papers, a passport and a small sum of money. Utilizing the papers as a means of finding the owner, the police discovered Mrs. Sukovera, a Russian doctor, to claim it.

A week's remand in custody was granted to enable the police to make more detailed investigations.

LAUGHTER AND TEARS IN MIXED COURT

Four-year-old Witness who Told Her "Mother" to Stop Crying

The youngest witness in recent annals of the Mixed Court brought both smiles and pangs to the spectators who were there on Wednesday. Even the hardened reporters and police sympathized with the four-year-old child, who had been living in a brothel and who had already been taught to sing as an entertainer.

Lau Nieh, of 83 Kuangsi Road, a licensed house, charged with exploiting the tiny mite, claimed the child as her daughter. Sub-Insp. Moore, who found her in the company of a number of men who were playing dominoes, became suspicious and upon investigating found that certain vital facts regarding the child appeared contradictory. Defendant's alleged husband, the officer told the Court, said that the child had been born in Siccawei at a certain time, but the woman said that it was in Cemetery Road at another time altogether. The child herself, told Messrs. Martin and Kuan that she had come from Soochow and that her parents lived there.

ASKED TO SING IN COURT.

The youngster in her bright red coat and blue cap was placed on a high bench in charge of the Chinese matron of the Door of Hope just before their Honours, who looked upon her kindly. When accused began to weep profusely, the child also began to cry though they were nearly 20 feet apart. Although the Magistrate ordered the defendant to stop, she could not, but the child recovered her composure quickly and turning over her shoulder (she was facing the Bench) said Ma Yu-kuh (Stop crying, mother).

When Magistrate Kuan asked her where her home was, she said in Soochow and almost without a break in the voice again adjured the woman in the dock to refrain from weeping. The bright and cheery youngster who tried to comfort the accused even brought smiles to the faces of those on the bench.

Though urged to sing for the Court the songs taught her by an old fiddler, the little vampire could not be conjured to do so.

Lau Nieh was fined $40 and the child will be turned over to the Door of Hope.

FOR the first time in the history of the U. S. Commissioner's Court the Koran was used to swear in an Indian witness on Saturday. At the previous hearing of the case objections had been raised to the usual form of oath. In bringing the book to the court-room and handing it to the authorities, Chief Insp. Kinipple said that it was a very sacred book to those of its religion and asked that when it was not in actual use it should be kept locked up and away from profane hands, neither should the covering wrapper be removed nor should anyone who is smoking be allowed to touch it.

GUNBOAT AND A TUG IN COLLISION

Italian Government's Successful Action Against the Robert Dollar Co.

In the United States Court for China last Friday, his Hosour Judge C. S. Lobingier gave a written judgment in the case of the Kingdom of Italy v. the Robert Dollar Co., an action to recover damages, alleged at Tls. 5,000, resulting from a collision between the Italian gunboat Ermanno Carlotto and the tug A. B. Dollar, which occurred in the Huangpu near the Customs Jetty. The nautical commissioners to whom the case was referred found "that the launch A. B. Dollar is solely to blame for the collision, and that the Carlotto is exonerated from all blame, and we award costs as follows, namely, Tls. 300 to be paid by the respondent."

In the course of the judgment his Honour states:—

From evidence taken before us (but which should have been taken before a Commissioner) it is apparent that great difficulty will be encountered in arriving at a just and satisfactory conclusion as to the actual loss and damage of ship stores and personal effects of officers and crew, for there is a difference of no less than $1,331.74 between the amount claimed by libellant's witnesses and the estimate of the surveyor whose report respondent has offered in evidence and may be treated as an admission. To resolve this difference intelligently will involve a detailed inquiry which can best be conducted by those familiar with nautical matters. Especially at this period of congestion in the Court's calendar it should avail itself of all assistance which the law affords. It is therefore considered and decreed that

(1) In accordance with the stipulation of the parties, libellant have and recover from respondent the sum of Tls. 2,920 as "costs and repairs;

(2) In accordance with the surveyor's report, offered by respondent, libellant have and recover from respondent the sum of M.$819.96 for loss and damage to stores, clothing and other effects;

(3) In accordance with the commissioners' report, respondent pay Tls. 300 as costs besides the regular Court costs;

(4) The cause again be referred to the commissioners to ascertain and report any further items of loss or damage, considering the evidence already taken and any further evidence which they may desire to take. In case of inability of any of the commissioners to act, a substitute will be appointed after giving the parties opportunity to agree.

A PATENT MEDICINE FOR TUBERCULOSIS

Partnership's Affairs in Court: Employee's Theft of Drugs: The Judge's Decision

In the U. S. Court for China, on Saturday, Judge C. S. Lobingier gave a written judgment in the cases of F. T. Kiang v. C. J. Kosel. The judgment follows:—

In October, 1920, the parties to this cause and one other formed a partnership for the purpose of exploiting a patent medicine for tuberculosis. There was no written agreement and the time for an April is conflicting, after the withdrawal of the third partner, such an agreement was executed, the original being in German and an English translation being attached to the complaint. The two partners continued the business until about September 20, 1921, when this action was begun. Subsequently, by stipulation of the parties and after certain testimony had been taken, the case was referred to a firm of accountants to determine whether defendant is indebted to plaintiff, or plaintiff to defendant, Kosel. The referee filed a report showing a provisional balance in plaintiff's favour of $3,734.41 but subject to certain disputed claims which the Court is requested to resolve.

The evidence at the second hearing was confined to these claims. The first includes an item of $1,434 for advertising and $518 for printing. The items are unsupported by vouchers, but plaintiff testifies, and he is corroborated by the firm's book-keeper, that defendant included all vouchers and receipts when, as he admits, he took possession of the firm's books. The book-keeper also stated that he paid such bills and obtained the receipts, placing them in a drawer from which they were taken by defendant. The advertising would amount to a little more than $100 a month during the continuation of the partnership and the printing to less than $50. It is true that defendant says there were other expenditure for these purposes but he does not assume to say how much and we think that plaintiff has fairly met the burden of proving these items.

The next is a claim for a quantity of the medicine in question alleged to have been stolen by an employee of the firm. Prima facie this would be a firm loss, not chargeable entirely to plaintiff. It is claimed, however, that plaintiff assumed liability. But the assumption is not alleged to have been other than verbal, which would be insufficient under the Statute of Frauds, it being a "special promise to answer for the debt, default or miscarriage of another," which must be in writing.

The next item in dispute is one of $5,900.41, which appears in the books as "personal advances to defendant" and which he admits having received. He claims, however, that under the verbal partnership agreement he was entitled to $800 per month as salary. Plaintiff denies this, but the third partner, who testifies that he was present at the time and seems to have no present interest in the controversy, corroborates defendant, so that the preponderance is with him. It is objected however that defendant's claim for salary is not pleaded, which is true, as the answer is only a general denial, but the rule in actions for an accounting is that the defendant need not set up specific items offsetting plaintiff's claim unless the whole account is pleaded. In other words the ordinary limitations of a general denial do not apply to such a case.

But the salary allowance appears to be established only so long as the verbal agreement continued. For when the written agreement of April 15, 1921, was executed no mention was made of salary and that item appears to be excluded by the provision that "at the end of the year there shall be a final accounting and profits net shall be divided." In view of this clause, evidence of a further agreement for salary would seem to infringe the parole evidence rule, for there would not be an equal division if defendant were to receive $800 a month more than plaintiff, and parties are presumed to have thus expressed their entire agreement. We can allow salary, therefore, only from October 1 to April 15, which would be six and one half months, amounting to $2,600.

The next and last item is the claim by plaintiff for a credit of half the sum of $1,000 paid to the third partner for his interest. There is a conflict in the testimony as to who proposed and desired the withdrawal of the third partner, plaintiff claiming that it was defendant and defendant claiming that it was plaintiff but we do not think it very material, since it is apparent on the record that both parties were of course equal actors in the change. Between each of the two previously had a one-third interest, each thereafter was an equal partner. In effect each acquired one-half of the retiring partner's interest and equitably each should be chargeable with one half of the cost. Had plaintiff acquired the whole interest of claim would be on a different basis.

We, therefore, allow plaintiff this additional item of $500 and defendant the sum of $2,000 for salary, leaving a balance of $2,100 to be deducted from the amount allowed by the referee, leaving $1,614.41 for which sum together with the referee's fee of Tls. 300 and the costs of this proceeding judgment is accordingly rendered in favour of plaintiff and against the defendant. It is further ordered that the articles of personal property listed in the schedule of the referees' report be divided equally between the parties, but that if a division by mutual agreement cannot be effected the same be sold at auction and the proceeds so divided. The same procedure will be followed as to the claims against sundry debtors mentioned in the same schedule but which according to one of the witnesses are uncollected.

ALLEGED PERJURY CASE

Russian Witness in U. S. Court Admits Giving False Evidence: Journey to Shanghai in Blizzard

A case with a picturesque background and various unusual incidents came up again in the U. S. Court for China on Thursday in the morning and afternoon sessions before his Honour Judge Lobingier on a motion for a retrial in the suit brought by the Fur & Wool Trading Co. (D. Biederman) Ltd. against Andersen, Meyer & Co. His Honour recently decided for plaintiffs, ordering an accounting within 30 days from date. Mr. W. Chalaire, of the firm of Shoop and Chalaire, for the defendants, moved for a re-trial on the grounds of alleged perjury of one of plaintiff's witnesses and fraud, and the Judge agreed to hear further argument from the plaintiff's counsel on January 7.

Mrs. Noskoff, the witness whose evidence is in question, accordingly set out from Urga but was caught in a blizzard, the motor blocked, provisions exhausted and the party all but frozen to death. A rescuing party found them, however, and they were able to get to Shanghai in time for a hearing on Thursday. The story goes back to the spring of 1921 when a Mr. Noskoff, the agent of plaintiffs, their predecessor in Urga, was seized by Sipailo, the Commandant of Urga, under Baron Ungern, his life threatened, and a heavy ransom demanded of his wife, who not being able to raise it went to the defendant's agent at Urga and suggested that he should purchase furs which were in the custody of Noskoff. This was done.

SWEARING UNDER COERCION.

In court on Thursday morning Mrs. Noskoff admitted that she perjured herself in giving testimony previously in having said that she did not know to whom the furs belonged nor the details of her husband's business. She further stated that after her husband was murdered she was without any money, being unable to secure any funds from his property and swore falsely under coercion by Raskin, the manager of the plaintiff company, fearing that otherwise she would get no money from him. For this false testimony she received between $4,000 and $5,000. She was at present in receipt of rents from her husband's land amounting to about $300 a month and had started legal action against the plaintiff company in Urga in the Russian Consulate, stating that this previous testimony was untrue and wrung from her by necessity.

Mr. R. T. Evans, appearing with Major Holcomb as associate counsel, stated that he would show that the money paid witness was not for that purpose but rather payments of money due to the heir of the deceased from the firm, and that witness had voluntarily subscribed to facts according with her previous testimony before the receipt of a letter from Mr. Raskin which the witness had alleged as compelling her to swear falsely. In cross-examination the witness stated that her late husband was paid a salary first of $6,000 and then of $12,000 yearly and that there was money due him from the plaintiff company. She also admitted that Spiridon Hochoff, a previous witness, a nephew of the deceased, had appeared in Urga.

In continuing her statement after the noon recess Mrs. Noskoff said that she understood that the premises in which the business of plaintiffs was conducted were the property of her husband, that the furs in question belonged to him and that he had considerable money in the plaintiffs' firm. With regard to her marriage to the late Mr. Noskoff she stated that it was a civil ceremony for which she had a certificate now in the Urga Consulate.

The second witness was Mr. Raskin, the manager of the plaintiff company, who denied that he had used bribery or threats to get Mrs. Noskoff to testify as she did at the first trial. He had stated the facts to her, he said, simply that she might know the truth, and state the truth, and his remark that unless she testified in this manner the company "might have a claim against her" was not to be construed as a threat. The payments to her had been made simply to allow her to live, and while he admitted that the plaintiff firm owed the deceased money, he did not feel he could hand over the entire amount to her as he questioned the legality of the marriage.

The Judge took the matter under advisement.

CAFE FRACAS

Americans Charged with Assaulting French Detective

J. Elmont, R. B. Libby and Carl J. Johnson appeared before Mr. Lurton at the U.S. Commissioner's Court on Saturday charged with assault upon a French detective. The assault is alleged to have occurred during a free-for-all fight at New Maxim's Café on New Year's Eve.

Mr. F. J. Schuhl on behalf of the accused asked for a week's remand, as he had not had time to prepare his case. After conferring for a few minutes with French police officers in Court, the Commissioner agreed to an adjournment until Saturday next.

A MOTOR COLLISION CASE

Contradictory Evidence in U. S. Court

The difficulty of appraising the responsibility for a motor collision was demonstrated in the U. S. Commissioner's Court for China on Tuesday afternoon in a suit for damages brought by the General Accident Fire & Life Assurance Corporation, Ld., against Dr. Alfred H. Swan for Tls. 230.50 and $175, the amount of damage alleged to have been done the Fiat car of Mr. George A. Johnson, insured by that company.

The collision took place on June 30 about 1.30 p.m. at the corner of Route Amiral Courbet and Avenue Foch, Mr. Johnson driving along Avenue Foch westward and Dr. Swan coming northward in a Dodge car along Route Amiral Courbet and turning eastward into Avenue Foch. Mr. Johnson alleges that he slowed down when approaching Route Amiral Courbet, blew his horn, heard no answer and that the collision was caused by Dr. Swan advancing at an improperly rapid speed on the wrong side of the road.

The defendant stated that he was advancing at a slow rate of speed on his side of the road and only swerved therefrom because it was rendered necessary by plaintiff's swerving sharply to the right. To avoid a collision defendant jammed on brakes and swung sharply to right but plaintiff changed direction, swerving back again to the left, colliding with defendant's car which had come to a standstill.

Both plaintiff and defendant produced Chinese witnesses to support their claims.

Mr. Lurton took the case under advisement.

THE THEFT OF CHINESE BONDS

Men Charged with Robbery Involving $500,000 Brought before Mixed Court

The recovery of 397 of the 500 Chinese Government Short Term Loan Bonds which were stolen from a Chinese coolie in Ningpo Road on November 29 within 24 hours was a matter which was stated by Mr. E. T. Maitland (Prosecuting Solicitor) to be a performance which he did not think could be equalled by any other police force in China.

Sung Ah-san (34, a coolie), Zee Ts-kwai (32, coolie), Tsiang Vee-kan (34, unemployed), Zee Ching (34, shopkeeper), Woo Ching-nyoen (35, shopkeeper), Yau Tsung-hai (20, coolie), Woo Zee-lzeu (37, coolie), Tsha Ong (28, coolie) and Tsang Ah-fok (25, unemployed) were charged before Mr. A. J. Martin (British Assessor) and Mr. Kuan Chun (senior Chinese Magistrate) last Friday afternoon "for that they at about 10.30 a.m. on November 29 at Ningpo Road, being concerned together with others not in custody, did by means of armed violence commit a robbery and steal 500 Chinese Government Short Term Loan Bonds, total value $333,500 with intent to make them their own property contrary to Article 374 of the Chinese Provisional Criminal Code." Yang Dong-sz, a woman, was charged with aiding and abetting in the crime contrary to Article 29 of the Chinese Code. Messrs. Tung Yih were the complainants, the bonds in question being theirs.

Mr. Maitland prosecuted, Mr. A. Ting and Mr. Li Ts-yui represented the Tung Yih Co., and Mr. L. K. Kentwell acted for the defence of the fourth man, Zee Ching. Det.-Insp. R. W. Yorke and Det.-Sub-Insp. J. Hunter and Chinese detectives effected the arrests.

A LETTER TO THE COURT.

At the outset of the case, Mr. Maitland stated that he understood that a letter had been received by the Court in which it was requested that all the accused men be handed over to the arsenal. This practice of writing letters of this nature to the Court, stated Mr. Maitland, was entirely wrong and prejudiced counsel for the prosecution.

"I ask that this letter be handed to me, continued Mr. Maitland, so that I can make inquiries as to the writers and bring them up on a charge of contempt of court."

The Assessor—The Court has received a letter asking that these men be handed over to the Arsenal authorities, and after receiving this letter the Magistrate and I arranged to stop anything of this nature for the future. It is all very well for bodies like the Chamber of Commerce who only heard one side of the story to write such letters to the Court but we have received assurances to the effect that this sort of thing will be stopped in the future. The Court will take steps to see that it is stopped.

Mr. Maitland said that it showed how improper and objectionable this sort of thing was, as he was just going to ask the Court to be allowed to withdraw the charge against the fifth, sixth, seventh and eighth accused.

The accused, he said, were charged with stealing 500 Chinese Government Short Term Loan Bonds, of the face value of $1,000 each. These bonds were entrusted to a coolie earning $3 per month as wages. They were stolen from him at the mouth of an alleyway in the Ningpo Road, but within 24 hours of the robbery the Police had recovered 397 of the stolen bonds, which was a performance that he doubted could be equalled by any other police force in China.

THE VICTIM'S STORY.

Kong Yeu-jing, an employee of the Tung Yih Trust Co., identified the bonds, and Koo Tsoo-voong gave evidence of the robbery, stating that he was returning to the Co., from the Exchange with a leather bag containing the should be expelled from the Cabinet.

Consequently Herr Fellisch has not assumed the portfolio of Economics. The other Socialist Ministers are considering their attitude.

Later.

Herr Heldt and the other Ministers have refused to resign on the ground that the right of deciding the personality of the Ministry rests with the Diet alone.—Reuter.

MIXED ARBITRATION TRIBUNAL

Belgian Deportees' Claims Against Germany: Other Actions Pending

Paris, Jan. 7.

A case in which 10 Belgians are suing the German Government for compensation for ill-treatment when deported during the war opened to-day before the Mixed Arbitration Tribunal, established under the Peace Treaty.

The Court is composed of three judges—a Swiss, a Belgian and a German.

Its decision will affect 80,000 Belgian deportees and may be invoked as a precedent by 25,000 French deportees.—Reuter.

MEXICAN REBELS' SUCCESSES

All Oilfields Now in Their Possession: Rebel Steamer Reported on the Rocks

Washington, Jan. 3.

Republican Congressman Fairchild has introduced a resolution in the House of Representatives requesting from the State Department details of the negotiations for the sale of war materials to Mexico.—Reuter's American Service.

Galveston, Jan. 4.

General Huerta's headquarters announce that the rebels are now in possession of all the Mexican oilfields.—Reuter's American Service.

Washington, Jan. 4.

The United States has sold the Obregon Government 5,000 1917-model Enfield rifles, 5,000,000 rounds of ammunition and eight aeroplanes.

Mr. Weeks, the Secretary of War, states that half of the material will be paid for in cash and the remainder in 30 days. It was not all that Mexico requested but it would meet present requirements.—Reuter's American Service.

El Paso, Jan. 4.

The rebel steamer Progreso, with supplies and troops on board, is reported to be on the rocks near Vera Cruz and to be in danger. Mexican Government ships are responding to the call for help. — Reuter's American Service.

Mexico City, Jan. 5.

The Secretary of War denies that the rebels have captured Tampico and the oilfields.

The British cruiser Capetown has arrived at Vera Cruz and departed for Tampico.—Reuter.

New Orleans, Jan. 6.

General Huerta, the revolutionary leader, has directed his agents to purchase large quantities of rifles, machine-guns and ammunition following advices from Washington that there is no law against the purchase of arms unless for conspiracy to use the United States as a base of operation against friendly Powers.—Reuter's American Service.

U. S. President's Embargo on Sale of Munitions to the Rebel Forces

Washington, Jan. 7.

Following the receipt of the report that Gen. Huerta had directed his agents to purchase war material in the United States, the Attorney-General has notified the Department of Justice's agents in New Orleans that the State Department has announced that, although there is no embargo on the shipment of war material to Mexico, such shipments are discouraged and against the Government's policy.—Reuter's American Service.

New Orleans, Jan. 7.

After conferring with an American official here, the Mexican revolutionary purchasing agent announced that he had abandoned his plans for purchasing arms and ammunition.—Reuter's American Service.

Washington, Jan. 7.

President Coolidge has issued a proclamation announcing an embargo on the sale of munitions to the Mexican revolutionaries.—Reuter's American Service.

Rebel Seizures of Oilfields

New York, Jan. 8.

The Pan-American Petroleum Transport Company announce that the rebels have taken possession of the Company's oilfields at Sibera Blanca and Chapapotrunez, causing the wells to close down.

Jan. 9.

Advices from Tampico state that the Federals are in complete control of the port and that there is no rebel force in the vicinity of sufficient strength to threaten its capture.—Reuter's American Service.

Government Successes

Tampico, Jan. 9.

The Government forces under General Gutierrez are advancing on Tuxpam. They have captured Huertolobos and Paloblanco.—Reuter's American Service.

Washington, Jan. 9.

The Obregon Government has deposited a cheque for $150,000 as an instalment on the purchase of war material and aeroplanes. The amount represents nearly a half of the total bill.—Reuter's American Service.

FRONTIER JEALOUSIES IN AFGHANISTAN

Russia's Pre-occupation over Central Asia: Importance of Eastern Markets

London, Jan. 6.

Discussing Afghanistan, a special correspondent of the "Observer" says that old frontier jealousies are once more blazing up. It is a mistake to think that the revolution has substantially changed the Russian pre-occupation over Central Asia, and in the absence of definite understanding between Britain and Russia on Asiatic affairs, complications must necessarily arise. Russia has turned more than ever to the East and has made enormous sacrifices to maintain her footing on the Eastern markets, notably Persia and Turkestan.

The maintenance of Afghanistan as a buffer State is every whit as imporant to Russia as it is to India. The condition of affairs makes it urgent that relations between Britain and Russia should be placed on a proper diplomatic basis as early as possible. The one thing which will instantly silence the dissensions of the ruling party in Russia and rally to the Government the non-Bolshevik elements would be any British challenge of the status quo in Central Asia.

A rash move in the north-west frontier may effect that more rapidly than it is supposed, because the acuteness of suspicion of the other side is not realized.—Reuter.

LONDON, Jan. 8.—An All-British Exhibition opens at Amsterdam on Thursday, January 10, for one month, organized by Dutch merchants interested in the recovery of British trade. It is supported by Lord Kylsant and the British Chambers of Commerce. Its main object is to encourage British trade with Holland and the East Indies.—Reuter.

EMPIRE WIRELESS

Australian Premier's Criticism of Britain's Failure to Meet the Dominions' Demands

London, Jan. 4.

"The date of my departure is approaching and I cannot longer remain silent on the question of Empire wireless, on which there should be no real difficulty in coming to a definite conclusion" runs the opening passage of a statement issued by Mr. S. M. Bruce, the Australian Prime Minister.

He points out that one station in Britain is utterly inadequate to meet the demands of the service which the Dominions desire to see installed, but, owing to the dispute between the British Post Office and Marconi's, there is no prospect of more than one station being erected, which will mean that Empire wireless will be very seriously handicapped.

Mr. Bruce contends that either the Post Office should reach an agreement with Marconi's permitting the latter to erect further stations or a definite statement should be published showing why the negotiations failed thus to enable the public to allocate the blame.—Reuter.

SCOTTISH LABOUR EXTREMISTS

Defiant Utterances at an I. L. P. Meeting

London, Jan. 5.

Addressing the annual conference of the Scottish Independent Labour Party at Edinburgh to-day, Mr. William Martin, M.P., said that a Labour Government would not tolerate dictation from any other party. It would retain its independence and tackle its political programmes with undiminished spirit. He emphasized that Labour was the strongest political party in Scotland and therefore, if they had Home Rule in Scotland, the red flag of Socialism would already be flying over the Parliament House.

The Conference passed a resolution demanding relief for the distress in the West Highlands, which speakers described as a disgrace to a civilized nation, adding that the people refused to live on charity.

A resolution was also passed condemning the Government's failure to deal with unemployment generally, and declaring that the Government's ostracism of Russia had aggravated the unemployment problem.

Another resolution demanded that the Government should refrain from helping the French military machine in the Ruhr.—Reuter.

LEGALIZED PIRACY

Canadian Ship Seized by U. S. Revenue Officials Well Beyond 3-mile Zone

New York, Jan. 4.

Britain at the instance of the Canadian Government has requested the release of the British and Canadian members of the crew of the steamer Tomako, which was seized by the prohibition authorities on November 26.

Britain is also asking for further information respecting the seizure, British investigation having shown that the Tomako, which is Canadian-owned, was seized well outside the three-mile limit. British officials feel that they have no alternative to insisting on the rights of British-owned vessels outside the traditional three-mile radius, which must remain law until the new treaty extending the limit to an hour's steaming distance from the shore becomes effective.

The American authorities still profess doubt as to the bonafides of the Tomako's British registry and would like the question of seizure in such cases outside the three-mile limit settled in American courts.—Reuter.

Customs Capture of Foreign Schooners

Galveston, Tex., Jan. 7.

The Customs authorities have captured and brought to port the schooner Muriel E. Minters, flying the British flag, in the Gulf of Mexico outside the three-mile limit. They allege that the manifest showed that the original cargo was 3,400 cases of whisky and the captain's record showed that 800 cases were missing.—Reuter's American Service.

Washington, Jan. 8.

The British Embassy has filed a request for information in regard to the seizure of the British schooner Kwasind by United States authorities at Wilmington, North Carolina, after the vessel, which was carrying intoxicating liquors, had put in for repairs.

It is believed that the Embassy's action is a preliminary to a formal protest, as in the cases of the Tomako and the Island Home.—Reuter's American Service.

New York, Jan. 9.

The captain, mate and supercargo of the Dutch schooner Zeehund, which coastguards seized off Long Island on December 8, have been acquitted by the jury of the Federal Court of a charge of conspiring to violate the Prohibition Law. Similar charges against six members of the crew have been dismissed. The Zeehund and her cargo now automatically revert to the possession of the owners.—Reuter's American Service.

SEEING BY WIRELESS

Where All the World Can Now Hear One Man They Will Soon Also See Him

London, Jan. 4.

Col. L'Estrange Malone, Chairman of the Radio Association, interviewed with regard to the recent transmission of American broadcasting by the British Broadcasting Company, predicted that 1924 would make television or seeing by wireless a practical possibility.

It was at present possible for one individual to address simultaneously the people of Europe, Africa and America. Nobody could foretell the ultimate international agreement to control and co-ordinate these transmissions to give a fair share of the "ether space" to all stations of any country which had first-class programmes or a news radio association. He had communicated with the League of Nations on the matter and a conference had been arranged for 1924 under the auspices of the League to consider all aspects of the problem.—Reuter.

THE FLOODED SEINE

Paris Suburbs Washed Out, Mills Stopped and Inhabitants Fleeing for Life

Paris, Jan. 3.

The flood situation is still critical. Amazing scenes reminiscent of wartime are being enacted in Paris and the riverside suburbs. The Seine to-day was 21¼ feet above normal. The flood burst the barriers of Alfortville and inundated the town. The population of 3,000 are evacuating the town and work has been suspended in various factories and mills.—Reuter.

The French wireless of the same date says:—

There has been a slight fall in most of the tributaries of the Seine except in the Yonne district. In the Paris district the suburbs are in difficulties, especially Alfortville and Ivry where some houses have had to be vacated. Some factories have stopped at Suresnes and Puteaux. In Paris the precautions taken have up to the present limited the floods. The Eiffel Tower at 11.30 announced by radiophone forecasts of the figures of the fall.

Marne Rising Rapidly

Paris, Jan. 4.

The Seine is still rising but less rapidly. The flood is expected to reach the level of 24 feet to-morrow morning, when it is believed the maximum will be attained.

Workers at St Denis are being conveyed to the factories in boats, manned by military engineers.

All shops at Alfortville above Paris are closed.

Choisy is flooded. The trains are delayed and the population are evacuating the quarter of the town where the water is 4½ feet deep.

The water at Ivry caused an explosion of calcium carbide in a garage. Firemen, waist-deep, fought the flames, while the inhabitants of the neighbouring block were saved from the fire by boats.

Jan. 5.

It is hoped that the flood has now reached its worst since the highest level has already been passed on the upper reaches of the Seine. Nevertheless the situation is still threatening as infiltration of water has started in many parts of the centre of the capital, remote from the river.

The sensation of the day was the collapse of the wall separating the Invalides railway from the Seine. The water in the Invalides station is 10 feet deep, preventing resumption of traffic for at least several weeks.

Inhabitants of the suburbs continue to leave their homes, but the waters rose rapidly during the night at Vitry marooning a populous area which is now inaccessible. Women and children are visible on the roofs signalling with handkerchiefs and clothing.

Numerous works have been closed, making idle many thousands of people.—Reuter.

Paris, Jan. 4.

The rise of the Marne has reached several houses at Nogent, Champigny, Bry and Le Perreux. A certain number of factories in the Paris district are idle. A decrease in the upper tributaries of the Marne is reported and also a slight rise in the basin of the Yonne.—French Wireless through Reuter.

Numerous Fatalities

Paris, Jan. 6.

A maximum rise of 24 feet was registered at Pont d'Austerlitz last night. The Seine is now stationary. Experts anticipate an early subsidence.

Later.

The situation in the suburbs remains grave. The railway-station at Maisons Alfort resembles a town on the battle-front. Trains left for Paris crowded with refugees. Practically the whole of Chatillon is under water. The railways have been cut in several districts.

The swiftness and depth of the torrents have been responsible for a number of fatalities.—Reuter.

Paris, Jan. 7.

The fall of the Seine has begun. A decrease of three inches was registered in Paris this morning and one of 10 inches at Montesaur while the Marne fell one and a half feet at Meaux. It is expected that by to-morrow the Seine will have fallen a foot at Pont d'Austerlitz and that the fall will become more rapid afterwards.—Reuter.

Seine Subsiding Slowly: Fund Opened for Relief of Sufferers

Paris, Jan. 9.

Although the Seine is falling slowly, the outlook is not reassuring for damper weather has returned. Meanwhile the situation in Paris and the suburbs is much the same. The maximum height of the flood has now reached Rouen, where the quays are flooded.

A meeting of Deputies representing the Departments of the Seine, Seine-et-Oise and Seine-et-Marne have decided to introduce a bill opening a credit of Frs. 30,000 for the sufferers from the floods and to create a permanent group, of Deputies of the three Depart-

FOREIGN TELEGRAMS

THE REOPENING OF PARLIAMENT

House of Commons Meeting Under New Circumstances: New Lady Members: Re-election of the Speaker with Congratulations from All Parties

MR. RAMSAY MACDONALD'S IDEAS FOR THE RESURRECTION OF EUROPE

London, Jan. 8.

The House of Commons opened to-day. There was a crowded attendance. The atmosphere is one of lively anticipation though to-day's business is formal. Mr. Asquith, owing to a chill, was unable to be present.

The Labour Members from the East End arrived escorted in char-à-bancs by partisans, who enlivened the city en route with rattles, cheering and singing of the Red Flag.

Lady Terrington (Liberal; Wycombe) was the first woman to appear. She was attired in black, trimmed with white, and frequently surveyed the Ladies' Gallery through a tortoise-shell lorgnette. The women Labour Members entered without their hats, which is unprecedented. Mrs. Philipson (Berwick) was the only Conservative woman present.

Mr. Baldwin was received with Labour jeers and cries of "He is back again!" Mr. Ramsay Macdonald was given an ovation by his supporters.

In Mr. Asquith's absence Mr. Lloyd George took his place and engaged Mr. Macdonald in conversation.

Re election of the Speaker.

There were some derisive Labour cries when Mr. Macdonald joined Mr. Baldwin in procession in obedience to the Black Rod's summons to the House of Lords to hear the King's request to elect a Speaker.

On the motion of Sir Ellis Hume-Williams (Conservative; Bassetlaw), seconded by Mr. O'Grady (Labour; Leeds), Mr. J. H. Whitley was re-elected Speaker.

Mr. Whitley said that the House was meeting under new circumstances, but he was a believer in this old House of Commons and, whatever the new circumstances might be, he believed that the Members would find a way to solve them in the House of Commons as the wisdom of our ancestors had built it up.

Mr. Baldwin, who was loudly cheered by the Ministerialists, Mr. Macdonald, Mr. Lloyd George and Mr. T. P. O'Connor congratulated the Speaker, after which the House adjourned.

"Broad Foot and Big Heel."

Later.

Addressing a Labour demonstration at the Albert Hall, Mr. Ramsay Macdonald declared: "We are not going to take office in order to prepare for a general election, but in order to do work. If capital flees from the country when we come into power, the panic-mongers will be responsible and not the Labour Party."

The Labour leader said that he wanted to go into office with a broad foot and a big heel to stamp on the embers existing in every capital, which a fresh blowing wind would scatter over the inflammable material of Europe and start a fresh war, so that, whether the Labour Party was in office or not, [illegible] in any corner of the world capable of being [illegible] flame to involve the whole world in a new war.

Mutual Understanding Needed.

The pompous folly of standing aloof from the Russian Government will be ended. Mr. Macdonald declared. He said that the pin pricks, misunderstandings and irritations between France and ourselves were absolutely deplorable and unworthy of both countries. It would be a great thing if it were possible to put them behind us and to establish with France, Italy, Russia, Germany, Czecho-Slovakia, and all people and nations understanding—not rivalry of military forces — but understanding of human men and women who have no cause for enmity.

Later.

A Party of Idealists.

The Albert Hall was packed, the audience at intervals very lustily singing Labour songs like "England, Arise! The long night is o'er!" They cheered for several minutes when the Labour leader rose.

Mr. Macdonald opened his speech by admitting that they were a party of idealists who had built their habitations away on the horizon, but "we are not going to jump there; we are going to walk there. One step is enough for me, provided it leads to the next step."

He believed that the Labour Party occupying Downing Street and staffing the Government was the one thing required to give strength to the morally courageous and power to the peace forces in all sections of Europe. He emphasized that it was his intention to complete the structure of the League of Nations and use it without reserve as the main instrument to secure international justice.

Trade Relations with Russia.

Mr. Macdonald desired resumptions with Russia not because he agreed with what the Russian Government had done. "That is not our business. I want trade. I want negotiations. I want a settlement from the coasts of Japan to the coasts of Ireland. If I have to protest against what is being done in Afghanistan, how can I protest without channels for it?"

He foreshadowed a scientific scheme dealing with unemployment, at the root of which lay the lower purchasing power of the mass of consumers. He painted a gloomy picture of housing conditions and said that they were prepared to give any guarantees to facilitate the maximum production of houses, while "if trusts, monopolies and corners stand in the way, we shall break them." (Loud and prolonged cheers.)

The Labour leader concluded by explaining that his speech was not meant to be a programme speech, but aimed at illustrating the spirit of the Labour Government if it comes into power.—Reuter.

The Ceremony in the House of Lords: Swearing in of Members in the Commons

London, Jan. 9.

In the House of Commons to-day immediately the Speaker, Mr. J. H. Whitley, took the Chair in readiness for the summons to the House of Lords to hear the Royal assent to the Speaker's election, a [illegible] began to [illegible] the Red Flag, but ceased in response to sharp cries of "Order!"

The ceremony in the House of Lords was carried out in time-honoured fashion. Mr. Jack Jones (Labour: Silvertown) was heard to mutter throughout. He subsequently tried in vain to raise a point of order in the House of Commons alleging that the Commons had been insulted. He vouchsafed no explanation, but it is understood that he was aggrieved because there was only a handful of Peers present at the ceremony.

Later.

Mr. Jack Jones, leaving the House, explained that he had made the protest because he was a constitutionalist while the Lords were not, though they were always talking about the Constitution. He protested against a hundred Commoners being received in the House of Lords by only "five marionettes from the Italian opera," whereas it was the duty of the Lords to receive the Commons in decent numbers.

Mr. Jones's reference was to the five Commissioners in red ermine cloaks and black cocked-hats.

Reception of Lady Members.

The process of swearing in members of the House of Commons this afternoon was enlivened by the Labour members' chaff.

The women Labourites and Lady Terrington (Liberal: Wycombe) were cheered. Miss Susan Lawrence (Labour: East Ham North) was greeted with the cry. "Good old East London!" and Miss Margaret Bondfield (Labour: Northampton) was welcomed with: "Our Maggie!"

Miss Jedson (Norwich) was conspicuous on the Labour benches in a brown velour hat and a multi-coloured scarf, though the other women Labourites decided to continue hatless.

Mr. Macdonald's Speech.

With the exception of the "Times" and the "Morning Post," no morning papers publish editorial articles on Mr. Ramsay Macdonald's speech.

The "Times" says that the speech was marked by prudent caution and considerable ability. It notes with satisfaction that a Labour Government, which is based on a purely domestic programme, will not merely ignore the world-wide interests of the British Empire.

In the opinion of the "Morning Post" the main point is that Mr. Macdonald has ignored the doctrines familiar to Socialist platforms. The paper says that the speech was radicalism of the familiar Celtic type. The Socialists are trying to gain office on false pretences in order to secure Liberal votes.

The "Daily Telegraph" and the "Daily Mail" in editorial articles give a warning to the Liberals of the gravity of their responsibility if they put a Socialist minority in office, the "Daily Mail" painting a gloomy picture of the consequences if the Socialist rank and file insist, as they have threatened, on pensions for all.

The "Daily Express" heads the speech "Macdonald's Soft Pedal" and says that this is apparently the new Socialist order of the day.

French Press Opinion.

Mr. Ramsay Macdonald's expression of friendship for France has created a favourable impression. The "Temps" says: "We shall do Mr. Macdonald's expressed intentions justice and hope that he will do justice to those of France."

The "Journal des Debats" says: "If Mr. Macdonald perseveres in the sentiments he has expressed, he will encounter great goodwill in France which is ready to discard mutual recriminations and to build up a sound policy.

The "Liberté," the organ of the Extreme Right, thinks that Mr. Macdonald's idyllic language smacks of 1848. "The illusions of 1848 only benefited Bismarck and Prussia. Beware of omens!"—Reuter.

FRENCH SENATORIAL ELECTIONS

Little Change in Representation: Premier Re-elected by Huge Majority

Paris, Jan. 5.

The French electoral period opens to-morrow with the election of one-third of the Senate, in which there is little interest except as a forecast.

The really decisive elections are those to the Chamber, which take place in April.

The chief significance is the fact that the parties of the left have effected a combination, which has found a new weapon of attack against the national bloc in the fall of the franc, which they attribute to the failure of M. Poincaré's financial and foreign policies.

It is asserted that French holders of francs are becoming uneasy and are selling francs and buying sterling. On the other hand, the fall is attributed to foreign speculators selling francs to purchase dollars and it is even asserted by the "Petit Parisien" that the fall is due to the operations in foreign exchanges decided at a congress of German bankers at Frankfurt in November.—Reuter.

Paris, Jan. 6.

The following are the results of the first ballot in the Senatorial elections: Liberal Conservatives 17; Republicans 10, two new; Republicans of the Left 13, one new; Independent Radicals two, one new; Radical Socialists 29, two new; Republican Socialists two, one new; Unified Socialists, one new. There were 82 final results. There are 33 ballots. The results from Martinique have not yet arrived.

The Republicans gain one and lose two; the Independent Radicals gain one and lose one; the Radical Socialists gain two and lose two; the republican Socialists gain two; the Unified Socialists gain one; the Conservative Liberals are unchanged in numbers.

Amongst those elected or re-elected are Gen. Hirschauer, the Ex-Ambassador; M. Bompard; MM. Gaudin de Vilaine, Jules and Dominique de la Haye, the ex-Minister; MM. Leon Bourgeois, Lebrun, Ajam, Chaumet, Besnard, Millies la Croix, Roy, de Mondie, and Rio, at present Under-Secretary of State for the Merchant Marine. Amongst those defeated were the Vice-President of the Senate, M. Rivet, and M. Noulens.

Tribute to M. Poincare.

M. Poincaré was re-elected at Bar le Duc by 794 votes out of 810 drawn. His election was warmly received. M. Gobus, Councillor-General, made the following speech: "The Senatorial delegates of the Meuse on the occasion of the triumphal re-election of M. Poincaré express to him the confidence, admiration, gratitude and profound and unalterable affection of the people of the Meuse." M. Poincaré replied: "I am much to touched by this demonstration, which is addressed not only to the representative of the Department, but to the head of the Government in appoval of his policy of reparations and security, to which he will consecrate his efforts with all the necessary determination until a peaceful victory and the total execution of the obligations of Germany to the victors."—French Wireless through Reuter.

A Triumph for M. Poincare

Paris, Jan. 7.

The Ministry of the Interior issues the following statistics of the Senatorial election results on Sunday:—

	This Election.	Last Election.
Conservatives	16	17
Republicans	20	21
Left Republicans	37	36
Radicals	36	38
Republican Socialists	4	3
Socialists	2	0
Communists	0	0

All the newspapers emphasize that the Senate elections have brought about no change in the general composition of the Upper House. The "Temps" stresses that there are only two opponents out of 116 (115?) seats and therefore the policy followed with firm patience by the Poincaré Government is supported by an enormous majority in the country and in Parliament. The result at home is interesting. The result abroad is still more satisfactory. Those abroad who counted on a check to M. Poincaré must put on mourning for their lost illusions.

Paris, Jan. 7.

Commenting on the Senatorial elections, the papers emphasize M. Poincaré's personal triumph and point out that the political complexion of the Senate has not been materially affected.—Reuter.

COUNTERING THE FALL OF THE FRANC

Remedial Measures Adopted to Prevent Speculative Transactions

Paris, Jan. 8.

The Finance Minister, M. de Lasteyrie, has submitted a scheme to the Cabinet aiming at countering the fall of the franc. The scheme comprises: (1) more rigorous police regulation to suppress the campaign in favour of sale of Government securities; (2) a revised system of quotation on the Bourse; (3) weeding out of undesirable and heterogeneous frequenters of the exchange market; (4) stricter supervision of bankers' exchange operations; and (5) an endeavour to check the practice of certain exporters leaving foreign money abroad.

The Minister of the Interior has signed a decree ordering the expulsion of a Dutch exchange speculator on a charge of spreading alarmist reports with regard to the fall of the franc.—Reuter.

SEPARATIST MOVE IN GERMANY

Bavarian Independence Claim

Berlin, Jan. 4.

The Bavarian Government has addressed a memorandum to the Chancellor suggesting revision of the Constitution for the purpose of full re-establishment of the independence of individual States and their greater participation in the affairs of the Reich, particularly foreign affairs.—Reuter.

SEPARATIST PRESIDENT ASSASSINATED

Herr Heintz Shot in Bavarian Restaurant: Premeditated Plan of Murder

Paris, Jan. 10.

Herr Heintz, President of the Separatist Government in the Bavarian Palatinate, was assassinated yesterday while dining at a restaurant at Speyer.—Reuter.

London, Jan. 10.

An eye-witness of the assassination of Herr Heintz in the dining-hall of the chief hotel of Speyer in the presence of 30 guests says: "A number of shots suddenly rang out and three persons sitting at a table just opposite to me fell to ground shot in the head. There was a cry of 'Stand against the wall and hands up.' The crowded room was consternated and a woman burst out crying as several more shots were fired. Three or four young men rushed from the room, threatening to shoot anyone leaving within a quarter of an hour and adding 'We are only attacking separatists.' The lights were extinguished. When they were turned on three men lay in pools of blood. Herr Heintz and another died in a few moments."

It is stated that only Herr Heintz belonged to the Separatist Government. The others sat at his table by chance. Troops and police soon arrived, but up to the present no arrests have been made. Three other wounded persons were found outside the hotel.—Reuter.

SAXONY'S COALITION CABINET

Strong Protest by Socialists: Alleged Breach of Party Discipline

Dresden, Jan. 7.

The formation of a Saxon Coalition Cabinet including Socialist Ministers and a Socialist Premier, Herr Heldt, is disapproved by the Saxon Socialist Party, which to-day adopted a resolution by 77 votes to 16 declaring that the 25 Socialist members of the Diet who voted for a coalition are guilty of a gross breach of party discipline and

WELSH COAL FOR CANADA

Important New Outlet for Dominion Needs

Montreal, Jan. 3.

It is announced that a company has been formed, including Sir Alfred Mond and representatives of other Welsh colliery interests, to instal a complete breaking plant in Montreal for the purpose of handling Welsh anthracite of the sizes required by the Canadian trade.

It is stated that the plant will be ready to deal with shipments of coal at the opening of the coming navigation season and that Welsh coal interests are prepared to ship in the first year a minimum of 100,000 tons of anthracite to Canada.—Reuter's American Service.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH

American Clergyman Tried for Expressing Scepticism

Dallas, Tex., Jan. 3.

The standing committee of the diocese announces that the Rev. Lee Heaton, a young clergyman of the Episcopal Church at Fort Worth, will be placed on trial for expressing in the course of sermons in New York doubt concerning the virgin birth of Christ. His opinions recently aroused a storm of protest. The proceedings against him are described as part of a movement to cleanse the Episcopal Church of modernism.

Later.

The proceedings against the Rev. Lee Heaton have been abandoned.—Reuter's American Service.

THE DAIL EIREAN FUNDS IN AMERICA

De Valera's Evidence in Gaol

London, Jan. 4.

Mr. John Finnerty, an American lawyer representing claimants to £500,000 of Dail Eircan funds in America, to-day interviewed Messrs. de Valera and Austin Stack in their Dublin prisons, preliminary to taking evidence before the American Consul in accordance with an order of the the New York Supreme Court.—Reuter.

AUSTRALIAN TRADE AMBITIONS

If No Tariff Available with Britain Then with Others

London, Jan. 5.

Mr. S. M. Bruce, the Australian Prime Minister, in the course of a speech at Lincoln, declared that the Commonwealth meant to develop her manufactures as well as her output of foodstuffs and raw materials. She was not here as a suppliant for trade relations in order to benefit herself to the detriment of Britain.

She believed in tariffs and if unable to get a market in Britain, she would have to get one elsewhere.

She had already been approached by other countries for reciprocal treatment, but had hitherto refused the offers because they would be detrimental to Great Britain.—Reuter.

THE MOUNTAINS MOVING

Extraordinary Phenomenon in California

Palo Alto, Calif., Dec. 6.

Mount Tamalpais has moved five feet south since 1900, Mount Diabolo 3½ feet southeast and Mount Reyes 11 feet north, Dr. Bailey Willis, geologist of Stanford University, declared in an address here yesterday. He said the greatest movement in California was near San Luis Obispo, "where the railway station moved fifteen feet."

"The movements noted indicate a readjustment of great masses of rock since the earthquake disturbance of 1906 and also conditions of pressure south of San Juan Batista," he declared.—Reuter.

HOW TO ACHIEVE PEACE

$50,000 Prize Offered for the Best Essay

New York, Jan. 4.

Mr. Edward Filene, the well-known Jewish proprietor of a department store in Boston, has offered a $50,000 prize for European competition for the best plan for world peace. Separate contests will be held in England, France and Italy. The competition is similar to that recently initiated by Mr. Bok, the well-known American editor of Dutch extraction, who offered a large prize for competition in the United States.

Mr. Filene says that he might extend the competition to Germany provided suitable persons could be procured to judge the plans submitted.—Reuter.

VENIZELOS IN GREECE

Presdt. of National Assembly

Athens, Jan. 4.

M. Venizelos arrived in Athens to-day and had a long conference with Colonel Plastiras.

Jan. 5.

There were enthusiastic scenes in Athens to-day when M. Venizelos was elected President of the National Assembly.—Reuter.

EARTHQUAKES IN ITALY

Sixteen Shocks and Several People Injured

Ancona, Jan. 4.

There were 16 earthquake shocks to-day in the neighbourhood of Pesaro. Shocks in the neighbourhood of Mondolfo, Marotta and San Costanzo caused damage. Several persons were injured. The authorities are providing shelter for the people, who in spite of the snow refuse to return to their homes.—Reuter.

SERIOUS OUTLOOK FOR BRITISH RAILWAYS

Engineers and Firemen Against Wages Board Decision

London, Jan. 4.

It is understood that a ballot of locomotive engineers and firemen on the question of accepting the findings of the Railway Wages Board has decided against acceptance of the Board's award.

It was stated last month that in the event of rejection the executive would call a national strike.

Later.

A serious situation on the railways is threatened as a result of the ballot of locomotive engineers and firemen, which embodied a provision empowering the executive to call a national strike if necessary in the event of the Railways Wages Board's award being rejected, but extreme measures are not likely before the Union seeks a modification of the award.—Reuter.

TERRIBLE EXPLOSION IN SOUTH WALES

Disaster in Swansea Colliery: Miners Blown to Atoms

London, Jan. 4.

A terrible explosion occurred at midnight in Rhosamman colliery at Rhosamman Brynamman in the Swansea valley.

Seven men were engaged in driving a "drift" in search of coal. They were at the surface charging at the time of the accident. It is supposed that the explosives they were using became ignited. Six men were blown to pieces. Portions of their bodies were found in the river and scores of yards away. The seventh man died in hospital.

The explosion shook the neighbourhood and was heard six miles away.—Reuter.

GALES IN GULF OF LYONS

Oriental Liners Delayed

London, Jan. 5.

The liners Orsova from Australia and China from India experienced terrific weather in the Gulf of Lyons. They were both compelled to heave to for many hours and were late in reaching Toulon and Marseilles respectively and a day late at Plymouth.—Reuter.

HUGE WAREHOUSE FIRE AT LONDON DOCKS

£200,000 Damage

London, Jan. 7.

The biggest London dock fire for half a century occurred at Poplar this afternoon. A large warehouse stocked with rubber, tea and other inflammable goods was gutted. Seventy fire-engines mostly directed their attention to preventing the spread of the flames to adjoining timber-yards, oil-stores and other warehouses. Molten rubber streaming from the burning building blocked the drains and the narrow streets were soon several feet deep in dirty tepid water. There were several exciting escapes, but no casualties. The damage is at present unknown.—Reuter.

London, Jan. 8.

The London dock fire was still burning this morning but is now well in hand. Ten fire-engines and 100 firemen are still working and it is hoped to suppress it this afternoon. The damage is now estimated at over £200,000. The Concordia premises, which have been completely gutted, were filled with rubber, tinned goods and tin.

Later.

Approximately 1,000 tons of rubber were burned in the London dock fire.—Reuter.

London, Jan. 8.

At the close of an all-day meeting of the Executive of the Associated Society of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen to-day, it was officially announced that in view of the overwhelming majority, namely, six to one against acceptance of the Railway Wages Board's award, the Executive had decided to request the general managers of railways to meet them to discuss the position with a view to its improvement.—Reuter.

THE TANGIERS TREATY

Hitch in Negotiations

Barcelona, Jan. 8.

A hitch has been revealed in the negotiations with regard to the Tangiers Treaty by the announcement that General Primo de Rivera, the head of the Spanish Directorate, has sent a note to the French and British Governments regarding the Spanish claims in Tangier, expressing confidence that Britain and France will give a favourable reception to the Note, which is couched in moderate and cordial terms.—Reuter.

NIAGARA HYDRO-POWER SCHEME

The Harnessing of the Falls

Niagara Falls, Jan. 8.

The Premier of Ontario to-day turned on a new unit of 55,000 h.p., bringing the total development of the provincial hydro-power plant to 330,000, all of which is being utilized. Two further units are rapidly being completed, while two more will be ready next year, which will bring the total of the Canadian development of Niagara scheme to 550,000 h.p.—Reuter's American Service.

PARIS, Jan. 8.—The Committee of the International Aeronautical Federation announce that the Schneider Cup plane contest will be held in the United States this year.—Reuter.

GERMANY'S FINANCES

Status of U. S. Experts

Paris, Jan. 8.

Gen. Charles Gates Dawes and Mr. Owen D. Young, the American members of the committee of experts to inquire into Germany's finances, have made a statement pointing out that they have come as private citizens without preconceived plans and declaring that the work of the committee should be connected with all possible expedition.—Reuter.

FATAL FIGHT IN FLORIDA

Police Attack on Bank Robbers

Palm Beach, Fla., Jan. 9.

A strong force of police armed with machine-guns to-day attacked a gang of bank robbers holding a meeting in the swamps. A Deputy Sheriff and five robbers were killed.—Reuter's American Service.

SEVERE SPELL OF COLD IN AMERICA

Chicago, Jan. 6.

Over a dozen deaths have resulted from one of the severest cold spells that have swept the country for years. The North Central part of the United States has been the greatest sufferer. The temperatures there were the lowest since 1905. The coldest point was Virginia, Minn., where a temperature of 39 degrees Fahrenheit below zero was recorded. — Reuter's American Service.

New York, Jan. 7.

The super-structure of the Italian liner Presidente Wilson was so covered with ice when she arrived from Naples that the Customs officials detained her for two hours while the crew with steam hoses and axes cleared the way through the ice to the baggage holds.—Reuter's American Service.

U. S. BATTLESHIP ADRIFT IN HEAVY GALE

Norfolk, Va., Jan. 7.

The battleship Louisiana, which was being towed from Philadelphia to Baltimore for breaking up, has been abandoned in a gale and is drifting helplessly with seven men on board. The search has up to the present been without result. Coastguards have broadcast ships to look out for her.

Later.

The Louisiana has been located and tugs have been despatched to her assistance. — Reuter's American Service.

SEVERE STORMS IN THE ATLANTIC

Western Coast of France Strewn With Wreckage

Paris, Jan. 9.

The Atlantic coast is in the grip of a gale accompanied by an exceptionally high tide practically amounting to a tidal wave. The coast from Brest to Biarritz is strewn with wreckage. Quays have been wrecked, houses flooded and fishing boats sunk. A number of fishermen are missing. A rush of water at La Rochelle was accompanied by a slight earthquake. The contents of houses were washed away and considerable damage was done.—Reuter.

New York, Jan. 8.

Storms have delayed the arrival of at least seven liners. The Majestic, which was due yesterday with Sir Auckland Geddes and Sir Robert Horne on board, wirelesses that she struck the full force of the gale on January 5 and battled for many hours in the mountainous seas, being forced to slow down. The liner is now proceeding normally and expects to dock to-morrow.—Reuter's American Service.

FRANCE'S "BRIDGE" WITH RUSSIA

Germany's Embarrassment

Stuttgart, Jan. 7.

The Minister of Defence, Herr Gessler, in a speech here to-day, said that he regarded the alliance between France and Czecho-Slovakia as a bridge to Franco-Russian relations with the object of placing Germany between two fires, but Germany intended to pursue a path towards the East and towards Russia.—Reuter.

GERMAN DYE WORKS IN AMERICA

Wilmington, Del., Jan. 3.

The Federal District Court has sustained the sale of 5,700 German dye and chemical patents to the Chemical Foundation which was incorporated by the Alien Property Custodian during the war. The Government sought to have the sale set aside as unconstitutional. An appeal is being taken to the Supreme Court.

Washington, Jan. 4.

Announcing its intention to appeal against the dye patents decision, the Department of Justice expresses every confidence of ultimately winning the case.—Reuter's American Service.

U. S. Costly Mercantile Marine

Washington, Jan. 4.

A conference at the White House has resulted in the decision to place the operation and control of Government-owned tonnage in the hands of the Emergency Fleet Corporation, with Mr. Leigh Palmer, former chief of the Navy Department's Bureau of Navigation, as President.

This is President Coolidge's first endeavour to formulate a definite merchant marine policy.—Reuter's American Service.

Chinese Engineer Students on the C. P. R.

Montreal, Jan. 3.

Three Chinese graduates of Nanyang University at Shanghai have arrived in Montreal with a view to entering the service of the Canadian Pacific Railway in order to study Canadian railway methods.—Reuter's American Service.

British Women Metal Co.

London, Nov. 23.

There is a metal company in Great Britain which is administered wholly by women. It has a woman chairman, women directors, a woman auditor and a woman secretary, as well as a qualified engineer and metallurgist. Two titled women have recently joined the board of directors.—Reuter.

Germany's Unpopnlar Socialists

Berlin, Jon. 3.

Herr Hermann, the Minister of the Interior in the Socialist Government of Thuringia, has been arrested at Weimar on a charge of being implicated in illegal practices in connexion with the appointment of Socialist officials.—Reuter.

Wonders of the British Empire by Film

London, Nov. 23.

The wonders of the British Empire around the world are to be depicted on the cinema for the benefit of the people of the British Isles. Seventy men, scientists, camera-men, writers and sportsmen, will make the long trip on a steam yacht, leaving in December, and hope to bring back a complete set of coloured pictures illustrative of Empire trade, scenic wonders, animal life, and antiquities. Commander F. A. Worsley, R.N.R., will be in command of the expedition.—Reuter.

THE LOST DIXMUDE

Remains of Dirigible Located off Sardinia: Dragging Operations Begun

Marseilles, Jan. 3.

Following [illegible] aluminium and [illegible] rubber-coated fabric at various places on the west coast of Sardinia, an observation balloon has announced by wireless the discovery of the wreckage of the Dixmude 120 feet deep in the sea south of San Marco. The wreckage is strewn over a radius of half a mile. Dragging operations have begun. A report from Bizerta states that two bodies have been recovered from the sea off Anpexado.—Reuter.

Toulon, Jan. 4.

The commission inquiring into the loss of the Dixmude began its work to-day. The first question being discussed is whether meteorological reports, especially from South France, were communicated to the dirigible in good time.—Reuter.

The naval authorities at Bizerta, Tunis, have no knowledge of the reported discovery of the bodies of members of the crew of the Dixmude.

The Ministry of Marine has up to the present received no confirmation with regard to the portion of the wreckage of the [illegible] bodies of the crew. It has not been definitely established that the petrol can discovery at San Marco actually belonged to the Dixmude, though it is admitted that there [illegible] the airship.—Reuter.

Paris, Jan. 5.

Crowds lined the streets for the impressive ceremony of the naval funeral of Lieutenant de Grenadan. In the course of his funeral oration the Minister of Marine declared that the loss of the Dixmude would not check the [illegible]—Reuter.

Rome, Jan. 4.

[illegible] Sicily that French vessels carrying [illegible] the Dixmude.—Reuter.

Another Body Recovered

[illegible] quantity of metallic fabric, seeming to confirm the theory that [illegible] by an explosion and hurled into the sea.—Reuter.

OBITUARY

Prof H. G. Hamburger

[illegible] Jan. 9.

The death is announced of Professor H. J. Hamburger, [illegible] and Netherlands), Professor of Physiology in the University of Groningen, at the age of 64.

Professor Hamburger [illegible] the application of physical chemistry to the [illegible] 1885. He was President of the International Physiological Congress [illegible]—Reuter.

Rear-Admiral Holder

[illegible] Jan. 9.

The death is announced of Rear-Admiral Henry [illegible] Holder [illegible].

Rear-Admiral Holder entered the Navy [illegible] retired in 1874 as Commodore. He was promoted Rear-Admiral on the retired list. He was [illegible]

Dr. Basil L. Gildersleeve

[illegible] Jan. 9.

The death is announced of Dr. [illegible] Gildersleeve, [illegible] Professor [illegible] in the Universities of Berlin, Bonn and Gottingen (Ph. D.). He received [illegible] from the following universities:—Williams, [illegible] Yale, Chicago, Pennsylvania, that of D. C. L. from the University of [illegible] Princeton, and that of D. Litt., from Cambridge (1905) and Oxford (1905).

Dr. Gildersleeve was Professor of Greek (1856-76) and of Latin (1861-6) in the University of Virginia, and Professor of Greek in Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, from 1876 to 1915, when he retired. He was the founder of the "American Journal of Philology," and was an honorary member of the Cambridge (England) Philological Society, the Archaeological Society of Athens, the Philological Syllogos of Constantinople and of the Society for the Promotion of Hellenic Studies. [illegible] and a member of the American [illegible] Reuter's American Service.

Dean Henry Wace

[illegible] Jan. 9.

The death is announced of the Very Rev. Henry Wace, D.D., Dean of Canterbury since 1903, at the age of 87.—Reuter.

 The late Dean Wace was born in London on December 10, 1836, and was educated at Marlborough, Rugby, King's College (London) and Brasenose College, Oxford, where he took second-class honours in classics and mathematics. He was Curate of St. Luke's, Berwick Street, 1861-63, St. James's, Piccadilly, 1863-69, and Grosvenor Chapel, 1870-72. In 1874-75 he delivered Boyle Lectures, and Bampton Lectures at Oxford in 1879. While he was Select Preacher at Oxford in 1889-91 and 1907, and at Cambridge in 1876, 1891, 1903 and 1913. He was Professor of Ecclesiastical History in King's College, London, in 1875; Chaplain of Lincoln's Inn, 1872-89; Preacher of Lincoln's Inn, 1885-95; Rector of St. Michael's Cornhill, 1896-1903. He was editor, in conjunction with the late Sir William Smith, of the Dictionary of Christian Biography, Literature, Sects and Doctrines, in eight volumes, and with the Rev. E. Piercy, of the Dictionary of the First Six Centuries; and [illegible] of several religious [illegible]

SILVER INTERESTS IN AMERICA

Proposed Formation of Combine to Secure Better Control of Prices

[illegible] Jan. 9.

[illegible] States are considering the formation of a combine to secure [illegible] the price of silver. The latest proposal is to incorporate in Canada, though no decision has been reached.

Not all concerned are convinced [illegible] It is pointed out that how to exert influence on the foreign silver market without inviting depression in the home [illegible]—Reuter's American Service.

PRACTICABLE PLAN TO PREVENT WAR

Bok Prize of $100,000 Awarded to Device of Scheme for U. S. Co-operation

[illegible] Jan. 9.

The [illegible] offered by Mr. Edward Bok for the best practicable plan whereby the United States could [illegible] such other nations as will [illegible] in the creation of what has been [illegible] the decision of a committee of [illegible] scheme based on the American Government extending its present co-operation with the League of Nations and participating in the work of the latter's Assembly and [illegible] and regulations. Altogether [illegible]

The name of the [illegible] will not be disclosed until Americans have been given an opportunity to judge the merits of the plan by a most extensive public referendum in February.

Effective Suggestions.

Senator Elihu Root, the chairman of the jury, in the award, says that [illegible] approach to world peace. It is necessary to recognize, in the opinion of the jury, not merely the political, but also the psychological and economic factors. The winning plan offers the most effective suggestions whereby the United States may co-operate with other nations to achieve and preserve peace in the world. "It is our unanimous hope that the first fruit of mutual counsel and co-operation among nations resulting from adoption of the plan selected will be general prohibition of the manufacture and sale of all materials of war."

The winner will receive $50,000 cash to-day and another $50,000 when and if the plan is approved by Congress.—Reuter's American Service.

Little Likelihood of Approval by U. S. Congress

Washington, January 9.

Attempts have been made to ascertain the views of the President on the Bok peace plan. The inquirers were referred to his message delivered at the opening of Congress, when he said that the country definitely refused to ratify the Covenant of the League of Nations. The President added: "I am not proposing to change that policy, neither is the Senate. The incident is closed."

This apparently means that neither the President nor the Republican Members of the Senate will give encouragement to any plan that recognizes on the part of the United States formal adhesion to the League of Nations.—Reuter's American Service.

AMERICA AND RUSSIA

Eloquent Plea for Recognition by Senator Borah: The Communist Danger

Washington, Jan. 7.

In the course of an interesting debate in the Senate on the subject of recognition of the Soviet Government, Senior Lodge defended the policy of non-recognition on account of the "interlocking directorates" between the Soviet Government and the Communist Party.

Senator Borah eloquently pleaded for recognition, urging that the time had come to consider whether Russia had not met the conditions laid down in President Coolidge's annual address to Congress.—Reuter's American Service.

THE DUNLOP RUBBER SCANDAL

Resolution of Confidence in Directors: Some Grave Issues Raised

London, Jan. 8.

A resolution of confidence in the Directors was passed to-day [illegible] Dunlop Rubber Co., Limited, at the Connaught Street Hall.

Sir Eric Geddes, presiding, said that the position at the commencement of the financial year was that out of a loss of £3,320,000 shown by the balance sheet at August 31, 1921, £2,760,000 had been written off stocks and £822,000 loss on rubber sold during the year, while £550,000 has not been accounted for.

The Directors' conclusions raised very grave issues. In view of the issue of writs by Sir Arthur du Cros and Messrs. Alfred and George du Cros to establish their agreements, the Company had been advised to [illegible] writs covering the names. These writs had been issued except one or two where the individuals concerned had made tentative offers of settlement without prejudice.

The accounts for the 18 months ended December 31 last would probably show a profit of £1,250,000. The Company's business, the chairman said, had now reached such a state of stability that the Board intended to submit to the shareholders proposals for a reorganization of the capital.

Sir Arthur du Cros said that the losses were made after his total severance from the management of the Company.

Note.—As a result of inquiries by a special committee for the last 18 months into the position of the Dunlop Rubber Co. as disclosed in its balance sheet for 1921, an extraordinary meeting of shareholders was called for January 8 to endorse the action of the Directorate in issuing writs against the President and also a number of past and present directors.

Sir Arthur du Cros, the President, and Messrs. Arthur and George Du Cros have issued writs against the Company asking for declarations that their agreements are binding upon the Company.—Reuter.

CHILE'S POLITICAL DIFFICULTIES

Parties at Variance but No Delay in Meeting Financial Obligations

Santiago de Chile, Jan. 9.

The extraordinary sitting of Parliament has concluded without passing the Budget.

The Minister of Finance, interviewed, said that payment of interest on the foreign debt was assured and there would be no delay on any Government obligations. The political situation was improving, neither of the parties desiring to resort to extremes. Negotiations were progressing with a view to bringing the parties together.—Reuter's American Service.

BRITISH NAVAL BASE

Capetown as an Alternative to Singapore: "Daily News" on "Pros. and Cons."

London, Jan. 8.

In a leading article on its Naval Correspondent's contention that the project of developing a great naval base at the Cape as an alternative to Singapore is strategically useless, but that the Cape route to the East would be enormously important if the passage of the Mediterranean were denied Britain in a future war, the "Daily News" says that the official conclusion seems to be that the Cape should be provided with great dockyard facilities in order to accommodate the largest battleships, but if British battleships are to be excluded from the Mediterranean in the event of war in Europe, what use would they be at the Cape or at all?

The "Daily News" suggests that the right solution of the problem would be not to spend millions on a naval base thousands of miles away, but to build the kind of vessel able to pass the Straits of Gibraltar and squarely to face the enemy.—Reuter.

NEW YORK, Jan. 9.—Australia has challenged for the Davis Cup.—Reuter's American service.

LLOYD'S REGISTER OF SHIPPING

Indications of Improvement in World's Shipbuilding Industry

London, Jan. 9.

Lloyd's Register shows that 1,231,000 tons of merchant shipping were actually being constructed in Great Britain and Ireland on December 31, 1923, as compared with an average of 1,890,000 tons during the 12 months before the war.

A total of 244,000 tons was commenced and 114,000 tons were launched during the December quarter, as compared with 111,000 tons commenced and 66,000 tons launched in the previous quarter. The amount actually under construction abroad on December 31, 1923, was 982,000 tons, a decrease of 42,000 tons, as compared with September 30, 1923, while 217,000 tons were launched and 228,000 tons commenced during the December quarter.

The latter total considerably exceeded that of the previous quarter and, in conjunction with the increase in the British yards, appears to show a tendency towards an improvement in the conditions in the shipbuilding industry of the world.—Reuter.

INFECTIOUS STRIKE OF GERMAN SEAMEN

German Crews' Demand for British Rates of Pay: Successful Negotiations

London, Jan. 9.

A strike of German seamen at Hull to enforce the Maritime Board rate of wages has extended to the London National Seamen's and Firemen's Union, which is supporting the men.

It is reported that a large ship is held up at the Victoria Docks owing to the German crew striking for British rates of pay.

Later.

The German steamer held up at Victoria Docks owing to the strike of the crew is the Hamburg-America liner Frankenwald, which arrived on December 25. Officials of the new Stevedores' and Lightermen's Union visited the Frankenwald to-day to ascertain whether members of the union were handling cargo in order to call them out immediately. They retired when they found that the cargo-handlers belonged to the Transport-workers' Union.

German pickets at Hull awaited the arrival of the steamer Herbert Fischer from Germany and induced the crew of 19 to join the strike.

As a result of negotiations between the Seamen's and Firemen's Union at Hull and the agents of the German steamer Neptune, the latter have agreed to pay the crew the British Maritime rate from January 3 and have accepted all the conditions of the Maritime Board.—Reuter.

FIRST EGYPTIAN LEGATION IN FRANCE

King Fuad Shortly Visiting European Capitals

Paris, Jan. 3.

The first Egyptian Legation in France has been installed in the Hotel Majestic in Paris under Mahmoud Fakrhy Bey, who is also Minister to Belgium. One of the Secretaries of the Legation will be stationed at Brussels as Chargé d'Affaires. The Egyptian Legation in Rome [illegible] already been established. Sheikh Yousef Bey, the Egyptian Minister to the United States, has left [illegible] for New York. Azmy Bey, the Minister to Britain, was [illegible] Trieste and spent [illegible] in London on January [illegible]

It is stated that King Fuad will probably visit London, Paris, Brussels and Rome [illegible] June next.—Reuter.

FROM THE FOUR WINDS

OUR SCOTTISH LETTERS

Parliamentary Election and Local Veto Poll: A Dreamy Irish Bard: Joe Beckett's Hero: Scheme for War Shrine at Jerusalem

From Our Own Correspondent

Edinburgh, Nov. 21.

As was to be expected at the end of so short a Parliament, the number of members not seeking re-election is comparatively small. It would have been smaller still had not some Liberals agreed to withdraw in the interests of party reunion. Sir Wm. Raeburn, who meant to retire from Dumbartonshire a year ago, hopes to do so now, as he finds the strain of the House of Commons, in addition to his other public work, too much for him. Sir Wm. Mitchell Cotts is giving up the Western Isles, which he won as a National Liberal a year ago, and it may be surmised that in addition to personal reasons considerations of party unity have had an influence. Mr. James Gardiner is not to seek re-election for West Perthshire, and Mr. Alexander Shaw announced a week ago his resignation from Kilmarnock. With those four exceptions, all the former members for Scotland are to seek a renewal of confidence. It seems as if some of the Highland constituencies will not be contested. All over there is a fear that another General Election may come in the comparatively near future, involving another great financial strain.

One of the most interesting contests will take place in Kinross and West Fifeshire, where the Duchess of Atholl, LL.D., D.B.E., has come forward as the Unionist candidate. She is a very energetic person, and proposes to address meetings on practically every night till the election in different parts of her widely spread constituency. In addition she will address many day meetings for women. Her Liberal opponent is Mr. P. A. Molteno, a son of the first Premier of Cape Colony, and the former M.P. for Dunfriesshire.

THE CLASH OF TWO ELECTIONS.

Scotland suffers under the inconvenience of having two elections going on at practically the same time—the Parliamentary election and the Local Veto poll. Many canvassers and local workers have to make a choice between two causes, and already the Trade and the Temperance party are complaining that the General Election has slackened the interest in their own particular struggle. As to speakers, No Licence claims to have the advantage; its advocates are not so much tied to party politics. The licenced interest, on the other hand, say they will suffer from the absence of some of their cleverest supporters. Another trouble is the lack of hall accommodation, but in this matter the teetotallers boast that in many cases they can fall back upon the churches. Take only two examples of the way in which the elections will clash:—the Parliamentary poll is on December 6 and the Local Veto poll in Edinburgh falls upon December 5, and in Glasgow on December 4.

It does not look as if Home Rule for Scotland is to be a plank in any political platform during the present Parliamentary contest. The voice of the Scots National League, which is being faintly heard calling for independence, has been raised, but it is like a voice in the wilderness.

THE NAVVY POET.

Mr. Patrick MacGill, who delivered his new lecture "Among the Vikings" at Edinburgh, last week, no longer looks a navvy. In evening dress, with a poetic bunch of hair, and thin face, he looks as like a modern, willowy, dreamy bard as W. B. Yeats. The "Vikings" he dealt with are the modern ones. Mr. MacGill's dialect is very pronounced. But for the way he says "any" and "Ireland" one might mistake him for a Hebridean. His style is leisurely and he never indulges in oratorical flights or "purple patches." His humour is of the homely order, and, as one of his lady admirers put it, he has a "pretty smile."

JOE B. AND L. G.

One of Mr. Lloyd George's warmest admirers is Joe Beckett. Joe has been telling me that he thinks L. G. a really great man, and that he has admired him for a long time. One of Joe's ambitions is to be introduced to his hero. Joe is a Free Trader. But I wonder would it not have been a good thing for him had there been a tax on certain foreign imports—Carpentier for instance.

SCOTTISH SHRINE AT JERUSALEM.

A scheme has been promoted by a joint committee of the Church of Scotland and the United Free Church for the establishment of a Scottish Church and College at Jerusalem and is being widely supported. It is intended to serve as a memorial to the men from Scotland who fell in the Palestine campaign, and to provide a centre where divinity students who have completed their courses in Scotland may continue their studies in the Holy Land.

THE SCOTS HECKLER.

Heckling was born and bred in Scotland. It is part of our heritage. The Custom is occasionally found South of the Tweed, but there is no heckler so pertinaceous as the Scot. Unfortunately we have had of late too many apologetic finishes to election meetings. Chairman have been unnecessarily eager to announce —"Time is getting on, gentlemen, and I'm afraid we cannot expect the candidate to answer any more questions this evening." We cannot altogether blame the chairmen. Not after having heard some of the candidates. But none the less, there is a growing feeling that the heckler is not given the encouragement that is his due. The rule that all questions must be written and handed up to the platform is a dodge to trick the real heckler. There is nothing to equal the experience of seeing a politician having to take what comes to him in an oral examination. Candidates may not want more of that sort of thing, but we do. We in Scotland have our reputation to retain. We are born hecklers first and last. Our appetitie for information is insatiable. The suppression of the Good Old Heckler is being encouraged by certain audiences. We should have less of that. The sporting spirit should be given free play. Otherwise, as a race of hecklers, we shall cramp our style. If there is one thing we must have it is heckling. Why not Hecklers' Meetings? All heckling and no long speeches. If and when such a meeting is held, it will draw the crowd of the season. And there will be no need for a platform party, nor indeed for a platform. We shall want a twelve-foot ring conforming to the rules laid down by the Marquess of Queensberry.

OBITUARY.

At Byfield, Plymouth (the house of her son-in-law, Dr. J. Benson Young), on 13th inst., Sarah M'Larty, widow of Robert Oswald, C.E., of Tientsin, China, and 16 Esslemont Road, Edinburgh.

Hopes for a Liberal Unity

Nov. 28.

Not a few of the issues on which the present General Election turn are of interest to dwellers in the East. One of them concerns oil, and another is connected with jute.

A leading authority in regard to oil is Sir John T. Cargill, who has been giving views on Tariff Reform to his fellow citizens of Glasgow. For 18 years he has been the head of one of the most successful businesses that Scotsmen have ever built up—the Burma Oil Company; indeed he is the only survivor of the little band of Scots who in 1890 went out to Rangoon to take part in what was then a very small affair.

In the earlier stages of their career they attracted little notice. But, says Sir John, one day it dawned on the Standard Oil Company of America that the Burma Oil Company was getting a little too big, and they made up their mind that they would nip it in the bud. They would have done so but for the protection of the Government of India. That Government not only protected with a duty on foreign oils, but they went the length of keeping the foreign elements out of the oil trade of India. Then the Burma Oil Company came to the conclusion, that, having been protected, it was up to them to do something in return - for that protection, and, voluntarily, they initiated a policy of a maximum price in India for kerosene oil. Since 1905, claims Sir John, right through the war, when the prices of everything were going up by leaps and bounds in every country of the world, they kept the price of kerosene oil in India at the same level that it was before the war, and it was the same price to-day. Since 1919 alone till last year they had saved to the native customer in India £22 million sterling, which was the difference between the price they had been charging them for their oil in India and the price of kerosene in every other part of the world. That was one of his experiences of Protection.

The jute industry is one in which Dundee and its neighbourhood is vitally interested. Only a short time ago the President of the Dundee Chamber of Commerce stated that the importation of jute piece goods from Germany alone during the first six months of this year was 4,745 tons, as compared with 778 tons in the first six months of 1920. Before the war, he declared, there was practically no importation of jute manufactured goods from Germany. Taking July of this year alone he estimated that if there had been no importation of jute piece goods, work could have been found in Dundee for 2,000 more looms than were then at work. As the raw material for manufacturing jute goods is only procurable in India, the position is that German and other Continental workers are obtaining employment by means of supplies drawn from within the British Empire, while Dundee workers have to go idle.

THE PAISLEY "HONEYMOON."

Circumstances which are too familiar to require explanation imparted a dramatic touch to the appearance of Mr. Asquith and Mr. Lloyd George on the same platform at Paisley at the week-end. It was desirable no doubt thus to symbolize the unity of the party and the re-establishment of good relations between the two leaders; and the meeting unfeignedly enjoyed the spectacle. There was plenty of enthusiasm at the Liberal rally; but, truth to tell, a vein of comedy ran through the proceedings, especially during the opening passages.

Many years must have elapsed since these two Liberals occupied the same platform at a political meeting. The only occasion I can recall was at Sir Henry Campbell Bannerman's first public meeting as Prime Minister in the Albert Hall, London, in 1905. "C. B." had not only Mr. Asquith and Mr. Lloyd George with him at that memorable meeting, but all the members of his Cabinet. I doubt whether from that date till now Mr. Asquith and Mr. Lloyd George have addressed a gathering from the same platform.

Mr. Asquith beamed, and Mr. Lloyd's George's eyes twinkled; but the principal figure in the comedy-drama was "Margot," who, as if to show that the new alliance was no pretence, chattered incessantly during her husband's speech, Mr. Lloyd George nodding assent at odd moments. So loud were her tones that her neighbours might have heard quite an interesting budget of gossip and comment. And then there was Lady Bonham Carter and Miss Megan Lloyd-George.

Of course, the speeches of the two reconciled leaders were before you an hour or two after their delivery. But Lady Bonham Carter's sallies would not be cabled, and one of them may here be given. She quoted Lord Derby who, speaking with a note of noble compassion and disinterested solicitude, said, "Poor Mr. Asquith is like a lamb lying down with the lion, knowing as well as we do that he is bound to provide the lion's next meal." And her Ladyship's remark on this was—"Well. I read that passage with the deepest anxiety, and I have watched them both this evening very closely, very narrowly. I can honestly say I have never in my life seen Mr. Lloyd George look less voracious, and I certainly have never seen my father look more uneatable."

Princess Bibesco, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Asquith, finds that the obligation to her position as the wife of a diplomatist has its drawbacks, and that she is unable to pursue her inclinations in regard to the present election. A keen politician, the Princess would dearly like to have thrown herself into the excitement and stress of an election contest on behalf of her father, but convention does not view with favour diplomatists or their wives taking part in politics. By marriage to Prince Bibesco, who is a Roumanian Minister in Washington, Princess Bibesco has affected her nationality, and in the circumstances she has decided to observe the rules and not participate in any of the events at Paisley or in the country.

Scotland has three women candidates—the Duchess of Atholl in West Perthshire; Miss Robertson, in St. Rollox, Glasgow; and Miss Helen Fraser in the Hamilton Division of Lanark. Lady Baxter, who had come forward as a second supporter of the Government, has retired, so as not to split the moderate vote in Dundee. This leaves one Conservative and one Liberal to unite for the two city seats, against two Socialists and one Prohibitionist.

DISFRANCHIZED FISHERMEN.

For the second General Election in succession, several hundreds of Scots fishermen will be disfranchized as a result of their absence at the East Anglican ports. A year ago, when the election took place in the closing weeks of November, thousands of fishermen and fisher lassies were busily engaged at Yarmouth and Lowestoft, and were unable to record their votes. This year the election is a fortnight later, and probably about one-half of the fishermen now in East Anglia will be virtually disfranchized.

The Rev. David Cathels, D.D., Hawick, is the Moderator-Designate of next General Assembly of the Church of Scotland. In 1913 he was appointed by the Foreign Mission Committee as their delegate to visit the China stations, especially in the Yangtze valley. What he saw on his travels of the influence, hardships, dangers, and self-sacrifices of the Christian missionaries increased even his zeal for foreign mission work, and by many public lectures after his trip he instilled others with a similar enthusiasm.

The Rev. A. S. Inch, Dumbarton, is Moderator-Designate of the United Free Church. The Rev. Kenneth Cameron, of Stornoway, has been nominated as Moderator of the Free Church.

In forbidding the writing of an official biography of himself. Lord Morley followed the example of Andrew Lang, who made a similar stipulation in his will. Lang practised what he preached, for years he had poured ridicule on the "Life and Letters" plague, declaring:—

For now the dentist cannot die
And leave his forceps as of old,
But round him, ere he scarce is cold.
Begins the vast biography.

ABERDONIAN HUMOUR.

It is often thought that the Aberdonian is stock of a character peculiar to himself; but many a Yorkshire men come of the same race—the Beaker folk, a blend of the Alpine and Nordic—and in both countries a kindred rigid economy and grim unemotional acid wit and humour is found. Aberdonian physical and mental quality is however by far the most famous. Mr. A. M. Williams, late Rector of the Jordanhill Training College, has just given the members of the Glasgow Rotary Club some fine specimens of Aberdonians and their humour. In Banchory-Devenick he said that a widower, having helped to carry his second wife to the grave on a broiling July day, said as he wiped his brow. "Dod, the last time A wis at this job. A wis smored wi' snaw, and th' day A'm plotted wi' heat; neist time A'll treat masel' till a hearse." It was in the same quarter that one farmer, meeting another remarked, "A fine growin' day; this'll bring athing oot o' the grun," and the reply was "Gweed forbid, I've twa wives there."

In Yorkshire they tell a story, current also in the North, in this form. A labourer after finishing a hard job was presented with whisky and water. Tasting it, he looked up and said, "Did ye pit in the watter first, or the fuskie first?" "Oh," was the reply, "I put in the whisky first." "Ah weel, than, we'll be comin' tae the fuskie by an' by."

The Aberdonian not only bears with undisturbed equanimity the numerous anecdotes at his expense, but he invents the best of them and chuckles at their success. Here is one whose patentee is well known. An Aberdonian went to a dentist to have a tooth extracted. After examining the offending member the dentist said—"That's a bad one; I must give you gas." Whereupon the patient plunged his hand into his pocket and brought out his money. "Oh, never mind that," said the dentist, "you can pay me afterwards." "Oh," said the other, "A wisna gaun tae pey ye, bit if A'm tae be unconscious A'd like tae ken fat A hae on me."

Aberdonians relish the story of the women who went into a butcher's shop and asked to have two half-pennies for a penny. Having got them, she said—"Dinna ye gie a bit o' suet wi' that?" However, one does meet the density Sydney Smith complained of. A farmer in Aberdeenshire was playing cards in an Aberdeen hotel, and having been called out of the room, carefully picked up and pocketed his money before leaving. On his return he saw that he had offended the rest by his caution, and made a suitable apology. Being called out again, he said—"Ye wis offended at me for takkin' me bawbees wi' me last time. Weel, this time A'll leave them on the table. There's jist three poun' sax an' echtpence there. The speaker declared that he told his story to a fellow-Aberdonian, a University professor, and got the reply—"I don't see much in that story, What else could he have done?"

GRAFTED RACEHORSE EXPERIMENT

Apparently a Success

Paris, Nov. 18.—It is announced that, so far as can be ascertained, the recent experiment of grafting a well-known French racehorse from another, after the Voroneff method which was reported in a despatch some weeks ago, has proved perfectly successful, writes the correspondent of the "Morning Post." The animal that was the subject of the experiment was again put into training on Friday afternoon, and is apparently in the best of condition. The wound has completely healed, and the horse is feeding well. The horse from which the graft was taken returned to training over a week previously.

Racing experts are watching the grafted horse with the keenest interest, and intense curiosity is being displayed as to what his performance will be like when he returns to the racecourse. . . .

Berlin Strikers Against Lower Wages

Berlin, Jan. 3.

One hundred Berlin metal factories are at a standstill as a result of a lockout of 130,000 workers who refused to consent to a reduction of wages.—Reuter.

Swiss Boycotted in Russia

Geneva, Jan. 4.

As a reprisal for the acquittal of Conradi, the alleged assassin of the Bolshevik envoy, M. Vorowsky, not only have Swiss citizens been expelled from Russia but a rigid boycott of Swiss goods has been proclaimed throughout Russia.—Reuter.

The Speculation in Francs

Paris, Jan. 7.

The Minister of Finance, submitting the Cabinet proposals to check the speculation which has been responsible for the fall of the franc, says that the Paris Bourse is overrun by undesirables and must be purged.—Reuter.

Admiral Sir Percy Scott Seriously Ill

Malta, Jan. 7.

Admiral Sir Percy Scott, who arrived at Malta on December 28 and was staying at the Hotel Valetta, has been taken to the naval hospital at Bighi seriously ill. It is believed that he is suffering from asthma.—Reuter.

Dutch Steamer Disabled

London, Jan. 7.

It is reported from Soller (Majorca) that the Dutch steamer Rondo, from Hamburg to Macassar, is disabled at Latitude 45.32 North and Longitude 7.50 West. —Reuter.

Foreign Goods the Soviet Stole

Paris, Jan. 5.

According to the newspapers the entire Soviet commercial organizations will be temporarily closed and transferred to London in the near future in consequence of the recent decision of the Seine Tribunal that goods nationalized by the Soviets belong in the eyes of French law to their original owners.—Reuter.

Quill Pens Return to Their Own

Leipsig, Nov. 20.

Germans are returning to the use of the quill because of the high cost of steel pens. An ordinary steel pen now costs 200 million marks, and is beyond the reach of many Germans.—Reuter.

U. S. Railway Claims on Government Settled

Washington, Jan. 4.

The Director-General of Railroads, Mr. Davis, announces that a settlement has been reached amounting to $1,696,000,000 in respect of all claims arising from the Government's control of the railways during the war.—Reuter's American Service.

Persian Crown Jewels Sold to Build Railways

Teheran, Jan. 3.

The Government has decided to sell part of the Crown jewels and other valuables to raise money for the construction of railways.—Reuter.

Canada's Welcome to British Immigrants

[illegible], Jan. 4.

Arrangements have been made with the transport companies to grant preference of 20 per cent. on the trans-Atlantic rate for all British immigrants settling in Canada.—Reuter.

French Import Duty on Corn Relaxed

Paris, Jan. 6.

In consequence of the rising price of wheat, following the adverse exchange, the Government has suspended the increase in the import duty on corn, which varied with the rates of exchange. —Reuter.

The Dutch Cabinet

The Hague, Jan. 7.

On account of the unsuccessful efforts to form a new Cabinet, the Queen has declined the resignation of the Ministry.—Reuter.

Britain's Unemployed

London, Jan. 9.

The unemployed in Britain on December 31 totalled 1,250,000, an increase of 113,000 as compared with December 17, probably due to the discharge of temporary hands employed at Christmas, but a decrease of 235,778 as compared with January 1 last year.—Reuter.

Glasgow's New Dock

London, Jan. 8.

The Clyde Trustees have obtained Government assistance to provide a new dock at Glasgow, to be the largest in Britain, at a cost of £2,000,000. Construction will commence immediately.—Reuter.

The British Empire Cruise

Durban, Jan. 9.

The light-cruisers participating in the Empire cruise departed on January 5 after a very successful visit. The battle-cruisers arrived on January 6 and departed in the same evening.—Reuter.

Immigrants in America

Washington, Jan. 8.

Replying to a question from the Immigation Committee, Mr. C. E. Hughes, Secretary of State, stated that the establishment of a government inspection service in foreign countries for selection of immigrants would be difficult without new treaty agreements.—Reuter's American Service.

Sir Ellis Kadoorie's Bequest to Palestine

Jerusalem, Jan. 10.

It is officially announced that the British Government has accepted a bequest of approximately £100,000 by the late Sir Ellis Kadoorie of Hongkong to be expended for the benefit of Palestine.—Reuter.

Sinclair Oil Concession

New York, Jan. 10.

The Moscow correspondent of the "New York Times" says the huge oil concession granted to the Sinclair Oil Company of New York was conditional on the Company making the Soviet Government a loan of $250,000,000. Hitherto the Sinclair Company has not complied with the Russian demands.—Reuter's American Service.

Rhineland Separatists

Paris, Jan. 9.

As a result of British representations on the subject of the Separatist movement it is announced that an inquiry will be made on the spot by the Rhineland High Commission.—Reuter.

Prince of Wales in Paris

London, Jan. 9.

The Prince of Wales has left for Paris for a few days' visit, travelling as the Earl of Chester.—Reuter.

Communist Propaganda in America

Riga, Jan. 9.

Moscow despatches state that many leaders of the Central Communist Committee are advocating the cessation of attacks on M. Trotsky, emphasizing the necessity of preserving unity at all costs. Nevertheless the "Pravda" is continuing its campaign. The paper states that M. Krestinsky, the Soviet representative in Berlin, has joined the opposition to the Central Committee.—Reuter.

Kyosei Maru Abandoned When Sinking

London, Jan. 9.

A telegram from Seattle states that the Kyosei Maru, which was reported in a sinking condition at Lat. 49°.30'N., Long. 174°.10'E., by the Empress of Russia on January 5, has been abandoned. The crew were taken off by the American steamer President McKinley. The Kyosei Maru was bound for Yokohama from Victoria, B.C.—Reuter.

The Deadlock in the American Senate

Washington, Jan. 9.

The deadlock existing in the Senate since the opening of the session has been ended by the election of Senator Ellison D. Smith of South Carolina (Democrat) as Chairman of the Inter-State Commerce Committee, thus permitting the Senate to enter into its full functions. — Reuter's American Service.

M. Trotzky's Political Illness

Helsingfors, Jan. 9.

Moscow newspapers report that M. Trotzky has been ordered to take two months' rest. The news has caused a sensation in the capital, where it is believed that his illness is partly political.—Reuter.

A Munificent Gift

Brussels, Jan. 9.

The Detroit industrial magnate, Mr. Raphael Herman, has given $1,000,000 to establish an international university in Brussels. Reuter.

The White Slave Traffic

Rome, Jan. 9.

A decree has been published enforcing the Paris Convention for the suppression of the white slave traffic and also the International Convention of Geneva of 1921.—Reuter.

Communist Dissension in Russia

Washington, Jan. 9.

Attorney-General Daugherty today formally declared that the Department of Justice had abundant evidence to back up the State Department's recent statement concerning Communist propaganda in the United States.—Reuter's American Service.

Germany and Inter-allied Military Control

Berlin, Jan. 9.

Resumption of inter-Allied military control will be effected during the present week, following an announcement that the Government has taken measures to facilitate the Control Commission's visits on January 10 and 12.—Reuter

SATURDAY'S TELEGRAMS

THE ASSASSINATION OF HERR HEINTZ

Cowardly Attack in an Hotel: Several Innocent Guests Killed or Injured

Mayence, Jan. 10.

An eye-witness of the assassination of Herr Heintz says that Herr Heintz, accompanied by a few friends, sat down to dinner at the hotel where he was staying. Half an hour later three youths entered and asked for Herr Heintz. They were conducted to the restaurant. One of them darted behind Herr Heintz's chair and fired repeatedly point-blank at his head. When Herr Heintz fell dead, the murderer continued firing wildly, mortally wounding one of his victim's friends. The murderer eventually with his companions, all firing, walked out and escaped after mortally wounding two passers-by in the street and less seriously wounding a number of others.—Reuter.

Speyer, Jan. 10.

In connexion with the shooting of Herr Heintz, serious collisions took place last night between the Separatists and the populace which resulted in five persons being killed.—Reuter.

Inquiry to Be Instituted.

Later.

The assassination of Herr Heintz, presumably by Nationalists, draws fresh attention to the doings of the Separatists in the Palatinate, which are the subject of serious preoccupation in British official circles. The Separatist flag still flies over many town halls in other parts of Germany, but it is apparently only in the Palatinate that anything like a serious Central Separatist Administration has been established under the title of "The Government of the Autonomous Palatinate," while the Separatists are the de facto governing authority in every Palatinate town. The reported action of the Rhineland High Commission in accepting orders issued by the Separatist Palatinate administration is interpreted as practically official recognition. It is stated that the British demarches have now led to the decision to institute an inquiry on the spot by delegates of the inter-Allied Commission.—Reuter.

Separatist Censorship.

Berlin, Jan. 10.

Germany is practically depending upon London and Paris for news of the Speyer affair. Presumably the Separatists have established a strict censorship and it is known that they have arrested a number of prominent Germans in the Palatinate as hostages.

The newspapers comment furiously on the French supporting the Separatists and point out that the Bavarian Government had issued a warrant against Herr Heintz for high treason.—Reuter.

THE LITTLE ENTENTE CONFERENCE

Proceedings Likely Further to Complicate the European Political Problem

London, Jan. 10.

The conference of Little Entente Powers opened at Belgrade to-day.

Much attention is given to the conference as likely to illustrate new groupings further complicating the European problem.

The chief subjects on the agenda are the financial reform of Hungary, recognition of Russia and the treaty between France and Czecho-Slovakia, but that French policy will dominate the proceedings is apparent from an article in the inspired Belgrade newspaper "Vreme," which says that the first question for consideration will be renewal of the treaty with France, "which is destined to become the axis of Continental politics," and adds that the introduction of Russia to European politics comes next.

It is noteworthy in this connexion that it is announced in London that the British Government has hitherto received no answer to its inquiry as to how far the liens to which Poland, Yugo-Slavia and Rumania are subject as succession States are likely to be affected by the loans recently concluded between them and the French Government, but it expects that the conference will formulate a joint reply to the inquiry.—Reuter.

 The Little Entente consists of the states of Czecho-Slovakia, Yugo-Slavia, Rumania and Poland. The interest in its doings is heightened by the recent treaty between France and Czecho-Slovakia.—Ed.

BRITISH SUBMARINE SUNK AT SEA

Collision with Battleship in Fog During Naval Spring Manœuvres

London, Jan. 10.

An Admiralty message says that the submarine L-24 has been lost off Portland Bill, it is feared with all hands.

It appears that the L-24 was exercising with the Atlantic Fleet, which left Portland this morning for a three-months' cruise and manœuvres. The cause of the accident is as yet unknown.

Later.

The L-24, which carried a crew of 30, collided with the battleship Resolution off Portland Bill.

A lighter specially adapted to raise submarines is being rushed to the spot to try to salvage the L-24. The latter is a modern vessel, one of the 32 submarines laid down between 1917 and 1922.

The disaster occurred in a fog after the vessels of the Atlantic Fleet had opened into the Channel beginning their spring cruise.

Little Hope for the Crew.

It is officially estimated that the L-24 is lying 30 fathoms deep 11 miles south of Portland Bill.

Little hope is entertained for the crew who might, however, survive 48 hours if able to close the water-tight compartments.

The submarine was apparently rammed by H. M. S. Resolution in a mist during a very heavy swell.

A diving party will descend early in the morning.—Reuter.

RUHR INDUSTRIALISTS AND REPARATIONS

Herr Stinnes' Scheme for Deliveries in Kind Under Long Term Contracts

Paris, Jan. 10.

Interviewed by a representative of the "Journal des Debats," Herr Hugo Stinnes said that the Ruhr industrialists had agreed to pay reparations for the Reich until April 15, after which they could not continue.

He outlined a scheme for deliveries in kind as a subsequent form of settlement, and advocated that the Reich should pay German notes to factories for deliveries under long term contracts to Allied industrialists, who would pay their respective Governments for them. Such payments would be written down to the Reparations account. The Reich would ensure repayment to the industrialists by allocation of revenue from certain taxes.

Herr Stinnes was optimistic of a solution of all difficulties if the plan were adopted, adding that the alternative to a sound Franco-German agreement was war.—Reuter.

STREET ARTISTES IN LONDON

Race of Optimistic Ex-Servicemen: No Hurdy Gurdies or Performing Bears

From Our Own Correspondent.

London, Nov. 22.

The usual winter minstrel is with us. He is always most in evidence about Christmas but, nowadays, he does not so circumscribe his activities as only to appear about that time because the conditions are then against him owing to the ubiquity of the noisy small boy who, scorning the words of the old carols, sings two or three lines hurriedly of any old thing which comes to him, rings the doorbell of the nearest house to ask for largesse and then bolts.

I suppose the average carol singer does know the words of something—or did know them once upon a time—but in any case he has forgotten them long since for he never retails them in any intelligible form. The discord he makes is embarrassing to the ordinary street singer who is an Artiste (large "A" and final "e" please, Mr. Printer.) At least most of the street singers are and I hedge a little because we have so many. There are the barrel organ experts—one couple are sailors or at least wish to be taken as such inasmuch as they wear no caps, which is a distinguishing mark of the bold ex-A. B., and two others are supposedly an ex-Serviceman and wife with their own or with someone else's family, for it is impossible to be quite sure on the point. There is also a fine well-set up naval petty officer who turns the handle with a rather pathetic weariness; he is not more than 35 but I suppose an out-of work of some kind or other.

Next comes the lady with a violin—she is a regular executant on the kerb for hours on end and presumably finds it pays. Twice a week a gentleman turns up with a big harp—has done so for years; he plays very well and one's only regret is that his repertoire is somewhat limited. Dragging round a harp of the size he favours must be a tough business but he is usually sitting on the pavement so he gets incidentally a rest. Then off and on comes a small ex-servicemen's band—about five, with one playing a portable piano and yet another with a megaphone attached to a sort of saxophone. They make things hum a bit. One hardly ever sees in casual vocalists—their nature is legion. They sing everything from hymns to the latest songs including—"Who tied the can to the old dog's tail" and it "mingles" curiously with the strains of a rival artist round the corner who is giving us "Hark the Herald Angels." I am bound to admit that Angels, like everybody else, seem to start early in getting ready for the festive season.

One wonders often how all these artistes live. Well, I fancy; otherwise, they would not be so numerous or frequent certain districts so regularly. In South Kensington there is a quite mistaken impression among street artists that directly a vocalist "opens up" on any doorstep the householder will rush out and fill the vocalist's hat with gold. Really the view is quite erroneous. Probably it is a bad day which does not yield about five or six shillings net, unless Aunt Jane up from the country meets any of them in the street and then you can add to your reckoning a florin or half a crown in addition.

PUNCH AND JUDY.

Now you do not get Punch and Judy in the better-class districts. Do get this off the streets—the busy streets in the Bloomsbury district where there seem to be so many children that you wonder where on earth they put them all at night. Although I have spent many years in London I have never seen Punch ask for any material return for his show and frankly I have never seen anyone give or offer anything. Still he cannot do it for the love of the thing.

Of course even in respect of street music our tastes change. The German Band has gone. It went home to fight and the harsh and cruel Home Secretary has not allowed what there may be left of it to come back. It is 10 years since I saw a hurdy gurdy, and the monkey and the performing bear are no more. There are sometimes off the Charing Cross a couple of wrestlers or tumblers—probably from their look ex-service men for they are quite young. Occasionally but rarely you see a street conjurer. The veiled woman vocalist has vanished. Perhaps she has a more paying job. I hope so, for in this cold, wet and stormy weather street entertaining must be a sore trial to the physical energies of any one. Broadcasting from little barrows is appearing but I doubt if it "catches on."

I was just going to say the "waits" are no more. But no! It would not be truthful. Distant sounds warn me not to be too precipitate.

CHOOSING A CANDIDATE

Some Election-time Comedies: Free Importing Homily a Protectionist Triumph

From Our Own Correspondent.

London, Nov. 28.

There are people who think the average candidate gets chosen—and elected—because of his eminent fitness for the job of legislating in Parliament, but, alas, it is not so. It is the candidate who has to be careful. They were selecting a young man to stand at an election and had duly requested him to come forward and champion the cause. He replied to the deputation, "Gentlemen I am much honoured, but you must give me a few days' delay as I wish to go home and examine my family ticket. They did not know what he meant and they did not like to ask him so they assented, and the young man departed for the family seat and summoned his father. "Father," he said, "I've been invited to stand for Blankshire, but I've asked for a few days' grace before replying, as I wish to examine our family ticket." "My boy," answered the older man, "I've no objection, but perhaps you'll tell me what you mean by examining the family ticket." "Well," said the young man, "it's like this, I want to know if there's anything likely to come up against me at the election. . . whether you've any family skeleton, any blot on the escutcheon, anything you particularly don't want to see the light. Because if there is I think I'd rather decline the invitation if you don't want it brought up since it's sure to be if I stand."

CO-RESPONDENTS BARRED.

As a rule a constituency will swallow anything as long as you are not a co-respondent or have been one, or done something which landed you in the dock in the far away time. You can have been a co-respondent, but it must have been in your very youthful days and at a time when you can now plead the innocence of youth. You will have all the Unco Guids up against you, but the women—most of them—will in the circumstances overlook it. There are of course serious politicians, but there are others who treat the matter quite light-heartedly.

Outside the Labour ranks there are plenty quite as ready to fight on one side as on the other. Inside the Labour ranks there are many who are there because they are disgruntled at failure to perceive their merits in other quarters. Some on the other hand are pushed into it.

There is a Member of Parliament well-known to residents in the Far East who has married a lady who has a sister who also is married to another man of some position and repute. To the latter lady came the former and suggested that she ought to "jump" her husband also into the position of a legislator. So she went home and gave the poor man a curtain lecture and now he is a candidate. That's how they make them.

"MADE IN AUSTRIA."

Of course, there are many slips between the cup and the lip. It was in Wales that a candidate was being asked to address the local executive. He gave a great oration and finished up with the peroration:

Gentlemen, I resume my seat in the full and sure confidence that this country which has built up its great past on the sound principles of Free Trade and unrestricted imports will never desert the doctriness of our Mighty Cobden, that you will send to Parliament a Member who will champion those doctrines to which you are, I am sure, as attached as I am, and I may add that if your choice falls on me you will find me take my stand immovable on the strength of the views on which we all have been brought up on and loved from our earliest years.

Then he sat down and the chair promptly collapsed under him and when somebody picked up the bottom of the treacherous article he read, "Made in Austria." Of course, in Wales where humour doesn't run very strongly—at least in the backwoods—they couldn't select him after that.

I always like the idea of the local association picking the best man. That is, of course, the popular idea. What really happens is that when a candidate is wanted the association discuss the names of all the chief local men. If it is a "soft snap" all want to stand and all object to each other. So in despair they apply to Headquarters. Now Headquarters has a system of its own.

HOW IT IS REALLY DONE.

It can really be reduced to very simple form:

A Munificent subscriber to the Party Funds—a Safe Seat.

A Substantial subscriber—a Fairly Safe Seat.

A mediocre Subscriber—an odds even seat.

Poor but Brilliant—A odds against seat.

Poor enthusiastic but not brilliant—Any old seat.

So now you know how it is done by all. In the case of Labour I should say the most "pushful gents" collar the best that are going and leave the rank and file to sort out the rest. In the case of the others the Headquarters suit the seat to the payer.

There are naturally other types. There are always Nomination Day candidates—men who like to fight an election when all the arrangements are made for them. They appear as "surprises" and run a circus-like election which sometimes comes off and sometimes doesn't. There is the man with nothing better to do—with the hope to become an M. P. and trade on the title for business purposes. What you really need at elections is—money. Lots of it! The poor politician would be happier at a crossing. He would certainly have more self-respect by handling a broom.

SNUFFED OUT!

The Decline of a Fashionable Habit

One of the old snuff mills at Junpier Green, Midlothian, which has been working for more than two centuries, has ceased operations owing, it is stated, "to the decline of the snuff habit." But, though there is still a demand for such modern varieties of snuffs as Prince's-Mixture, S.P., and Kendal Brown, snuff-taking, a representative of "The Observer" was informed recently at Messrs. Fribourg and Treyer's, practically died out during the reign of Queen Victoria.

Snuff of the present day, the late Mr. George Evans wrote in his history of the firm, gives no idea of what it once was and bears no comparison to that of former years. Its fragrance was derived by careful blending of snuffs made of various tobaccos, and not by the addition of scents or essences.

George IV., who gave his patronage to the firm, had several snuffs associated with his name—King's Morning Mixture, King's Evening Mixture, King's Plain, Carolle, for example. The most expensive snuff in the eighteenth and early nineteenth century was known as Spanish Bran, the price being £3 a lb. It was sold in conjunction with a phial of Vinagrillo, an aromatic rose-scented vinegar of Spanish origin.

There was also a curious old snuff known as Spanish Sabillia, in the form of fine powder of brick-red hue. It was used as tooth-powder and had the reputation of keeping away neuralgia. For more than a hundred years people thought very highly of it, but since 1890 it has been impossible to get it.

The usual prices of snuff at the earliest period recorded were 3s. 6d., 5s., and 7s. a lb., and they gradually rose to 6s., 8s., and 11s. Half an ounce a day used to be considered a very moderate allowance, and below the average.

Whether snuff-taking was a nice habit or not greatly depended, says Mr. Evans, on the taker. When carried to excess it certainly was objectionable. Snuff, however, was without doubt surrounded with a great amount of elegance. The faded ledgers of the firm show how general was its use a century and more ago among those of high standing. Ladies were often snuff-takers, the fashion being set by Queen Charlotte and the Princesses Charlotte and Elizabeth. Dignitaries of the Churches, both of England and Rome, several of the Popes, and most of the great families of England were amongst the customers supplied by the Old Snuff House in the Haymarket.

A NEW FORTH BRIDGE

£3,000,000 Project under Consideration

A writer in "Engineering" says:—

The erection of a road bridge across the River Forth, east of the present railway bridge, but converging towards it at North Queensferry, has been proposed by Mr. J. Ingles Ker, as a means of linking up the thoroughfare to the North of Scotland. It would connect up the road route from Dover to John o' Groats, and would greatly increase the usefulness of the bridges contemplated at Berwick-on-Tweed and at the Tay. In addition, should the scheme be carried out it would certainly enhance the value of the new highway between Glasgow and Edinburgh by giving direct connexion with Dunfermline, Kirkcaldy, Perth and Dundee.

The details of the construction have now been worked out and were submitted by Mr. Leitch of Messrs. Leitch & Sharpe, of Glasgow, at a meeting recently at South Queensferry. The road on the proposed bridge would have a width of 53 ft., consisting of two 9-ft. footpaths at the sides and a 40-ft. roadway. From a point on the public road from Edinburgh to South Queensferry which is 150 ft. above high water level, this being about the height of the present railway bridge, it was proposed to run out an embankment of about 200 yards length. At the end of this a masonry abutment would support the girders of the first span of the approach viaduct, and this viaduct would be carried over masonry piers for a distance of 560 yards to the south pier of the suspension bridge.

The central portion, it was suggested, should consist of two spans of 2,400 ft. each, and support would be provided on a central pier on Inch Garvie. A similar viaduct to that on the south side, but of 660 yards length, would extend from the north pier to the face of the whinstone quarry workings at Carlingnose, and the road would be continued for about 50 yards to join the existing public road at North Queensferry. The construction was estimated to cost between £2,500,000 and £3,000,000, and would take five years for its completion.

REPORTING BY WIRLEESS

Interesting Lord Mayor's Banquet Experiment

Within a few hours of Mr. Lloyd George's declaration that wireless was going to revolutionize public speaking his prophecy was fulfilled to some small extent at the Lord Mayor's banquet.

As an experiment is broadcasting public speeches, the wireless transmission of Mr. Baldwin's reply to the toast of His Majesty's Ministers, was entirely successful, but the occasion was noteworthy rather for an experiment in reporting the speech by wireless.

As at the Guildhall Banquets of past years, every word the Premier uttered was faithfully recorded from his very lips, but the verbatim report published in the papers the following morning was that taken by wireless.

So clear was the wireless transmission that not half-a-dozen words were missed, and the newspaper offices had received the last typescript page of the report of the Premier's speech some time before it would have been available from the corps of reporters who attended the actual banquet.

GERMANS OFF TO AMERICA

Remarkable Exodus from the Fatherland

Conditions in Germany just now are responsible for a remarkable exodus to the United States. It is even easy for German women to enter the States—a condition which applies in less degree to other countries, since women are considered more of a responsibility upon the American nation than are men. The only reason that the German quota is not full is the enormous sum that it costs in German marks to buy the passage. This is a far more restraining influence than is the quota itself. Anybody, however, who has German relations in America is doing his best to go to them. German-Americans themselves are doing a great deal to help their relations by advancing the passage money. In places like Hoboken and Passaic and in the big German centres of the Middle West Germans are arriving almost daily from the Fatherland, some of them mere children. A great many Germans in Germany have taken up the attitude of trying to send their children to America, rather than make any effort to go themselves. Their German relations will often take one child, where to help a whole family would be impossible. With the fear of revolution, added to the hunger problem, German parents have in a large number of cases sent perhaps a little girl or a little boy with the full understanding that they are probably relinquishing their child for ever. In any case the child will grow up American, and Germany in the future will only loom up as a black memory.

On the whole, these prospective citizens are welcomed in America. If they are very young they will certainly grow up to be American citizens, probably of a valuable type. If they are older, they often have a technical education which makes them exceedingly valuable. Artisans of every kind find work readily, and while they are forbidden by American law to come to a ready-made job—lest they prejudice the opportunities of the born or naturalized American—jobs have a knack of turning up almost immediately after they have landed. Americans are exceedingly glad to secure the girls as maids, and for a time German girls are willing to accept such positions. This period does not last long, however, for they quickly find that they can earn money at occupations more congenial to them than the domesticity for which they are usually so well equipped. This exodus of German youth to America is likely to leave marks comparable with foreign invasions of England by the Hugenots or of Paris by the Russians.

OUR PARIS LETTERS

Gen. Metaxas in Paris: His View on Greece's Troubles: Venizelists "Unpopular"

From Our Own Correspondent.

Paris, Nov. 23.

Gen. Metaxas, one of the leaders of the opposition to the present Greek Government, has arrived in Paris, having evaded arrest. According to his own account, his escape was prosaic in its simplicity. While at Patras he received news showing that the rising had no chance of success. In the afternoon, some destroyers which had been sent to carry out what was magniloquently called the blockade of Patras, steamed into the harbour. As Gen. Metaxas was also informed that a price had been set upon his head, he thought it was about time to make a move. Accordingly he put on his hat and coat, strolled down to the harbour and asked which vessel was the first to leave. A small Norwegian cargo boat was pointed out to him. He hired a boat and was rowed out to her, passing close to the destroyers. He explained his position to the captain, who told him he had nothing to fear, and soon afterwards the vessel started without interference from the Greeks who were "blockading" the port.

Gen. Metaxas asserts that he had nothing to do with the preparation or management of the counter-revolutionary movement. The Government, he says, seized the opportunity to prosecute, or rather persecute the leaders of opposition. He thinks that the military movement failed because of the Venizelist opinions professed by the leaders, Generals Gargalidis and Leonardopoulos, the Venizelist party being now extremely unpopular in Greece.

As to the elections, which are to take place next month, Gen. Metaxas characterized them as a farce. The principal Opposition candidates, he said, are in prison or trying to escape the clutches of General Pangalos's Cretan mercenaries. Opposition newspapers are pitilessly squelched. The election laws have been arbitrarily altered. Refugees are being transformed into voters and will be marched to the polls under military supervision. At Patras the counter-revolutionary officers found 1,200 electors' cards, made out in the names of so-called refugees. In these circumstances, the present Government can easily obtain an overwhelming majority; in fact, there is no reason why it should not poll more votes than there are electors in the whole country. As for the change from monarchical to republican government, Gen. Metaxas says it is merely a mask for military dictatorship. There is no longer any constitutional government in Greece, and the consequences may be very serious for the rest of Europe.

According to Gen. Metaxas, the vast majority of the inhabitants are hostile to the present Government, whom he calls the "Athens tyrants," and the latter may resort to war as the only means of extricating themselves from internal difficulties. They are quite capable of setting fire to the inflammable material in the Balkans.

SECOND EMPIRE GLORIES.

M. Arthur Meyer, the veteran editor of the "Gaulois," who is certainly the most representative figure in French journalism, had a brilliant audience for his lecture—if so formal a word may be used—this week on the Second Empire, or rather on the Empress Eugénie and the ladies of her court. He sketched scores of celebrities with a light but sure touch. The Empress who reigned in virtue of her beauty, the aristocratic Princess Metternich who smoked cigars, the Princesse de Sagan, the Duchesse de Luynes, the Prince de Polignac, Barbey d'Aurevilly, the Marquise de Chasseloup-Laubat's masked balls, the Duchesse de La Trémoille's salons, where the wits of the day assembled. All these figures and scenes, and many more, were called out of the depths of time by M. Meyer's wonderful memory and descriptive powers. He told several anecdotes of the hostility of the Legitimists to the Empress, whom they regarded as a usurper and an upstart. One great lady, strolling along the sands of the seaside, between the sea and a cliff, saw the Empress coming and walked knee-deep into the sea so as not to have to salute her. The Tuileries, M. Meyer said, never fully represented French society, because the Faubourg St. Germain held aloof. M. Meyer is a good Royalist.

FALLING FRANCS.

Interesting indications as to the financial conditions governing the existence of a great number of the French people are contained in a report presented by the Finance Minister to the Finance Committee of the Chamber.

The index figures for the necessary expenditure of a working class family of four persons living in the Paris district have risen from 100 in 1914 to 249 in the third quarter of 1919, and 363 in the same quarter of 1920. They declined to 295 in 1921 and 289 in 1922, but rose to 331 in the present year. During the same period, the fluctuations in the retail of the 13 essential commodities were represented by 261 in November, 1919, 426 (the maximum) in November, 1920, 326 in November, 1921, 297 in November 1922 and 349 in October, 1923. On the other side of the account are the increases of pay granted to Government employees. A Customs examiner, living in a town of 150,000 inhabitants, whose pay in 1914 ranged from Frs. 1,254 to Frs. 1,584 now has from Frs. 5,220 to Frs. 8,380 according to whether he is a bachelor or the head of a family. A school teacher's salary, formerly between Frs. 1,600 and Frs. 2,900 is now from Frs. 6,120 to Frs. 11,880. A country postman, who received from Frs. 1,100 to Frs. 1,500 before the war, now begins at Frs. 4,520 and goes up to Frs. 6,380. High officials have had their salaries raised between 50 and 100 per cent. A director of primary education has Frs. 33,960 instead of Frs. 19,000 and a Government engineer and road surveyor has between Frs. 19,000 and Frs. 33,000 instead of from Frs. 10,000 to Frs. 12,000.

Customs and Costumes at the Opera: New Members of the Academie Francaise

Paris, Nov. 1.

The two new members of the Académie Française who take the places of the late M. Alexandre Ribot and M. Alfred Capus are a barrister, Maître Henri-Robert, and a scientific and literary celebrity, M. Estaunié. The former is a distinctly original type. He is the creator of a style which has caused a revolution in French forensic eloquence. Thanks to his example, the pleader who worked himself into a state of larmoyant convulsions over the hard fate of his client has gone out of fashion. The duel between the Public Prosecutor and the defence has become a series of rapier thrusts. A successful advocate in criminal cases has to be direct and incisive rather than theatrical and long-winded. Maître Henri Robert has obtained many an acquittal by an address lasting only half an hour. He has a charming voice and delightful diction. He speaks with the rapidity of a machine-gun, and very few of his bullets miss the mark. He disdains arguments designed to convince the jury, and he has a wonderful knack of putting before them everything that can appeal to their sense of pity. He practises eloquence without artifice.

The other new Academician, M. Edouard Estaunié, is an expert in electricity and holds the post of inspector-general under the Post Office. He is the author of text-books on sources of electrical energy and telegraphic communications, and he has found time to write several novels, in every one of which some moral problem is set forth and discussed with remarkable lucidity. The best of them are "L'Empreinte," to which the Academy awarded a prize more than a quarter of a century ago, and "La Vie Secrète."

WAR ON THE DINNER JACKET.

The war declared on the dinner jacket in modish male circles on both sides of the Channel has been carried to the coulisses of the Paris Opera. This garment, we are told, is to be altogether taboo, and the tail coat is to reign supreme. As to details of evening dress, however, certain differences of opinion prevail among the elect who are entitled to penetrate into the charmed land behind the scenes. The white bow and the black cravat of generous dimensions favoured by the beaux of the Second Empire both have partisans. Again, is the glossy silk hat or the crush hat to be the correct thing for evening wear? The former has the votes of most of the younger men, while some of the seniors are bringing out their long-forgotten gibus, which has much to recommend it on the ground of convenience. Then comes the question whether the silk hat should be worn straight or tilted back on the ears, or whether the gibus should be held in the hand or under the arm. After this we come to the waistcoat problem—full opinion or V-shape, piqué or silk, moiré or plain? Pitfalls always abound in waistcoat selection. But among all these shoals of doubt stands out the lighthouse of certainty about the coat. It must have tails.

The male subscribers, who alone are entitled to go behind the scenes of the Opera, want to keep up the impression that they are a special and privileged class, the fine flower of the citizens of the Third Republic, and of course this ideal cannot be attained without unwritten rules and traditions, customs and costumes. The dinner jacket is too free and easy, and we all want to forget the war days.

THE LINE OF BEAUTY.

Embonpoint is the greatest enemy of the Parisienne. Painters and dressmakers combine to preach the lesson that plump women cannot be beautiful, and that the ideal to be sought after is a slender, willowy figure. This is very trying for the large class of women who love their daily afternoon visit to a patisserie for tea (or chocolate) and cakes, which, as everyone knows, are frightfully fattening. To practice abstinence by mere strength of will is hard, and so the vast majority of women consult their doctors, or even specialists, in the hope of being entrusted with some secret or being told of some specific which will keep down their flesh without too much mortification. The specialist's consulting room is filled with society beauties, actresses and women who cut any kind of figure on the social stage, all waging war on their too, too solid flesh. He cuts off their port and chocolate and cakes in the afternoon, and the sacrifices imposed at luncheon are beyond belief. Sipping their mineral water and scowling at their dry sandwiches, women sadly discuss their weights and prospects. "I shall soon be a skeleton," says Antoinette. "I have lost eight pounds already, and by the end of the month it will be eight kilos, I expect." "Yes," replies Germaine, "and wasn't it awful to have to begin with three days without a scrap of food? I really don't know how I managed to hold out." If the craze continues, the salons of Paris and the fashionable receptions will be attended by crowds of spectres in gorgeous raiment, with no energy left for anything but talk. The only consolation is that the pendulum is sure to swing in the other direction sooner or later.

FASHIONABLE HAIRCUT FRS. 100.

As the season goes on, the cropped-head epidemic rages with increasing violence among Parisiennes, and all the fashionable coiffeurs who have acquired reputation in this branch of their art have long waiting lists. The ideal style of the moment is a close-shaven band on the nape of the neck, above which the cropped locks fall like a thick thatch, arranged to give considerable breadth to the top of the head as seen in profile. Mlle. Falconetti, a young actress who has made a hit in "La Fille Perdue" at the Théâtre des Arts and is already hailed as a future Réjane, has reduced all rivals to despair by coming out in what is admitted to be the finest specimen of the new style, and her coiffeur is of course much sought after. It costs Frs. 100 for a woman to get her hair cut properly, and as the operation has to be repeated at least once a month, the hairdressing fraternity has much cause to be grateful to the person, whoever he or she was, who introduced the new style. The most popular hair artist in Paris flies over to London every month to shear three or four up-to-date heads there, and soon all the chignons of France and England will be stowed away in the coiffeurs' boxes, to await the inevitable return to ringlets, coils or perhaps even buns.

CHINESE STUDENTS AT OXFORD

Mr. Chu Chao-hsin's Exhortations to the Young Brains Abroad

From Our Own Correspondent.

London, Nov. 20.

Mr. Chu Chao-hsin, Chinese Chargé d' Affaires in London, last Saturday attended the dinner of the Oxford Chinese Society, when there was a large assembly of both Chinese students and guests.

He said they were expecting more Chinese students to come to this country in the near future. The British Government had been kind enough to promise the remission of the Boxer Indemnity for the use of education. Under this arrangement he was sure a number of Chinese young men and young women would be supported by the fund for studying in this country. He had no doubt when they came over they would not overlook Oxford, because Oxford gave a welcome to learning of all kinds and because it welcomed students from all over the world. Oxford was attractive because of the high standing of its professors, and also because of its tolerance of all classes and all creeds; because of its relative cheapness of instruction and its high traditions of life and ideals. All these characteristics which it had preserved would continue to attract the foreign students. Chinese students now studying in this Great University had, therefore, the great advantage of the suspicious opening of their lives and great opportunities of benefiting both themselves and their Mother Country.

In China they had no such excellent institution of learning as Oxford University. He well know, however, that Oxford was famous not only because of the instruction it imparted in modern sciences, but also because of its branches of culture in ancient of studies. In this connexion, he wished to call the attention of Chinese students to the fact that they belonged to an ancient country, which possessed historical culture and intellectual characteristics. While studying abroad and benefiting by the appreciation of ancient studies they must not neglect their own literature, history, philosophy, etc. Of course, it had been their object in coming here to learn the Western Arts and modern sciences in which they were lacking. They should appreciate what they learn abroad for practical application to Eastern conditions.

After describing the old examination ystem in China, Mr. Chao said it was a good thing in the olden days when China's door was closed to the outside world, but it was rather out of use in these modern days in which sciences were needed in every branch of life. But, he felt it was unjustifiable to abandon entirely the old college system and examination system. From his conservative point of view he would say it would be advantageous to China to copy the system of Oxford University, which would suit China far better than the new system she had adopted.

It was and would be their duty to furnish in return something which could be beneficial to the Western world. In other words, they should make their intellectual studies better known to the West. They should adopt the principle of reciprocity mutual assistance in intellectual co-operation with the whole world. "By doing so, I am sure, we shall bring about a still better understanding and a still closer relationship between China and the whole world in general and between China and Great britain in particular."

BRIDES OF THE EAST

In China and Arabia

Some months ago the descendant of the Chinese emperors was wedded in Peking to the daughter of a Manchurian duke. Now that China is a republic, one might have expected a loss of interest in such an event. But presents streamed in from every corner of the vast country, and the President himself was represented by a particularly handsome one, accompanied by a letter in his own hand, carried by a special messenger. The procession was as elaborate as on any previous occasion, and many of the roads in Peking were strewn with the yellow "imperial" sand. In accordance with old custom, two secondary brides were given to the prince, in order to secure the succession, and one of these, a young and beautiful noblewoman, came forward voluntarily.

Turning to the account of a wedding in high circles in Arabia,, utterly different customs prevail. Very early marriages are frequent, and the bridegroom has to pay his father-in-law a sum which may be very high. The marriage is arranged entirely by the parents of the parties, and the bride remains invisible. In order to obtain an idea of her features, the bridegroom engages an old woman to go and see her bathing. This intelligent person is paid, however, by the bride's parents, and her account of the young lady's beauty, couched in language of Eastern floral exuberance, bears an exact relation to the amount which has been paid her.

The festivities begin immediately the "purchase-price" has been paid, though the contract was legally binding long before, as soon as the agreement was signed. Banquets in the bride's house follow one another, with many dishes especially required by convention, such as toasted mutton-kidneys, pheasants, artichokes. Dancers entertain the guests and are frantically applauded. The music, on drums, bagpipes, and flutes, seems to European ears very inharmonious. The bride and her companions sit meanwhile in upper chambers behind close lattices and look down on the party.

On the actual wedding day the bride fulfils old custom and bathes seven times; she is then carried in a palanquin seven times round her parental home. Accompanied by male guests, who cry to Heaven at every corner to preserve her, and who shoot an astonishing quantity of powder into the air from their rifles, she is now taken to the bridgroom's house, and on entering it is given a dish, a slice of bread, and a date, to indicate that she shall never want under this roof. Here, too, there is a banquet, and now, seven days after the beginning of the wedding ceremony, withdrawing into an inner room, the bride removes her veil, and the bridegroom sees her for the first time in his life. The old woman, one would imagine, keeps out of his way.

SPECIAL ARTICLES

NUMBERING THE DAYS

A Sermon Preached in Union Church, Shanghai, by the Rev. A. N. Rowland, on December 30, 1923

"So teach us to number our days that we may get us an heart of wisdom. Psalm 90.12 (R.V.)

If we read this psalm carefully we shall see that the psalmist was moved to this prayer by considering the frailty and brevity of human life. How small a man feels himself in a storm at sea, or in the solitude of a desert, or on a snowy mountain peak! Yet it is remarkable that when a man feels himself so small he also knows himself to be unspeakably precious. The reason is, I think, that though space may seem to overwhelm him by its vastness he still has to give account of time. When a man is drowning it is said that he passes the years of his life in review, because the way he has spent his time is a very part of him. Well may we pray "So teach us to number our days that we may get us an heart of wisdom!"

TYPES AND WISDOM.

I find three stages of thought behind this prayer. (1) True wisdom consists in the right management of life. (2) The right management of life requires the light of the common day. (3) The light of the common day is only given to the teachable heart.

First then, true wisdom is closely concerned with behaviour. That is what the Jews believed. That is what the Bible teaches. The wise men of the East were astrologers: the wise men of Greece were philosophers. But the Jews had their own type of wise men, as we see from a sentence in Jeremiah (c.18, v. 18) "The law shall not perish from the priest, nor counsel from the wiser nor the word from the prophet." In the Old Testament the wise men are represented by Proverbs, Ecclesiastes and Job. These teachers were not given to the study of nature or thought as with the Greeks. They believed that "the proper study of mankind is man," their wisdom kept close to conduct and the art of living. Their knowledge was practical—savoir faire as the French say.

Thus the Jew had scant respect for the Greek wisdom which tended to sophistry (just as his own righteousness turned to scrupulosity). It was the Jew in Paul as well as the Christian who denounced it in the opening of his first letter to the Corinthians. Dostoyevsky expressed a similar contempt for the Russian intellectuals. "You think yourselves true Europeans" he wrote, "but at bottom you have no culture. The people whom you propose to civilize with your Utopias is much more civilized than you, through Christ, before whom it kneels and who has saved it from despair."

But if we keep in mind the Jewish type of "wise man" we can see that our Lord fulfilled this role as truly as he stood in the line of the prophets. His Sermon on the Mount is full of pithy comments; and pointed sayings on human society. His brother James was the "wise man" in the New Testament, taking wisdom rather than faith as the keyword of the new religion. And see how practical was his idea of wisdom "It is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits." From the Bible standpoint the Christian faith is the embodiment of the true wisdom: it teaches and enables us to put the best into life and so get the most out of life. Thus Paul could say of his Lord, "Christ is made unto us Wisdom," and it is evidently a Christian prayer that we may be taught to get "heart of wisdom."

OUR DAY BOOKS.

(2) But if the right management of life is the true wisdom it depends upon the light of the common day. "So teach us to number our days," not pick out the festivals and red letter days. Any day may yield us some knowledge of the weakness of our nature, the treachery of our heart, the value of sympathy, the joy of doing good, the inexhaustible patience of God, and so put wisdom in our heart. Men study their day book at the end of the year with their eye on investments and the profit and loss account. But the larger day book is worth reading too, with its lessons that have come through our labour, our temptations, our friendships, our responsibilities and other channels that lie open day by day. There are many days that we count blank because they are marred by routine, or interruptions or disappointments, but from all of them we can win something of the real stuff of life.

And this brings us to a most important point. There is no unfair advantage to those who are lifted by good fortune above the ruck of common days, who can suit them to themselves with leisure and pleasure. It does not punish them with wisdom. Mr. Gladstone once said, "In almost every one of the big political controversies of the last 50 years—on the franchise, commerce, religion, slavery, these leisured classes, these educated classes, these titled classes, have been in the wrong." In the "Life and Letters of Walter Page," there is a pithy sentence to the same effect. "Our learned classes are the last to learn." I am not one to undervalue education, but we must beware lest we are hypnotized by the word. The education that does not get below a man's shoulders does not make for true wisdom. It is the whole man that needs to be drawn out and disciplined, not only his brain, and their larger education can only be given in the light of the common day, when the necessities of life call out all that a man has within him.

MINERS AND THEOLOGY.

Bishop Westcott was one of the most eminent theologians of the last generations, and all that the dons and books of Cambridge could give him he knew; but after some experience among the miners of Durban this is what he said, "The poor have much to teach us. They help us to understand the simplicity and breadth of human nature. Their experience throws light on the foundations of faith." That last sentence gives remarkable evidence, coming as it does from a great teacher for the value of the teaching of the ordinary day, but I will supplement it with another which also shows the dignity that may come to manhood through our common life.

Mr. Mason in his popular book called "Running Water" tells of a girl who after being subjected to the conventional training of a fashionable mother, got her chance of going to Switzerland. A mountaineer was telling her one day how the guides were willing to risk their lives for a stranger, and she could not understand it. (Indeed have we considered the implicit Christianity of such an act?) His friend replied, "I think these guides obeyed a law, not of any man's making, that what you know that you must do when human life is at stake." This is the wisdom of those who know the common life on the mountain side—who have the education of daily duty, and it makes a good deal of fancied wisdom look rather thin.

It is easy enough to lose heart at times because the days seem so common, so ordinary (that is, standing undistinguished in a row). They give us no chance to educate mind and imagination as we would like to do. It is right to have such a hunger, but what matters supremely is the education of the common day with its rubs and its wrestlings. The way we face our days makes us wise for life. What we are apt to call the ordinary grind is the sculpture of God. Life is a big lesson book and every day is a page from which we may get us a heart of wisdom.

But there is one more thing to be said. The light of the common day is only given to those that are teachable. In order to get the real value of our day we need to be taught. The wisdom is "from above" and as James says we have to pray for it. "So teach us to number our days." It is possible to have things before our very eyes without seeing them. A man will tramp through lovely scenery and only carry away an impression of the public houses he has visited. A motorist will flash through the countryside and only recall the sharp corner he had to negotiate. A traveller will cross continent and oceans and yet know no more of the world than what he has picked up at places that are seared by cosmopolitanism. You cannot know the country or the world by merely passing through them; you need to carry with you the wonder and expectancy of the child.

THE UNSEEING EYE.

So it is with our path in time through the common days. We may leave childhood far behind, pass through the midst of the years and arrive at old age without having gained much of life's wisdom, not knowing ourselves, not using our powers, not glad of our gifts, unable to win through the ordinary day with courage and good cheer. We need to have a teachable spirit in order to get the day's wisdom. The untaught man, misled by prejudice and opinion, walks in the circle of his own grievance, in the sparks of the fire he has himself created, and there is no illumination there.

We know what stands in the way. It is vanity and pride, it is self-will and selfishness. These clog and burden life with disappointment, disillusion and discouragement, which are simply the reaction of circumstance on a proud self-centred heart. But "to a surrendered soul" as someone has said "there can be no discouragement, for discouragement is only disenchanted egoism."

There is profound truth in the words "The meek will He guide in (their) judgment." Those who pray to be taught, in the spirit of children, who know they have everything to receive and that they are in the presence of a great Giver, these enjoy divine light in the common day and win a heart of true wisdom.

CHINA'S SEARCH FOR PEACE

II.—Reunification by Force: The "One Strong Man" Idea and Where It Breaks Down

From Rodney Gilbert.

Peking, Dec. 31.

The idea of the "one strong man," who will exterminate rivals, suppress civil war in a business-like manner and will set up a strong and responsible Government on his own authority, undoubtedly appeals very strongly to the imagination of the foreigner in China. It is safe to say that the majority of foreigners in China are advocates of reunification by force. The minority, who do not believe in it, have little faith in the evolution of peace through violence because they have failed to find the one strong man or because they do not believe that sufficient force could now be mustered to whip all of China into shape within a reasonable time. That it would be possible for a competent military leader with a small but efficient army to reconquer all of China within a very short time, very few foreigners doubt. They not only believe but they know that any American, British, European or Japanese division commander with a knowledge of modern warfare could take five Chinese divisions, train them six months and, in another six months, be absolute master of China. There may, somewhere in China, be a Chinese who can and will do the same, and every time a Chinese general appears who seems to qualify he has the strongest possible moral support from the entire foreign community in China. Frequent disappointments have, however, made this community very sceptical.

A SERIES OF FAILURES.

Those who have been in China no more than a few years will remember how many high hopes have been fixed upon Yuan Shih-kai, Tuan Chi-jui, Chang Hsun, Wu Pei-fu and Chang Tso-lin. Even Tang Chi-yao, T'an Yen-k'ai, Li Lieh-chun, Chen Chiung-ming, Hsiong Keh-wu, Feng Yü-hsiang and Dr. Sun Yat-sen have at one time or another been hailed by foreign friends as potential conquerors. The writer has helped to hail quite a fair proportion of these worthies and has many times squirmed under the chagrin that is the portion of an apostle of a false prophet.

After each disappointment in a prospective "strong man" the foreign residents in China suffer a reaction and come to believe that nothing is possible except through compromise, conciliation and conferences. They remind themselves that these, after all, are the characteristic Chinese means of settling all difficulties and that we are battling against Chinese nature in supporting any other scheme. So, for a time, we talk a lot of constitutionalism, conferences, democracy through provincial representation, and what not. And then a new figure appears on the stage brandishing a shining weapon and we are all advocates of despotism again.

The Chinese are in many different minds about this question of the "one strong man." There are many sincere radicals who believe that it would be a reactionary step which would not only retard the progress of the country but lose China much "face" abroad if she were to abandon her Republican programme and frankly accept a dictatorship. There are many others who do not believe that a permanent reconquest of China is now possible and who believe that a peace founded upon violence would not be a lasting peace.

PEOPLE'S WISHES PLAN.

There can be no doubt, however, that the real people, the farmers, small merchants and artisans, regard democracy as a crazy innovation which has brought the country nothing but unrest and want a strong Government. They want this because Chinese history and tradition teach them that a strong Government in China does not mean that the people are subjected to the tyrannical molestation of the authorities, but that the weight of the heavy hand really falls upon the soldiers and the official caste, who are the traditional enemies of the people! The people are therefore ready in all sincerity to kow-tow to any man who will suppress civil war, restore order and put an effective check upon the soldiers and officials who loot them in the name of one "ism" or another.

There can be no doubt that Chinese history and tradition give full authority for reunification by conquest and the rule of a strong central Government; nor can there be any doubt remaining that the Chinese people want nothing else and are prepared for nothing else. The major doubt in the Chinese mind, as well as in the foreign mind, is as to whether there is anyone in the field who can conquer and rule. Everyone is tired of experiments. Everyone wants to be sure of the next "one strong man." Everyone agrees that there is no one on the stage at this moment who qualifies. What is wanted is not a temporary peace but a permanent peace. The Chinese therefore want a master who has not only the ability to fight his way to the top and the ability to administer affairs when he has got there but also a master whom the nation can respect. The Chinese people know that Tuan Chi-jui is old and vacillating in his policy and always the dupe of unscrupulous advisers. They also know that he enjoys no real military power. They neither fear nor respect him and they know that their enemies of the official and military castes him.

The Chinese people know that Tsao Kun's military power is dependent upon the whims and fancies of a dozen subordinates. They know his personality, like him, but do not respect him. The Chinese conqueror who does not command respect begins to fall before he has fairly risen.

WU PEI-FU'S WEAKNESS.

They know that Wu Pei-fu will not assume responsibilities. Wu Pei-fu's fighting qualities command respect. Every Chinese knows that if Wu Pei-fu were to take the field himself against Szechuan, Kuangtung or Chê-kiang, he could be the conqueror of China in less than a year. But this does not help much unless they are assured that the conqueror is ready to assume the responsibility of governing the country. This responsibility Wu Pei-fu is not willing to assume, as he has said and demonstrated many times. He can fight as no other modern Chinese can fight, and he commands the respect due the scholar and the honest man, but he does not guarantee the permanency of any peace which he might establish because he simply will not rule. In his little Liang-Hu bailiwick he has failed miserably to suppress banditry and keep the peace. Lao Yang Jen's doings in Hupeh are an everlasting blot upon Wu Pei-fu's career. He says that he creates opportunities by playing the part of a broom. He sweeps away the enemies of the people and expects in some vague way that good government will spring up in the wake of the broom and justify his campaigns. As a broom he has been splendid but in no case has the immaculate régime which he expected sprung up in his wake. He is a disgruntled man and the people, for whom he has made really heroic efforts, despise him. He came nearer than any Chinese in modern history to being the benevolent strong men and has failed most signally. All because he simply will not govern. Witness Lao Yang Jen.

Chang Tso-lin is one who has not conquered and who would not be respected if he did. The people of China think that Sun Yat-sen is mad and wonder why the foreigner does not cut short his career, failing to appreciate the foreigner's position.

The complete break up of Yuan Shih-kai's old Peiyang Army, which Tuan Chi-jui and Feng Kuo-chang inherited, the sad loss of discipline in all military units and the general demoralization of nearly all bandit-soldier and soldier-bandit units in China have made it extremely difficult for any god to emerge from the machine and restore order. Yuan Shih-kai and Tuan Chi-jui failed while the machine was still in fairly good working order. Wu Pei-fu built up a fairly efficient new machine and, having emerged from it, did nothing but enhance confusion. The "one strong man" who now emerges will be tremendously handicapped because what little there is left of the machine in running order is in incompetent hands.

AN IMPOSSIBLE DEMAND.

The restoration of peace by force and the violent reunification of the country are indicated clearly enough by history, tradition and modern conditions. China has never within the past 2,000 years achieved anything like voluntary cohesion. Chinese officialdom has never learned to behave except under coercion. The people of China are not yet ready to coerce their own official and military castes. That the latter need a boss very badly is beyond dispute. That the people need a despotic Government no one argues. The Chinese people require less governing than any people on earth, but they require more protection from their governors than most. At this juncture it would appear that no one can protect the Chinese people against their own parasitical official class (plus their bandit brethren) but a despot or an im-

DEATH OF PHILIPPE MILLET

A Distinguished French Journalist

The death occurred unexpectedly last month of Mr. Philippe Millet, the well-known foreign editor of the "Petit Parisien." He was only 43 years of age, yet had made himself a leading member of that group of French diplomat journalists who have won so extraordinary a position in France since the war. He had several advantages. He was the son of a former Resident General in Tunis, and was, therefore, as it were born into diplomacy. His English was perfect, and still more remarkable was his knowledge of the English mind, which is generally quite unintelligible to foreigners. Consequently, though he was a defender of French policy, he alone of French journalists could express himself in formulas suited for British, and particularly British Liberal consumption.

After Mr. Poincaré's "victory" in the Ruhr, he was rewarded with the Legion of Honour by the Quai d'Orsay in conjunction with Mr. Jean Herbette and other diplomatic journalists of the orthodox press.

Mr. Millet had been foreign editor of the "Petit Parisien" since 1921. A year before he had become political director of "Europe Nouvelle," a weekly paper of marked Liberal tendencies, yet in all essentials quite orthodoxly patriotic. For several years he contributed anonymously an important diplomatic article signed "Un Diplomate" to the Paris "Midi." His first important newspaper job was that of London correspondent of the "Temps." That was in 1909. Two years later he returned to Paris as colonial editor of the "Temps." At the outbreak of war he took part as a lieutenant in the battle of Charleroi, where he was wounded. Afterwards he became liaison officer with the British army, and finally in 1917, was made head of the British press propaganda service, a task for which he was peculiarly suited.

JAPANESE IN CALIFORNIA

Hard Hit by Anti-Alien Law

As a result of the decision of the Supreme Court upholding as constitutional the California anti-alien land laws prohibiting Japanese owning or leasing lands, it is estimated that 50,000 of the 135,000 Japanese in California will either migrate to other States whose laws are less stringent or return to Japan, writes the "Morning Post's" correspondent at Washington on November 14. Between a million and a million and a half acres of some of the richest agricultural lands in California now leased to the Japanese must revert to their white owners, and the great vegetable producing industry of the States—eighty per cent. of which for the last 10 years has been in the hands of Japanese—must be abandoned. The Japanese not only produced fruits and vegetables, which is one of the great industries of California, but also are engaged in dealing with such produce wholesale and retail.

Throughout California there are thousands of Japanese keeping shops, some of them small, but many of considerable importance, and in all probability the Japanese must retire from mercantile business of every description—as the law which the Supreme Court has sustained makes it illegal for Japanese to enter into leases for their places of business.

There are said to be in California 40,000 children born of Japanese parents, who, under American law, are Americans, because the place of birth determines citizenship. It is a question whether American children can be deprived of their property rights, even although their parents cannot legally possess property. There is nothing, apparently, that the Japanese Government can do, as the Supreme Court held that California laws do not violate the Treaty with Japan, and it is within the power of the State to restrict the holding of property by aliens ineligible to citizenship under the national laws.

EARL'S DAUGHTER SEEKS WORK

Problems as Radio Man's Wife: The Cost of Running the Home

Like most housewives of the present day, Lady Pleasance McKenna—the daughter of the Earl and Countess of Stradbroke who married Mr. Owen McKenna, the P. and O. wireless operator—finds herself confronted with the usual heavy list of household expenses. In order to meet this growing expenditure she is anxious to start an embroidery and dressmaking business in London.

Lady Pleasance and her husband (now employed in the Otaphone department of Marconi House), who met under romantic circumstances on a voyage from Australia to Burma, are now living in a small third-floor flat off Oxford-street.

Mrs. Turquand, of Albion house, New Oxford-street, W., who is helping Lady Pleasance with her project, told a "Daily News" reporter recently that the earl's daughter is an excellent embroiderer, and she is appealing to her old friends to help her in the scheme to maintain a home of her own.

"Lady Pleasance is quite happy," said Mrs. Turquand, "but she wants to start this little embroidery and dressmaking business in order to keep the new home going, and she hopes some of her friends will set the ball rolling by sending along a few orders."

SEA ROMANCE.

Mr. McKenna is a colliery waggoner's son, of Stane, near Shotts, a Lanarkshire mining village, where the young couple were married last May. It was said at the time of the wedding that Lady Pleasance's identity was not revealed to him until one day on the promenade deck of the P. and O. liner they exchanged autographs.

Lady Pleasance is the eldest daughter of the Earl of Stradbroke, the Governor of Victoria, who returned to the Antipodes after a visit to London in the spring.

GREAT BRITAIN AND THE ARABS

Negotiations with King Hussein

Dr. Naji el Assil, who is back again in London as representative of King Hussein in connexion with the negotiations that have been proceeding for eighteen months regarding the treaty between the Governments of Great Britain and the Hedjaz, expressed himself to a representative of the "Morning Post" as hopeful of their outcome. It will be remembered that outstanding questions with the Arab Hashimite Kingdom have their origin in the agreements concluded in 1915, and cover a wide field, embracing the status of the Arab Provinces of the prewar Turkish Empire, including Palestine, Iraq, Transjordania, and the other States of the Arab Peninsula.

The Arab in conversation emphasized the necessity for the Arabs that the doubts which have arisen since the Armistice should be dissipated. He declares that neither King Hussein nor any other Arab questions the special interests of Great Britain in the Arab Middle East, though the Arabs, in the light of their own experience, are inclined to look with suspicion on the Mandates of the League of Nations. Such dissatisfaction as the Arabs have felt in the [illegible] from the fact that the Allies have not recognized the indubitable sentiments of national unity which were already in existence before the war and have been enormously strengthened by everything that has happened since. He agrees that it is premature to-day to talk of achieving a real Arab unity in Asia, but at the same time Arab policy never loses sight of that end. In such a movement the Hedjaz must always play a part, not the less important for being in some measure sentimental. The Arabs might have done some things which to the practised politicians of this country seemed odd, but they had learnt their lesson in the school of experience, and their policy was now based on the facts of the actual situation.

He added that he believed the friction which had occurred at the last pilgrimage between the Egyptian and Hedjazian Governments over the establishment of hospitals for the Egyptian pilgrims was much less acute, and he felt sure a settlement would be reached before next year's pilgrimage.

THE REAL BABY DOLL

Skeleton, Flesh, and Skin

Before the war the Kathe Kruse dolls, made by the wife of Herr Max Kruse, the German sculptor, had become famous all over the world, writes E. I. in the "Manchester Guardian." If they were not on sale in all countries, people in the most distant lands had read about them and seen pictures of the delightfully child-like little creatures. They are now being shown for the first time in England in Harrod's toy department, where Mme. Kruse may sometimes be found, ready to explain how she came to design them.

Herr Kruse had very definite ideas about the part dolls ought to play in a child's life. He also believed that young children learned a great deal through feeling things. He would not let his own seven small children play with the ordinary dolls, which were either hard all over or soft in the body with hard heads liable to fracture. So as the children must have dolls, the mother used to make them, at first in a very crude style of odds and ends of materials. Gradually she developed the idea of the dolls which now probably excel all other dolls. They have, she says, just like real babies, a skeleton, flesh, and skin. That is to say, the framework is of flexible wire which will stand any amount of bending about. The framework is wrapped around with padding which is carefully built up to the natural shape and covered, in the case of the more expensive dolls, with cloth which is water-proof but does not look it. Mme. Kruse makes a point of the fact that the heads are of the same material as the body. It is absurd, she thinks, to give a child a doll with a cotton body and a china or composition head.

The bodies are so flexible that they can be placed in any natural position. The doll baby can lie on its back and try to bite its toes, or it can lean affectionately against a toy sheep, its lissome body wrinkling just as a child's would do, its arms curved naturally about the toy.

MODELLED FROM LIFE.

Mme. Kruse employs about 200 people. The majority of them make the dolls' clothes—quaint, pretty costumes, all made by hand,—while 65 are employed in making the dolls. Each of these is individual. At first Mme. Kruse used her own children as her models, and every doll is still modelled from a living child. Some have plump, jolly little faces, others look so wistful that any small child would want to mother them. Mme. Kruse herself paints all the faces, and the dolls represent babies and children up to four years of age.

The most expensive dolls are 17 inches in height, but for younger children there are the rather smaller "dangler" dolls, whose arms are sewn on at the shoulder so that they can be swung loosely. Mme. Kruse has noticed that every artist painting a picture of a child with a doll makes the doll dangle limply. These "dangler" dolls are very cuddlesome, and Mme. Kruse thinks they are so much loved by small children that they help to develop the sense of motherliness, which to her idea is not developed enough in the world to-day.

The third type of doll is a tiny creature for a doll's house. Hitherto, while every care has been lavished on the rooms and the furnishing of doll's houses, the small people who live in them have been neglected. Any sort of stiffly-made doll would do provided it were small enough to match the chairs. The Kathe Kruse residents are expensive, but they are beautifully made, even to the separate tiny fingers. One little lady shown has a head modelled from Herr Kruse's bust of a pretty American girl. The body was modelled so carefully and was so flexible that it might have served as an artist's miniature lay figure.

FILMS INSTEAD OF VIVISECTION

How the Cat Always Falls on Its Feet

The possibility that vivisection may be largely eliminated by the use of cinema pictures of standard medical experiments is suggested by M. Henri Langier, a Paris professor. There are, he says, at least forty standard experiments now demonstrated with living animals which could be better explained to students by films.

"The greatest value of the film in medical instruction," said a London doctor to a "Daily News" reporter "lies in the use of ultra-rapid pictures.

"At an exhibition there was a short film of the falling cat experiment, showing how it is that a cat when dropped from a height always alights on its feet. The ultra-rapid camera records the movement of every muscle.

"Medico-films, too, are much more important than merely lessening vivisection. It should be possible for students to follow every phase of a disease."

THE PERFECT LIFE

20 Men Taking Pills for Two Months

Two groups of students, each comprising 10 men, are now engaged in living the perfect life at the Hahnemann Medical College, Philadelphia.

The phrase is that of the physicians. Other people might have other views.

For two months the 20 men are to be fed on pills. Some of the pills will be blank and others will contain small but powerful doses of drugs. The taker will be left in ignorance as to whether he has drawn a blank or a prize—at any rate, for a time. Each man will keep a diary and record from hour to hour the state of his feelings.

It is hoped that one of the groups may light on a drug of real therapeutic value, produced from some common herb or basic acid hitherto unutilized. The other hopes to obtain scientific data which will greatly increase the therapeutic value of a recently-discovered remedy.

ANNUAL STOCKTAKING

SALE

Commencing JANUARY 3rd, 1924.

25% Discount

STATIONERY—FICTION—BIOGRAPHY—GAMES—BOYS' AND GIRLS' BOOKS—CHILDREN'S TOY BOOKS—POETRY AND DRAMA—RELIGIOUS BOOKS

Watch the Special Dollar Counter

A special catalogue of Educational Books (price reduced 20-60%) will be forwarded on request.

EDWARD EVANS & SONS, LTD.

30 North Szechuen Road, Shanghai, 'Phones North 780-782

137 Victoria Road, Tientsin.

CHINA'S BABY RACE CLUB

What Liqueurs have Achieved in Honan: a Truly Sporting Venture in the Wilds

Form a Correspondent.

Chiaotso, Honan, Jan. 4.

Could serious racing be considered in the interior of China? The presentation of a cup, to be competed for in a cross-country race, was responsible for the question ever being raised at all. One must talk about something at the most interesting of dinner parties, but when one's fellow guests consist of members of a small community whose daily walk in life has for years past brought them into close contact with each other, some excuse can be found for the most absurd of table conversational topics.

A Race Club at Chiaotso, 40 miles from the "Nowhere" which constitutes the most centrally situated station on the Kin-Han Railway: A Race Club at a mining camp, tucked away on the central western border of the Province, on the foothills leading up to the plateau of Shansi, with a shifting population of some 60 foreigners—men, women, and children—one half of whom had never even witnessed a coast race meeting! It was a proposition sufficient, one would think, to deter the most optimistic of the half dozen or so enthusiasts, embryonic "Champions" owners, impelled by dreams of fabulous stakes to be won, the offspring of our host's most excellent cocktails and more excellent dinner. "Ah, but a man's reach should exceed his grasp; or what's 'the public' for!"

A DINNERTIME PROJECT.

And thus it happened. The Honan Race Club was conceived in a cocktail, laboured during dinner, and was born in a liqueur glass! It's projectors wisely deemed it necessary to interest as many uncles and aunts in the child as the community afforded, and to this effect a general meeting of the members of the staffs of the Pekin Syndicate, Ld., the C. G. Railways, Tao-Ching Line, and the Fu Chung Corporation, was called at the Honan Club on November 13, 1921. The touching eloquence of our well chosen chairman appealed to all hearts—and pockets—and the child was assured of a future ere it's swaddling bands, so to speak, were shed. A committee of five of its more prominent sponsors was promptly empowered to find a home for it, and to devise ways and means for its immediate evolution. By December 7, such had been the zeal of the elected few, that the site for a five furlong course had been secured in the immediate vicinity of the mines compound. Several mystified though somewhat arbitrary land-owners had been induced to listen to reason, and a further meeting of the community was assured that within the course of a few weeks the Honan Race Club would become au fait accompli. Surely enough, within three weeks, the course was declared open for training.

To those at the coast whose racing experience is restricted to watching perfectly trained ponies racing around a perfectly laid track, on perfectly level ground encircled by beautiful white railings, it would be as well to add that our ponies were discards from the coast, our course, owing to the hilly nature of the country, a slight imitation of a Bateman drawn billiard table minus the cloth, but with corners almost as sharp, and that a hedge, the chief feature of which appeared to be thorns of from two to four inches in length (said thorns played the very deuce with one's riding boots) usurped the place of rails. But the economic worth to the club of that thorn hedge can only be judged by those who, from a knowledge gleaned from years spent in the interior, know how it is the interpretation of meum and tuum in the mind of the wandering coolie. As it is, the hedge has provided fuel for many a fire for the poorer folk of the neighbourhood. What would have happened to loose rails?

THE FIRST GYMKHANA.

On January 7, 1922, the first inaugural gymkhana was staged. The latter word is used intentionally, inasmuch as it was afterwards discovered that an army of country folk, estimated by some to be 10,000 strong, had turned up in the hope of witnessing a circus! The only performance approximating to Western conceptions of the latter was that provided by local farmers and landowners in an event specially introduced for their benefit. About a dozen cart ponies were walloped around the course by their farmer owners to the huge applause of the multitude. It is to hoped that the stake money of $30 divided between the riders of the placed ponies compensated for the enforced rest of the animals after the race! As far as serious racing was concerned, owing to a dearth of ponies and the untrained condition of most, only two flat events were held. The races were run under catch weights and were won by two discards from Peking stables. The whole field participated in a cross-country event on the following day, the race being won by a member of the sporting community of Chengchow, Honan.

Cash sweeps and an improvised totalizator proved worthy of the attention paid by the committee to this commercial, though very essential, side of racing. The meeting resulted in a small nett profit to the club, much to the jubilation of its enthusiastic supporters. Our Chinese friends having shown a marked enthusiasm for the game, further meetings of the community were held and Chinese assistance to the committee voted, with immediate benefit to all concerned. The committee promptly decided to hold two official race meetings per year in accordance with the programmes of the older clubs at the coast.

By April, 1922, when the first official Spring Meeting was held, the club membership had grown to more than 70, both foreign and Chinese, and several prominent local Chinese had joined the ranks of the owners. Foreign owners were forthcoming from Peking and Chengchow, in addition to Chiaotso, and by the autumn of 1923 the field had increased to some 20 odd ponies, with a fair sprinkling of griffins. The $5 cash sweep ticket sales increased from about 400 chances for the first official Spring Meeting to 1,400 in the spring of the following year. This figure would have been considerably increased at the recent Autumn Meeting had not several lists destined for Kaifengfu, that "Corner House" of cash sweep winners, mysteriously gone astray. The club distributes 5,000 chances to about 150 points in the interior and on the coast. The work entailed in educating purely provincial Chinese up to an appreciation of the element of luck sometimes attached to the speculation of the nimble dollar is at last meeting with the success it merits. It was found necessary to explain in detailed Chinese on the back of each sweep list just exactly what the Honan Race Club was, the meaning of the term "Champions," why a cash sweep was held, and how it was drawn. Perhaps the finest explanation, however, rested in the fact that one sweep after another was won by Chinese. The only prize ever won in the big sweep by one of its Chiaotso foreign supporters amounted to $100 paid to him for drawing a qualified pony.

CHINESE ENTHUSIASM.

The meetings are attended by officials, both military and civil, from Kaifengfu and other large towns in the Province, and it is a fact worthy of note that a scheme, which in certain circumstances might justify condemnation, is doing more to cement friendship in a commercial and sporting sense with our provincial Chinese friends than columns of newspaper articles, public speeches, or candidates for the Presidency. Our Chinese supporters have proved themselves to be generous sportsmen in every sense of the word. About 60 per cent of our members are Chinese, and 50 per cent. of the owners are Chinese also. Our cash sweeps and totalizator are nobly supported by them, and it is due to this support that the club has weathered its pioneer years. A special request, emanating from Chinese owners, has induced the committee to hold a single day's Gymkhana Meeting on February 9 next, during the New Year holidays. The financial success of the venture has been guaranteed by our Chinese friends; yet two years ago racing was practically unknown in the Province.

Work is at present proceeding on a new seven furlong course, club house, stands, etc.,—a generous gift made to the club—and, on the whole, with the assured goodwill of the Chinese, we are fairly safe in asserting that the Honan Race Club has come to stay.

There are certain qualifications attached to the running of ponies which were deemed necessary in the interests of small owners. No pony, a previous winner at the coast, is allowed to compete. This has had the effect of diverting the attention of owners to the purchasing of griffins, on the price paid for which there is no restriction beyond the common sense one that our stake money does not permit of fancy prices being paid for ponies. The mercenary side of racing is not as pronounced as at the coast, owners being more than satisfied if the stake money won compensates for the cost of keeping the ponies. They are, of course, dreaming of the time in the, let us hope, not too distant future, when they will make money, but meanwhile the club is still regarded as a child to be humoured, and we are amply repaid for the sport it provides for us, and the knowledge that we are doing our bit towards overcoming whatever lingering prejudice still may exist in the province against foreigners.

The membership fee has been fixed at the low figure of $10 per annum, there being no fee charged when joining the club. There are approximately 100 members. Mr. John P. Kenrick, managing director of the Peking Syndicate, Ld., is President, with Mr. Wang Ching-fang, joint general manager of the Fu Chung Corporation, Vice-President. Mr. E. W. Fitchford, co-manager with Mr. Wang, has been the moving spirit in the club throughout, and has been nobly supported in his onerous task by a committee formed of foreign and Chinese members of the local companies.

AN event of interest to Far Eastern dwellers took place in England on November 13 last, when (states a Home paper) Mr. Claude William Kinder, C.M.G., Mandarin of the Red Button, M.I.C.E., of Bracken, Churt, was married at St. Saviour's Church, Guildford, to Miss Mary Elizabeth Bonshor, of Guildford, fourth daughter of Mr. Bonshor, of Bottesford, Leicestershire.

MANCHURIAN lotus seeds 500 years old have been made to grow in the laboratory of Johns Hopkins University at Baltimore under the work of the Japanese scientist, Ichiro Ohga, says an outport paper. These seeds were found under layers of peat, some of them 15 feet deep, on the edge of the Gobi Desert. The children in those parts dig these seeds up and eat them.

COL. Charles Swinboe, F.L.S., F.Z.S., F.E.S., late of the Bombay Staff Corps, the distinguished authority on Indo-Malayan and other Asiatic lepidoptera, died at his residence, Avonmore Road, West Kensington, on December 2, at the age of 86. A count made in 1914 showed that his collection (since augmented) of heterocera—Indo-Malayan, Australian, Chinese and Japanese—comprised 431 types and 540 co-types, nearly 7,000 species, and over 40,000 specimens.

A CHINESE FLOWER-BOOK

In 1783 Ch'en Hao-tzu, who lived beside the Western Lake at Hangchow, and called himself the Flower Hermit, published a gossipy little work on gardening and country pursuits, under the title of "The Mirror of Flowers." It is the type of a class often to be seen in the hands of Chinese readers. The preface was written by himself:—

"From my youth upwards I have cared for nothing save books and flowers. Twenty-eight thousand days have passed over my head, the greater part of which has been spent in poring over old records, and the remainder in enjoying myself in my garden among plants and birds."

The Chinese excel in horticulture, and the passionate love of flowers which prevails among all classes is quite a national characteristic. A Chinese, however, has his own particular standpoint. The vulgar nosegay or the plutocratic bouquet would have no charms for him. He can see, with satisfaction, only one flower at a time. His best vases are made to hold a single spray, and large vases usually have covers perforated so as to isolate each specimen. A primrose by the river's brim would be to him a complete poem. If condemned to a sedentary life, he likes to have a flower by his side on the table. He draws enjoyment, even inspiration, from its petals. He will take a flower out for a walk, and stop every now and again to consider the loveliness of its growth. So with birds. It is a common thing on a pleasant evening to meet a Chinaman carrying his birdcage suspended from the end of a short stick. He will stop at some pleasant corner outside the town, and listen with rapture to the bird's song. But to the preface.

Our author goes on to say that in his hollow bamboo pillow he always keeps some work on his favourite subject.

"People laugh at me, . . . but surely study is as proper as for gardening, that is simply a rest. . . . What does Tao Ch'ien say?—

'Riches and rank, I do not love,
I have no hopes of heaven above'
. . . . Besides, it is only in hours of leisure that I devote myself to the cultivation of flowers."

Ch'en Hao-tzu then runs through the four seasons, showing how each has its especial charm. . . He then proceeds to deal with times and seasons, showing what to do under each month, precisely as our own garden-books do. After that come short chapters on all the chief trees, shrubs, and plants of China, with hints how to treat them under diverse circumstances, the whole concluding with a separate section devoted to birds, animals, fishes, and insects. Among these are to be found the crane, peacock, parrot, thrush, kite, quail, mainah, swallow, deer, hare, monkey, dog, oats, squirrel, goldfish—first mentioned by Su Shih.

"Upon the bridge the livelong day
I stand and watch the goldfish play"— bee, butterfly, glowworm, etc.

Altogether there is much to be learnt from this Chinese White of Selborne, and the reader lays down the book feeling that the writer is not far astray when he says. "If a home has not a garden and an old tree, I see not whence the every-day joys of life are to come."—Ch'en Hao-tzu (Eleventh Century) Translated by Herbert A. Giles.

A PAUPER PASSES

By shouting coolies swayed, amidst the din
And traffic of the street, a casket rude.
Atop, worn shoes and ragged coat. Within,
The lifeless form is borne to solitude.
No paper pageantry, nor boast of fame,
No gong, no pipes, his sorry passing mark.
No flaunting, silken banner to proclaim
His humble virtues. Forth, into the dark,
His spirit wanders. Here, behold but twain
To mourn him. One, a puny, frightened child,
Clings to his mother's hand as she, in vain,
Sends forth her note of lamentation wild.
On tortured feet, her gaunt, starv'd frame she drags,
And ill essays the bearers' pace to meet.
The careless wind makes sport of her poor rags:
And dust, blown swirling from the unkempt street,
Contaminates, withal, the scanty dole
Of rice that shall sustain him in his quest.
The rav'nous child, his gaze upon the bowl,
Bethinks him of the night that, minus rest,
Shall torture him, afresh, in hunger's grasp.
Yet, sentient of terror of the dead,
Restrains the will to snatch. Renews his clasp
Upon her hand and stumbles on, ahead.

R. R. L. F.

FURLOUGH

Attention of intending travellers is drawn to the New Route Across Canada now available. Through most picturesque parts of the famous Rockies. New comfortable trains—specially constructed observation cars.

The Canadian National Railways operate from Coast to Coast in Canada—touch every principal city in the Dominion and many in the U.S.A.

SPECIAL FARES FOR MISSIONARIES

Through bookings—Any Steamship Line

Literature and full information furnished

The National Way

Canadian National Railways

GLEN LINE BUILDING

Shanghai Tel. C. 6973

paced alien régime. In theory therefore the idea of the "one strong man" is essentially sound. In application it is feeble because, in the first place, the man has yet to be found: because, in the second place, the machinery which would have been convenient to the hand of a strong man a few years ago is now almost completely broken down: and because, in the third place, both the Chinese people and the outside world are so ardently eager for peace in China that they cannot be expected to wait for either the strong man or for the evolution of new machinery of conquest. These considerations therefore force even the most impatient to consider other schemes and other peace nostrums.

Is There Any Hope in a Conference?

Jan. 1.

Very few Chinese who have sat in conferences or who have watched them closely have much faith in them. The writer has talked during the past few months with a number of prominent persons who either participated in the 1919 peace conference in Shanghai or were associated with the participants. Their unanimous opinion is that such gatherings are absolutely futile. All other officials say that a conference might succeed in restoring peace on this condition; but the men who were in Shanghai in 1919 when Chu Chi-chien and Tang Shao-yi represented the North and South respectively say flatly that nothing whatever can come from such a conference but new causes for friction and increased bad feeling.

The conditions which those who pretend to endorse the peace conference idea attach to their approval are in most cases more discouraging than a flat rejection of the proposal would be because they reveal the insincerity of most of the highest officials who would automatically be parties to such a conference and prove that none of them is willing to endorse a peace agreement which could possibly be satisfactory to any of the others. Marshal Tuan Chi-jui says there can be no peace through compromise until Wu Pei-fu and Tsao Kun have spent their energies and are either collapsed or on the point of collapse. Wu Pei-fu says it is a fine idea but that the time for a conference is not yet ripe. He must first have time to finish his campaigns in the West and South and eliminate his enemies, after which he will be ready to confer with whomever or whatever is left on the subject of peace. It is to be presumed that if any other force were to rise up in the meantime and challenge his absolute control of all China he would have to overwhelm this new force before could consider any discussion of peace. Tsao Kun, now that he is president, is magnanimously ready to make peace with anyone who will come to Peking and submit to his authority. Sun Yat-sen believes that armies, parties and individuals who actually come face to face with him will promptly recognize his divine right to rule China and make it over according to his own pattern and will fall on their faces in subject submission. Did not Tuan Chi-jui submit to him? And did not Chang Tso-lin "submit" to him? He says he is ready to attend a conference personally because he fully expects that he has only to take his place in the assembly to dominate it.

The whole situation is that no political or military leader who has power left or who hopes to acquire any power wants to sit in a conference until all the cards are in his hands and all the others hold nothing. Those who hold virtually no cards, like the Anfu folk, want to postpone the conference until their rivals are in the same position. A compromise means giving something away. No political leader is going to take the trouble to go to a conference and wrangle with a lot of people whom he detests unless he has nothing to give away and everything to get. And what is more, no leader is going to sit in a conference with the press and the general public witnesses to the proceedings if he has hope of getting what he wants in any other way or if he can negotiate when he must negotiate, in secret. The fewer witnesses there are to a compact the more easily it is broken when it is convenient to break it. Wu Pei-fu would never attend a conference in spirit of compromise unless he were thoroughly beaten and were convinced of it—two very different propositions. When Wu Pei-fu is so badly beaten that he admits defeat he will probably be in the Chinese Valhalla and will not be available in the flesh. Chang Tso-lin may be ready to come to a quiet, unostentatious agreement with the Chihli faction so that he may have more time to devote to domestic problems, but any such agreement will be made with the idea of breaking it at the earliest favourable opportunity and neither side will want to make the general public a third party to the contract.

Finally, the very large number of lesser persons for whom peace would mean extinction must also be taken into account. These underlings, who are in so many camps the powers behind the throne, could be trusted to move heaven and earth to make any conference ineffectual.

Yet, with all these objections, a conference leading to peace in China is not wholly impossible. One can imagine conditions under which the men enjoying real power in China could be brought together in one room, locked in it like so many jurymen and told that they would not be released until they came with a binding agreement in their hands. At the present moment these conditions are two only. A sufficiently serious threat of foreign intervention might prompt a conference in which peace would be hastily evolved and so might a sufficiently serious threat of a fundamental revolution.

Of the two, there is more to be hoped from a reaction against foreign intervention than from a reaction to the pressure of Chinese public opinion. And yet a conference in which the participants were forced by the general public to come to some sort of an agreement would be the only kind of a conference which could guarantee China anything like permanent peace. Lacking an emperor or an all powerful dictator there can be no effective check upon the official classes of any country. Lacking such an effective check, the political and military leaders in China will never want peace badly enough to come together, compromise and lay the foundations of a permanent peace. No one of them will enter into an agreement to curtail his own power, weed the rogues out of his own following or disband his troops until he has been moved to it by fear of the people and by respect for public opinion.

The fear of a dictator or of an emperor would, of course, breed the same humility and the same desire for peace, but a dictator or an emperor who had instilled sufficient respect for his authority into the Chinese official caste would not need to call conferences unless it were to call all the chronic trouble makers together and give them a piece of his mind.

THE THREAT OF FOREIGN AGGRESSION.

A threat of foreign aggression would probably be more immediately effective in stimulating a desire for peace among the official classes than any other pressure that could be brought to bear. The bitterest rivals would hasten to unite and make common cause against a sufficiently determined assault upon "China's sovereign rights." Very few Chinese officials are patriotic in a broad sense. They show little enough consideration for one another's rights, less for the rights of the people, and no care at all to this generation for their country's welfare, prosperity and reputation. But in the narrow Chauvinistic sense all Chinese are intensely patriotic. They would all rather have the country, or China's commerce, or the ports or the public revenues mismanaged in the most disgraceful fashion by their most vicious officials than submit to the most benevolent form of foreign control. It is therefore not unlikely that if the disturbers of the peace in China, whether politicians, militarists or bandits, were convinced the Powers were seriously contemplating the restoration of order through armed invasion and intervention, there would be conferences all over the country, banditry would cease and peace would be restored.

TEMPORARY RE-UNION.

It is doubtful, however, whether such a consummation would be in the best interest of either China or of the Powers interested in China. Reunification under such a stimulus would be nothing but a temporary alliance former by a number of men with no real desire for peace whom the Powers would then have to recognize or remove. If the menace were a passing menace, the resultant peace would certainly be a passing peace. Chint would experience no permanent relief while the Powers concerned would have built up a league of bitterly anti-foreign potentates who would incite the entire population to an anti-foreign fury. Such a development would be no more beneficial to foreign trade and other foreign relations with China than was the former alliance former between the Manchu Imperial court and the Boxers. If threats of foreign aggression were taken so seriously that the Chinese leaders forgat their differences and agreed in a conference to restore peace throughout China' a situation would have been created which could result in nothing but intervention or the withdrawal of all foreigners from China. Intervention has its advocates but it has nothing to do with the voluntary reunion of China through a peace conference.

WHERE PUBLIC OPINION STANDS.

The restoration of peace under the pressure of public opinion sometimes seems to be very near and sometimes seems a long way off. Public opinion (with a good deal of moral support from the Shanghai foreign community) forced Kiangsu and Chêkiang to make a peace agreement which is much more a pledge to the public of good behaviour than any sign of love and trust existing between the militarists. Public opinion may within a very short time force similar agreements upon many other provinces and their military bosses and thereby rob the trouble-making underlings of their positions of influence and take most of the snap out of the political game. But public opinion is still a feeble force in China compared with money and arms. It failed to keep Tsao Kun out of the presidency. It failed to avenge Li Yuan-hung. It has failed to stop Wu Pei-fu's campaigns in the West and South. It has failed to prompt the militarists anywhere to serious bandit suppression. It has failed to evict Sun Yat-sen and company from Canton. In fact its failures are numerous, consistent and conspicuous, while its victories are few and isolated. That the power of public opinion is growing is beyond dispute and that the number of officials who are sensitive to it is growing is everywhere apparent, but it still looks as though a successful peace conference forced upon the political and military leaders by the will of the people were a long way off. Yet this is the only kind of a conference which could bring anything like permanent peace.

IF LEADERS MET.

It has been suggested that the Powers might "invite" the big leaders from various parts of China to a conference out of which some sort of a peace would be squeezed by the weight of both Chinese and foreign opinion.

This is an idea which cannot be rejected lightly, but there are many reasons for thinking that it would not work and that if it did work it would not insure a permanent peace. Every big leader with his own ambitions or his own obstinate scheme for restoring order would be very loth to attend such a gathering and would take every possible step to defeat the ends of the conference if he attended after he had tried in every possible way to avoid going. He would plead that he could not leave his post and at the same time retain his authority. He would express distrust of his neighbours in his absence. He would offer to send representatives which would be futile. He would carry on elaborate propaganda among the people to show that the invitation was a veiled threat and that the conference was nothing but a step towards international control. This the people would eagerly believe and would howl themselves hoarse with fury.

CHECK ON OFFICIALS NEEDED.

And if such a conference were to succeed, it could evolve no more than a peace based upon a fixed division of the fields of exploitation. It would put the Powers in the position of recognizing each potentate who signed the document as the rightful kinglet of a given domain. The government evolved would be a league of licensed exploiters ruling without popular consent and unchecked within their respective fields by any power above or below them. The very invitation issued by the Powers to the individual rulers would be a recognition of their independence and their divine right as little kings. The whole moral effect would be decentralizing and would be against the re-establishment of an efficient central organization enjoying real authority over all parts of the country and all factions. The uncontrolled parties to the agreement evolved and having no real desire for peace certainly would not abide long by their agreements. It all comes back to the same thing in the end: effective checks must be put upon China's official classes from within or from without, and until such checks have been established it is as futile to hope for lasting peace and good government from a conference of Tuchuns and politicians as it would be to arrange for the care of a herd of sheep by summoning a conclave of the park leaders of the wolves that preyed on the herd. Barring a conference under foreign pressure, there will be nothing resembling peace through conferences in China until the people themselves want peace so badly and demand it so loudly that their rulers will be afraid to give them anything else. This seems like a remote prospect but, as we are so often forced to say, in China one can never tell. Meanwhile everyone who keeps the subject alive through discussion is helping to bring the prospect a little nearer.

ANAESTHESIA

It may have been caused by a fresh cherry, which had evaded a close supervision, or perhaps due to my being unaccustomed to drinking real gin, but it was immediately after I had drunk that last cocktail that, in cricketing parlance, I caught it sharply, low did I. The jolly old appendix was also bent on imbibing the Christmas air; it was feeling merry and bright, and clearly wakening up to a keen realization of the festive round.

∴

Can you come round now, Doctor?

∴

The same afternoon I was in Hospital, safely tucked into bed, buoyed up by the cheering thought that I was to be operated upon on the morrow, and that Christmas would be spent in bed. Above the hum of distant traffic came the sound of rumbling laughter—a cook turkey gobbled three times!

∴

Dreaming when Dawn was in the East'run sky;
I heard a voice from in my bedroom cry:
Lift up your head, O Scot! and drink this wine;
Its fair tae ken that your puir throat is dry.
Those who have tasted of Manhattan Gin,
Of Hongkew whisky, vodka from Harbin;
Alike to all the taste shall be the same;
But this? C.O. has neither kith nor kin.

∴

Zero was at 8.30 a.m., and at 8.20 a solemn procession entered my room, headed by a high table mounted on wheels, and pushed by an expressionless Celestial. I was helped on to this table; carefully covered over with blankets: there was a general about-turn, and—the march to the operating theatre had begun. I had a glimpse of a wide expanse of pure white walls, on which the winter sun shone brightly: introduced myself slowly and methodically to the three surgeons in attendance: gave what I hope was a cheery nod in the direction of a pleasant-featured Sister, and settled down the operating table . . . . The pad was set. . . . one inhaled easily of the God-given fumes to kill pain. . . . felt oneself slipping into space . . . . the beat of a thousand pinions was in my ears. . . . and then I heard a voice—my own—telling the anæsthetist to take that damned pad off my face. The same voice continued, unemotionally, slowly and distinctly, "Do-you-know-Doctor-why-you - resemble - one - of - Jeffery-Farnol's-heroes?" "No," came back a voice out of the Edge of Beyond, "I do not." "Because-you are - searching - for - the - Definite-Object."

∴

. . . . As I entered a vast hall, in which were garaged thousands of motor-cars, of every conceivable size and design, a great roar of derisive laughter went up to the domed roof. Countless salesmen grinned at me with their Bateman-like features, and another burst of sardonic laughter almost rent the roof in twain, when one of their number remarked so distinctly, "He could not drive a motor scooter!" My eyes filled with angry tears. Suddenly, by enchantment, I found that a brand new Tank was at my side, and my school chum was saying to me, "Crawl in, Jimmie, an' we'll soon pit th' kybosh on the lot." And we did! I have never seen such a hurrying, such a scurrying in all my life. Cars flew round and round that vast enclosure, like angry bees from a dyke, disappeared out at windows, doors, and even soared through the roof windows, all at incredible speed; every car full of motionless salesmen, every car in the charge of a statuesque driver. . . . We were in an operating theatre, spectators of a major operation and, when the surgeon looked up, I remarked to my chum that he was the gentleman who had examined me. My chum looked strangely at me and then said, "Who is that on the table? He looks very like you." I could not deny it, and then the truth dawned upon me, and I burst into a fit of uncontrollable laughter. "How funny!" I said to my chum. "The Surgeon has made a mistake: HE THINKS HE IS OPERATING UPON ME!"

∴

I opened my eyes and looked round. Gone were the surgeons, the high table on wheels, the expressionless Celestial, the kindly shaft of sunlight that cast its welcome on the walls of that room dedicated to the alleviation and cure of human suffering. In their stead were the same pleasant-featured Sister and the equally charming Sister in charge of the floor. It was all over, bar the desire to get well.

∴

A stranger to your city, I desire publicly to give expression to the kindly consideration received from all during my 10 days in one of your hospitals. The festive season was not allowed to pass unnoticed, and I have only one regret—the period of convalescence has gone all too quickly, and one would fain linger before setting up another mark on the slate of memory.

ONRA GILAD

THE WOMAN'S PAGE

WHAT HE WANTS TO EAT

A Plea for Mercy From Masculine Palates

By Elizabeth Pepys.

"Luncheon with you? Thank you, no. I've no desire for a salad and an ice eaten off a tabouret. If you'll come with me now, we'll have a respectable mutton chop or a thick steak with accessories!" Thus a frank, albeit brusque, older brother in the days when tea-shops were our ruling gastronomic passion. His remarks have been remembered and it is to be hoped served some useful end, although a woman can probably never forego entirely her desire for a decorative menu at the expenses of substantial fare.

One man announced the other day that good cookery was going out of fashion and that although columns upon columns appeared on the subject of attractive menus, and vitamines and calories are current topics of conversation, no healthy man could ever consider such literature seriously. "Man does not live by fancy tea-sandwiches and theatre supper entrées alone," he declared "and those are the main stand-bys of the Woman's Page."

A revolution in the household menage would be created, he opined, if more wives pondered upon the dictums of the famous Brillat-Savarin as expressed in his noble work "The Physiology of Taste." To his way of thinking, no woman should be permitted to cast her ballot until she has mastered the principles of the great gourmet, even if a new Amendment be involved.

One of the saddest things about unrestrained feminine cooking, he proceeded to say, is its egregious insistence upon "creamed" recipes. We winced, remembering the prevalence of creamed entrées upon our own menus, but he went on: Why should the best of soups be ruined by dropping a spoonful of whipped cream upon each plateful and why so much whipped cream anyway, especially when all women claim to covet slimness above all virtues?

Well-a-day, it may be salutary, to have a man speaking up in public in this iconoclastic way, but it is a bit disconcerting. Since men have begun to assert themselves in this bold manner it may be well to examine some of the literature written by men in the hope that women who cook or direct cookery will condescend to study man's real wishes in the matter of his food. It may surprise our readers as much as it did us to find on the list "Right Food, the Right Remedy" by Charles C. Froude, B.SC.; "Eating Without Fears" by G. F. Scotson-Clark; and a collaboration on "Fish Cookery" by Evelene Spencer and John N. Cobb.

NEITHER BORROWER NOR LENDER

Of Conscienceless Readers

By Elizabeth Pepys.

Who started the vicious circle anyway? Did the proud possesser of the Very First Book press it ostentatiously upon the less fortunate? "What, haven't you seen the latest problem novel? 'Adam's Rib' by 'A Gentleman a Fig Leaf' and really, the strong way it deals with Sex! You must take it home with you!" Or was it the envious borrower who promised to return it right after the week-end and then lent it to the next door neighbours and it never did get back again?

Anyway, we are committed to the custom now, the only person who doesn't borrow books being the child who has not yet learned to read and the only man who cares refuse to loan a book is he who owns none. Having set out upon a book returning campaign in our household the air is filled with abjurations—not of our folly in keeping books so long, but of the fatousness of friends in forcing literature upon us There's man's ingratitude to man for you! We mention it as a sad warning.

There is subject for many debates on "Resolved that the lender is more to blame than the borrower" the premise being that without the willingness to lend there would be no ability to borrow. Being more of a borrower than a lender we support this theory. Legislation should be adopted regulating this lending business. Owners should have their names indelibly inscribed upon their property. They should be responsible for the return of their property within a reasonable time or else forfeit all claim thereto. No undue coercion should be used to compel the public to borrow books.

WHAT PRICE "THE MARTYRDOM OF MEN?"

As a sample we may single out a tome of no less than 553 pages devoted to the Martyrdom of Man." There is no owner's name therein and no one in the family will own to a knowledge of its entrance to our home. No one in our circle is sufficiently highbrow to enjoy this serious study of War, Religion, Liberty, and Intellect and we cannot imagine who among our friend scould be. But here it is, a veritable cuckoo in our library nest.

If from a study of the foregoing it appears how reprehensible it is to loan one's own books,—how much worse it is to lend those of another! Most of us know the joys of possing as a patron of literature and graciously loaning the last word from Parnassus. Having gone to the expense of purchasing a $5 book to maintain this superior attitude it is more than a thought annoying to find that Jones instead of promptly and gratefully returning your book to you has passed it on with the same condescending gesture, and you are fortunate if ever you see it again. We know of all too many would be owner-readers who have recklessly loaned books and never been able to peruse them! Think, gentle reader, are you to blame for any disillusioned book-lovers who now refuse to accept the risks of book-loaning?

EMPLOYED WOMEN

The Activities of the Foreign Y. W. C. A.

Conveniently situated in 19 Yuen Ming Yuen Road, the attractive club rooms of the Y. W. C. A. offer an opportunity to obtain tea at a very reasonable cost, to write letters or read and to meet others in pleasant companionship. Besides their social side there is the practical benefit of room registry, a boon to strangers and an assistance to those who are willing to take outsiders into their homes. Moreover there is the employment department which has assumed sizeable dimension during the ten months it has been in operation.

From March to December 1923 there were 208 applicants for positions, and 126 calls from employers which involved 22 occupations and 25 nationalities. The number of British applicants was 45, of Americans 62. The varied occupations of foreign women in Shanghai is shown by the following list of applicants: stenographers, typists, general office workers, file clerks, accountants, graduate nurses, teachers, governesses, children's nurses, sales girls, outside sales agents, seamstresses, knitters, switchboard operators, housekeepers, manicurists, cooks, cashiers, hair dressers, domestic science teachers, social workers, dentists, photographers.

NOTED ENGLISH AUTHOR

Mrs. Tweedie on Woman and her Work

"But I never give out interviews" protested Mrs. Alec Tweedie when seen at the Kalee Hotel the other morning, all ready for sight seeing in fur coat and cloche.

"But for the Woman's Page, and for a sister journalist," persisted the inquisitive E. Pepys, knowing that she was addressing the vice-President of the Woman Journalists of London.

"Yes, that is different," assented Mrs. Tweedie with the same sort of smile which endeared her to the thousands of soldiers who experienced her hospitality during the war, "but you see I am trying to get some little idea of Shanghai so that I can recognize it when I return, as I hope to next year. Then I will be glad to tell you about what women are doing in England.

"In the mean time? Why not read 'Women the World Over?' or 'The First College for Women' or 'A Woman on Four Battle Fronts'?" laughed Mrs. Tweedie in reference to the titles of books on womankind which are found in her prolific writings. "Or, but here are a few bits from my writings which I had made into a birthday book for my friends. They are taken from various books and may bring a message to the women of Shanghai."

So here are a few extracts from the little book called "Tweedieism" which is attractively printed

MRS. ALEC TWEEDIE,
ARTIST, AUTHOR AND EXECUTIVE.

with a book plate by Walter Crane and a thought for every day of the year. Fuller information extracted with difficulty from this attractive brown-eyed woman who preferred to talk about China, its pagodas, customs, and, yes, its shops, will be found elsewhere in this issue.

MRS. TWEEDIE SAYS:—

I love my own sex. They are the guiding stars in the Universe, and the modern girl tends to make the world much more interesting than it used to be.

All the old wiseacres who declared that women must be sheltered somehow usually forget to shelter them! Women patriotically came out into the world of work and took on jobs successfully—carpentering, building, motor driving, large horse van driving, night mail driving, 'bus conducting, lift work, box offices, ticket collecting, railway carriage cleaning, window cleaning, ostlery, ploughing, reaping—aye, and dozens of heavy factory engineering or electrical jobs. Again and again, it has been found that with a few weeks' training there is no work a woman cannot do.

"OUR CHRONICLE"

Breezy Publication of Public School for Girls

A recent number of "Our Chronicle," which records the doings of the Shanghai Public School for Girls, shows the fine new building on Yu Yuen Road for its cover design and contains a number of interesting articles. The magazine is managed by the girls themselves, Miss Ware, the staff representative, saying that the pupils themselves take the initiative and are responsible for the editorial and reportorial work, the faculty representative being only an advisory member. The personnel of the publication is as follows: A. Finkelstein Editor-in-Chief; S. Remedios, Art Editor, M. Cantorovich, R. Moosa, D. Focken, J. Stoddart, Associate editors; and D. Herzberg, business manager.

In this number, Miss Alice Ware, who returned this autumn from a most interesting trip abroad, reports on a visit to Miss Patterson, formerly Head Mistress of the school, who is now living with her two sisters and her niece at 41 Roxborough Park, Harrow. She also writes of her experiences in flying from Paris to London by Handley-Page aeroplane, a trip of about four hours, although the weather was bad. In a brief article she answers all the questions one longs to ask about practical aerial travelling and makes one wish that every journey might be accomplished so efficiently.

HOME-GROWN ORANGE BLOSSOMS

Hints for Shanghai's Winter Plants

Few plants add to the beauty of a room more than a miniature orange tree covered with blossoms and foliage. Many people have tried to grow orange trees at home, but with little success. The plant often just peeps above the soil, then withers, or perhaps does not show itself at all. This is due to the fact that very few people know the secret of planting the pips so that an abundance of foliage and flowers will appear. The orange tree may be grown with very little trouble and the cost is next to nothing.

Collect as many orange pips as possible and soak them in a dish of water for eight or nine days, changing the water every other day. Fill flower pots with light, sifted soil, to which has been added a little manure. Place the soaked and swollen seeds in the pots, crowding in as many as possible. This is the most important point of the whole process; it is the crowding together which forces the plant and makes it grow.

The plants should be kept in the sun whenever possible and always in a warm room free from drafts. If there is a greenhouse in which they may be given a start, so much the better. It is advisable to cover them with a "night cap" made of newspaper, if there is any possibility of a frost. If this is not attended to and the frost reaches the plants, they will perish. Keep the soil in the pots moist, but not wet. Use lukewarm water in cold weather.

ARTISTIC CONTAINERS.

If the utmost decorative value is desired from the orange grove, plant the pips in pottery flower pots. They are to be brought in brilliant colours, and there is such a variety that one cannot fail to discover a few to harmonize with the decorative scheme of the room they are to adorn. They also add charm to the orange tree.

After the first year the orange tree will begin to blossom and bring forth an abundance of flowers that will be the envy of all visitors. The orange tree keeps green all the year round. In summer it bears clusters of blossome and in winter is covered with a beautiful foliage.

A TREE IN AN ORANGE.

Another good plan is to secure as ripe an orange as possible and cut a hole in the rind about two inches in diameter. Then, through the opening, work out all the flesh, pips, etc. Select the largest of the pips and retain this for the seed of the tree. Now fill the skin of the orange with a mixture of fibre and chopped moss, soil and a few lumps of charcoal. Into this put the pip you have decided to grow.

Support the rind in a cup or a tumbler and keep it in a warm room. See that the material is kept moist and the pip will soon sprout and develop into a tiny plant. Sooner or later it will try to force its roots through the rind (which does not decay) and when this happens the tips should be cut off. When the tree has developed several pairs of leaves, get some clear varnish and paint the outside of the rind, all except one small place on the under side, where the rind should be cut right away. The varnish preserves the form and colour of the rind and it is very curious to see the little tree growing out of what appears to be an orange.

THE MIGRATION FOR WOMEN

The Human Side of Overseas Settlement

If an inhabitant of Mars were to come and visit our globe, how perplexed he would be to find the number of problems which exist which might so easily solve one another, if only applied to each other, instead of, in each case, some outside remedy being diligently and often fruitlessly sought.

There are the problems of the mateless woman: the overworked mother with no outside help; the out-of-work woman living on State subsidies: the large empty spaces crying for development; the male emigrants suffering from loneliness and the double burden of housekeeping and tilling virgin soil, etc. It is quite obvious, without any stressing of the point, that these different problems are all interrelated, and to a visitant from another sphere it would seem on the face of it that we must be either blind, or foolish, to seek for any other solution of problem A than that obvious one which would at the same time eliminate problem B.

WHY NOT?

Difficulties, however, do exist—some perhaps due to lack of vision, but others to the human factor. It is easy enough to say that there are thousands of square acres crying out for homes; so why should one acre here and there be so congested that it is impossible for the dwellers thereon to lead a decent, civilized life? That there are thousands of overworked wives and mothers longing for domestic help and willing to pay for it; so why should women queue up for doles and drag out an aimless existence? That there are thousands of healthy young men, lonely and uncomfortable, ready to marry at their first opportunity: so why should so many eligible women stay in a country where there are not eough men to go round? But the fact is, the Londoner loves London, the factory girl has a prejudice against domestic work, the domesticated woman is afraid of facing the adventure of life in a strange land, and so on all the way round.

It is that human side which must be kept constantly in the foreground when the migration problem is taken more seriously than it is at present, and it is on that very side that the "Society for the Overseas Settlement of British Women" is doing such excellent work.

DISPELLING BOGEY.

First of all, it seeks to combat prejudice. Not only among possible migrants, but all round the Seven Seas wherever the problem is considered. On the one hand, there is an unreasonable fear that all our best stock will seek the adventure of the open spaces; on the other, that only the failures in the old land will seek this chance to make a fresh start in life. These bogeys were dealt with recently by the Rt. Hon. L. S. Amery, M.P., in a well-reasoned speech. As he pointed out, the first-class men and women are "holding down" far too valuable jobs to contemplate throwing them up. On the other hand, not only are the weaklings too afraid of the adventure to migrate, but most of the Dominion Governments impose far too strict tests of medical fitness for them to slip through. So that the type which migrates is just a good, sound, healthy, enterprising stock.

THE BOOK PAGE

BOOK NOTES AND NEWS

Thanks to the collapse of the mark, Mr. Sinclair Lewis recently received a cheque worth five shillings, which represented his royalties on the sale of sixty thousand copies of the German edition of "Main Street."

∴

We know the Kearton Brothers as pioneers in what may be called the new study and literature of natural history. Mr. Richard Kearton has written much, and Mr. Cherry Kearton has photographed wiid nature all over the world. His experiences that way are recorded in a book which Arrowsmith will shortly have ready, at a price that has to be substantial because of the many contents. Mr. Kearton's readers, for there is text as well as pictures, will find that he takes them to Africa, India, Borneo, the American Rockies and Canada, and that wherever he goes he has surprises for them.

∴

The cartoons by Max Beerbohm which were exhibited at the Leicester Galleries in the summer are now published in book form under the title "Things New and Old" (Heinemann, 25s.). The drawings which were withdrawn from exhibition in deference to some protests are, as some will regret, excluded also from the volume, though the same sensitiveness does not seem to have been shown with regard to the picture of King Edward standing in the corner. The "Tales of Three Nations" almost require a tenth by this time; and Mussolini might to-day invite another comment than that put in the mouth of the King of Italy. In a short preface "Max" apologises both for his "pedantry" in omitting the criticised drawings and for his reproduction of the "Studies of the 1870's."

∴

Perhaps the most interest ng of the romances attached to many copies of Shakespeare's "First Folio" is that told of the impression in the Bodleian Library. The book was sent by the publishers in sheets and bound by the Bodleian binder. When the Third Folio was received the Library authorities, considering that the First Folio was merely a duplicate, disposed of it, probably about 1664. Having been lost sight of for many years it came into the market in 1906. A public subscription was started and resulted in the volume going to its old home again at a cost of £3,000.

∴

There is no limit to the reforming zeal of the Italian Fascisti. A campaign has recently been initiated by a literary journal in sympathy with Signor Mussolini to stop the circulation in Italy of immoral literature. M. Victor Margueritte's most unpleasant "La Garconne" was the first object of attack. Copies have been seized by zealous Fascisti in bookshops and on bookstalls and publicly burned, and booksellers have been threatened with doses of castor oil if they persist in selling the novel either in French or in the Italian translation.

∴

Leading Paris booksellers have discovered a method of publicity that shows good results. When they are launching a new book of a sensational nature or a best-seller their adorn the stalls outside their shops with a large portrait of the author concerned. This course would hardly have commended itself to Flaubert, who, when asked once to furnish his biographer with a portrait, replied: "It is impossible for me to send you a portrait, because I have never had one." The French have also been quick to appreciate the value of the cinema as a means of awakening public interest in new authors and in literary and artistic celebrities in general. When a certain seventeen-year-old French author recently wrote his first novel, his portrait was shown in all the principal French cinemas. Some of the best-known Paris "coteries" have been filmed in the cafés where they are wont to foregather!

BY THE WAY IN MANCHURIA

"Leaves from a Manchurian Diary." By Alice Tisdale Hobart. Henry Holt & Co., New York.

"There's night and day, brother, both sweet things; sun, moon and stars, brother, all sweet things; there's likewise a wind on the heath. Life is very sweet, brother who would wish to die."

Among the apt quotations that head her every chapter Mrs. Hobart does not include these words of Jasper Pemtengro, but they sum up the spirit of her book, which is the work of a pioneering mind endowed with a poetic imagination.

Mrs. Hobart found her happiness, fortunately, in accompanying her husband in his commercial travels through the solitude and silences of inner Manchuria. Her traveller's tales are quickened with the spirit of romance: she sets about her journeys like a knight greedy for adventure; she faces with exhilaration the hardship and the perils, so that she is able to communicate to our pulses something of "the whisper of the wild" as she calls it and the lure of the untrodden.

Whether she was sitting cross-legged on the K'ang (brick platform [illegible] packed with supplies for a cold month in a Chinese cart, or towed up the rapids of a river from Tibet, she encountered every situation with the high-spirits of a boy, and her enthusiasm has found its way to this handsome book, well furnished with photographs of her own taking, which increase the intimate value of her work.

A.N.R.

SAUL AMONG THE CHINESE SOLDIERS

The Life Story of General Feng

"General Feng. A good soldier of Jesus Christ." By Marshall Broomhall, M.A. Pub. C. I. M. price 1/-.

Many have desired to have an account of this Saul among Chinese soldiers, tnd here it is, interesting and inexpensive. Gen. Feng may not be the man of destiny for China, but he certainly embodies those qualities that are required by his country though so rare among his fellow-countrymen. Every inch a man, he has risen from the ranks to become Inspector General of the army. He has filled one post after another with distinction, but breaking Chinese custom with the strength of Christian principle he has not filled his pockets at the same time. He is strict in discipline but takes his share like a private. His men abstain from picking and stealing, and they are taught a trade as well as soldiering. The Duke of Wellington once said of an English army in Ireland that it was more feared by its friends than its foes. But the reverse of that terrible description is true of this model army which has a clean record both in war and peace.

Such a remarkable character as General Feng inevitably invites comparison. Major-General Sir G K. Scott Moncrieff in his Introduction likens him to Gustavus Adolphus, and Sir Herbert Edwardes. Mr. Broomhall compares him with Cromwell and Stonewall Jackson, but wisely points to the risks in the years that cannot, for as Mr. Joseph Chamberlain once said, "Temptations come with increasing force to one who advances in public life. For the sake of China and for his own, all those who have watched his career most desire that he will stand in his lot at the end of the days."

A.N.R.

THE LOVE STORY OF A JUDGE

Mercy and Truth. By Ella MacMahon. Mills & Boon, London.

Not every day are we treated to an exposition of the feelings of a Judge of the High Court of Justice, King's Bench Division, when he takes ad vizandum the serious problem of marriage. When the problem becomes more involved by His Lordship's selection falling upon a lady much younger in years, full of the joie de vivre so frequently complained of by the older generation and already claiming domination over a more youthful and very eligible rival, it is seen that the authoress has prepared for herself all the material necessary for a most interesting book. To all of which she has added a final element by making the judge an admirable subject for an incidental study of the psychology of fear. "Mercy and Truth" presents to the reader, then, several excellent character studies—all the more acceptable in that throughout the book there is no hint of exaggeration. The fears of the judge, the splendid friendships of his younger days, the jealousy of his less fortunate brother barristers, the sportsmanship of his defeated rival, the warm-hearted, sterling qualities of the lady of his choice, are combined to give readers of "Mercy and Truth" a most enjoyable tale of every-day life presented in a fascinating manner. Through several chapters the authoress intrigues readers with a "black cloud" from his younger days which overhangs the distinguished judge—one begins to fear something in the nature of a culpable homicide and has to admit to a feeling of disappointment on learning that the young student has been but human, got into debt at college, attempted to raise the wind by cheating at cards, and—had all his liabilities met by a generous friend and a secret compact entered into never to reveal the incident. We are not given the interesting story of how the future judge cheated but, from the context, cannot believe it was anything more serious than finessing the knave—criminal enough when it ends in failure! But there is no ground for complaint even on this score for, as indicated, the authoress has given us all the thrill without the climax. "Mercy and Truth" should have a success and create a demand for the writer's previous book "John Fitz Henry" as well as a desire for further reading from the same source.

J.W.F.

FLAPPERS AND FATHERS

"Other People's Secrets." By Sophie Cole. Mills & Boon, London.

The fact that the secrets in this book are but a side-issue—if still a very intriguing side-issue—does not in any way detract from its excellence. The book is the love story of two sisters, possessing very different natures, and a father and son, also having quite distinctive dispositions. We have on one side the rather giddily inclined younger of the two sisters directed towards the safe haven of matrimony with his son by the anxious father. Incidentally, the father happens to be one of these "well preserved" middle aged gentlemen with a friendly feeling, or failing, for the gentler sex. As the day of the marriage approaches the flirtacious flapper and the giddy gent begin to feel that somehow or other their plans have gone astray. It is not surprising, then, that in the flat destined to be the home of the young couple the flapper seducing realizes that she has made a very serious mistake and that her heart really belongs to the father and not to the son. Advised by her mere sedate sister she flies to Waterloo and Brighton, there to mourn over her error and to await the inevitable arrival of her real fate.

Meanwhile the disappointed bridegroom bears up nobly under his loss and—but readers should be left to discover the happiest chapters of a very pleasing tale. The introduction of a brother, who has been carefully hidden away for years, of a rough but good hearted and well meaning uncle and aunt, and of a number of boarding house residents very true to type, goes to round out an excellently written story on which the writer is to be congratulated.

J.W.F.

INDIAN ROMANCE AND REALITY

"One of the Best."—By F. E. Penny pp. 320. Price 7/6 net. Hodder & Stoughton.

There are two chief strands in the making of this book, one personal—the various types of love interest in a fine young English woman, one phlegmatic, the second impetuous and the third romantic. The heroine is not brilliant at any form of sport, and actually prefers a seat in a motor-car to a saddle, but she is none the less heroic as her three lovers recognized and as her trials proved.

But the main theme of the book is of wider interest for it is a presentation of India by Mrs. Penny's practised hand. She is evidently the successor to Mrs. Flora Annie Steel, but she has a different India to portray. And seeing that the Raj is now confronted by the results of its own doings—its peaceful administration and a liberal education, it is more than ever necessary for Englishmen at any rate to understand a people who cannot henceforth be held by violence but only by influence. What weakens our hold is the lack of wisdom which proceeds from lack of knowledge, which proceeds in turn from lack of sympathy.

Mrs. Penny brings before us the noble side of the Raj in the character of Judge Wargrave, but its ignoble side is exposed with equal clearness in his second wife the scatterbrained, shallowhearted "Mims"—the kind of person who would imperil the dignity and even the destiny of her country in order to satisfy a whim or make a sensation.

The heart of the book, however, is the sympathetic study of a princely Mohammedan, who proved himself "One of the Best," in fact an Oriental Smuts, if one may use the expression. May such increase and abound for the honour of the British flag.

F. E. Penny reveals her sex by her insight into the effect of clothes not only upon the eye but upon the imagination, but her insight is equally sure in the larger things of human nature, so that she is able to stage a living group in a real environment, and make a fine book.

A.N.R.

THE DIVERSIONS OF DAWSON

"The Diversions of Dawson."—By Bennett Copplestone. John Murray. London.

A series of stories of the highly diverting exploits of one Chief Inspector Dawson of Scotland Yard, who is the most delightful character I have met recently through the pages of a book. Dawson alone, as Mr. Copplestone so skilfully portrays him, captivates the imagination. The law-breaking detective, the daring man of many identities, moving intrepidly through one adventure after another, withal a lovable, vainglorious and most human person, the hero is pictured in such a manner that the reader becomes as endeared to him as his friend Bennett, in whose person the stories are narrated.

"The Diversions" are given in four "books," each being a complete story of one of the inimitable Dawson's enterprises. Of them all, "Mr. Cholmondeley Jones," "Ned Grimes, Dockhand," "The Prime Minister" and "The Butler," the last is best. It seems to possess better literary balance and more of economy of means of effect. But perhaps it is only that it intrigues because of the irresistible Rose McLean, the little lady lady's-maid with a passion for trinkets of diamond and pearl, and who almost ravishes the stern heart of Dawson himself before he finally tracks her down to the cache.

Apart from the delightful characterization, the stories are well written. They are seasoned with the seasoning of humour and witty insight into human life. Mr. Copplestone has the pen of a ready writer, or the typing machine—he is too modern and too clever not to use one skilfully. I have long held a dislike of detective stories, but I confess that as I read these I forgot that they may be classed as such. They are too full of elements more interesting than the crime-scenting motive. But, even rating them as "detective," they should come quite above the once-famous Sherlock Holmes series in appeal to the general reader.

Olivia Price.

WITH PIRATES AND POACHERS

Tales of the Ivory Trade. By T. Alexander Barns. Mills & Boon, London.

This collection of short stories deals chiefly with a country and an occupation too infrequently touched by the story teller. For Far Eastern readers additional interest is lent by the inclusion of two stories having China as their background. The author—a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society—has evidently an intimate acquaintance with the peoples and life of the ivory country of Central Africa, and this he depicts in very interesting fashion in this series of short stories. It is difficult to make any selection from the 10 stories he has given us, but "The Sung Tusk" and "The Riddle of the Mammoths" will probably be the choice of readers East of Suez. In "Quoggs," however, we find a story which must make a very deep appeal to all dog lovers. Quoggs is a bull-mastiff who possesses all the glorious qualities of his race and deserves to be included in any book of great dogs of fiction. Quoggs was "a brindle-fawn and dark brown—with one white 'sock,' short, undershot, heavy jowl, broad of head, deep of chest. He also had a kink in his short tail, and a brave-hearted beam in his steady eye." The history of the bull-mastiff is the lengthiest of the series of "Tales of Ivory Trade," but even so, all readers will agree that it is far too brief; and as we are pleasantly informed that he is still "chasing lions, if only in dreams," beneath the author's chair, may we express the hope that when next Mr. Barns comes before us he will not have forgotten to give some further incidents in the life of Quoggs. "Quoggs" stands out as the best "character" in a book which deals chiefly with pirates and poachers, the sole complaint laid at his door being that of a strong penchant in puppyhood for chewing up all the soap in sight! This is easily forgiven when—not many moons later—we find him disputing with a full grown lion for possession of an elephant bone, whereafter he enters upon a career of glorious adventure. The "Tales" would scarcely be complete without some reference to the "elephants cemetery." The author manages to discover this priceless treasure but, fortunately for the future, it retains its invulnerability—a tradition which all writers seem to have combined to respect. "Tales of the Ivory Trade" constitute a decided departure from the usual run of fiction.

The author, it may be conjectured, has found it difficult to adhere strictly to fiction—truth, in the ivory country, being quite frequently stranger than fiction. If this conjecture be correct, he has served up an admirable blending.

J.W.F.

The North-China Herald

AND SUPREME COURT AND CONSULAR GAZETTE

WEEKLY EDITION OF THE NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS

Registered at the Chinese P. O. for transmission as mail matter under Class B.

(Tsz-ling-sing-chi-chow-kan 字林星期週刊)

VOL. CL. No. 2945. SHANGHAI, SATURDAY, JANUARY 19, 1924. TAELS 12 PER ANNUM.

CONTENTS

CHINESE POLITICS—
Mr. Sun Pao-chi as Premier ... 77
Gold Franc Issue Still Open ... 78
Secret Hand in Peking, The ... 78
LEADING ARTICLES—
China in 1923 ... 79
Labour in Office ... 81
China's Treaties ... 81
NOTES AND COMMENTS ... 82
NEWS FROM THE OUTPORTS—
Breach Between China and Soviet ... 83
Uneasy Times on Upper Yangtze ... 83
Chinese Industrial Mission ... 84
Yihyang Maru Bandit Outrage, The ... 84
Death of Miss Delta Eaton ... 84
Earthquake Victims and Harbin ... 84
Heroic Conduct of Mrs. Kilen ... 84
German Missionary Released ... 84
Lightless Suburbs of Harbin ... 85
Lu Yung-ting's Iron Rule in Kuangsi ... 85
Murdered Foreigners of Szechuan ... 85
Protection against Bandits ... 85
Opium and Gambling in Harbin ... 85
President Tsao Kun in Ill Health ... 85
National Currency for China ... 86
Coalmining in Manchuria ... 86
Chinese National Railways ... 86
C.-E. Railway Lands Deadlock ... 86
Piracy on the str. Tzesui ... 86
Chefoo's Summer Attractions ... 86
Seeing the New Year in at Harbin ... 87
High-Souled Young Shansi ... 87
Last Crime of an Ex-Bandit of Yunnan ... 88
More Weapons for Tokio Police ... 88
Baby-Stealing by Bandits ... 88
Another Grave Earthquake in Japan ... 77 & 89
New Japanese Premier, The ... 89
No War Cloud at Hangchow ... 89
Death of Dr. H. H. Lowry ... 89
Harbin Letter ... 90
Opium Smuggling Officials ... 90
Troops Movements in Chekiang ... 90
Attack in Hunan of Foreigners ... 90
North Kiangsu Notes ... 90
Chinese Slave Girls' Miseries ... 91
SHANGHAI NEWS—
Germen Aeroplanes for Sale ... 91
Mid-Ocean Rescue ... 91
French Municipal Elections ... 91
League of Nations and Russians ... 91
Russian Ships and Arms, The ... 92
What to Do for Russian Refugees ... 92
Dixwell Road Beggar Colony Ablaze ... 93
Columbia Country Club, The ... 93
Presentation to Mr. H. R. Sturt ... 93
Obituary—Dr. L. Emmett Holt ... 93
SPORT AND PASTIMES—
Light Horse Point-to-Point, The ... 93
Paperhunt Club, The ... 93
Football ... 93
CORRESPONDENCE—
New Road Free of Cost ... 94
Chinkiang Industrial Orphanage ... 94
Mme. Dietrichs' Orphans ... 94
Refugees, The ... 94
China Pony Issue, The ... 94
"Our Ostriches" ... 94
Moral Welfare League, The ... 94
COMMERCIAL AND FINANCE ... 95
COMPANY MEETINGS—
Senawang Rubber Estates ... 98
Chempedak Rubber Estate, Ld. ... 98
CLUBS AND SOCIETIES—
Moral Welfare League ... 98
St. Andrew's Society ... 98
MUNICIPAL GAZETTE NEWS ... 99
LAW REPORTS—
H. M. Supreme Court—
Crest Hotel Manager's Claim ... 100
Wife's Maintenance, A ... 100
New Barrister for Shanghai ... 100
H. M. Police Court—
Crowding Upon a Tramcar ... 100
False Pretences or Trick? ... 101
Indian Propaganda Charge ... 101
West Indian's Strange Conduct ... 101
Deliberate Traffic Obstruction ... 101
U. S. Court for China—
Broken Contract, A ... 102
Café Fracas, The ... 102
Affairs of Stewart Crane, Inc. ... 102
Mixed Court—
Alleged Audacious Cargo Thefts ... 102
Ship's Officer's Claim for Damages ... 103
FOREIGN TELEGRAMS ... 104—109
FROM THE FOUR WINDS ... 110—111
SPECIAL ARTICLES—
"The Pavement, but in Hebrew Gabbatha" ... 112
China's Search for Peace.—III ... 112
Our Fishes, The ... 113
CHESS PAGE ... 114
CHILDREN'S PAGE ... 115

"The professed friendliness of the Soviet Government towards China still leaves something to be desired"—Dr. Wang Cheng-ting to Comrade Karakhan

ANOTHER GRAVE EARTHQUAKE IN JAPAN

Nagano Prefecture Said to Be Worst Affected: Emperor and Empress in Earthquake Area but Not Hurt: Trains Overthrown and an Outbreak of Fire

From Our Own Correspondent.

Kobe, Jan. 15.

Nagano Prefecture, where the earthquake was chiefly felt, is an important silk-reeling centre. Railways, tramways and electric light service are again interrupted.

Wadakuramon, a gate of the old Yedo Castle, collapsed, also several of the barracks erected to house refugees. Water mains ase broken.

Authentic reports from Yokohama state that there was a heavy shock but no loss of life or damage.

Several trains, mostly goods, were thrown over on the Tokaido line between Gotemba and Yokohama. Much damage was also gone on the Chuo railway, which connects Tokio and Matsumoto.

The Japanese Observatory's reports place the origin of the earthquake 260 miles from Kobe, a little east of the former break off of the Idzu peninsula.

The earthquake was felt here and at Osaka slightly, most heavily at Hamamatsu, Kanazawa and Maidzuru.

Osaka, Jan. 15.

A serious earthquake occurred at 5.45 this morning around the Nagano prefecture. The centre is supposed to have been Matsumoto.

It is said that the tremor was similar to the one on September 1. The damage is not known.

Tokio was affected by a strong tremor. All telephone lines are interrupted. Only two telegraph lines are working between Tokio and Osaka.

Nagoya was also affected by a strong tremor, while Osaka, Kioto and Kobe felt a slight shock. No details are known.

Later.

News from Tokio says that no serious damage has been done by the earthquake.

Telephone and tramway services in Tokio City are suspended.

The water-supply is partially stopped.

No fire is reported.

The railways between Tokio and Numadzu are interrupted. A goods train was derailed near Gotemba.

Later.

The Emperor and the Empress are at Numadzu.

The Prince Regent and Princess Nagako are reported to be safe.

A fire is raging in the Sugamo suburb of Tokio. No particulars are available.

One train was precipitated into the river at Banyugawa and six trains were overturned between Gotemba and Tokio.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

TRAINS OVERTURNED.

An "Osaka Mainichi" special despatch to the Eastern News Agency reports that the details of the earthquake that have come to light up to the present are as follows:—

The telephone service throughout the City of Tokio is suspended. The train service east of Numadzu is also completely interrupted and many trains have overturned. It appears that there are many casualties. In Kofu City, the water mains have been destroyed. Their Majesty the Emperor and Empress, who

(Continued on Page 89.)

MR. SUN PAO-CHI AS PREMIER

Endorsed by Parliament to Pay Out Government for Talking of New Elections

CONSTITUTION OF THE NEW CABINET

Peking, Jan. 10.

Anticipating difficulty over its despatch, the House of Representatives last night sent Mr. Ma Hsiang to Tientsin. The latter returned to-day with a duplicate of the despatch reporting the election of Mr. Sun Pao-chi as Prime Minister and bearing the seal of the House, which Mr. Wu Ching-lien had agreed to stamp. This document was forwarded to the Government this evening at five o'clock, thus overcoming all possible objection on the ground of irregularity.

The acting Cabinet met this afternoon and decided to resign en bloc. The resignation was sent to the President at six o'clock.

It is reported that representations were made to the President urging that the acting Cabinet should remain in office until the lunar New Year, or that Mr. Wang Ko-ming should be Minister of Finance in the new Cabinet, as his financial arrangements are essential for tiding over the New Year.

A FURTHER DIFFICULTY.

Jan. 11.

While no mandate has been issued, the resignation of the members of the acting Cabinet has apparently been accepted. None of the Ministers attended office to-day.

A further difficulty has come to light in the fact that it is necessary to secure the resignation of Gen. Chang Shou-tseng, who is apparently still technically Premier, Gen. Li Chun is reported to have gone to Tientsin to endeavour to secure Gen. Chang's resignation. — Reuter's Pacific Service.

From Rodney Gilbert.

Peking, Jan. 11.

Sun Pao-chi's acceptance of the Premiership is now thought to be certain, but the personnel of his Cabinet is still unknown, because a compromise with several groups is necessary.

The new Premier does not owe his office to Wu Pei-fu but to Parliament, which endorsed him as a demonstration against the Government, a piece of vengeance for the announcement by the latter of new elections.

It is generally believed that neither Wang Ko-ming, Minister of Finance, nor Dr. Wellington Koo, Minister of Foreign Affairs, will be reappointed. It is almost certain that places will be found for Dr. Wang Cheng-ting and Yen Huei-ching, while Wu Yu-lin will be retained to please the Government party and save the President's face.

The Chinese Press says that Kao Ling-wei must go, but that Chang Chih-tan will possibly be Minister of the Interior to appease the Tientsin party. The Chinese press also says that Pan Fu or Tsai Ting-kan will be Minister of Finance, but the Chinese bankers say that the probable appointee is a dark horse.

Peking, Jan. 12.

The following personnel of the Sun Pao-chi Cabinet has been officially announced by Presidenti-

MAIL NOTICES

INWARD

Per R.M.S. Emp. of Russia Jan. 14
Per A.L.S. President McKinley ,, 14
Per P. & O. S. Morea ... ... ,, 16
Per [illegible] ,, 18
Per N.Y.K.S. Mishima Maru ,, 19

OUTWARD

FOR MARSEILLES, LONDON, ETC.—

Per N.Y.K.S. Hakone Maru Jan. 12
Per H.A.L.S. Hindenburg ... ,, 14
Per B.F.S. Laomedon ... ... ,, 14
Per P. & O. S. Sicilia ... ,, 15
[illegible]
Per R.M.S. Empress of Asia Jan. 12
[illegible]
Per O.S.K.S. Manila Maru... ,, 13
Per P.M.S. President Wilson ,, 15
Per A.L.S. President Madison ,, 20
Per T.K.K.S. Korea Maru ... ,, 25

FOR MANILA, AUSTRALIA AND NEW ZEALAND VIA HONGKONG:—

Per N.Y.K.S. Hakone Maru Jan. 12
Per R.M.S. Emp. of Russia ,, 14
Per P. & O. S. Sicilia ... ... ,, 15

PASSENGERS

INWARD.

Per N.Y.K.S. Nagasaki Maru, January 3. From Japan. Mr. E. Hunter, Master G. Hunter, Mr. A. P. Thomson, Mrs. A. P. Thomson, Mr. [illegible] Mrs. [illegible] McSparran, Mr. A. K. Jensen.

Per str. Hsin Ningshao, January 4. From Ningpo. Mr. A. Aroup.

Per str. Lucnyi, January 4. From River Ports. Mr. and Mrs. Vines, Mr. E. J. Grainger.

Per str. Ningshao, January 4. From River Ports. Mr. and Mrs. Fanfit and Mr. Y. J. Chamsler.

Per str. Hsin Kiangteen, January 5. From Ningpo. Messrs. D. Brukher, H. Lavers and Pinney.

Per str. Suiwo, January 5. From River Ports. Misses Thomson, Q. M. Sherman, Mr. G. W. Sherman.

Per str. Shuntien, January 6. From Tientsin. Mr. J. Swire, Mr. and Mrs. [illegible]

Per str. Hsin Peking, January 6. From Ningpo. Mr. H. C. Pouret, Mr. and Mrs. R. Dowery and Son, Dr. and Mrs. W. L. Smith, Master J. Smith, Mrs. G. High, Misses M. and G. High.

Per N.Y.K.S. Fushimi Maru, January 6. From London, etc. Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Bowen, Mrs. A. Barton, Mr. and Mrs. G. P. Christiansen, Miss S. A. Hudson, Mrs. B. C. Wallace, Mr. E. Blacher, Mrs. M. Blacher, Miss E. Barton, Mr. and Mrs. H. Crombie, Messrs. J. Martin, E. Salmon, M. J. Patell, F. B. Walker, Mrs. J. A. Broadley, Messrs. R. Broadley, Al. Stephenson, Mr. and Mrs. F. R. Stuart, Mr. C. Teunkens, Mrs. M. Sanford and three children, Messrs. Stuart, W. Neumann, A. Taylor.

Per str. Fausang, January 7. From Hongkong. Misses MacMillan and Starkey.

Per str. Woosung, January 7. From River Ports. Mr. and Mrs. Gillespie, [illegible] and R. C. Mackey.

Per str. Tuckwo, January 7. From River Ports. Mr. A. L. Walker, Mr and Mrs. Mackenzie, Mr. and Mrs. [illegible] Messrs. L. Magrin, K. Maurer, E. S. White, Mr and Mrs. Vander Pol and child, Mr. and Mrs. Swan.

Per M.M.S. Amboise, January 7. From Marseilles. Mr Rozis, Mr. and [illegible] Civet and child, Mr. and Mrs. Outrim, Mr. R. P. Stiam, Mr. and Mrs. [illegible] Frinquier. From Singapore. Mr. F. J. O. Veerman. From Saigon. Mr. R. Philippe, Mrs. L. Lecontet. From Hongkong. Capt. W. [illegible] Messrs. H. W. P. Meckin, G. E. Godden, R. L. S. Webb, G. F. H. Bichard, W. E. [illegible] Stewart, E. J. Dowley, D. W. Leach, Nopper, Weill and L. A. Franco.

Per str. Soochow, January 8. From Hongkong. Mrs. A. J. Hussey.

Per str. Kiangan, January 9. From River Ports. [illegible]

Per str. Kutwo, January 9. From River Ports. [illegible]

Per str. Hsin Peking, January 9. From Ningpo. Messrs. J. S. Reed and A. [illegible]

Per str. Hsin Ningshao, January 9. From Ningpo. Mr. and Mrs. J. E. [illegible] and Mr. H. G. Mackenzie.

Per str. Kaiping, January 10. From Chinwangtao. Mrs. C. Hicks.

Per str. Kianghsin, January 10. From River Ports. [illegible]

Per str. Nganking, January 10. From River Ports. Mrs. N. Forman and Mr. G. L. Bates.

Per str. Loongwo, January 10. From River Ports. Miss R. Nringert, Mr. and Mrs. H. R. Swenman and four children.

Per str. Hsin Ningshao, January 11. From Ningpo. Miss Latimer.

Per str. Hsin Peking, January 11. From Ningpo. Drs. J. Lawly, J. Wi Huntley, Mr. T. Porter, Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Cornish, Misses B. L. Weekel, C. A. Hueg and C. H. Barlow.

OUTWARD.

Per str. Hsin Peking, January 4.—For Ningpo.—Mrs. W. M. Scott, Mr. S. H. Edkins.

Per M.M.S. Paul Lecat, January 4.—For Marseilles.—Mrs. Ruegg and two children, Mr E. R. Dalvy, Mr. E. Prunc, Mr. E. W. P. Mills, Mrs. J. Henry, Mr. V. Meynard, Mrs. Changeux, Mrs. C. J. Kerris, Mr. and Mrs. Weyl, [illegible] Mrs. E. Geney, Miss Geney, Mrs. C. Rusconeva, Messrs. I. Rovinsky, M. Ravikewitch, H. Herve, A. [illegible] C. Doerabter, Dr. G. Seider, Messrs. M. Mounier, J. S. Upery, C. Servault, E. Faudot, Y. Le Bender, C. Guillou, Dr. P. Seidner, Messrs. J. Monroze, A. Pinchon, P. Bosquet, A. Vidette, J. Graille, J. M. Canque, S. Nice, A. Sanpierri, L. Michel, E. Edouard, L. Le Tanu, D. Glagoleff. For Port Said—Mr. I. Shainen, Mr. M. N. Burkun. For Penang—Mr. Oldenborg, Mr. and Mrs. G. Cosulich. For Singapore—Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Brinkley, Dr. Osborn, Mr. G. Tullie, For Saigon—Messrs. H. Palisse, L. Pélignol. For Hongkong—Mr. P. Schweisguth, Mr. and Mrs. E. Michaelsen, Mr. M. Begin, Sir R. and Lady Ho Tung, Mr. C. Merlin, Messrs. Baude, J. Cataran, Misses R. Parker, H. Myers, A. Russell, Mr. P. Dal Molin.

Per str. Chengtu, January 5.—For Chefoo—Mr. W. M. Cornwell.

Per str. Sinkiang, January 5.—For Canton—Mr. and Mrs. Lasare, Miss Kulewci, Mr. and Mrs. Berodin. For Hongkong Mr. Lilley.

Per str. Lucnyi, January 5.—For River Ports. Mr. and Mrs. A. Mittag, Mr. H. H. Williams.

Per str. Shengking, January 6. For Amoy.—Mr. R. E. De Lay.

Per str. Hsin Peking, January 7.—For Ningpo.—Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Cornish, Mrs. G. High, Messrs. R. M. Smith, J. T. Read, E. R. Cartwright.

Per str. Pakhoi, January 8.—For Hongkong.—Capt. Isbister and Mr. A. N. McDonald.

Per str. Shuntien, January 8.—For Weihaiwei.—Two Franciscan Sisters. For Chefoo.—Miss E. Costa, Mr. B. S. Stephenson, Mr. and Mrs. Mowat. For Tientsin.—Mr. and Mrs. P. A. Sheppard.

Per P. & O. S. Khiva, January 8.—For London.—Mrs. G. N. Marshall and child, Misses J. and M. Marshall, Mrs. D. O. O'Brien, Engr.-Lt. H. B. Olden, Miss E. M. Adlam, Mrs. H. O. Rennie. For Marseilles.—Messrs. G. N. Marshall, F. P. Lachlan, Rev. and Mrs. E. S. Drown, Mr. W. M. Weston, Mrs. S. B. Robinson, Misses R. and A. B. Robinson, Rev. and Mrs. W. L. Oakes, Master J. Oakes, Misses J. and M. MacKinley, Mr. T. N. Chapman. For Colombo.—Mr. and Mrs. D. F. McClelland and child, Miss M. McClelland. For Singapore.—Mr. L. Charlesworth, Miss S. M. Shaw, Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Wallace, Miss E. Coleman. For Hongkong.—Messrs. N. P. Karanjia, D. Commissarcat, J. C. Remedios and Mrs. B. Pevsner.

Per str. Chinkiang, January 9.—For Swatow.—Mr. C. H. Lavers.

Per str. Hsin Peking, January 9.—For Ningpo.—Dr. Josephine Lawley, [illegible]

Per str. Woosung, January 9.—For River Ports.—Mr. J. H. H. Swart, Mrs Botham, Mrs. E. O. Botham, Mr. and Mrs. K. O. Mackenzie and Miss Botham.

Per str. Socohow, January 10.—For Hongkong.—Mrs. C. Sim.

Per str. Tatung, January 10.—For River Ports.—Mr. and Mrs. Van Biervliet and Mr. D. C. Tilburn.

Per str. Chungking, January 11.—For Chefoo.—Mr. W. Bos.

Per str. Nganking, January 11.—For River Ports.—Messrs. Wm. Ironside, W. L. P. Cook, Miss M. Cook.

Per str. Hsin Peking, January 11.—For Ningpo.—Dame Adelaide Anderson and secretary, Misses M. Deuzman and A. Harrison.

Per str Liangchow, January 12.—For Tsingtao.—Mr. W. E. Smith.

Per str. Saiyang, January 12.—For Hongkong.—Mr. A. C. Pederson.

BIRTHS

ABRAHAM.—On Saturday, January 5, 1924, at Ste. Marie Hospital, Shanghai, to Mr. and Mrs. M. H. Abraham (143 Bubbling Well Road), a daughter.

BENNETT.—On January 9, 1924, at St. Mary's Maternity Home, Shanghai, to Mr. and Mrs. N. R. Bennett, a son.

BELL.—On January 9, 1924, at St. Mary's Maternity Home, Shanghai, to Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Bell, a daughter.

GENSBURGER.—On January 9, 1924, at 51 Rue Massenet, Shanghai, to Mr. and Mrs. Victor Gensburger, a daughter.

HOWE.—On January 7, 1924, at the Victoria Nursing Home, Shanghai, to Mr. and Mrs. L. M. Howe (née Maggie James of Kobe), a son. Japan papers please copy.

MURRAY.—On January 4, 1924, at the Victoria Nursing Home, Shanghai, to Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Murray, twin daughters.

WOLF.—On January 6, 1924, at Dr. Fearn's Nursing Home, Shanghai, to Mr. and Mrs. N. C. Wolf, a son.

MARRIAGES

BEITH—CRADDOCK.—On January 10, 1924, at St. James's Church, Piccadilly, London, by the Very Rev. A. J. Walker, M.A., Vicar of Malton, Yorkshire, Benjamin David Fleming, youngest son of the late John Alexander Beith, Esq., of Manchester, to Kate Ethel, second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur K. Craddock, of Shanghai.

JUDD—ANDROSSOFF.—On January 5, 1924, at H.B.M. Consulate-General, Shanghai, before Mr. Sidney Barton, C.M.G., Consul-General, Edward George Judd to Clavdia Feodorovna Androssoff.

TOSCANI—CHADDERTON.—On January 5, 1924, at St. Joseph's Church, Shanghai, Steno Toscani to Helen Chadderton.

WHITE—FULLER.—On January 8, 1924, at Holy Trinity Cathedral, Shanghai, Edmond Stuart White, D.S.O., etc., etc., of Hankow, to Mabel Aubrey Fuller, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Jenner, of Essex, England, and widow of Leonard Walter Fuller, 5th Cameron Highlanders.

DEATHS

ANDREWS.—On January 5, 1924, at Shanghai, Margaret Alice (Allie), dearly beloved wife of R. H. Andrews, aged 29 years.

BLECHYNDEN.—On January 8, 1924, at Nelson, New Zealand, in his 77th year, John Blechynden. Born on June 3, 1846, at Falstone, Northumberland. Deeply regretted by his loving children.

JORGE.—On January 8, 1924, at Kobe, Flora Violetta Jorge, beloved wife of A. F. Jorge. Deeply regretted. (By cable).

WALTER.—On January 5, 1924, at 22 Route de Zikawei, Shanghai, Otto Richard Julius Walter (Dick), beloved husband of Adelaide Walter, aged 44 years.

WESTBROOK.—On January 5, 1924, James, Leonard Edward, aged 3½ years, beloved son of Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Westbrook, of Shanghai.

AMATEUR PHOTOGRAPHERS

In the outports can rely on fresh supplies of Films, Plates and Papers and all Photo Sundries by sending to Mactavish & Co., Ltd.

The Hongkew Medical Hall, Shanghai.

Developing and Printing by experienced operators.

OVER HALF A CENTURY REPUTATION
Dr. LE CLERC'S PILLS FOR THE LIVER & KIDNEYS
INVALUABLE for DISEASES of these IMPORTANT ORGANS, GRAVEL, BACKACHE, GOUT, RHEUMATISM
Price 6s (leading) CHEMISTS, or Post Free Dr. LE CLERC Med. Co. Haverstock Rd. N.W. London
Dr. LE CLERC'S VEG. APERIENT PILLS. Price 6s.
Dr. LE CLERC'S PILLS FOR ANÆMIA. Price 6s.
SAFE & RELIABLE FOR LADIES AILMENTS
Dr. LE CLERC'S SOAP. Price 6s. Tablets 3s.
Sold by Dealers. CAUTION.—Beware of Imitations and Substitutes.

SICCAWEI METEOROLOGICAL REPORT

Day of Month		Barometer 9 A.M.	Barometer Att'ed Therm	Wind Direction 9 a.m.	Wind Force (1-12)	Hygrometer 9 a.m. Dry	Hygrometer 9 a.m. Wet	Thermometer in Shade Max.	Thermometer in Shade Min.	Weather conditions
Jan.	4	30.40	46.6	W S W	1	41.6	37.6	58.1	30.7	B. C.
,,	5	30.39	46.4	N	1	34.0	34.0	60.8	21.5	B. F.
,,	6	30.21	47.1	S E	1	49.3	47.0	59.9	39.9	O.
,,	7	30.45	48.2	N	2	44.4	41.7	47.3	43.0	O.
,,	8	30.55	47.7	N N W	1	36.2	31.1	46.8	30.0	B.
,,	9	30.36	47.7	W S W	2	40.8	36.5	53.6	30.7	B.
,,	10	30.51	47.5	Calm	0	37.6	33.8	56.1	23.9	B. C.

Explanation

B—blue sky D—drizzle H—hail M—misty (hazy) R—rain T—[illegible]
C—clouds F—fog L—lightning O—overcast (dull) S—snow Z—[illegible]

SHANGHAI THERMOMETER READINGS FOR THE WEE

In the open air in a shaded situation in the Foreign Settlement

Date		Thermometer (Fahr.) Minimum 1924	Minimum 1923	Maximum 1924	Maximum 1923	Rainfall Inches 1924	192
Jan.	4	37.8	20.4	58.0	40.8	Nil.	Nil.
,,	5	34.0	28.0	58.0	49.0	Nil.	Nil.
,,	6	44.8	31.0	58.8	52.8	Nil.	Nil.
,,	7	41.0	37.0	54.2	61.2	0.02	Nil.
,,	8	33.4	41.0	45.6	53.0	Nil.	Nil.
,,	9	34.2	34.4	52.2	50.4	Nil.	Nil.
,,	10	32.0	34.0	53.2	47.2	Nil.	Nil.

SOUTHERN RHODESIA

SOUTHERN Rhodesia which was inaugurated as the youngest governing Colony of the British Empire on October 1, 1923, which had previously for 33 years been ably administered by British South Africa Company possesses one of the finest climates the world with long hours of sunshine, breezy temperate days cool nights. For those who wish to take up farming or ranching order to make the most they can of their capital, energy and techn knowledge, or for those who wish to retire from strenuous busin or professional life and make a home, Rhodesia offers many vantages unequalled elsewhere. The business, social, sport educational and medical facilities bear favourable comparison those of other countries. Native labour is plentiful and when perly managed is cheap and efficient. Taxation is light. Good in healthy surroundings and amidst fine scenery is plentiful and expensive.

Full information is obtainable on application to The Secret Southern Rhodesia Settlers' Board (attached to the Government Southern Rhodesia), P. O. Box 372, Salisbury S., Rhodesia.

The giving of advice to prospective settlers will be facilitate applicants will advise the Board in detail of their circumstances the amount of capital they would be prepared to invest in a suita venture.

THE SMALL INVESTORS, LTD.

41 SZECHUEN ROAD, Shanghai

Phone: C. 977 and 761

NOTE

CAPITAL INVESTED, with dividends or Interest payable every six months.

At 7 per cent. Doubles itself in 10 years
At 8 per cent. Doubles itself in 9 years
At 9 per cent. Doubles itself in 8 years
At 10 per cent. Doubles itself in 7 years

START TO-DAY TO DOUBLE YOUR CAPITAL

We are holders of large stocks of sound companies whose shares will yield
7 per cent. to 14 per cent. per annum

THE SMALL INVESTORS, LIMITED

Telegraphic Address: "Safeinvest"

DOUGLAS FLEMING, Managing Director.

Printed and Published for the Proprietors of the NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS HERALD, LIMITED, at the office of the Company, 17 The Bund, Shanghai.

LEADING ARTICLES

The North-China Herald

Published every Saturday evening.

PREPAID SUBSCRIPTION

(INCLUDING DELIVERY):

Shanghai ... ... Tls. 12 per annum
Other parts of China ,, 13 ,,

All communications should be addressed to the Secretary, NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS & HERALD LD., to whom all remittances should be made payable.

CHINA IN 1923

Jan. 14.

MORE and more difficult does the reviewing of China's history become as more and more the breach widens between different sections of the country; while still these sections react upon each other and continually group themselves in new but ever futile combination, so that it is impossible to form an accurate idea of the doings of one without simultaneous reference to three or four of its neighbours. The classification used below may serve to refresh readers' minds on the general trend of events, with the further aid of cross references, so far as space permits, to indicate where the chief intermingling occurs.

PEKING.

The New Year found General Li Yuan-hung still President and on January 3 telegraphing to the Tuchuns urging them to abolish themselves and disband their armies. The only apparent response was a telegram from the Chinese Chamber of Commerce in Shanghai protesting against power being focussed in the Central Government under the Constitution which Parliament was supposed to be drafting and pressing for provincial autonomy. On January 5 General Chang Shou-tseng accepted the Premiership. In his Cabinet was Mr. Alfred Sze as Foreign Minister. The latter lasted just a month, and resigned on February 4. On February 7, to meet Chinese New Year charges, the Government proposed a short term loan of $12,000,000, which with discount, interest etc., would have brought them $9,279,600 and required a repayment twelve months later of $12,960,000. Parliament squashed this ruinous scheme and how Government got over New Year is a mystery. On March 8 the Cabinet resigned. On March 10 Peking sent a Note to Japan demanding cancellation of the 1915 Treaty (or what remained of it after the compromise arranged at the Washington Conference) and retrocession of Port Arthur and Dalny. Japan's rejection of the demand was expected in Peking, which had merely intended to keep its claim on Kuantung alive; but it none the less provoked an anti-Japanese boycott, which raged, chiefly in the Yangtze Valley, through the summer, provoked a brawl at Changsha on June 1, when two Chinese were killed by Japanese marines landed to protect the loading of the Wuling Maru, and petered out in August. On March 26 the gunboats on the Yangtze went on strike and threatened to seize the salt at Shiherhui if they were not paid. They got $300,000 on account from Peking and some arrangement was made for further payments from the local salt funds. On March 25 fresh demands came from London for payment on the Vickers and Marconi loans. Rumours of a loan of £20,000,000, to be arranged by Mr. Birch Crisp, primarily to settle these claims, were very positive (May 16-24), but nothing came of them. On May 25 it was announced that Mr. Bowra, in charge of the Customs during Sir Francis Aglen's absence, was advancing Tls. 1,000,000 from the Customs building funds, to pay the Legations abroad, who, together with Peking's gendarmerie, ministerial underlings, teachers and garbage coolies, were months in arrears of their pay. But this project was stopped. Other financial questions must be left for a moment.

THE COUP D'ETAT.

It would be equally impossible and wearisome to detail all the intrigue of these months, the object of which was to raise Marshal Tsao Kun, Inspector-General of Chihli, Honan and Shantung, to the Presidency. The mainspring of it all was Tsao Jui, the Marshal's brother. On June 6 President Li's last Cabinet resigned, undoubtedly at the Tsao Jui clique's orders. There followed a period of artificial panic in Peking and extra foreign guards were brought in to protect Legation Quarter. On June 13 President Li fled to Tientsin taking the seals with him, but he was collared at the railway station and forced to disgorge. Ensued a period of complete deadlock, with flight of most of the M.P.'s to Shanghai and on June 29 an impassioned appeal from Dr. Sun Yat-sen to the Powers to withdraw recognition from Peking. The Tsao Jui clique, however, put back the Ministers whose resignation Li had accepted, Dr. Wellington Koo was persuaded to join them on July 23 as Foreign Minister and a thing calling itself a Government emerged, though no one could say by what right it was there. Tsao Kun, however, was not yet President and most of the M.P.'s were sitting in a state of stormy non-quorum in the Hupeh Guild at Shanghai. Towards the end of July extensive buying up of M.P.'s began and by October 5 a quorum had been got together again in Peking which on that day elected Tsao Kun President. It is calculated that the votes cost on an average $5,000 apiece. For makeweight, Parliament passed the Constitution which was promulgated on October 10. Denunciations burst forth from Chang Tso-lin, Lu Yung-hsiang, Dr. Sun, and other quarters, but they came to nothing. The Diplomatic Body called on the President en masse with pretty speeches on October 15. So far from war, there have been strong rumours of a compromise between Tsao and Chang Tso-lin. But Tsao cannot get a Premier and finds Parliament as much a nuisance as did all his predecessors.

GOLD FRANCS AND DOMESTIC LOANS.

These words indicate the two major questions of finance of the year. On February 12 the French Senate passed the bill for the reconstruction of the defunct Banque Industrielle. On February 26 it was announced that a "Compagnie de Gérance" had been formed which was to reopen branches of the Bank at Shanghai, Hankow, Tientsin and elsewhere. In March China's payments of the Boxer Indemnity (suspended for five years on her entry into the war) fell due again and France according to the protocol of 1901 demanded payment in "gold francs": in other words, she required enough silver to purchase as much gold in New York as she would have been able to buy before the war with her share of the indemnity. China objected that she had the right to pay in paper francs at the rate actually purchasable. The issue was complicated by the French Government's intention to use the Boxer Indemnity for the reconstitution of the Banque Industrielle. At the year's close the dispute was still open.

On December 23, 1922, the Diplomatic Body sent a note to the Waichiaopu claiming the right to use the Customs surplus for the payments due on China's defaulted loans, Marconi, Vickers, etc. This drew from the Chinese Bankers Association of Shanghai, on January 6, a strong protest to Sir Francis Aglen, to the effect that the Surplus was the security for a number of domestic loans, for which the Government had made him responsible by mandate in 1921. Sir Francis replied by a long memorandum (published by us on February 1) showing the whole situation: under the most favourable conditions there would be a deficit on the National Consolidated Loan service, so that expected drawings would have to be postponed, while for the $96,000,000 there was nothing. Meanwhile the Government had earmarked the anticipated increase in Customs revenue, due to the revised tariff coming into effect that year, without his knowledge. So long as he, Sir Francis, remained custodian of the loans, the bankers could trust him to prevent the surplus being "nobbled"; but if the Government took away his wardship by another mandate he would be powerless. The Powers' demand of December 23 merely meant that if Peking meant to play ducks and drakes with the surplus, they should assert their claim. Anxieties for the safety of the internal loans have again recently been aroused by Dr. Sun's threat to seize the Customs revenue in Kuangtung. (To be dealt with later).

CUSTOMS AND SALT.

The Customs revenue for the year 1922 had amounted to Hk. Tls. 58,600,000 an increase of four millions odd over the previous year. The revised tariff, bringing duty to an effective 5 per cent., came into effect in 1923 for goods shipped to China after January 17. Even with this assistance the revenue in 1923 was only Hk. Tls. 63,378,000 an increase of Tls. 4,744,000 which, remembering the extra dues, means an actual decline in the volume of trade. The moral of the effect of brigandage and bad government was obvious.

The Salt Gabelle returns for 1923 are not yet available. For 1922 they amounted to $85,789,000 an increase of $7,801,000 over the previous year. Of this amount the Government received, in surplus, $78,000,000, but of this $31,000,000 represented money left in the provinces, which was $13,000,000 more than the figure for 1921. On February 2 a sensation was caused by the Yokohama Specie Bank in Peking declining to hand over $2,000,000 of the salt surplus, until the Government agreed to pay on the Russian issue of the 1913 Reorganization Loans of which the Bolsheviks had issued duplicates. About this time M. Padoux, Financial Adviser, issued an elaborate calculation of debts and resources and how one might be made to meet the other, which attracted much attention. At the close of the year it was calculated that Peking needed $8,000,000 merely to pay something on account to her domestic claimants, without reckoning arrears.

CANTON.

On January 6 a combined force of Kuangsi and Yunnan men captured Wuchow, advanced rapidly to Samshui and thence to Canton, whence General Chen Chiung-ming, who had been in control since the previous June (date of Dr. Sun's expulsion), fled to his native Waichow, (January 15), taking the machinery of the Canton arsenal. Dr. Sun was not slow in proclaiming this as a victory for his party, but it left Canton in a perilous predicament between three rival forces (Kuangsiites, Cantonese and Yunnanese) with no recognized head. On February 15 Dr. Sun sailed from Shanghai for the South. He was entertained to lunch at Government House in Hongkong and visited and addressed the students of the University. He arrived at Canton on February 21 where he published various encouraging statements, especially one of April 1 that the Overseas Chinese were prepared to make him a loan of $6,000,000. On April 13 fighting broke out between the Yunnanese (faithful to Dr. Sun and paid by the gambling monopoly in Canton) and the Kuangsi troops adhering to the Chen faction, in which the latter were worsted notwithstanding that Marshal Wu Pei-fu sent troops to their help on May 2 (see Szechuan, below). On May 4 Dr. Sun took over the Canton salt, despite protests from Peking. On May 17 he advanced to the siege of Waichow which has more or less lasted ever since. On June 22 Dr. C. C. Wu joined him as Minister of Foreign Affairs.

A slight digression must be made here for the campaign in Hunan, led by the former Governor Tan Yen-kai, and designed to expel Governor Chao Heng-ti, Wu Pei-fu's man. This began on July 27. Tan had apparently not many troops and trusted to his popularity with his fellow provincials to raise more on the way. He reached Changsha by September 15 and was even said to have entered it. But Chao managed to hold on and after camping outside the city for nearly two months Tan was compelled to retreat on November 10, his troops looting Chenchow on their way south.

Meanwhile on November 4 Chen Chiung-ming by a ruse slipped out of Waichow, advanced to Sheklung and very nearly bested Dr. Sun's troops. But he wasted time at crucial moments and Tan's troops arriving to reinforce Dr. Sun, the latter regained ascendancy. The war has borne heavily on the Cantonese. Taxation, forced loans, confiscation of any property on which the Government could invent a claim, have all combined to squeeze the Cantonese pretty thoroughly. In September Dr. Sun sent a claim to the Diplomatic Body for the surrender to himself of all Kuangtung's share of the Customs surplus after satisfaction of foreign debts secured on the Customs. Such payment had been made in 1919-20, suspended owing to internal disputes in Canton and never resumed, owing to America's veto. The Diplomatic Body replied early in December that they would use any means to prevent interference with the Customs. Simultaneously, American, British, French, Japanese and Italian gunboats were moved to Canton. Dr. Sun replied with an ultimatum: if the Powers would not agree, he should order the Commissioner of Customs to hand over the revenues to him, and if the Commissioner refused, he, Dr. Sun, would replace him by another. This ultimatum expired on December 19, but curiously enough there is no subsequent news of any open clash.

BRIGANDAGE.

It is to be hoped that no year will surpass the deplorable record of 1923 in brigandage. Even women were noted among the outlaws in Anhui (Anking correspondent January 22) and while on February 10 General Chin Yun, sent to put down the bandits who had committed such outrages in Honan in 1922 and kidnapped several foreigners, vaingloriously announced their suppression, a letter from our Suichow (Honan) correspondent of March 6 reported them as bad as ever. There was hardly a week all through the year when our up-country correspondents did not report some atrocity by bandits or soldiers, unpaid and as bad as bandits. Even Chêkiang was affected, our Shaohsing correspondent reporting on April 10 a big looting of temples in particular. The outlaws in this district continued to be bad all through the summer but by September 13 the leaders had been caught and decapitated and the rest persuaded to resume the ways of peace—a clear proof that where there's a will, outlawry can be suppressed.

On May 6 an outrage occurred which re-echoed through the whole world. The famous Blue Express, from Pukou to Tientsin, was derailed at Lincheng, close to the southern border of Shantung, looted and thirty-five foreigners, many of them well known residents of Shanghai, carried off into the mountains. The process of obtaining their release was prolonged by bad faith on the Chinese Government's part, indecision (it must be said) on that of the foreign authorities and (it has to be added) interference of amateur negotiators. The bandits' terms, too extravagant at first to be worth considering, eventually came down to pardon and enrollment in the army. Most of the captives were released by driblets during the weeks after the outrage, but eight of them, removed to the inaccessible peaks of Paotzeku, were kept to the end. On June 1 a mass meeting was held in the Shanghai Town Hall to record its horror and strengthen the hands of the Diplomatic Body. On June 6 the enrollment of the bandits in the army began and on June 12 the last of the al Mandate under date of January 12:—

Premier	Mr. Sun Pao-chi
Foreign Affairs	Dr. Wellington Koo
Home Affairs	Mr. Cheng Ku
Finance	Mr. Wang Ko-ming
War	Gen. Lu Ching
Navy	Adm. Li Ting-hsin
Justice	Dr. Wang Chung-hui
Education	Mr. Fan Yuan-lien
Agriculture and Commerce	Dr. W. W. Yen
Communications	Mr. Wu Yu-lin.

—Eastern News Agency.

An Experienced Cabinet

Peking, Jan. 13.

Cabinet Mandates accepted the resignation of all the Acting Cabinet Ministers and appointed the new Cabinet as reported. The Mandates then appointed General Chang Shou-tseng Shouwei Shangchiangchun, Mr. Kao Ling-wei Tupan of the Shuiwuchu and Mr. Wang Chi-tseng Chief Secretary of the Cabinet. The latter held the post of Chief of the Political Department of the Waichiaopu for 10 years and was afterwards Minister to Mexico. He is at present in Peking on furlough.

The Cabinet includes five former Acting Ministers of whom Mr. Wang Ko-min, Dr. Wellington Koo, Mr. Wu Yu-lin and Admiral Li Ting-hsin retain the same posts while Mr. Cheng Keh is transferred from the Ministry of Justice to the Ministry of the Interior. Dr. Wang Chung-huai and Dr. W. W. Yen are former Premiers and Mr. Fan Yuan-lin is a former Minister of Education. Thus the Cabinet has an unusually experienced personnel. Chinese say that the Cabinet shows the influence of General Wu Pei-fu.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE NEW PREMIER.

The new Premier has had a long official career. A native of Chêkiang, he was born in 1867. After serving as a member of the Board of Justice and Taotai of Chihli, he went to France in 1902 as Chinese Minister, from which post he was transferred to Peking. ing. In 1907 he went to Germany as Chinese Minister, but returned some 20 months afterwards, and held various posts, including the Governorship of Shantung. Since the establishment of the Republic, Mr. Sun has served in different official positions including that of Director General of the Revenue Council, Minister of Foreign Affairs, Director of the Audit Office, Minister of Finance and Director-General of Customs. He holds the first class order of the Chiaho and Wenfu decorations.

Mr. Kao Ling-wei, the late acting Premier, has been appointed Director-General of Customs.

Hitch over Finance Ministry

Peking, Jan. 13.

It is semi-officially stated that all the members of the Cabinet will assume their posts to-morrow with the exception of Dr. Wang Chung-hui, the Minister of Justice, who is abroad, and possibly Mr. Wang Ko-ming, who appears undecided. The President sent the Chief Secretary and the military and police delegates to call on Mr. Wang Ko-ming to-day, urging his acceptance. The military and police delegates pointed out the danger and trouble there would be at the Lunar New Year if Mr. Wang's financial arrangements were disrupted.

The Premier, Mr. Sun Pao-chi, has instructed the new Chief Secretary of the Cabinet, Mr. Wang Chi-tseng, to telegraph to the Provinces urging cessation of military activities and preparations as a preliminary in the direction of reunification.— Reuter's Pacific Service.

Feeling Running High in Peking

From Rodney Gilbert.

Peking, Jan. 14.

Feeling in all parties is high about the new Cabinet appointments wherein the Premier has had no voice. It is locally described as a Wang Yu-chih Cabinet, since the membership has been obviously selected for the President by his clique from the Tientsin-Paoting Groups with the exception of Yen Hui-ching, to save the Premier's face, Wang Chung-hui, who is abroad, and Fan Yuan-lien, because he is popular with the schools.

At an interview with the President it is alleged that the Premier had a totally different list but that the President produced his and insisted on it. The new Constitution provides that membership of the Cabinet should not be submitted to Parliament in order to give the Premier a free hand, but this provision the Wang Yu-chih group turned to its own advantage, forcing a Cabinet on Sun Pao-chi which was unacceptable to Parliament. The Premier's only resource is resignation which is unlikely immediately since Kao Ling-wei has been appointed to his post as head of the Customs. This is considered as a particularly insulting move to both Parliament and Premier. Yen Hui-ching, holding a minor Ministry, is therefore unlikely to be acting Premier if Sun Pao-chi resigns, so that Wu Pei fu's candidate will be also side-tracked. It is unlikely that Parliament will ratify another appointment if the Premier resigns as it has been tricked this time, so that the Wang Yu-chih group not only controls this Cabinet, but any in the future also, through its own acting Premiers during the life of Parliament, after which no local opposition will be possible.

Sun Pao chi's weakness in accepting his present position and in endorsing the Cabinet appointments is bitterly criticized in all quarters.

The Premier's Profession of Faith

Peking, Jan. 14.

Premier Sun Pao-chi yesterday published his political views briefly as follows:—

I have undertaken charge of the present difficult situation with the object of averting the national crisis. I intend to effect the unification of the country in accordance with the Constitution and to commence the readjustment of internal affairs. With a view to consolidating foreign and domestic loans, I will do my best to put in force the increase of the Customs tariff by 2.5 per cent. I will endeavour to have Consular jurisdiction abolished and China's international status elevated.

Prior to his assumption of office, Premier Sun Pao-chi published the following as part of his administrative policy:—

(1) The settlement of the Szechuan and Kuangtung issues.

(2) The disbandment of surplus soldiery.

(3) The consolidation of the finance of the Central Government.

(4) The convention of the national peace conference to be attended by representatives of all provinces.

It is problematical whether these items can really be put in force, but it is interesting to note that the public takes the view that the above items are the wishes of President Tsao Kun rather than the aspirations of Premier Sun Pao-chi.—Eastern News Agency.

Peking, Jan. 14.

The expectation that the new Cabinet would begin its duties to-day has not been fulfilled. The report is current that Mr. Wang Ko ming, the Minister of Finance, has submitted his resignation, while strong pressure is still being exercised with a view to his acceptance of the portfolio.

Mr. Sun Pao-chi is still at the Western Hills and the Chief Secretary to the Cabinet is holding up the circular telegram to the provinces, urging cessation of military activities, pending Mr. Sun's assumption of office.

The impression is gaining ground, however, that the Cabinet was promulgated without the Prime Minister's knowledge of the entire personnel, but the intrigues of several aspirants to the Finance portfolio are so flooding Peking with rumours that it is impossible to say whether this delay reflects serious consideration or is merely due to preliminary preparations.

Later.

Mr. Sun Pao chi has returned to Peking from the Western Hills. It is announced that he will assume office to-morrow morning.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Peking, Jan. 15.

Mr. Sun Pao-chi accompanied by Dr. W. W. Yen attended the Cabinet this morning. The first formal meeting is expected to take place to-morrow morning but there is still some doubt regarding Mr. Wang Ko-ming's acceptance.—Reuter's Pacific service.

An Attempt at the Impeachment of the Finance Minister: Kao Ling-wei also Threatened

From Rodney Gilbert.

Peking, Jan. 16.

It is now understood that Wang Ko-ming's refusal to assume office as Finance Minister in the new Cabinet does not indicate his desire to resign, but is designed to elicit from the President and other political leaders strong appeals to him to resume office at the Ministry of Finance, and thus to force Sun Pao-chi, the Premier, to accept him.

Members of Parliament are highly incensed by this action and are determined to issue a chapan order (i.e., an order for investigation and prosecution). It also is rumoured that a similar measure against Kao Ling-wei is being prepared.

Parliament Threatened with Dissolution Preparing to Die Fighting

From Rodney Gilbert.

Peking, Jan. 17.

All elements in Parliament are convinced that a political crisis is approaching and that the Paotingfu-Tientsin group (the extremists who control the President) are preparing to drive out Parliament and prevent new elections.

Many, therefore, advocate that Parliament should take the initiative and proscribe its enemies, thereby forcing the Government's hand and advertising the issue to the wide world, after which the provincial militarists can force the Paoting-Tientsin leaders to leave the capital, on the pretext to "protect" the President and constitution.

Yesterday there was a motion against Wang Ko-ming the Finance Minister designate, which is considered in the House not only as a chapan (order for investigation and prosecution) but an impeachment, which was referred to committee.

The next target is likely to be Cheng Keh, the new Minister of Interior, with others following.

This programme is partly prompted by the belief that the Government will pay members no more salaries, so they would rather be driven out than starved out.

THE UNPAID M. P.'S

Members' Own Seals to Be Accepted as Receipts

Peking, Jan. 9.

A group of "neutral" members of Parliament, being anxious regarding their salaries, convened a meeting of their colleagues this afternoon at the Lower House to receive the report of Mr. Wang Chen, who had been appointed leader of the delegation which interviewed the Acting Minister of Finance upon the subject. Mr. Hu Tzu-chun moved that the meeting should be an informal one, and acting upon this the proceedings were conducted in private.

The Cabinet at its meeting yesterday decided that the salaries of members of the House of Representatives shall be paid, provided members put their seals to the application as the seal of the House is in the hands Mr. Wu Ching-lien in Tientsin. Reuter's Pacific Service.

GOLD FRANC ISSUE STILL OPEN

Diplomatic Action Delayed: A Simple Matter Skilfully Misrepresented

THE PROMISE OF 1905 NOT YET HONOURED

From Rodney Gilbert.

Peking, Jan. 12.

The local community has been waiting with no little interest for the reply from the Protocol Powers to Dr. Koo's last gold franc note. The diplomats have been hinting for some time that a joint note was in process of making and that it would be presented shortly, so the press has been on the qui vive for several weeks. It is now known, however, that the Legations have abandoned work on the draft reply and that no more conferences will be held until Dr. J. G. Schurman has returned to Peking and has had an opportunity to review with his colleagues the results of conferences held in his absence.

There is no difference of opinion among the Legations about China's obligation to pay France in gold at the Protocol exchange of Frs. 3.75 per Hsikuan tael. Dr. Koo's note has not made the slightest impression upon the diplomatic attitude. While well worded and extremely plausible at the first reading, the arguments which he put forward were recognized by everyone with the least knowledge of finance to be superficial and designed to confuse the issue and flatter the controversialists of the press and Parliament.

All this argument about telegraphic transfer and other means of forwarding has no bearing whatever upon the character of the debt.

PRINCE CH'ING'S AGREEMENT.

In 1905 Prince Ch'ing asked the Protocol Powers to choose the means and medium of payment to suit the convenience of each. As a matter of convenience France choose telegraphic transfer of gold to Paris at the Protocol rate for Haikuan taels at this moment. Neither France nor the Protocol group is trying to go back on the bargain made with Prince Ch'ing in 1905. They are simply trying to hold China to it—a matter which ought not to be subject to any dispute and a matter which, from the start, should have been none of Parliament's business since it involves no new national obligation and no new understandings between China and the Powers but simply the fulfilment of an old bargain which with all other old bargains the new Republic undertook to respect when recognition was extended in 1912.

These points the Cabinet clearly recognizes—probably none more clearly than Dr. Koo and there can be no doubt that the Cabinet was on the point of making this recognition public nearly a month ago when the ignorant and bumptious legislators suddenly got wind of what was coming and threatened Mr. Wang K'o-min and other Ministers with a chapan—an order for investigation and prosecution. The members of the Cabinet did not want to be hounded out of office so, to play for more time, Dr. Koo was forced to draft his ingenious quibble.

HOW TO FORCE THE ISSUE.

While this note has no real influence upon the determination within diplomatic circles that China must acknowledge her full debt to France, it is realized that if anything is to come of a reply, if the issue is to be brought to a head and settled within a reasonable time, the next diplomatic note must fix some penalty upon non-compliance or force the issue in some other way. The nature of the penalty to be brought to bear upon China is the real subject of dispute among the Legations which has delayed the drafting of a note and its presentation. Since the Powers have adopted the attitude that the indemnity is a lump sum paid to the Protocol Powers as a coalition, to be disposed of by them through agreement among themselves, and not a series of debts from China to the individual nations, it is no longer politic for France, Belgium, Italy or Spain to make individual representations to the Chinese Government or to threaten penalties on their own account. At the same time it has not been easy for the representatives of these Powers to persuade the British, American and Japanese Legations to agree to all the drastic clauses which the former think should be incorporated in a note. Hence the delay.

THE SECRET HAND IN PEKING

Pernicious Hold of Extremist Group: Tsao Powerless in Their Hands

NEW PREMIER EXCLUDED FROM PRESIDENT

From Rodney Gilbert.

Peking, Jan. 12.

While the members of the Paoting-Tientsin group, the Government party as it is now called,—which wrecked the Wang Chang-hui cabinet, ruled Wu Pei-fu out of Peking politics, drove Li Yuan-hung from the presidency and railroaded Tsao Kun into office,—is organizing to prevent Sun Pao-chi from making radical changes in the Cabinet, the representatives of the provincial branches of the Chihli party in Peking are working up an alliance to break the Government party's control of Tsao Kun, which many think will result in the disintegration of the whole Chihli military coalition.

For many weeks past the Government party has guarded its position by refusing to allow the provincials to come into direct contact with the President. The latter is ill and there are only two men who have direct access to him or who can secure direct access for others. They are Wang Yu-chih, campaign manager prior to the election, and Li formerly Tsao Kun's number one boy, now his private treasurer. One hears on all hands bitter complaints of the strict censorship which these two dependents exercise over news, mail, telegrams and visits from former friends and supporters. When Mr. Sun Pao chi, the new Premier, yesterday called at the Presidential Palace to discuss the formation of a new Cabinet, he was not allowed to see Tsao Kun but was interviewed by Wang Yu-chih who informed him that the President wanted no radical changes in the personal of the Cabinet.

Since the provincial elements in the Chihli group are allowed no participation in Palace councils they are getting together to make the biggest possible hostile demonstration against the Paoting and Tientsin cliques. This will have the backing of Chi Hsieh-yuan, Wu Pei-fu and all their allied and dependent chiefs. Their differences will be sunk for the time and every effort will be made to eliminate the men who made Tsao Kun President. In the opinion of many astute observers this will involve the elimination of Tsao Kun himself, but this consideration is not likely to influence the growing opposition because it is now felt that Tsao had better be sacrificed than that the present limited clique should continue to function as a Government.

ACCORDING to the "Shunpao" the Commissioner of Education in Fengtien has made the extraordinary proposal that all schools and colleges conducted by foreigners be handed over to the Chinese authorities forthwith.

poly and raise a big loan thereon from a Japanese: démentis as usual. On April 10 it was shown fairly convincingly that Gen. Yang Sen, invading Szechuan, used opium to pay his troops. On April 13 an upriver correspondent reported miles of poppy-fields between Chungking and Wanhsien. On December 9, Kueitehfu reported opium as providing the military with money. On December 19 enforced growing was again reported in Fukien.

Shansi is a bright exception: the result of twelve months' intensive campaigning against opium was reported most satisfactorily. Kiangsu and Chêkiang also appear praiseworthily exempt. Generally speaking, China is again an opium country. One is reminded of the late Dr. Morrison's famous aphorism (of earlier years): "China does want our (i.e., Indian) opium. It competes with her own."

PROVINCIAL HAPPENINGS.

Provincial events, except as already noted, point in the main to a quantity of good work that is being done, in spite of brigandage in low and high places. Of the following, taken in order, those which are an exception to this statement need not be underlined. On January 9 the Chefoo-Weihsien road was opened and motors began to run on it. Early in February a rather serious strike held up the Pe-Han railway: it was ended on February 12, principally by the simple means of decapitating a ringleader or two. On January 31 ninety miles more of the Peking-Suiyuan railway, from Kueihuacheng to Paotou on the Yellow River, were opened. On March 10, arsenic poisoning, due to defective cookery, slew twenty-four students of the First Normal Government School at Hangchow. On the same date news came that the much hoped for Haichow (N. Kiangsu) harbour scheme had been abandoned. Simultaneously the deepening of the Grand Canal from Chinkiang to Tsingkiangpu was begun on a serious scale. On March 21 Chêkiang announced the imposition of a 20 per cent. cigarette tax, in defiance of the agreement between Peking and the tobacco companies into which she herself had entered. Her example has been followed by Kiangsu and appears likely to spread. On March 31, 120 men, breaking up old shells at the Anking (Anhui) arsenal, were blown to pieces. On April 22 the Liao River Conservancy was entrusted to a Chinese-Foreign Commission. On May 15 the Asia Development Corporation opened their new channel across the bend in the Yellow River where the floods occurred so disastrously in 1921—apparently a magnificent piece of work. During August the Chinese in Tientsin attempted to raise money by selling portions of the Russian Concession, but were foiled. On August 7 there was a bad wash-out on the South Manchurian Railway. On August 18 the new sea wall at Chinhai (Chêkiang) was completed by famine labour. During the late summer a prophet of woe in Western China caused a panic which spread all over the country in amazing fashion by forecasts of darkness and disaster. He had, however, no connexion with the foreign seer who foretold, for about the same date, the end of the world.

IN GENERAL.

ON January 1 Peking gave in to the storm aroused by its attempts in the previous November to increase the postal and telegraph rates and announced reversion to the old rates. Professor Einstein passed through Shanghai on January 1 and gave an address. On January 6 the United States Minister presented the terms of retribution for the murder of Mr. C L Coltman, shot at the gates of Kalgan on December 12. Eventually on April 29 the matter was settled by an indemnity, an apology and dismissal of minor officials. On January 31 the transfer of the Shantung railway by the Japanese to China was completed. On February 1 the new British Minister, Sir Ronald Macleay, and Lady Macleay arrived in Shanghai; he left for Peking about ten days later after many cordial meetings with the British community. Sir Ernest Wilton, the new Director of the Salt Gabelle, also arrived by the same ship. On February 17 the 27-ton yawl Shanghai, commanded by Captain Kjaer, with five Danish friends as crew, started on a 16,000 miles voyage to Copenhagen, since happily reached. The Associated British Chambers of Commerce sat in Shanghai from February 21 to 24 and passed several cogent resolutions, use of British Boxer Indemnity, disorders in China, copper coinage, illegal taxation, etc.: that on the proposed 2½ per cent. surtax caused considerable controversy, however. The China Medical Missionary Association sat in Shanghai from February 15 to 20: an address on the Chinese brain, comparing it to the Egyptian, attracted attention among other valuable discussions. Colonel Marr Johnson, the popular Commandant of the S.V.C., sailed for Home on February 24. On April 25 Mr. James Slevin, an American, signed a contract with Peking to supply 24 Curtiss aeroplanes (G.$336,900) for the projected China Airways Co. On April 23, the Chinese cruiser Haichow, lying off Kiangnan Arsenal, fired on the Old Dock launch Ada and seized and held her for the night: a similar exploit was performed on the A. P. C. boat Soo Hang two days later. These repercussions of political trouble elsewhere subsided under vigorous protest from the British Consulate. On May 30 the "North-China Daily News," moving by pieces, was housed in its new building which is one of the features of the Bund. On June 23 the magnificent new building of the Hongkong & Shanghai Bank was opened by Sir Ronald Macleay. On June 27 part of the Imperial Palace in Peking was burnt down: 2,000 gold images of Buddha vanished, whether before or in the flames is a problem. On July 26, the Marconi Co. completed the system linking Peking, Lanchow, Urumchi and Kashgar, 3,000 miles, by wireless. On July 7 the Ven. John Holden, of the C.M.S., was appointed Bishop of Kuangsi. On August 7, Mr. Funatsu, Japanese Consul-General in Shanghai, was transferred to Mukden, being succeeded here by Mr. Yada. On August 23 the str. Mylie was lost in a typhoon off the Saddles with all hands but one Chinese survivor saved on a raft. On September 1 an earthquake literally blotted out Yokohama, destroyed half Tokio and did appalling damage in the surrounding country. In October the Trans-Siberian Railway became really effective again, except perhaps for ladies, though the passport question is troublesome. Mails go by it regularly. On October 16 Mr. H. G. Simms, chairman of the Shanghai Municipal Council, left for Home, on transfer, with his family.

LABOUR IN OFFICE

Jan. 18.

THERE appears not the slightest doubt that Mr. Ramsay Macdonald will be called to Buckingham Palace in the next few days. There was never much hope that the Liberals would forgo their independence to keep the Conservatives in office. Two strong motives hold them aloof: First, the very fact that they have no constructive policy to offer, that they are indeed a dying party whom the spirit of the age has left in the lurch, makes them cling all the more obstinately to their traditions. Paradoxically, the Liberals are the most conservative creatures in politics. To combine with Mr. Stanley Baldwin would be too open a confession for their pride of the palpable fact that they have no longer any raison d'être. And secondly, far stronger than any political question, is the barrier of social jealousy. Except in the case of a few great traditionally Whig families, Liberalism is not really respectable in England, is not received. In "The Importance of Being Ernest" Lady Bracknell patronizingly passes the Liberal Unionists: "They dine with us—or, at least, come after dinner." But the Liberal without the Unionist? Now at last is his opportunity for revenge.

So the great division is between Labour and Conservatism. But is it really a division? Is England to go down in ruin, not the momentary ruin of a Karl Marxian revolution, but the decay of impossible social legislation and the crippling of all individual intelligence and initiative? Not for one moment do we believe it. We have always maintained that the most natural form of alliance was between Conservatives and Labour men, and we venture to believe that the coming session will show that there are far more points of view common to both than at present appears. The King's Speech alone is evidence thereof, containing many projects which, if not actually borrowed from Labour programmes, show that the two parties have already ground on which they can meet. Then it appears almost certain that Labour, which is instinctively protectionist, will institute tariff reform; and as regards the Dominions, although it may not accept from its rivals the agreement they drafted, it has the strong attraction to British territories overseas of the predominant Labour influence they contain. As for the more extravagant items on the Labour programme, we venture to doubt very much whether they will ever be seriously undertaken. That State ownership of mines and railways ends in the costliest failure, is either a matter of history, of which Britain's own war experience affords eloquent examples, or of contemporary demonstration, in Russia. With regard to the capital levy, we have Mr. Ramsay Macdonald's statement at Aberavon on November 30 that Labour would drop it if it were proved unworkable and impracticable by Treasury officials—which proof the decline in sterling already begins to provide. In fact to adapt Freddy Tatton's immortal saying "Labour may be an ass, but it is not a silly ass." The country will probably have to pay for a certain amount of asininity. But a Labour leader in office is a very different person to the same man out of it. Burdened with real responsibility, his troubles with his own side of the House are likely to be far more acute than with the opposite. Finally it may be recalled that no great "revolutionary" step has ever been taken in Parliament from the repeal of the Corn Laws downwards, but instant ruin has been prophesied. The changes of the past seem trivial in retrospect: but did they appear so at the time? Things are relative to the age in which they happen, and Gladstone's Home Rule Bill caused far greater consternation than the much wider measure of Irish self-government actually in force.

There is a common impression that Labour will be allowed to try its hand at governing for six months or so and then be dispossessed, the assumption being that by that time the evil effects of its experimentation will have so sickened electors that "the honest party" will come by its own again. Once more one would venture to feel sceptical. On their trial, and conscious of their delicate position, one imagines that clever men like Mr. Ramsay Macdonald and Mr. Clynes will walk with particular care. On the other hand, nobody on the Opposition side is going to hurry the country into another general election, if it can be helped. The risks are too great. And lastly there is that British instinct for fairplay to which Mr. Ramsay Macdonald appealed and Mr. Baldwin subscribed, promising that "when the Conservatives went out of power, they would not engage in factious opposition." Prophecy is dangerous and optimism revolting to every true-born Englishman. But it may be that in days to come we shall look back on the conditions under which Labour has come into power as among the greatest blessings that ever befell Britain. For that it must sooner or later take office has long been inevitable; and whereas with an assured majority, it would have been a hand-gun for extremists, the circumstances now of its arrival point to a certain period of education which may be of inestimable value. It can only be regretted that that education has begun so late. No attempt would appear ever to have been made to broaden the minds of the men whom Labour has returned to an appreciation of the task they must one day inevitably tackle: and certainly there has been none to educate the electors. To give the vote to workingmen, still more so, perhaps, to workingwomen, and leave them to be instructed by the labour agitator and the Continental anarchist how to use it is one of the most amazing pieces of cheerful lunacy which our incurably mad country has ever perpetrated. For this we are all now paying with a good deal of anxiety and the rich men, as foretold by St. James, weep and howl for the miseries that shall come upon them. But in the last resort there is a vein of common sense in Britain which bids us hope that she may be as the old lady who, on her deathbed, said that "she supposed few people had had so many troubles as herself: most of them had never happened."

CHINA'S TREATIES

Jan. 19.

THE correspondence on China's treaties and the trampling thereon shows signs of degenerating into a mere wrangle. It is a misconception to denounce all treaties between foreigners and Chinese, holus bolus, as unjust. The essential purport of them is the same practically throughout, namely, to enable foreigners to live and trade peacefully in China as they can do in all civilized countries and as it is perfectly plain that the Chinese people are always willing that they should do, when let alone and not deliberately excited by their officials. This desire to trade is natural and just, while the obstruction of officials is unnatural and indefensible. The world is too small for any considerable portion of it to be barred out as terra clausa by a minority of individuals, who in no sense represent their countrymen's wishes or interests. Where the treaties appeared to inflict any inequities, the Washington Conference set itself to right them with both hands. Again, it is unjust to insinuate that foreigners do not care twopence how much the Chinese are taxed but kick up a prodigious row when their own cigarettes are mulcted. The point here is not that cigarettes were taxed, any more than it might have been kewpies or teddy bears, but that an agreement solemnly entered into between the Government and certain producers, and subscribed to by the provincial authorities, was suddenly flouted and torn up by the latter, who, although no Chinese yet appears to have realized it, thereby struck at the whole foundation of the concessions and arrangements entered into or provided for at Washington. As regards the taxation of Chinese by Chinese, it happens that foreigners are by no means indifferent to it; but they can hardly interfere on behalf of the Chinese sufferers who do nothing to help themselves.

The gist of Mr. Sokolsky's original article, whence the correspondence began, was that Chinese students expend much time and breath in denouncing the wicked foreigner and his treaties, but have nothing to say about their own officials whose misgovernment and rapacity have brought China to her present sorry state: for example, they complain that the foreigner will not allow them to tax cigarettes for educational funds, but say nothing about the malversation of the revenue captives were released. The Diplomatic Body presented its claims for compensation and retribution on August 10 (see "Herald" for that month p. 440) the esential terms of which were monetary payment, cashiering of Tien Chung-yu, Tuchun of Shantung, and institution of railway guards organized and officered by foreigners. The whole Diplomatic Body signed the Note, although only some seven or eight nationalities were concerned. On September 24 Dr. Wellington Koo returned a reply of smooth evasion, to which the Diplomatic Body answered, on October 4, with a reiteration of the original demands. There the matter still remains. It should be added that on October 18 Tien Chung-yu was allowed to resign and immediately promoted. The Diplomatic Body protested at this piece of insolence; to which the Peking Government replied that there had been an error in the order of the mandates: Tien should have been promoted first and allowed to resign afterwards!

On June 1 a native pastor, An Wen-ming, was murdered by brigands not far from Yunnanfu. On June 15 an Italian priest, Father Malotto, was kidnapped 100 miles north of Hankow. He remained a captive till September 8, when he was released, shot in the stomach, to die. About July 23 Mr. D'Arcy Weatherbe, a British engineer, was captured in Yunnan by brigands: he managed to escape from them on August 19, by his own address. Tsaoshih, less than 100 miles from Hankow, was sacked on August 16, the two Catholic priests there only escaping by the greatest good fortune. On August 24 Laohokow in Hupeh was sacked and the church burnt: but, again, the priest luckily escaped. On August 14 two well known missionaries of the C.M.S., Mr. R. A. Whiteside and Mr. F. J. Watt, were murdered near Mienchuhsien in Szechuan. On September 23 Miss M. Darroch and Miss M. R. Sharp were kidnapped at Chowkiakow in Honan and were not freed until October 25, after the greatest sufferings. On October 23 bandits sacked Kuanting on the Pe-Han Railway, despite the boastful scheme of railway guards, which Peking had hastened to announce in anticipation of the Lincheng Note. A German missionary was carried off in Hunan on October 17: a French priest from Changli, near Chefoo, on November 17: and Mr. Schmalzried, on the Kueichow-Hunan border on November 13. The latter was rescued early this year; the two former are apparently still in durance. On December 27 two missionaries Mr. and Mrs. Hoff were shot and badly wounded at Tsaoyang, in Hupeh, and another missionary, Mrs. Kilen, carried off by bandits.

Firing on ships on the Upper Yangtze attained a quite unprecedented degree. In this respect the political troubles of Szechuan (see below) played, perhaps, a greater part than outlawry. But the result is the same. The worst excesses were the attack on the Alice Dollar at Ichang on July 31: and that on the Iyang Maru when the captain was killed and the chief engineer and chief officer carried off: they are still in captivity. In the case of the Alice Dollar, the U.S.S. Isabel was luckily at hand to give help: the chief miscreant was captured, brought down the river and handed over to the Tuchun of Hupeh. The American Admiral has since introduced special measures for the protection of shipping on the Upper Yangtze—hardly in keeping with the benevolent fatuities of the Washington Conference, but most salutary.

All these cases of outrage are alike distinguished by the supine indifference of the provincial and district authorities. The case of Miss Darroch and Miss Sharp is specially bad, no move of any kind being made to rescue them until a week after their capture. The condition of Honan is a grave blemish on the reputation of Marshal Wu Pei-fu, who, with the best troops in China, suffers his province to be the worst in respect of brigandage.

CHEKIANG AND KIANGSU.

Turning to provincial politics, the relationships of Chêkiang and Kiangsu are specially interesting. These two provinces have for several years been blessed with peace and their Governors Chi Hsieh-yuan (Nanking and Chihli party man) and Lu Yung-hsiang (Hangchow and of the Anfu persuasion) though on opposite sides of the hedge politically, have a good reputation as administrators and no apparent desire but to live and let live. Rumours of war between the two first became current about the end of April. These, the reaction of the plots in north China which ended in the expulsion of President Li, were intensified by the flight of M.P.'s early in July to Shanghai. The ramifications of the plot are too vast to recall in detail, but the main purport of them was a converging, Chihli, move upon Hangchow from Kiangsu, Anhui and Fukien. The fighting at Amoy in July between Anfu and Chihli forces, when British marines were landed to protect the foreign concession, was a preliminary part of this game. The anxiety aroused in all the population of Kiangsu and Chêkiang was intense and rose to such a pitch that it eventually forced the two Tuchuns, on August 19, to sign a peace agreement, not merely not to attack each other, but to cooperate in keeping peace in their provinces. This was, perhaps, the greatest triumph for public opinion that the history of the so-called Republic affords. On September 11 ex-President Li came to Shanghai but his presence was too late to cause disturbance of the peace. He subsequently left for Japan where he now is. A tragic event on November 11 nearly provoked an explosion: General Hsu Kuo-liang, chief of the Shanghai and Woosung Constabulary, was shot in Avenue Edward VII. Shanghai, and died next day. General Ho Feng-ling, of Kiangnan Arsenal, lieutenant of the Hangchow Tuchun, immediately appointed a successor, much to the chagrin of the Nanking Tuchun, who vainly contended that the post being in his province was for his filling. The peace treaty was seriously endangered. But public opinion again staved off an open breach, which appears fairly unlikely now.

THE WAR IN SZECHUAN.

It is impossible that in order to cover the [illegible] of events in China in 1923 will be found, not among the faded animosities of Sun Yat-sen, but in the more silent but robuster antagonism of Wu Pei-fu for Chang Tso-lin. The projected reinstating of Chen Chiung-ming in Canton, the intended overwhelming of Lu Yung-hsiang in Chêkiang and the much hoped for conquest of Szechuan by Yang Sen are all regarded as part of Wu Pei-fu's design for establishing himself south, east and west before advancing against Chang Tso-lin in the north. For how much of this gigantic strategy Wu is really responsible, we can only conjecture. But certainly Yang Sen is his lieutenant and has been actively helped by him. Yang's advance along the upper Yangtze began early in February. By March 28 he controlled the river nearly to Chungking and took that city on April 6. Advance forces of his had got nearly to Chêngtu by April 25; but treachery broke out along his line of communications and he lost both Chungking and Wanhsien. By the middle of July, however, with the aid of reinforcements from Wu Pei-fu, Yang had regained Chungking. By the end of August he had advanced to Luchow and established himself there, thus controlling all the river back to Ichang. Space forbids attempting to unravel the doings of the local chieftains whose jealousies have kept Szechuan in turmoil for years past. At one time in August no fewer than four armies, averaging at least 30,000 men apiece, were campaigning about the province. A good review of events in Szechuan appeared in the "Herald" of December 15, p.736.

TIBET AND PEREIRA.

Life on the Tibetan border has a romantic interest for many who can never hope to see its wild and towering heights. Our correspondent in Tachienlu has written frequently in praise of the Border Commissioner Chen Hsia-lin, who appears to have held the scales very evenly between Tibetans and Chinese, earning respect from the one and devotion from the other. The warfare further east, however, has deprived him of arms and equipment and he appears hard put to it to maintain his forces. In Lhasa the Dalai Lama, reported to be progressive, is said to be at loggerheads with the priests who are reactionary. To this may, perhaps, be attributed the raid by Tibetans across the border in September, which, by later news, is having serious results. The outstanding event of the year was the great earthquake of March 24, which wiped out the Dranggu Lamasery, wrecked the North Lhasa road and killed at least 1,000 people.

It is fitting to record here the death at Kanze on or about November 23 of Brigadier-General George Pereira. Just a year before that intrepid traveller had managed to reach Lhasa, where he stayed for two weeks as the Dalai Lama's guest. Last May he was back in Shanghai and lectured, on the 21st, to, perhaps, the largest audience ever assembled in the Royal Asiatic Society's rooms. Then he went to Yunnanfu and with Dr Thompson of the C.M.S. started thence to Batang on July 16. Only a week before the news came of his death, we published an account by himself, with map, of his journey to that town. Kanze lies about 130 miles north by east of Batang and there Brigadier-General Pereira's journeys came to an end. He died of perforated gastric ulcers.

CHINA AND RUSSIA.

In spite of rumours and the feigned enthusiasm of the "intellectuals" for Sovietism, China and Russia appear no nearer rapprochement at the end, than they were at the beginning of the year. On January 6 Comrade Joffe, who had arrived in Peking on August 12, 1922, announced his departure. His health was certainly bad, but his mission had been a complete failure. He came to Shanghai, had several interviews with Dr. Sun—the two publishing on January 26 a joint statement of aims and sympathies—and retired to Japan. On January 2 news came from Harbin of Chinese fears of a Red invasion of Manchuria: rumours to this effect were current for several months but resulted in nothing. On January 16 the Mongol Prince Na Yin-to memorialized Peking on the Sovietizing of Mongolia: the fact that Russia steadily declines to give back Mongolia to China, in spite of many promises, is the obstacle to any agreement. On January 25 the old quarrel over the Russian Volunteer Fleet was settled by its being returned to the Soviet agent in Shanghai, the old R. V. F. Committee in Paris agreeing. On February 10 the Premier General Chang Shou-tseng announced that he was sending an envoy, Chiang Kang-hu, familiar with Russian affairs, to Moscow. Parliament stipulated that there must be no question of recognition. On July 30 the Chinese authorities at Harbin seized the Land Department office. The Consular Body acting with great promptitude sealed up all the title deeds. But the Chinese "Commissioner" has not been turned out of the office and persists in collecting rents and rates where he can. On August 24, another envoy from Moscow, Karakhan, arrived in Peking. He was welcomed by the intellectuals, but has made no progress with Government.

The Russian refugee problem has been one of great anxiety all through the year. The evacuation by the Japanese of Vladivostok brought in a new flood of refugees. There are estimated to be 50,000 roughly, scattered about China. Admiral Stark and his ships left Woosung early in January and were reported at Manila on the 26th, leaving, however, large numbers of his followers in Shanghai. The maintenance of those for whom no work even of the most menial type could be found, has proved very difficult. On June 30 a meeting at the Charity Organization Committee's rooms, was held when a new Committee to centralize relief was held. This body has managed to send back a few refugees to Russia and the good reports they send indicate that more might go if there were money. The arrival off the Chusans of the Eldorado, from Gensan, on July 1, with 700 fighting Russians on board and quantities of arms and ammunition caused a sensation. The men had contracts to work in Chêkiang, but the real purpose of the Eldorado's arrival was undoubtedly gun-running. An American, Captain Kearny, was arrested for complicity, tried and sentenced to a large fine. The Eldorado remained for some months at the Chusans, but was subsequently brought to Woosung where she remains a problem. Most of her crew have evaporated. On September 20 three more ships under General Gleboff arrived at Woosung. They contain some hundreds of fighting men, still there, the worse problem for being apparently well-behaved. On December 21 the Chinese Ministry of Justice announced the institution of the death penalty for Russians deserving of it—sufficient illustration of how little remains of Russian extraterritoriality.

WEIHAIWEI.

The long drawn out negotiations for the rendition of Weihaiwei (announced at the Washington Conference) were removed to Peking on January 7. They were not actually resumed until March 23. A sensation was caused in the summer by an announcement from London to the effect that the Foreign Office did not propose to consider any idea of compensation for vested interests. On September 27 Great Britain caused to be published her terms for rendition (see "Herald" that date). This was generally regarded as indicating her last word in the matter. At the end of the year the question was still open.

DROUGHT AND FAMINE.

There is mercifully less to record under this heading than in 1922. The drought of the autumn and winter months (1922) threatened Shansi with disaster, and at the end of January there was severe stringency in twenty of her southwest districts. But the "Model Province" of China appears to have weathered this misfortune, as also the floods reported on August 10. On August 14 very serious floods were reported from Kirin, in north Manchuria; and the same from Lungchow and Nanning in Kuangsi between September 16 and 20. Hongkong was visited by one of the worst typhoons on record on August 18 which did great damage ashore and afloat; and by torrential rains on August 29, also disastrous in effect.

OPIUM.

With allowance for two or three honourable exceptions, all the provinces are growing and using freely. Many compel the cultivation, for the sake of the licence fee first and tax on produce afterwards. On December 26, 1922, the Hunan branch of the International Anti-Opium Association denounced official protection of opium-growing in that province. On January 23 Sir Francis Aglen advocated the legalization of opium with a State monopoly as the only feasible means of controlling the trade. He was of course furiously denounced and the suggestion feverishly repudiated by all China's "face-savers." On January 3, our Kueiyang (Kueichow) correspondent reported the legalizing of the opium trade. On January 13 our Yingchowfu (Anhui) correspondent showed how opium was again becoming the curse of the province. In Kansu, our Lanchow correspondent reported compulsory growing on January 26. In Kiangsi, our Kanchow correspondent notified resumption of growing, after a long interval, on March 2. On April 16 it was rumoured that Peking was to institute an opium mono-

NEWS FROM THE OUTPORTS

BREACH BETWEEN CHINA AND SOVIET

Conference as Far Off as Ever: Russia Demanding Recognition and China Demanding Return of Mongolia

Peking, Jan. 11.

The following translation of correspondence between Dr. C. T. Wang, Director General of Sino-Russian Negotiations, and Mr. Karakhan, has been handed to Reuter's Agency for publication, as the letters addressed by the latter to the former have already been published by Rosta News Agency:

DR. WANG TO MR. KARAKHAN.

Nov. 21, 1923.

Dear Mr. Karakhan,

I have the honour to inform you that I shall be leaving in a few days for Japan on official business and shall be away from Peking for about two weeks.

As the outstanding questions between China and Soviet Russia urgently await settlement, I earnestly hope that you can see your way to naming a date for the opening of formal negotiations between us, so that upon my return it will be possible for us forthwith to commence the negotiations.

I am, etc.,
Yours faithfully
(Signed) CHENGTING T. WANG.

THE QUESTION OF RECOGNITION.

Nov. 28, 1923.

Dear Mr. Karakhan,

I have received your letter of November 23 and noted its contents.

As regards the presentation of credentials concerning which you stated that you had not received a reply from the Waichiaopu I have duly forwarded the same to the latter with a request that I be favoured with an answer. As regards, however, the resumption of normal relations between China and Russia concerning which you stated that I had not replied to you, there seems to be a misunderstanding on your part.

If you will recall, in the course of our very first conversation I had suggested that the question of resumption of such normal relations should be solved at the formal conference together with the general principles governing other outstanding questions. To this suggestion you were good enough to express your appreciation and approval. Consequently, I have been enabled to exchange several conversations with you in which, conformally to such understanding, the matter of resumption of normal relations was discussed together with the other questions. And as a result, save in the matter of the Chinese Eastern Railway, it has been possible for our points of view gradually to agree with each other.

Even in regard to the Chinese Eastern Railway our opinions do not seem to differ materially from each other, the divergence being after all not considerable. While you admitted that China was entitled to rights of ownership over the said railway, you also advance the view that the conditions governing the transfer and control of the railway should be separately negotiated after the agreement on General Principles has been signed. On the other hand I reiterated the view that the question of the said railway should not be made a matter for separate negotiation but should be disposed of at the Conference at the same time with the other outstanding questions.

BREACH OPENED AGAIN.

Such being the tenour of our conversations, I am astonished to observe that you have seen fit now suddenly to lodge a complaint over the question of resumption of normal relations, thus making our mutual viewpoints, which had been gradually approaching each other, to drift further and further apart and contributing nothing to the benefit of the two countries. Over a year has elapsed since the Government of Soviet Russia despatched an envoy plenipotentiary to China for the settlement of outstanding problems. The reason why the projected Conference has failed to materialize was because both sides had desired the preliminary settlement of certain questions. Your predecessor, Mr. Joffe, was not unaware of this and therefore firmly declined to entertain the idea of any preliminary settlement prior to the holding of the Conference. An understanding in this sense was reached by both sides and, upon your arrival in Peking, you gave your cordial adhesion thereto in the course of our conversations.

Since our mutual viewpoints have been gradually approaching each other, I am still of the opinion that you will in conformity with the above understanding see your way to open formal negotiation with me when I return from Japan.

I am etc.,
(Signed) CHENGTING T. WANG.

TO AVOID MISUNDERSTANDINGS.

Jan. 9, 1924.

Dear Mr. Karakhan,

Your letter of November 30, 1923, has been received. I note, however, that there has not only been a misunderstanding on your part in regard to my former letter but also some misconception in regard to our previous conversations. By way of refreshing your memory and in the hope that future misunderstandings may be removed, permit me to enclose for your information a résumé of our previous conversations.

In your letter under reply you were good enough to promise that you will agree to settle all questions just as I propose and that even as regards the Chinese Eastern Railway you will agree to discuss whatever proposals may be put forth by me. This is an evidence of the fact that our mutual viewpoints have approached nearer to each other, and I rejoice that the prospects of the forthcoming Conference have therefore become brighter than before.

I have long ago appreciated your attitude that "all the questions will be solved in the spirit of the Declarations of 1919 and 1920" and because of the existence of these declarations our views have been enabled to come to mutual agreement. Upon comparison, however, with the French text of these declarations received by the Chinese Government which were cabled from Irkutsk. I notice there are discrepancies in the text enclosed in your letter. It is true that the text received by my Government was in the form of a telegram, but the same was signed and certified as a true copy by Mr. Yamson, Delegate Plenipotentiary for Foreign Affairs of the Council of the Commissaries of the People of Siberia and the Far East. Accordingly the text received by my Government should be regarded as authoritative. Upon this subject the Waichiaopu had in its memorandum of December 11, 1922, dwelt in great detail and there is no need for me to elaborate upon it further.

CHINA FIRM ON RECOGNITION.

I am unable to subscribe to your view that the resumption of normal relations between China and Russia should be effected as a condition precedent to the opening of the Conference, since the attitude of the Chinese Government is based on the proposal advanced by Mr. Joffe, the former envoy plenipotentiary of your Government. If you will look up the memorandum addressed on October 14, 1922, by Mr. Joffe to the Waichiaopu, you will find the particulars therein.

In your opinion the Union of Soviet Russia has by its declarations of 1919 and 1920 shown its complete friendliness to China. In the opinion, however, of the Chinese people this friendliness still leaves something to be desired, since the troops of your Government are still stationed in Chinese territory, namely, in Outer Mongolia.

To sum up. When two nations desire to maintain friendly relations with each other it is essential that a formal agreement shall first be signed by them which may be capable of mutual observance. If, on the other hand, only the normal relations are resumed while the outstanding questions are to be left for settlement at a future date, how can the Chinese people be expected to be satisfied therewith? In my opinion if the formal Conference could be opened at an early date, normal relations could be resumed at an early date. This would dispense with argumentation through an exchange of letters and memoranda which hardly accomplish any good to our object in view.

It is therefore my sincere hope that you will reconsider the matter and advise me as soon as possible of the date for the opening of the Conference which shall settle all outstanding questions.

I am, etc.,
(Signed) CHENGTING T. WANG.

Enclosure:

A résumé of our conversations both in English and Chinese.

—Reuter's Pacific Service.

A NEW GOVERNMENT IN CANTON

Dr. Sun as President: War on Peking: Chang Tso-lin "Ordered" to Attack

A telegram received in Shanghai on Saturday stated that Dr. Sun Yat-sen, Canton's Generalissimo, has, after due consultation with his advisers, definitely decided to establish a new government in Canton which will be known as the Consolidated Government of China.

Dr. Sun will himself assume the Presidency, and his first act will be to declare war on the Peking Government. This mandate will "order" Marshal Chang Tso-lin (the Mukden warlord), Gen. Lu Yung-hsiang (Tupan of Chêkiang), and other anti-northern militarists to "attack Peking." Dr. Sun will also "order" Marshal Tuan Chi-jui, the Anfu leader, to proceed to the south to assume the Premiership.

Gen. Yu Yu-jen, former Commander of the Self Governing Armies of Shensi who is now President of the University of Shanghai, will leave for Canton in a few days to assume a post as Minister either of Interior or for Reconstruction.

A HONAN RAILWAY

Fantastic Scheme Attributed to [illegible] g Syndicate

From Rodney Gilbert.

Peking, Jan. 9.

It has been reported in the Chinese press that the Peking Syndicate, with the support of Wu Pei-fu, has concluded a contract with the Ministry of Communications for the extension of the Ch'inghua-Taok'ou Railway from Taok'ou across country to the Tientsin-Pukow line near Tsinanfu and that $14,000,000 will be advanced to the Government, either for military or administrative txpenses.

The Syndicate denies that any such advance has ever been contemplated and also denies that a definite agreement of any sort has been reached with the Ministry of Communications, although it is freely admitted that the project has long been under discussion.

HONGKONG, Jan. 12.—Sir Roderick Jones, Chairman of Reuters, has departed for Singapore. —Reuter's Pacific Service.

UNEASY TIMES ON UPPER YANGTZE

Shutung's Bad Luck: First Fired on then Rocked: Yang Sen No Check on Snipers

Ichang, Jan. 3.

The steamer Shutung which was taken over by the China Navigation Co. in September last when they also acquired the Loongmow from Messrs. Mackenzie & Co., has had some bad luck recently. She had been plying between Chungking and Luchow or Suifu so long as the water permitted her to do so. It is learned that on a recent trip down from Suifu she was under fire for about three-quarters of an hour, when one first-class passenger (Chinese) was shot dead, and some other passengers wounded. When the water became too low to continue trading on that part of the river, she was coming down to Ichang, and presumably would have gone to Shanghai for her annual overhaul. But she struck the rocks near the Hsin (or Ching) Tan, about 40 miles above this city, and had to be beached. It is reported that her position is somewhat perilous as she has a very bad list and, though in shallow water, the current is very strong.

It will be remembered that the military recently acquired a steamer for carrying supplies from here to the Northern Expedition in Szechuan. She is named the Yangwei, and now she is also on the rocks about Fengtuhsien and is said to have a large hole in her bottom. It is said it may be possible to patch it up with cement, so as to keep her running a bit longer.

FIRING BRISK AS EVER.

It was expected that firing on the steamers might be stopped now that General Yang Sen holds all the river up to Chungking, but such has not proved to be the case. They have nearly all been fired upon recently, and lately the Kingwo came under heavy fire. The fire was returned from the ship, and one corporal or sergeant ashore was killed. The ship has been detained in Chungking while the British Consul and General Yang have been inquiring into the affair.

The inspector of the Government Salt Department at Chungking has recently been subjected to some hard treatment by the military there. On Christmas Eve General Cheng Kuoh-tung, commanding the 3rd Division of the Second Army, made a demand on the Inspector for some of the Salt revenue. Of course he met with a refusal, when his bodyguard of three men intimidated the Inspector, as revolvers were held in front of him and at his back, and he was kept thus a practical prisoner for some three hours. He managed to send one of his men for the American Consul, and another gentleman who heard of his predicament also came to stay with him till the Consul could arrive. But it was three hours before he could be released from his serious situation. If he did sign an order for money under duress, he was able to stop the payment of it before it could be cashed.

SQUEEZING THE FAT.

One of the gentry of Ichang has just had a trying experience. When it was resolved that all the streets of the town should be provided with gates which could be shut in the event of another mutinous outbreak of soldiery for looting purpses, this man, Hsieh Hsin-lu, was appointed to carry out the work. Recently a charge was lodged against him with the magistrate, that while the work was only worth some 13,000 tiao, he had been paid 16,000 tiao for it, and so it was quite clear that he had squeezed 3,000 tiao. He was apprehended and lodged in prison, and then some of his friends took up the case. He was advised that, rightly or wrongly, he had better pay up, and he agreed to make a subscription of 1,500 tiao to the funds for providing water tanks in various parts of the city for fire prevention. This was accepted, and the case settled on these terms.

But the magistrate considered that he had got one of the real monied class in his hands, and he made a demand for 10,000 tiao for military purposes. This was going to ruin the man altogether, so he was advised to offer a little, and in the end the magistrate accepted his donation of 300 tiao for military expenses, and not till then was the man released. This once again proves the truth of the Chinese proverb which says, "The Yamens open up with a spread like the character eight; it is better not to enter if you have right but no weight (i.e. money)."—Reuter's Pacific Service.

BATANG BESIEGED BY TIBETANS

China's Last Post on Frontier: Tiny Foreign Colony Wholly Cut Off

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tachienlu, Sze., Dec. 13.

Batang is 18 days from Tachienlu and about one month from Talifu. Away in this isolated station in the heart of Asia there are four families, three American and one British. It is practically impossible to get to this lonely outpost at the present time. North, south, east and west, the place is completely surrounded and entirely cut off from the outside world. Robbers infest the roads south and east and Lhasa troops hold positions north and west. How to get in and how to get out is now somewhat of a problem and the Chinese garrison is showing every symptom of a speedy and complete capitulation.

News of a varied nature continually leaks out, telling something of the conditions in the besieged city. A few days ago a French priest in Tachienlu heard that the garrison had surrendered to the Tibetans, handing over their rifles and retiring to Litang (14,000 feet high) and eight days east of Batang. According to common report Wang Si-ling, the Hunan general in command of Batang, is an opium-smoker and quite unfit to maintain law and order. On several occasions he has come under the severe censure of Chen Hsia-ling and Chen has warned him of the danger of his policy. However, Wang Si-ling goes on his way and holds the garrison with three or four hundred Chinese soldiers.

How he does so is perfectly marvellous and does no small credit to the Chinese troops under him. Batang lies in a small valley surrounded on all sides by high mountains and one six-pounder in six minutes would not only shift Batang but the valley in which it nests. The little garrison must be surrounded by thousands of Lhasa troops and hundreds of Tibetan brigands.

The foreign population, including American, French and British, numbers nearly 20. Apparently they feel no alarm and anticipate no danger should the Tibetans attack the place. Batang is now the only place in Khamba held seriously by the Chinese and should that city fall, the old border would revert again to its old line just over the bridge outside Tachienlu.

GOVERNORSHIP OF CANTON

Canton, Jan. 9.

The Civil Governor, Mr. Liao Chung-hai, has returned to Canton, but as he has expressed a desire to resign, the former Governor, Gen. Hu Han-min, is mentioned as his successor.

Dr. Sun Yat-sen is suggesting Mr. Li Hsin-kun, his private secretary, as Magistrate of Heungshan, replacing Mr. Jue Chock-man, whose recent conflict with Admiral Chan Chak led to the destruction of a part of Heungshan. — Reuter's Pacific Service.

which would have been ample for education and many other things, if properly handled. All this is perfectly true and we can see that "K.C.K." is alive to the anomaly. He urges that foreigners shall fix the responsibility where it really belongs and make common cause with the Chinese people, who are worse sufferers than foreigners by the depredations of their officials. Nothing would give foreigners greater pleasure. But the said Chinese sufferers must at least give them some sort of lead, which they conspicuously do not. When the Lincheng outrage occurred, the Chinese non-official classes did absolutely nothing, though their own countrymen had been, were then and have continued to be infinitely more afflicted by bandits than foreigners. At last year's conference of Associated British Chambers of Commerce, numerous subjects were discussed in which Chinese are a thousand times more interested than are foreigners; and it is true that an address on the subject was received from the Chinese Chamber of Commerce. But it was an anaemic, colourless thing devoid of real purpose and effect. In the dispute over the Canton Customs surplus, the Chinese bankers send agonized memorials to Sir Francis Aglen on the sancity of the Domestic Loans' security. But it is clear that they expect him to pull the chestnuts out of the fire for them, and, in common with the foreign Powers whose gunboats protect their loans, to incur all the odium of so doing. Two days ago our Yunnanfu correspondent gave a harrowing description of the torture of slave girls, which, although not the general rule, is certainly not exceptional. When have the students as a body made any real effort to put down evils of this nature? Yet, if they can terrorize their elders and betters into boycotting the goods of a perfectly inoffensive nation, they could certainly persuade them into a kinder frame of mind.

It is often lost sight of that foreigners in their dealings with Chinese are inspired by no small measure of genuine goodwill. Personal regard, which it is impossible not to feel for the people of this land the longer we live among them, enters far more deeply into the foreigner's attitude towards China than she appears to understand. It is true that the foreigner is here because he wishes to trade with her: and there is no reason to conceal or to feel ashamed of the fact: but he is not such a fool as to forget that friendliness and fair dealing are the best passports to good business. Yet at every turn he is met with suspicion and rebuff. To take such a small matter as the dredging of the Soochow Creek. It might have been done months ago and millions of Chinese the better for it: and, as the Whangpoo Conservancy Board is a Chinese Government organ, no sovereign rights are involved. But the local Chinese authorities do nothing themselves and allow no one else to do anything. That is the spirit which blocks every reform throughout the country and, until it is extinguished, it is idle for Chinese to ask the foreigner for his cooperation in fastening the blame for violated treaties and every other manifestation of bad government where it belongs.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

The Balance of Power

At different times two principal policies have dominated affairs in Europe, one being the Concert, the other the Balance of Power. We may for the time being leave out of account organizations brought into being to ensure peace, such as the Holy League and League of Nations, for while the first one ended in war the other now sees the principle of the Balance of Power assuming a greater European importance than it is able to claim. Attention was drawn to this grouping of nations by the recent rapprochement between Paris and Prague, and the suggestion that Czecho-Slovakia would finally bridge the way between France and Russia. Now we learn that the whole of the Little Entente, comprising in addition to Czecho-Slovakia, Rumania and Jugo-Slavia, with Poland as well, are in this grouping, and it is possible accordingly to see an aggregation of great strength herein. Great Britain has shown herself somewhat more than merely interested in these proceedings, and naturally so, for she is bound to take notice if we are back once more to the days of the Balance of Power. Her interest is not merely political, but for the time being is as much financial. But even if it were not so, the case would call for attention in London, for it can hardly be suggested that Great Britain can return, at least for many years to come, to the once favoured policy of Splendid Isolation. She has a definite rôle to play in European politics, and sooner or later it will emerge.

People's Reputations

One day last week a good deal was said about reputations in the course of an action in the Supreme Court, and Judge Grain, when asked to read a report about a man compiled by an American detective, mentioned that if he started this sort of inquiry he would never be able to leave court. He spoke from a wide experience undoubtedly, and probably a sorrowful one, for a judge must see the worst aspects which human nature has to show. Litigants, however, are no worse than other people in the aggregate, and when it comes to reputations it may be recalled that not so long ago there was an agency in Shanghai which for a consideration would supply its clients with a full dossier concerning the affairs, doings and probably personal habits of anybody into whom it was desired to inquire. We believe, and certainly we hope, that the agency is defunct, for these things are a menace to the peace of a community. As to how it carried on its work of investigation we have had a few bare hints from time to time, these generally indicating that the agents of the concern when found on the prowl received the hammering they deserved from prospective victims, and we cannot pretend to know the amount of truth about people which they ever collected. They seem to have had sufficient to hint at a weak spot in most reputations, thanks doubtless to skilful exaggeration. If so, one would pity a judge who had to peruse a dossier about everybody coming before him.

The Earthquake

Far inferior as it is to the upheaval of September 1, the earthquake which smote Japan on Tuesday morning was none the less a heavy calamity and the deepest sympathy must go out to the unfortunate Japanese. Their fortitude under the adversity of September and the heroic manner in which they have set themselves to repair the damage have won the admiration of all the world and it is a cruel fate which has burdened them with yet more disaster. The thought occurs that the latest earthquake may be but the aftermath of the great one. A disturbance of the earth's surface so violent as to cause such a shock must surely take many months and involve much further slidings and subsidences before every part has found its place, as appears to have been happening in Japan since September.

Our Labour Correspondent

Recent correspondence in our columns cast some doubt on the right of our Labour correspondent to speak for Labour in England, one letter containing an innuendo in the remark that his correspondence "revealed the mind of one accustomed to think in 'classy' figures of speech, familiar in certain types of Shanghai society." With a view to nailing this suggestio falsi down, however sincerely it may have been expressed, let us say that our Labour correspondent is an ordinary member of a home trades' union, merely one of the rank and file; that he has never been outside England; and that, though he may have a happier or more lucid gift of expression than the average, he is in the strict sense of the word a working man, and a manual worker at that. He has been in the ranks of the "out of works," and possibly is now, and his hands would certainly be unfamiliar in certain types of Shanghai society. We may say that we have verified these facts, and that, in line with our policy of presenting foreign and home opinion from all angles and from every class of society when it becomes articulate, we have printed this correspondent's contributions without editing and also without prejudice. That they have been appreciated, both our correspondence columns and opinions expressed outside have well proved. Among our readers there must be many who have experienced the utter despair and hopelessness that comes of looking for work and finding none; the loss of faith in religion, creeds and parties, almost in one's fellow man, after the fruitless quest of weeks, perhaps months, of what has with unconscious humour been described as man's inalienable right. To these no doubt the articles we have printed "from a trades unionist" will carry conviction on their face. To others of softer sinew they may interpret "labour" — its difficulties, its aims and its needs—in less terrifying terms than does the newspaper syndicate, and win for it we hope some greater measure of sympathy and understanding.

The Ships at Woosung

There appears no question but that we have unintentionally done an injustice to some of the Russian ships at Woosung. Mr. A. D. Bell, whose vivid article on the subject we publish to-day has no doubt whatever of what he is talking about; and testimony to the same effect also reaches us from another quarter. There appears to be a sharp distinction between the Eldorado and the three other ships: the former has been a vessel of ill-omen for many months past and, it would seem, she continues so to be. The other three maintain a discipline and a self-restraint deserving of high compliment. We have said before and would say it again, that the behaviour of Russian refugees in and about Shanghai (and we have no doubt elsewhere as well) has been worthy of the warmest praise. Such disorderliness as has occasionally been reported by Russians is absolutely negligible in comparison with all they have to endure. And this must heighten the desire of everybody to secure them some happy release from their misfortunes. The three ships at Woosung, excellently as they are managed, remain none the less a potential source of trouble when their occupants' money ultimately runs out, and they should accordingly be taken under proper control. Meanwhile, it is obviously impossible to send back the crews to Russia. Some occupation further afield must be found for them. This is where Dr. Greig's mission in Shanghai on behalf of the League of Nations offers possibilities which every effort should be made to convert into realities.

The Good Luck Chain

The good luck chain lunacy is with us again, and the wrath of an outraged community may well be aroused to fever heat. Just think of the feelings of a man on opening his morning letters when a communication starting thus greets him:—

"Some smart fellow has started this plan and I suppose that all of the rest of us smart fellows will have to keep it up. I am so superstitious that I am afraid if I do not go along I might lose an eye or an ear or something."

Then follows a list of 90 people who have pestered their fellows with the letter, and the epistle concludes thus:—

"Copy this and send it to nine people whom you wish good luck.

"The chain was started by an American officer and should go round the world three times. Do not break the chain, for, whoever does will have bad luck. Do it within 24 hours and you will have some great luck.

"With success for you. Let's go smiling through 1924."

It seems a pity that the American officer in question had nothing better to do than to start this horrible infliction, but we shall be charitable and hope that no worse has befallen him than having his life plagued by an incessant stream of his own letters. That may perhaps "learn" him. But cannot somebody stop the matter here? This is at least the second time the letter has made its unwelcome appearance in our midst, and it might be an excellent thing to pillory those who bother their acquaintances with it. The notice boards of clubs might be devoted to publishing the names of the "smart fellows" who thus employ their time.

Hongkong's Share Boom

Some interesting details are now available with reference to the wild share boom which has taken place in Hongkong. It started on the strength of news that the Colonial Government proposed to buy the Green Island Cement property at a big price, and as this would mean a huge increase in capital for this and associated concerns, there seemed every reason to buy for a rise. People did, but according to the Hongkong papers optimism did not stop here. It spread to stocks having no interest in these purchases, and an epidemic of gambling attacked a section of the community. The "South-China Morning Post" thus comments upon the position:—

The drop in quotations on January 10 was a hint that the peak has been reached, and in a few days all concerned will perhaps have time to think about next settlement day. An interesting sidelight is that Chinese opinion attributes the abnormal activity to the operations of property speculators who, finding dullness prevailing in the other sphere, have directed their attention to shares. Native brokers are straining their utmost to turn the boom to profit, and the names of well known merchants are mentioned, heavy buyers and shining examples, to the timid. Not to moralize unduly, we trust the hectic happenings of the Canton influx period a year ago are not going to be maintained for any length of time, and we muse on the good that this money could do were it put into reproductive industry.

The Drop in Sterling

Sterling at 4.23 in relation to the gold dollar is the lowest point reached since January, 1922, when it was 4.22⅝, and it is a matter to provide much food for thought. This accordingly is an opportune moment for considering the movements of the London-New York exchange for the past five years, and in doing so we see significant movements. Up to February, 1919, exchange was "pegged" at 4.76½, this being a war measure between the British and United States Governments, but immediately the artificial rate was ended, sterling proceeded to drop. At the end of 1919 the £ was worth only G.$3.85, and although during 1920 it rose during two or three months, the rate continued generally to fall, finishing up at 3.51. By this time Great Britain's ability to recover from the drain on its resources imposed by the war was being demonstrated, and in 1921 a gradual improvement was seen, so that by the beginning of 1922 sterling had recovered to 4.22⅝—the figure quoted above which is practically the level to-day. This improvement went on throughout the whole of 1922 and during the first three months of 1923, the rate being a bare fraction short of 4.70 in March. Since then there has been a gradual drop, which has latterly been accentuated by the news of the dissolution of Parliament and later by the result of the election. Now a further recession takes place because of the possibility of a Labour Government, with a capital levy on its programme, coming into power. Certain of our readers seem to disagree with the theory that exchange is a good political barometer, and in view of what they may have to say it is necessary to make one explanation. Sterling began to drop quite a long time before there was any hint of Mr. Baldwin's electoral venture, but this was due principally to heavier purchases by Britain in the United States than in previous years and to higher prices in America. The fact that more sterling had to be paid to America had the natural effect of setting the rate against London To-day the cause is both similar and different. There is grave fear of a new political programme, and to safeguard capital people are sending money out of the country. Hence the slumps which cause so much disorganization of the exchange market.

A Snag

Without seeking too great refinement of definition in approaching the word "snag," one may say in fair anticipation of being believed that the French Inspector of Police conducting a traffic case in H. M. Police Court yesterday struck a beautiful specimen. A motorist is charged with obstructing traffic on the French Bund. He does so (admittedly) by the simple and entirely efficient method of placing his car on the rails in front of a tram car. The case is proved, the Inspector hopes to justify his existence by departing with a conviction, and the defendant prepares to justify his existence as a Shanghai motorist by payment of a small fine. Then comes the snag. Consulting the French traffic by-laws and applying to the same the analytical finesse of Sherlock Holmes plus Thomas Aquinas, the Magistrate discovers that they provide only for negligent obstruction, not deliberate. Defendant acted deliberately: therefore he did not act negligently: therefore he committed no breach of the by-laws: therefore the case must be dismissed. Thus did his Worship strain at the logical camel and swallow the literal gnat. Frankly, we cannot congratulate him on the decision. It was the clearest case of obstruction before the Court for some time and the by-law might well have been held to apply: for, by placing his car on the tram lines, defendant caused an obstruction: therefore he neglected to obey the by-law: therefore he was negligent: therefore he came within the meaning of the by-law. But after all, law is law, and must be protected

---

MR. Wu Ching-lien, the notorious Speaker of the Lower House and now a refugee in Tientsin, is reported to have recently written to Marshal Wu Pei-fu begging him to turn the situation in his favour. The Marshal expressed his sympathy with him, and, it is said, stated that he ought to know the truth of the old proverb: "Ingratitude is the world's reward." He proved useful to the Chihli clique before the Presidential election, continued the Loyang warlord, but now he was worse than useless.

THE CIVIL WAR IN SZECHUAN

Yang Sen and Wu Pei-fu's Party Now on Crest of Wave: Capital Threatened

From Our Own Correspondent.

Chengtu, Sze., Dec. 20.

The political situation is again an open question. For a time the powers that be assured the people that the civil war was over now that Chungking had fallen. But Yang Sen has come back stronger than ever, and again Chungking has fallen, but this time to Yang Sen and Wu Pei-fu's party for the North. The Southern party here represented by Hsiong Keh-wu and his mob are much perturbed. They looked upon Yang Sen's last attempt as a forlorn hope but it made good. Now his troops are advancing. Yuin-chuan is reported taken, and the next move will be a push along the big road to the capital. Hsiong is reported already to have removed some important pieces of machinery from the Arsenal to reduce its efficiency for others, and to have machinery handy that he can use elsewhere if necessary.

It is time for a change. Hsiong and Liu have been a long time in the lead here, and the situation is worse than ever. Brigandage is rife everywhere. The robbers are daily becoming bolder and actually rob, plunder and carry off victims right up to the South Gate of the Capital. Last week a Major with 20 scouts was attacked right near the suburbs, and taking cover fought all night until help came, when the robbers were driven off.

The paper money is dropping seriously as the reports of Northern successes come in. Hsiong's paper dollar is now below 50 cents and there is real hardship among the business people. Two local campaigns have been successful in spite of the receding money market. The Y. M. C. A. went in their annual membership campaign and secured 1,400 members and 12,000 paper dollars. Then last week the Japanese Relief committee of students from the Union University took in 5,000 paper dollars at the Y. M. C. A. in a two-days' fair. One day the paper dollar dropped to 42 cents, it is now a trifle stronger. If Hsiong decamps it will dwindle to nothing.

LIGHTLESS SUBURBS OF HARBIN

Chinese Absorbing all Funds: Tyrannous Extortion from Russian Landowners

From Our Own Correspondent.

Harbin, Dec. 31.

From the beginning of the year all of Harbin's suburbs will be in darkness for there will be no more street lighting, whilst all the roads will go to ruin and the schools be forced to close. The reason is that the Railway Administration, which has up to now furnished the street lights, looked after the repair of the roads and given grants for the maintenance of the schools, has announced that no money will be forthcoming in 1924 seeing that the Railway is no longer to get a portion of the tax levied on wines and spirits imported or produced in the Harbin District. General Ma, who is at the head of the district municipal affairs, has notified the railway that all the money collected on this excise is now required for administrative purposes and that therefore no part can be allotted to the Railway as hitherto. Thanks to trade depression, this tax has much diminished. It is, however, neither just nor fair that the inhabitants of the suburbs and their children should be made the sufferers, seeing it is these residents who are directly responsible for the expansion of the town. It is stated that some 2,000 schoolchildren and 100 teachers will be affected.

LAND DEPT. INIQUITIES.

The "Rech," a Japapnese-owned newspaper published in Russian, is carrying on a strong campaign against the methods of the Chinese authorities and criticizing them in very outspoken terms. As the cost of the paper is only 40 sen a month, it is getting a very wide circulation among Russians, even though it is but a month old. According to this organ the agents of the Chinese Land Department along the railway line are treating many Russian renters of land in a very arbitary manner and the latter have no redress whatsoever and nobody to appeal to. The paper quotes specific instances giving names and full details. In one case a Russian living in Hailar though he was able to show a receipt for land rent from the C.E.R. Land Department, was forced to pay the rent again to the agent of the Special Area Land Department, being threatened otherwise with deportation. The Chinese police gave all assistance to the said agent. The man was arrested because he had not the money and afterwards, accompanied by the police, was allowed to go to his friends from whom eventually he was able to get the necessary sum to satisfy the Land Agent. In another instance, a Russian woman living at Yamen was visited by the Chinese Land Agent, who not only took away the C.E.R. Land Department receipt, but the title deeds of the woman's house as well. The Consular Body at Harbin have protested against this tyranny. At Harbin itself such occurrences have not taken place.

M. de la Prade, the French Consul, who has been transferred to Foochow, left for that port on Saturday afternoon by the China Merchants' str. Haean.

LU YUNG-TING'S IRON RULE IN KUANGSI

A General Who Means to Put Down Brigands and Does So: Brighter Outlook in Kuangsi

From Our Own Correspondent.

Wuchow, Si., Jan. 6.

Usually in other countries than China conditions become as bad as possible and grow gradually better, while in China conditions seem to become as bad as possible and then still grow worse.

This, at least has been the experience of the province of Kuangsi. Two years ago it was considered in as deplorable a state as it was possible to get into, and everybody thought that we had passed through the worst of our troubles, but last year conditions continued to grow worse and worse. Both "the devil and the deep sea" seemed to be let loose. At the present time the devil is still roaring, but the sea is quieting down somewhat.

A short time ago Marshal Lu Yung-ting assumed the rôle of Administrator of Justice for the province or as the office is aptly called, "Good Afterwards Department," which in common English simply means that the Marshal has undertaken the gigantic task of exterminating the robbers and clearing the highways and river routes to traffic. Already the western half of the province has felt his iron sway. Robber bands or disbanded soldiers who would not submit to moral suasion have been treated with harsher means. A large company of robbers in the Toloh district who refused to surrender or give up their arms unless unreasonable concessions were made to them were surprised by Marshal Lu's soldiers, 300 of the band were slain and the remnant scattered. These scattered units are now being pressed on every side and it is a common thing to meet along the country roads small companies of those who have been captured and are being brought in to be measured for a thin board coffin. The roads between Nanning, the capital and Lungchow on the border of Annam are now comparatively clear from these gentlemen of the road, and traffic both by land and waterway is becoming a possibility. In the extreme north-west of the province other able leaders under Marshal Lu are pursuing a similiar policy.

This iron rule is extending eastward. Already some of Marshal Lu's vanguard have reached Pingyan and Tsiangkiang and are heading for Liuchow and Kueilin clearing the country as they go. The Liuchow river, which for two years has been held by bandits who have demanded exorbitant fees to permit the launches to run, will soon become the sphere of activity for Marshal Lu's men and it will be with a sigh of relief that the country people and business men of the northern cities see these well trained troops gaining headway.

MISSIONARIES ROBBED ON FU RIVER.

Meanwhile the eastern half of the province continues to afford excitement to all those who care to travel. A short time ago Dr. and Mrs. Mewshaw with their children and Dr. Smith of the Southern Baptist Mission were held up and robbed while travelling from Wuchow to Kueilin on the Fu river. The party had spent 18 months in the homeland and were now returning to their work again, bringing with them such things as would make their lives more comfortable and their work more successful. They had almost completed their long journey, and were on the last lap, the river journey from Wuchow to Kueilin, when they were surprised by a company of bandits and relieved of nearly everything they possessed.

A wire was received from them which read, "Robbed, Peace," but only a few days had elapsed when another telegram was received, which had one word added, "Robbed again, Peace." It would seem that everything, but the last named article has been taken from them, and that they will reach their stations less many of the comforts and conveniences for which they had prepared.

ROBBERS AND TRIBESMEN CLASH.

In the Yao Mountains there has also been some trouble. Robber bands operating along the border of the Yao Mountains recently captured two tribesmen and demanded a ransom for their release. This is the first time that it is known that a tribesman was ever kidnapped, and the incident aroused the tribesmen to a pitch of frenzy. The various tribes were notified, and each, metaphorically speaking, put on war paint and prepared to give battle. The section of the country in which the tribesmen have their homes is very mountainous and secluded, and as the Yao people know their winding footpaths well and are nimble of foot, there is little doubt that they will force the robbers to leave their present rendezvous and go out upon the plain, but whether they can secure the release of their fellow tribesman through fighting force remains still to be seen.

SAD ACCIDENT TO LADY MISSIONARY.

On Saturday evening Mrs. Oldfield while out walking with her husband stepped in a hole by the roadside and fell, dislocating her ankle and breaking her leg. Local medical aid was secured, but fearing complications might arise it was thought best to send her down to the Canton Hospital, Canton, for X ray examination. Mr. and Mrs. Oldfield left on Friday on the str. Sainam for Canton, but hope to return to Wuchow as soon as the bones are set and the leg put into a cast.

MURDERED FOREIGNERS OF SZECHUAN

Messrs. Watt and Whiteside: Secret Society Too Strong to Bring to Justice

From Our Own Correspondent.

Chengtu, Sze., Dec. 20.

Gen. Li Feng-chiu, who was sent by Liu I-chiu to investigate the murder of Messrs. Watt and Whiteside, has returned and made his report. It is substantially the information that the British Consul-General Mr. Combe has gathered from his unremitting and painstaking efforts to bring the murderers to justice. The man Ma, who committed suicide when captured, was the chief instigator of the crime.

The General has reported to his friends that it is next to hopeless to expect to root the robbers out of that country, because they are mostly in the strong Brotherhood known as "Pao Ko Hue." It is stated that the ex-Magistrate Li of Maochow, and Captain Den of Gen. Chen's own force, who was detailed to rout the robbers, are superior in the Society to their senior officers, and that all the locally appointed magistrates and officers are in the Society. Also that Gen. Chen while being responsible to the Chêngtu authorities for maintaining order must also take orders from the Society, and when the orders conflict, he is instructed to obey the Society before the Government authorities.

So this is the situation and a pretty serious situation. Gen. Li made a complete tour of the infested district but avoided the notorious dens, and felt convinced that the whole countryside had been aroused over the murder. The constant pressure of the Consul-General has had its effect. Orders have gone out in the Society condemning the men who took any part in the murder thus bringing disgrace on the Society. They have also promised to send the other suspects to Chêngtu for trial.

Authors of Murders Brought to Chengtu at Last

Chêngtu, Dec. 29.

Governor Liu I-chu, after long continued pressure brought to bear by the British Consul-General, Mr. G. A. Combe, has at length had the rest of the criminals concerned in the murder of the two missionaries, the Rev. F. J. Watt and the Rev. F. R. Whiteside, brought to Chêngtu for trial. They arrived on December 20.

Gen. Yang Sen having recaptured Chungking is pursuing the routed Szechuanese armies and has reached a point 200 li from Chêngtu. The Director-General of the Szechuanese Armies, Gen. Tan Mou-hsin, has just arrived in Chêngtu from Chungking. Gen. Hsiong Keh-wu is reported to have fled: at any rate he has not been seen for some days.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

PROTECTION AGAINST BANDITS

Trains on Tientsin-Pukow Line to be Provided with Armed Police Cars

We have received the following interesting information relating to the protection of the train service from the attacks of bandits from the Managing Director of the Chinese Government Railways, Tientsin-Pukow Line:

Since the Lincheng outrage the authorities have taken the utmost pains to guard against bandits. Apart from other safeguards some police cars have been provided equipped with electric search lights capable of throwing a beam of 1500 to 1800 feet. The light rays are rotatory and can be operated upward or downward. Each of the up and down Express and Mail trains 1, 2, 3 and 4 is provided with a police car on which two search lights are fitted —one on each side. The latter are arranged in such a way that when required they can be projected through the window over the side of the car and used at night for reconnoitring purposes when the train is running. Police guards detailed as escorts man the car and machine guns are provided. The lights cover a distance beyond bullet-range. After tests and experiments made at the Central Station continually for three nights the cars and equipment were found to be thoroughly successful. The same equipment will eventually be extended to all the Tsinpu night trains.

OPIUM AND GAMBLING IN HARBIN

Big Raid on Smugglers' Headquarters: Gambling Under Police Protection

From Our Own Correspondent.

Harbin, Dec. 31.

The other day at the instance of General Wen, chief of police, and with the assistance of some gendarmes from the Japanese Consulate a successful raid for opium was effected by the police. At about noon a strong detachment of police surrounded the Hotel Asia, situated quite close to the station and owned by a Korean named Kim, who enjoys Japanese protection. A search party entered the hotel and got a good haul of the contraband. A minute search was made in all the rooms and in several of them packages of all sorts and description, weighing from a few pounds to a pood or more of the drug, were found.

A private gambling den was also unexpectedly discovered as well as cards, chips and other paraphernalia. Most of the gamblers, Koreans and Japanese, managed to evade arrest.

The owner of the hotel and a few more Koreans were marched off to the Japanese Consulate, whilst the Chinese police took charge of the opium. This hotel is one of the headquarters of the contrabandists, who bring the narcotic from the Ussuri and the eastern section of the C.E.R. and is afterwards shipped south viâ Changchun.

PROFITABLE GAMBLING.

Gambling, though strongly prohibited by the police even in clubs for the smallest of stakes, is still going merrily on in Harbin. It is a very lucrative business, seeing that most Russians are born gamblers and cannot resist the call of the green baize. The present gambling establishments are mostly run by Koreans, for Russians are themselves afraid to figure as owners, as heavy penalties are inflicted upon them by the Chinese authorities if caught. The personnel of these places are, however, Russians and as all go under the name of restaurants, most of them are open night and day. Police protection is well organized so that the higher police authorities find it a most difficult thing to make a successful raid. Certain members of the police force, in whatever district the establishment may be situated, receive fixed sums paid daily and thus there is no interference, and warning is given if a raid is planned from headquarters. It is even stated that some of the police officers themselves have a flutter at the table, no doubt this gives confidence to the habitues that the chances of their being caught are but small.

PRESIDENT TSAO KUN IN ILL HEALTH

From Rodney Gilbert.

Peking, Jan. 9.

There have been many rumours current lately of the declining health of President Tsao Kun. It is now definitely known that he is suffering from diabetes. Though his illness is said to be severe it is not implied that it is dangerous.

CHINESE INDUSTRIAL MISSION

Receptions by Board of Trade Overseas Trade Dept. and Other Industrialists

London, Jan. 10.

In the course of a prolonged visit, Mr. Chang Chien, Jr., and his fellow members of the Chinese Industrial Mission discussed the objects of the Mission at the Board of Trade, where they were received by Sir Sydney Chapman, the Permanent Secretary, and representatives of the Overseas Trade Department

The members of the Mission were entertained to a private luncheon by the Federation of British Industries, at which Colonel C. C. Armstrong, the Chairman, presided. The gathering included Mr. Godfrey Isaacs, managing director of Marconi's, and representatives of Messrs. T. C. Aveling & Co., Messrs. Thomas Firth & Sons, the Cotton Spinners' Association and other important industrialists.

THE OBJECT OF THE MISSION.

Mr. Chang Chien, responding briefly to the toast of the guests, emphasized that while the object of the Mission was to acquire information, this was in no way contrary to the interests of foreign manufacturers trading in China. He contended that China was unable to increase her purchases substantially and rapidly as long as her ability to pay for them remained undeveloped. On the other hand, the development of China's vast natural resources would mean a new era of prosperity for other nations. British industrialists had the reputation of fearlessness in facing competition and he did not doubt that, in spite of competition, they would be amongst the first to contribute to and benefit from the industrial development of China.

The Mission will visit Rochester to-morrow and thence will proceed to Sheffield, Manchester, Birmingham and other industrial centres.—Reuter.

Road-Making and Agriculture: The Chinese Minister Not Telling Fairy Tales

London, Jan. 11.

The Chinese Industrial Mission visited Rochester this morning in order to inspect road-making and agricultural implements. The Mission will return this afternoon for a reception by the Chinese Students' Union.

Later.

A reception in honour of the Chinese Industrial Mission was given to-day by the Chinese Students' Union at the Langham Hotel.

Mr. Chu Chao-hsin, in a speech, declared that he was honestly telling the truth about China. He anticipated the day when he would have to install a wireless receiver in the Legation to listen in to instructions from the Foreign Office in Peking and to debates in the Chinese Parliament.

The Industrial Commissioner, Mr. Chang Chien, in his speech said that students held the future of China in their hands. It was unnecessary to be pessimistic for education, industry and commerce were making rapid strides. He dwelt on the value of the inquiries of the Commission. Mr. Chang Chien hoped to return to England in the future.

Dr. Chu precedes the rest of the commission by leaving for New York to-morrow. The other members will leave London for a provincial tour on Sunday.—Reuter.

Interesting Day at Sheffield

London, Jan. 14.

The Chinese commercial mission were the guests to-day of the Sheffield Chamber of Commerce and spent a busy and instructive day at the Vickers steel works, where they saw armament making, and also at Messrs. Edgar Allen's and Messrs. Arthur Balfour's steel works. The mission was entertained to luncheon at Vickers works, at which the Chairman of the Chamber of Commerce presided.

Birmingham will be omitted from the places visited owing to the brevity of the mission's stay in Britain, but Mr. C. F. Hsu of the Ministry of Communications has arrived and is visiting large works, including the Metropolitan Carriage and Wagon Co., Messrs. Belliss & Morcom's, and the Austin and Wolseley Motor-works.—Reuter.

Visit to Bradford: China's Sins Against Trademarks

London, Jan. 16.

The Chinese Industrial Mission to-day visited the headquarters of the Bradford Dyers' Association and inspected samples of dyed woollen, cotton and artificial silk goods suitable for the Far Eastern trade.

Subsequently the Mission attended a conference with the Council of the Bradford Chamber of Commerce and 30 members specially interested in the Chinese trade. The subject of trade marks. Chinese inland transport and reduction in weight for sample postage were raised. The members of the Mission promised to bring the matters before the Government on their return.

After the conference the Mission and prominent Bradford business men were entertained to luncheon by the Lord Mayor.

The Mission later visited the Saltaire mills and met the Wool and Allied Trades Industrial Council.—Reuter

TRANSPORTATION OF ARMS

Peking, Jan. 8.

According to a report from Tientsin a quantity of arms and ammunition passed through Tientsin on January 6 for Sanchiatien, the old Manchu magazine, consisting of 19,000 rifles, 17,000,000 rounds of small arms ammunition, 30 mountain guns and 1,400 shrapnel shells. It is reported that this is Italian material and came from Shanhaikuan, being consigned to the Government.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE YIHYANG MARU BANDIT OUTRAGE

Szechuan Army's Demand for Million Dollars Ransom

Peking, Jan. 8.

As the Szechuan army that was recently driven out of Chungking still holds the two Japanese officers of the Yihang Maru and still asks a million dollars for their release, the Japanese Consul-General at Chungking recently decided to enter into direct negotiations with the kidnappers. He left Chungking on the 3rd instant and proceeded up the river to Luchow, where he expects to get into touch with agents of the Szechuanese forces.

Being again pressed by the Japanese to take action for the release of these officers, the Waichiaopu is sending another official to Szechuan. The first official returned, unable to accomplish anything.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Captured Officers Borne off to Kueichow Border

Peking, Jan. 14.

It has come to light that the two Japanese officers of the Yihyang Maru, who are now kept in custody by the Szechuanese troops, have been taken to Chisui on the border of Kueichow Province.

Tang Tsu-mo and Hsi Ching-yang, leaders of the Szechuanese troops in question, are now staying in Neikiang. It is reported that Mr. Kifune, Japanese Consul in Chungking, who arrived in Luchow on the 7th instant, has proceeded to Neikiang.—Eastern News Agency.

LINCHENG REPARATION

Powers Reported Ready with Terms: Who Will Have to Pay?

Peking, Jan. 12.

The seven Powers concerned having already completed their investigations into the damage sustained by the Lincheng incident, they are expected shortly to forward a joint Note to the Chinese Government demanding the payment of indemnity.

The Central Government contemplates making the provincial authorities of Shantung pay the indemnity, whereas the latter object to being shouldered with the payment. Both the Central and provincial authorities concerned are thus attempting to shirk their responsibility.—Eastern News Agency.

DEATH OF MISS DELTA EATON

A Much Liked Mission Worker of Szechuan

From Our Own Correspondent

Chêngtu, Sze., Dec. 20.

Miss Delta Eaton, of the M.E.M., was taken suddenly ill two weeks ago, and in spite of the best medical attention died on Monday night. The doctors agree it was cerebral meningitis. The funeral was held from Shan Shi Kai on Wednesday, the 12th.

Miss Eaton was very popular among both Chinese and foreigners. She served with distinction in France with U.S. soldiers in Y.M.C.A. work. At the grave the last post was blown by Sergt. Rackham, late Regimental Band, Canadian forces.

EARTHQUAKE VICTIMS AND HARBIN

Magnificent Collection in the Northern City

From Our Own Correspondent

Harbin, Dec. 31.

Figures have just been published by Mr. R. D'Anjou, hon. secretary of the Harbin Committeee for Relief of Earthquake Sufferers in Japan, and are extremely interesting.

The total amount collected is $73,703.40.

The Chairman of the International Committee Gen. Chang Fan-lan, the Administrator of the Special Railway Area, was most energetic in his personal efforts, for he arranged special entertainments in both Fuchiatien and Pristan theatres, by which means $7,423 were netted.

Mr. Ostroumoff, who was chairman of the Russian section of the Committee, showed that among the Russian residents had been collected in cash $2,555 and Yen 10,715 and in provisions, etc., Yen 7,000.

Of the remaining sums:

British Colony contributed	Y.7,890
American Colony contributed	Y.3,055
Polish Colony contributed	Y.1,078
French Colony contributed	$1,529
Danish Colony contributed	Y.1,000

At the final meeting of the Committee, the Chairman, Gen. Chu stated that this sum had been collected and was most satisfactory seeing that at the present time business conditions in Harbin are in a very bad way. It was thanks to the energy of the members of the Committee, to the Consular body and the Railway representatives that this sum had been collected, he himself having done but very little and therefore he offered them his heartfelt thanks, stating that in no other town in China had there been such brilliant results.

MARSHAL TUAN CHI-JUI ILL

Peking, Jan. 14.

A telephone message from Tientsin reports:—Marshal Tuan Chi-jui, who had for some time been suffering from cold, suddenly had a high degree of fever on the night of the 11th instant and is now in a serious condition. Yesterday morning, a German doctor of Peking was invited to attend to the Marshal and is still staying in Tientsin. It is reported that the malady is scarlet fever. The residence of Marshal Tuan is crowded with people who have called to inquire after him.—Eastern News Agency.

Tientsin, Jan. 17.

Marshal Tuan Chi-jui's condition has improved and he is now out of danger.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

"INDEPENDENT" NAVY REINFORCED

Another Secession from Admiral Tu's Fleet

According to the "Eastern Times" another of Admiral Tu Shih-kuei's men-of-war has gone over to the "independent" fleet at Shanghai.

The torpedo boat Chung Tsz which was originally stationed at Anking recently received an order to proceed elsewhere up the river. A mutiny broke out and the ship made direct for Shanghai, despite the protests of the captain who was eventually put ashore, the chief officer Chen Sz-chun taking command of the vessel in his place.

The boat entered Woosung at 10 a.m. on Saturday; thereupon the commander of the Yung Chih, detailed to watch the Russian ships, reported the matter to Admiral Ling Chien-chang, who ordered that the Chung Tsz should be instructed to proceed to Kanchongmiao. At the same time Admiral Ling informed Gen. Lu Yung-hsiang by telegram of this movement.

FUKIEN OFFICERS RELEASED.

Three naval officers, natives of Fukien who were arrested and detained at Nanking by Admiral Tu seven months ago on suspicion of being connected with the independent fleet have now been released. They interviewed Admiral Ling at Kanchongmiao on Sunday, asking him for employment. They have been given positions in the Admiralty House, receiving pay on the old scale.

The wages of the crews of the independent fleet have not yet been paid.

SERIOUS FIRE NEAR CANTON HOSPITAL

From a Correspondent.

Canton, Jan. 8.

Yesterday morning while the resident doctor was at breakfast, the fire bells began to ring, and upon investigation it was found that two large stores at this rear of the hospital had caught fire and were burning briskly.

In spite of the fact that the fire brigade responded to the first summons the fire gained headway. Sheets of flames shot 50 feet into the air. The hospital fire staff with "boys" and coolies assisted in fighting the flames and after an hour and a half hard work they were rewarded by bringing the fire under control.

The two buildings where the fire started were practically a total loss, and one man was hurt while fighting the flames.

CHINA'S GIFT FOR JAPANESE IMPERIAL WEDDING

Peking, Jan. 15.

The President's representative, Mr. Li Tien-chang, has left for Tokio with gifts for the Prince Regent on the occasion of his wedding. The gifts include a pair of cloisonné vases, lacquer ornaments, rich brocades and rugs.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

HEROIC CONDUCT OF MRS. KILEN

The Hupeh Bandit Outrage at Tsaoyang: Mr. Hoff Dies from His Wounds

Peking, Jan. 11

No further reliable information has been received regarding the whereabouts of Mrs. Kilen.

The "Central China Post" reports that when the bandits arrived at the mission at Tsaoyang on December 27 they warned Mr. and Mrs. Hoff in Chinese not to run away. Mr. and Mrs. Hoff did not understand Chinese and followed the instructions given to them previously to run to the military barracks at once if bandits appeared. As they were running away Mr. Hoff was shot in three places and Mrs. Hoff in two places. The bandits examined the wounded people and said that as Mr. Hoff was practically dead they need not bother any further about him but that they would take away Mrs. Hoff.

Whilst they were making these remarks Mrs. Kilen, who understands Chinese, arrived on the scene. She at once volunteered to go with the bandits if they would allow Mrs. Hoff to remain with her husband. The bandits accepted the offer and took her away.

Mrs. Kilen is described as a delicate lady over 50 years of age and her conduct in this matter has aroused widespread admiration.

Mr. and Mrs. Hoff were both taken to hospital and are reported to be doing as well as can be expected. Mr. Hoff is still seriously ill.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Peking, Jan. 12.

Gen. Wu Pei-fu has reported that Mrs. Kilen has been located near Lushan to which place the bandits have moved.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

DEATH OF MR. HOFF.

Hankow, Jan. 13.

Mr. Hoff, who was wounded by the bandits who captured Tsaoyang, died yesterday.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Mrs. Kilen Rescued

Peking, Jan. 15.

Major John Magruder, American Assistant Military Attaché, reported yesterday as follows: "The Civil Governor of Honan states that Mrs. Kilen has been rescued and is well. She will reach Loyang on January 16 or 17."—Reuter.

NOTORIOUS BANDIT REPORTED DEAD.

Hankow, Jan. 14.

A telegram from Hsuchow states that Lao Yang-ren, the notorious bandit chief, has been murdered by his own men and that the bandits are fleeing. No word has been received regarding the captives.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

GERMAN MISSIONARY RELEASED

After Three Months' Captivity in Hunan

Mr. F. Strauss, the German missionary captured by bandits in Hunan last October, has just been released, states a wire from Hungkiang received in Shanghai on Tuesday by the Chino Inland Mission.

The missionary who belongs to the Liebenzeller Mission and was working in association with the China Inland Mission was taken prisoner on October 17, when on his way from Hungkiang to Wukang. At the time the news reached Shanghai his name was not given.

CAPTURE OF KIAHSIEN BY BANDITS

Peking, Jan. 11.

A telegram from Hsuchow, dated January 8, reports that Kiahsien has been captured by bandits.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

SEEING THE NEW YEAR IN AT HARBIN

Great Business in the Cabarets: Balls and Masquerades Despite Ever-increasing Poverty of Russians: Situation in Mongolia and Forthcoming Sino-Russian Conference

From Our Own Correspondent

Harbin, Jan. 2.

Notwithstanding that business has been as dead as a doornail for so long and that there is severe financial stringency, Harbin saw the old year out and new year in with the same amount of gaiety and champagne as has long been its custom.

The two most popular places in town, the Moderne in Pristan and the Railway Club in New Town, were both overcrowded, making dancing most difficult. Both places had announced a masquarade and though many of the weaker sex resorted to dominoes the majority of men were in ordinary dress, the exception being those who had attended the annual costume ball at the Harbin Club, who some time after two flooded the Railway Club. Here the merriment was kept up until nearly seven in the morning. The Moderne, which has undoubtedly the best jazz band in town, had all its tables booked up two days ahead, so the overflow of people who dropped in and found no room had to wend their way elsewhere.

The Commercial Club had also a masquerade. This place, too, was very well filled, whilst among the restaurants that had special nights were Unterberger's American Bar, where for once dancing was permitted, the Peking where a cabaret was held, and the Malo-Yarovlavetz in New Town famous from the time of the Inter-Allied Technical Board. The Alcazar, the only cabaret that has been able to hold its end up in these stringent times, did great business, a rival notwithstanding, which opened its doors on New Year's night and rejoices in the name of All Smiles, when translated.

THE SOCIAL ROUND.

It is the custom of Harbin, to save the trouble of leaving cards on New Year's Day, to hold receptions between the hours of noon and two at the Municipality and the Railway and Commercial Clubs. There was no exception to this rule this year. Between the hours indicated the places were crowded and congratulations, washed down with champagne were exchanged. At the Railway Club there was the usual religious service first, followed by speeches from members of the Board and the Railway Administration. A congratulatory telegram from Gen. Horvath at Peking caused a lot of cheering, for of course all old residents of Harbin cannot forget the man who for 18 years stood at the helm of the C.E.R., helped to build Harbin and helped it to progress.

The Administrator of the Special Area, Gen. Chu, the Chief of Staff Gen. Chang, the Chief of Police Gen. Wen, as well as Gens Ma and Yang Cho attended all these receptions, Gen. Chu making appropriate speeches at each place. At the Commercial Club was all commercial Harbin. After speechifying, the club chairman likewise read a telegram from Gen. Horvath wishing the members a happy New Year and the latter's health was enthusiastically drunk. Here Gen. Chu and the other Chinese officials who accompanied him, were invited to a banquet, where many friendly speeches were made by representatives of different public bodies.

Members of the Club received a welcome X'mas gift from Gen. Chu in the shape of permission to play cards again in the club, he having the personal guarantee of the committee that no gambling would take place. Naturally this announcement caused much satisfaction among those present.

Gen. Chu, the Administrator of the Special Area is always giving a helping hand in the cause of charity. He is an ardent supporter of homes for orphans and waifs of whom there are so many in Harbin. Recently the International Committee for helping indigent Russians, of which General Chu is President, have opened in Old Harbin a Special Home with special men and women's departments to accommodate 500 persons in all. The home is already filled, as indeed many more would be if they were in existence. The inmates are well cared for after being given first, warm clothes and receiving daily two meals.

SPECULATION IN WHEAT AND SILVER

There are some 22 modern flourmills in Harbin, but at the present time not one-third of the number are working. The Society of Flourmill-owners have recently made an appeal to the Administrator of the Special Area asking him to stop the speculation in wheat, which is being carried on at the Fuchiatien Grain Exchange, causing the price to be so inflated that it is impossible for the mills to produce flour without a serious loss.

The mills have ordered wheat from the America and Canada which should begin to arrive during January in fairly large quantities. The latest booking for Canadian wheat is 90,000 poods at $2.10 per pood, ex Harbin, delivery in March. No doubt with the arrival of this foreign grain, Chinese dealers and merchants will realize that they may be only cutting their own throats by forcing up the price of Manchurian wheat to an artificial price because the crops have not been up to the normal.

The local Chinese authorities have been taking special steps to prevent the export of silver from Harbin and the railway area and speculation that is taking place. Harbin Bank dollar notes which are exchangeable for silver here at par are quoted at at least 10 per cent. discount at Changchun, so that persons buy silver dollars here and take them to Changchun where they are changed at a 10 per cent. premium into Harbin dollar notes, which are brought back to Harbin and again exchanged into silver, which them finds its way to Changchun again. It is now not permitted for any person to take out of Harbin more than $100 in silver. Anybody found with more than this amount is liable to arrest and confiscation of their silver. In the last few days at Harbin alone over 54 persons have been arrested, among whom were 11 Russians. Their silver has been confiscated and they will be charged with unlawful speculation. The station police are very much on the alert, as they get as bonuses 50 per cent. of the confiscated moneys.

The auto-'bus business appears to be in a flourishing state in Harbin. New 'busses are continually being put into commission, new routes are being connected up even in the far away suburbs. Owing to dark roads there is a certain amount of danger attached to this enterprise when night sets in. The other evening, for instance, an auto-'bus travelling empty homeward bound was hailed by a couple of Chinese, who got into the vehicle and then held up the lady ticket collector. They appropriated the day's takings. The woman and the driver were powerless to resist. This is by no means the first incident of the kind.

BURGLARS SMARTLY CAPTURED.

Some time in November the house of an American named Crawford, who lives in New Town, was entered just after dark by masked burglars. Mr. Crawford was out at the time, but his wife was at home together with some friends. At the point of revolvers all were forced down into the cellar whilst the burglars ransacked the house, taking away with them some $1,000 in cash, as well as overcoats, clothes, etc. As soon as they decamped one of the visitors immediately telephoned the police. As luck would have it, a drosky driver on the rank close by had noticed three men coming from the direction of Mr. Crawford's house get into a drosky also on the rank, and was able to furnish the number of the drosky. The police got hold of the driver of the latter vehicle. He took them to the house the men had driven to in Machiakou. The entry of the police into the burglars' apartment was quite unexpected by the latter who were celebrating the robbery in a glorious feast together with their wives. Five persons in all were arrested. Clothing and a revolver belonging to Mr. Crawford were found on the premises, though the money was not recovered. The burglars are well known criminals as is one of the women. At the trial which has just opened evidence was adduced that the sister of one of the women, a girl of 14, had been formerly employed by Mr. Crawford as a servant. The trial is still proceeding.

HARBIN'S YELLOW PRESS SCARES.

A boycott of the newspaper "Zarya" has been declared by the various Russian railway workers' unions, as well as the Union of Russian Artists (theatrical, concert, musical and music-hall) in Harbin on account of the yellow journalism exemplified by that paper towards everyone who is in favour of the New Russia.

In the manifesto which has been issued to all members of the union it is stated that the "Zarya" is guilty of continual publication of sensation-provocatory news and that it is a strong supporter of the reactionaries.

The "Rech" newspaper published a sensational interview with Gen. Chang Huang-hsiang, chief of staff of the Railway Guards. According to the General the chances of the Russo-Chinese Conference being held shortly are less likely than they were four months ago, for the Soviet representative at present is merely making flattering utterances.

The first thing that Soviet Russia must do is to withraw her troops from Mongolia, for China considers this temporary occupation an "act of seizure." Before negotiations can open troops must be withdrawn. Gen. Chang stated that at the present time it was impossible to send Chinese troops to Mongolia in order to free that territory of the Red troops, as this would cost a very a large sum of money and time, therefore according to the General's opinion it would be better if Chinese troops were sent to the Priamur and Amur districts, disarming the Russian troops there and accupying that territory as tit for tat.

The General pointed out that formerly both the Amur and Ussuri districts belonged to China (!!). Therefore the Chinese had more right to occupy that territory than the Russians in occupying Mongolia. "Thus," continued the General, "if Russia does not return us Mongolia it will be better for us to take Vladivostok and the railway line as far as Blagovestchensk. The occupation of Vladivostok by Chinese troops would also be a good thing for the Chinese Eastern Railway, which would then be in possession of a port."

SOUTHERN PIRATES

Canton Likely to Combine with Hongkong in Suppression

Hongkong, Jan. 12.

The Captain of H. M. S. Tarantula to-day discussed with General Wu Te-chen, the Canton Chief of Police, measures of co-operation for the capture of pirates. It is likely that General Wu will visit Hongkong shortly to take up with the authorities the question of a general rounding-up of the pirates who have been rendering navigation unsafe in Hongkong and Kuangtung waters.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

JAPAN'S PRIVY COUNCIL

Tokio, Jan. 13.

Viscount Adata Hamao was to-day installed as President of the Privy Council in succession to Viscount Kiyoura.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

HIGH-SOULED YOUNG SHANSI

Kiangchow a Home of Didactic Drama: Remarkable Student Performances

From Our Own Correspondent.

Kiangchow, Sha., Jan. 3.

Shansi schools which started dramatic entertainments at the end of last year in aid of famine relief, have now decided to give annual performances as part of each school's course.

The price of admission is quite nominal, but the entertainments offered are of a high order, taking into consideration the difficulty of finding suitable places for a theatrical representations, lighting and all the necessary appliances unprocurable in inland cities. Nevertheless the manner in which students improvise all sorts of needful etceteras and with the minimum of rehearsals stage their productions in old temples and school buildings, is most praiseworthy.

All these dramatic entertainments have a moral purpose—"To awaken Society and promote virtue" is a maxim kept well to the front; Patriotism, the New Learning, Public-spiritedness, Virtue and particularly a strong appeal for the anti-Narcotic Movement are popular themes in the plays. Occasionally a spirited dialogue or oration makes very clear the lesson designed to bring home to audiences.

Here are some of the items from the popular programme this year: "Tsai Oh," a long historical drama in many scenes depicting the last days of Yuan Shih-kai and including many dialogues of Tsai Oh, Liang Ch'ich'iao and other noted characters. This bristles with patriotism and loyalty to the Republic, showing up the evils of treachery and self-seeking. There is no comedy in this performance, but a very serious and probably faithful representation of actual history.

But the audience roars over "The Good Pedagogue." in which an old-time school is presented with the fiercest of old teachers and the most grotesque punishments, recalling doubtless to some of the older men their own experiences of an unhappy boyhood.

One of the literati of Imperial days appears in another little drama in fierce controversy with his more enlightened wife over the betrothal of their daughter. He will wed her to the highest bidder, and thinks nothing of her future husband's character or attainments.

The girl herself is an ambitious, high spirited student in a modern school and before the closing scene delivers a stirring speech on women's rights and the iniquity of the old betrothal and marriage customs of China.

Her, father however is obdurate. When, broken-hearted, the girl is dying he raises no objection to the foreign medical missionary being called and in the last scene receives a crushing rebuke from the heroine's school companions.

Things have certainly changed when Shansi boys can, even in a play, voice such high-souled sentiments for women. The very small boys from the elementary school act with rare vivacity a comedy showing the combined evils of borrowing and litigation. Then the path of virtue is pointed out in a play setting forth the folly of gilded youth, the chief character being a young fellow who pays dearly for his rejection of friendly counsel.

Here, too. the exhortations to virtue are delivered with the zeal of a preacher.

The evils of the Golden Pill and opium are set forth by the spectacle of a woebegone and penniless crowd trying to rake together a few ashes from an opium pipe and falling this trying to keep up one another's drooping spirits by singing snatches of comic songs.

Then another item is of educational value, when the gossip of a village is reproduced in uncouth patois to call attention to the importance of the unified National language.

These are a but a sample of the programmes being set before delighted audiences by Young Shansi in the three-day entertainments given to parents and friends.

BETTER TRAVEL FACILITIES.

The Chengtai Railway have now an afternoon train from Shih-chiachiang. making it possible to reach Taiyuanfu by 14½ hour's continuous eravelling from Peking.

This in connexion with the motor services makes it possible to reach hitherto remote parts of southern Shansi inside a week.

The huge cotton-spinning and weaving factory at Yutsi does not appear to be at work yet, but will probably soon be employing several hundred workers, thus marking another stage in the industrial development of the province.

Many promising industrial projects seem perpetually "held up" and inquiries why progress is not made faster, always elicit the same story of "squeeze," intrigue, taxation and somebody opposing for personal ends.

SEASONABLE GATHERINGS AT HANGCHOW

Treats to Chinese Children

From Our Own Correspondent.

Hangchow (delayed in Transmission).

On Saturday afternoon the children of the missionaries had their annual Christmas gathering, and it was most delightful to hear them some of them quite little tots not long out of arms, singing most sweetly the Christmas carols, and repeating without a mistake many portions of the Scriptures relating to the birth of Jesus.

At school they are taught to think of others, so they brought their little offerings for the deaf and dumb school, and for the poor lepers.

On Sunday afternoon the Choral Union, which is composed of boys and girls from the various Mission schools in the city, gave their first public entertainment. It was held in the Y. M. C. A. Gymnasium which was filled with over a thousand people. The choir of boys and girls—150 or more—sang beautifully, and gave all lovers of good music an hour of real enjoyment. Great credit is due to Dr. K. C. Wong for the splendid way he has trained the choir. A collection was taken for the Chinese Inland Evangelistic Society, and though no previous intimation had been given, between $20 and $30 was collected.

On Christmas Day after the C. M. S. Hospital Chapel morning service, the congregation retired to the lawn to receive something from Father Christmas, and 250 were made glad, each getting a little present—chiefly woollen garments suitable for the present cold weather.

On Christmas afternoon the "One Faith" Church held their usual annual entertainment in the Lecture Hall, where the scholars of the various C. M. S. schools displayed a lot of talent, and were each the recipient of kindness manifested by Father Christmas, who had something for everybody.

The Rev. H. Clements preached the Christmas Sermon in the C. M. S. Hospital Chapel, and dwelt on four Christmas blessings:—

1. God with us.—Peace and goodwill win through. I am with thee always.

2. God for us.—If God be for us, who can be against us Tribulation, anguish, persecution, famine and sword etc., they do not count.

3. Christ in us.—He is our life. Christianity is internal, restraining, subduing, constraining and urging to carry on. Working in so that we may work out.

4. Christ working through us.—The government is upon His shoulder. We should seek to help God, rather than seek God to help us.

NATIONAL CURRENCY FOR CHINA

Interesting Rumour from Peking for Standardization of Bank Notes and Other Money

A certain amount of interest was aroused in banking circles on Tuesday by a report appearing in the Chinese newspapers referring to the creation of a standard currency, which would include bank notes, for China. The report was to the following effect:—

"The Bank of China and the Bank of Communications have received instructions from the Ministry of Finance in Peking in connexion with the standardization of bank notes and currency in China as follows:—

"(1) Hereafter bank notes issued in the provinces shall be in national standard currency.

"(2) All bank notes issued in the different provinces by the provincial authorities shall be withdrawn and those on the market shall be collected immediately.

"(3) New national bank notes shall be issued in place of the old.

"(4) Steps in this connexion shall be put into execution within a year and divided into three sections."

INITIAL DIFFICULTIES.

The first difficulty in bringing about any of the reforms or innovations suggested in the above report is that no national currency exists in China. Up to a point the silver dollar had a standard value, but as recently the mints have succeeded in reducing its fineness it must be regarded as losing gradually the stability it possessed as a national coin. In circumstances such as these, with mints probably giving a different content to their products, the hope of standardization becomes more remote.

It thus is difficult to see on what basis the standardization of bank notes can possibly take place. Presumably the standardized bank notes would, under this scheme be issued by Peking through the two so-called Government banks—the Bank of China and Bank of Communications—but in the present condition of the country it seems hardly possible that notes issued on the strength of Peking's position would enjoy any great currency in the provinces. This is emphasized by the fact that while the notes of these two banks are accepted at full value in Shanghai they are at a discount in a place much nearer the capital, namely Tientsin.

The reason for this further emphasizes the weakness of any scheme which Peking may try to carry out at present for currency standardization. To take the case of the Bank of China, we find that in Shanghai it is practically a separate organization from the Peking institution of the same name. It happened that a few years ago, to meet the needs of the Government, an attempt was made to draw the assets of the Shanghai office to Peking, and the manager, Mr. Sung Han-chang, earned the support of all interests here by a refusal. Since then the Shanghai office has been, to all intents and purposes, a separate entity and has apparently benefited by being so. It is unlikely now to assent readily to any such proposal as has been mooted.

CHINESE BANKING.

It may be mentioned that neither the Bank of China nor the Bank of Communications has been informed of the standardization proposal in question, and the impression is current that the report is an attempt to test or influence public opinion. So far as Chinese banks in Shanghai are concerned its principal effect will probably be to stiffen opposition against any attempt by Peking at the present moment to take the note issue of the country into its hands. A great many Chinese banks issue their own notes, and they would be up in arms at any suggestion of a national note issue superseding theirs. While this has not been actually suggested, the proposal to do away with provincial issues is not a re-assuring factor in the case.

In the past various suggestions have been made by the authorities to amend the currency system of the country, especially where bank notes are concerned, but the great conservatism of those engaged in banking has always led to opposition to any such change, and even if Peking has a scheme cut and dried in this case there is little likelihood that it can be put into force.

COALMINING IN MANCHURIA

Bureau of Mines Convinced of a Promising Yield: Two New Pits Started

From Our Own Correspondent.

Fakumen, Man., Jan. 8.

The Provincial Government of Manchuria is at last waking up to the importance of exploiting its own mineral products. Though rather late in the day, the Mining Bureau of Mukden has opened two coal mines in the district of Fengtien west of the Liao River, well out of any conceivable sphere of Japanese control. The first, which is in the foothills westward of Koupangtzu Junction on the Peking-Mukden Railway, has been in operation for over a year. Already the initial expenses are being repaid by the output of coal from four working pits.

The second mine has only just started working. A few years ago a local Chinese gentleman, with a taste for experimenting with other people's money, having run through a fortune inherited from his father, sold share certificates in a projected mine 13 miles west of Fakumen. Some coal was extracted, but the capital proving insufficient the projector applied for assistance to the Japanese. When the Provincial Government got wind of this scheme, orders came down to close the mine. The subscribers were thus left with the rather empty privilege of sacrificing their shares in an abortive pioneer enterprise.

More than a month ago the Bureau of Mines despatched a trained mining engineer and staff, with adequate provision of funds, to bore for coal in a scientific way at or near the old shaft. The engineer Mr. L. T. Tseng, was born in Java and educated in the United States. Preliminary surveys have convinced Mr. Tseng that there is a wide coalfield in the neighbourhood. He has therefore no doubt about the success of the digging, though at present the operations are hampered by a considerable depth of water, to cope with which, a pumping plant is being sent up. If the yield turns out as satisfactory as is expected, then this mine will, like the first, be connected with the Peking-Mukden Railway. To the nearest station, Hsinmintun, a line of some 53 miles would be required. Incidentally a large section of populous agricultural country would, by such a railway, enjoy the benefits of modern transport. But unless the Bureau of Mines undertakes fresh borings in the immediate neighbourhood of Fakumen, it is doubtful whether the town will come within the sweep of the new line.

ENFORCED OPIUM GROWING IN FUKIEN

Peking, Jan. 9.

The International Anti-Opium Association has received the following telegram from the Venerable Archdeacon Phillips of the Church Missionary Society in the name of the Moral Welfare Branch at Kienning, Fukien: Am S. Urge that telegraphic instructions be sent to General Sun Chuan-fang, Tuli of Fukien, and General Chou Yin-jen, to prohibit the Kienho Magistrate Chow compelling the people to receive poppy seed and thus avert calamity.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

CHINESE NATIONAL RAILWAYS

A Peking Appointment Which Is Much Agitating Chinese Feeling

Private telegrams received in Shanghai indicate that the Peking Government is seriously contemplating the appointment of Mr. Kao En-hung as Director-General of Chinese National Railways. Mr. Kao, who was a student of King's College, London, formerly held posts as Director of the Shanghai Telegraph Materials Department and acting Minister of Communications and Education.

Already local Cantonese and Ningpo residents are flooding the Peking Government with telegrams opposing the appointment, alleging that Mr. Kao is a partisan and is not a proper man for the post. The Cantonese allege that, while he was acting Minister of Communications, he issued an order dismissing more than 10,000 Cantonese employees from the Government railways and installing in their places men of his own province and selection. The Ningpo merchants here allege that Mr. Kao instigated a presidential mandate for the dismissal, arrest and punishment of a prominent Ningpo banker on the ground that that gentlemen, who is a highly respected resident here and who is well known to and popular among a host of foreign and Chinese friends, was aiding and abetting rebels against the Central Government, because they claim, this gentleman refused to hand over to Mr. Kao control of the premier Chinese shipping company of which he was also managing director. In all the telegrams allegations are made that while Mr. Kao was Minister continued disturbances took place and numerous protests were lodged with the Government, until he was compelled to flee from Peking to Chefoo.

C.-E. RAILWAY LANDS DEADLOCK

Serious and Complicated Situation: Chinese Land Office Busily Activities

From Our Own Correspondent.

Harbin, Jan. 6.

The Land Department question in the Chinese Eastern Railway Area continues to be the all-absorbing topic of conversation among residents of what is known as the Manchurian Special Area.

The zone which has its own Administrator who may act independently of the Governors of Kirin and Heilungchiang, in whose territories this special area is located. Things at present are more or less at a deadlock, for no definite decisions have been arrived at between the C. E. R. Administration and the Chinese authorities, both of which have their own special Land Departments.

It is true that a Commission, composed of representatives of both parties, was formed some time ago and the matter is being gone into in detail, but it is likely that it will be some time before the reports of this Commission will be completed, for the question is a most complicated one. In the meantime private renters of land from the Railway Land Department are loathe to pay any of their dues to this department, for it may be found afterwards that these must be paid again to the Chinese Land Department. So they prefer not to pay to anybody rather than run the risk of having to pay twice over. This means a loss of revenue of over a million dollars to the railway.

Recently the Land Department brought a case in the District Courts against a Chinese from Yifaho for the failure of payment of land leased from the Railway Department. The judge decided on his own accord to stop the proceedings until the future fate of the lots rented out by the railway was decided. The Judicial Department of the Railway appealed against this decision. In addition to this the orders issued by the Chinese Administration regarding the changes that are to be introduced in the land situation of the Special Area of the Three Eastern Provinces does not empower the Courts to stop proceedings in connexion with land disputes or to refuse the acceptance of such cases. The District Court has agreed with the view taken by the Railway Administration and ordered that the judge should reconsider the case in its substance.

PROTESTS UNAVAILING.

Notwithstanding the fact that nothing has been actually settled and agreed, and the protests lodged by the Consular Body and the shareholders of the C. E. R., the Chinese Land Department is busily engaged in extending the activities of their newly established office. This institution issues orders, enacts regulations, distributes circular letters, whilst its agents extort with the utmost rigour rentals along the length of the railway, employing coarse and oppressive methods.

Frequently there are arrests by the police, who assist the Land Agent in what must at present be considered unlawful work whilst the collections themselves must be classified as extortions. Such arbitrary methods as are now being employed must be considered as a breach of faith towards the management of the railway, whilst the population is absolutely terrified and crying out for protection.

In some quarters it is stated that an international judicial committee is shortly to arrive in Harbin expressly to investigate into this most important question.

THE PIRACY ON THE STR. TZESUI

Compradore and Passengers Cleaned out of All their Belongings

Ichang, Jan. 14.

The steamer Tzesui returned to port to-day, the river inspector navigating the vessel.

Information gathered indicates that the pirates numbered under 20 and were probably passengers from Wanhsien, but a few more joined them when the ship anchored.

It was apparently a case of pure piracy, for the Captain was first dealt with from fear of resistance on his part. Two pirates hauled him from his room and murdered him near the funnel with three shots.

The compradore lost about $2,000. The passengers were looted of money and clothing to the extent of about $20,000.

The brigands proceeded ashore with about 17 bags of loot and disappeared.

The steamer was anchored opposite the shore at Kaochiacheng and so was unable to call for help.

The Dollar Company has now ordered the steamers Kweimeu and Tzesui to proceed to Shanghai, withdrawing from the run.

Captain Brandt's body is on board the Tzesui.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Peking, Jan. 15.

An official telegram from Ichang states that, as far as can be ascertained up to the present, the steamer Tzesui did not carry arms or ammunition when it was raided by pirates above Wanhsien.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

EARTHQUAKE IN MANILA

Manila, Jan. 15.

An earthquake of intensity 4 occurred at six o'clock this morning in the Ilocos provinces. A milder shock was felt here at about five o'clock.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

MRS. Sun Yat-sen, wife of the founder of the Chinese Republic, returned to Shanghai on Saturday by the R.M.S. Empress of Asia from Canton.

CHEFOO'S SUMMER ATTRACTIONS

The New Hotel Now Building: Commodious Premises and And Up-to Date

From Our Own Correspondent.

Chefoo, Jan. 9.

The New Year has opened with very little to report from here. Business is still quiet and, with the advent of the Chinese New Year holidays, no particular activity is anticipated for some little time. Chefoo has so far been enjoying an exceptionally mild winter and, apart from a few cold snaps, the weather has been ideal. Business may be bad but trade conditions cannot, fortunately, affect the climate which this little town enjoys. It has the reputation of being an ideal summer resort and has, for many, many years been patronized as such. In view of the earthquake which occurred in Japan at the latter end of last summer, it is anticipated that many who were inclined to favour that country as a place where they could spend their holidays will henceforth turn their attention elsewhere. A few far-seeing local gentlemen are now endeavouring to make this port more attractive to visitors and, with that end in view, several commendable schemes are now afoot.

The lack of decent accommodation has, in the past, been the chief drawback but one of the new schemes, the erection of a large new hotel, will solve this difficulty for the future. The Chefoo Hotels, Ld., have already almost completed the outer structure of the hotel and also eight bungalows adjoining it. The former will have 52 bedrooms and be complete with all the latest sanitary arrangements. The better bedrooms will have bathrooms attached fitted with enamel baths and with hot and cold water laid on. The plans include the provision of a large lounge and an excellent dining room whilst another attraction will be an open-air floor for dancing and, during the summer months, an orchestra. With these facilities the new hotel should prove a great attraction. There will also be several tennis courts for the use of guests.

The bungalows are intended for the use of families and are built on very good lines. They have the same conveniences as the hotel and are very adjacent to the main premises. The accommodation of each ranges from five to six rooms, in most cases including three bedrooms. The whole concern will be under the management of a foreign manager and his wife, whose past experience should enable them to give the guests every satisfaction.

The property, which is admirably situated, leads on to an excellent bathing beach and, I understand, bathing sheds, etc. are to be provided. With such good accommodation as this hotel will provide, future visitors to Chefoo need have no fears and, when this attraction becomes known, I foresee a great influx during the summer months.

A GOLF COURSE ALSO.

Chefoo will also be in a position to advertise a new attraction this summer and that, a golf course. The Hotel Company have secured a very nice piece of property on the Bluff where it is their intention to construct a nine-hotel course. The ground has already been surveyed and the general opinion is that a very sporting course can be made. A large club house, where if enthusiasts desire, they may spend the week-end, forms part of the scheme whilst there will be regular ferry boats plying at intervals between the mainland and the course. Other resorts have, in the past, had a distinct pull over Chefoo by virtue of their having a golf course but Chefoo can now enter into the battle of competition fully armed with attractions equal to all and better than most. I have no doubt whatever that in future years this will become a very popular resort.

Another Grave Earthquake in Japan

(Continued from Page 77.)

are now staying in Numadzu, as well as the Prince Regent and Princess Nagako Kuni in Tokio are all safe. No damage has been done to the Imperial Palace.

TELEGRAPHIC SERVICE CUT.

Shanghai, Jan. 15.

The local Japanese Telegraph Office announces that owing to the earthquake that visited the districts east of Hakone early this morning, telegraphic communication between Shidzuoka and Tokio has been interrupted and under the above circumstances, the Japanese Telegraph Office is compelled to cease despatching all telegrams for Tokio, Chiba, Kanagawa and Saitama Prefectures pending the restoration of communications.—Eastern News Agency.

REPORTED DEAD: NO FOREIGNERS.

Tokio, Jan. 15.

The centre of the earthquake is believed to have been near Tanzawa Mountain in Sagami Province, according to officials of the Central Observatory.

The earthquake was similar to that on September 1, but of only half its intensity. It lasted 12 minutes.

The number of dead in Tokio, Yokohama and the outside districts is probably under 50. The other casualties are numerous, but do not include any foreigners.

It is reported that a few houses have collapsed.

The Imperial Hotel suffered a terrific rocking but sustained its quake-proof reputation. It was crowded with guests.

The shock occurred at the dawning of a raw, cold day.

Mr. Kermit Roosevelt and Colonel and Mrs. Samuel, who are visiting the Far East, were not injured.

FIRES SOON PUT OUT.

Tokio, Jan. 15.

While very little damage has been done to the barracks erected on the sites of the recent fires, the Yamanote districts of Tokio City as well as surrounding districts have been more or less seriously affected. Immediately following the outbreak of the earthquake, electric light went out and the panic-stricken citizens remained standing out of doors in the darkness till sunrise. Though fires broke out at several places in the city, they were soon extinguished before they had a chance to spread. The train service was suspended for a little while, but it was re-opened at 9 o'clock in the morning. The telephone service, excepting that under the management of the Aoyama Telephone Exchange Office, has not been affected. Telegraphic communication, though only partly available at first, is being gradually re-opened. The particulars of the damage done to rural parts are unknown as yet, but it is reported on good authority that the shocks were not so serious as those felt in the district of Tokio.

DAMAGE IN YOKOHAMA.

Later.

It is officially reported that the damage done by to-day's earthquake to the district of Yokohama that has come to light up to this evening is as follows:—

Three persons were killed and twelve wounded. Buildings destroyed, including dwelling houses, warehouses, schools, hospitals and factories, number 13. Three bridges fell down and electric light, telephone service and water supply were interrupted for a short time and are now being restored rapidly. Several points on the Tokaido line were demolished and many cracks have been created in the ground. A number of trains were overturned but there were no casualties among the passengers. Although the whole length of the Tokaido line was closed to traffic for a little while, the damaged points were immediately repaired with the result that the train for Kobe was able to start from Tokio Station at 3 p.m. to-day.—Eastern News Agency.

MAIN LINE BROKEN.

The earthquake broke the railway between Hiratsuka and Chigasaki, interrupting communications between Tokio and Kobe.

The Kobe express was held up at Kodzu.

Telegraphic communications are badly crippled.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

DAIBUTSU SWUNG BACKWARDS.

Osaka, Jan. 16.

The Daibutsu at Kamakura, which was displaced forward by the earthquake last September, has now gone backward four inches. Large fissures were made at Kamakura.

The water supply of Yokohama city has been cut off. Vessels in the harbour are supplying water to meet immediate needs. The Yokohama tram service has been suspended. Panic-stricken people are camping out in the streets. A dense fog hung over the city this morning, making the sun appear crimson.

The casualties in Yokohama were three persons killed and 12 wounded. Seven houses were totally destroyed while three partially collapsed. One warehouse, two schools, two factories and two hospitals were wrecked.

The Tokaido Railway is now running a single line.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE WORST HIT REGION.

Osaka, Jan. 16.

Putting together reports from all sources available, the most serious damage done by yesterday's earthquake was in the region between Yokohama and Hakone. According to an announcement made last night by the Kanagawa Prefectural Office, within the domain of Kanagawa Prefecture, including Yokohama, 11 persons were killed and 209 wounded, 762 houses completely demolished and 2,954 partly destroyed. It appears that the total damage sustained by the latest earthquake is comparatively slight, so far at least as the financial world is concerned, and this is, it is believed, mainly due to the fact that the organs of communication were not completely ruined as on the occasion of last year's earthquake disaster.—Eastern News Agency.

Tokio, Jan. 15.

Owing to the interruption of communications, the Tokio Stock Exchange closed its market to-day pro tem.—Eastern News Agency.

THE ITALIAN PROPHECY.

Faenza, Jan. 15.

Scientific circles have been stirred at the verification of Signor Bendandi's seismic predictions. All seismographs last night registered a violent and long-continued shock 10,000 kilometres away.

Note: In an interview published by the "Messagero" on January 11 the sculptor Signor Raphael Bendandi predicted slight earthquake shocks in America on the night of January 15 and the morning of January 20.—Reuter.

ABERDEEN'S GIFT.

London, Jan. 16.

Aberdeen University has given the Tokio Imperial University over 200 valuable works of reference for replacing the books destroyed by the earthquake in September.—Reuter.

Tokio, Jan. 16.

Reports coming in show that the earthquake situation is practically the same as that outlined by the Reuter despatches of January 15. Nervousness was general throughout Tokio during the night owing to widespread wild rumours, but while there were a few mild tremors, nothing worthy of note has occurred since six o'clock yesterday morning.

The death toll is about 30, all Japanese. No notable personages were injured.

All communications have been restored, though there is a considerable delay in telegrams.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

A Map showing the Regionaffected by the latest Earthquake

Sagami Province Worst Hit: Some Factories Destroyed: Deathroll About 30

From Our Own Correspondent.

Kobe, Jan. 17.

The earthquake was most severe in Sagami province, where 444 houses were completely destroyed and 1606 partially, and several people were killed and wounded. The two factories of the Sagami Spining Company were destroyed.

Four were killed and 50 wounded in Tokio and the suburbs and a few dwellings destroyed.

The damage was more serious in Yokohama, where three persons were killed and a score wounded. The Technical College, in course of construction, was demolished, the Prefectural Fine Art school the Toyo Lead Pipe Factory and one other building.

The Kanagawa lunatic asylum collapsed.

The railways have resumed their service.

The Central Observatory announces that the centre of disturbance was at Mount Tanzawa, in Sagami province.

THE NEW JAPANESE PREMIER

Once a School-Teacher: Wage Y. 7 a Month: A Product of the Meiji Era

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tokio, Jan. 4.

The Cabinet that came into power in the days just preceding the earthquake, a Cabinet that was hailed in some sections as a super-party and a "strong" coalition, has departed unwept, unhonoured and unsung. The immediate cause of the Cabinet's fall was, of course, the outrageous attempt of a demented youth to assassinate Japan's Prince Regent. I have seen many a Cabinet come into power amidst much metaphorical trumpet-blowing and political cymbal-clanging, but the "strong" Yamamoto Ministry departed without even the consolation of a decent funeral.

The new Premier, Viscount Kiyoura, was formerly President of the Privy Council and was thus one of the most important personages constituting the real "Power Behind the Throne." At first, he declined the Imperial invitation to form a Cabinet, but later consented. It is not believed that the aged statesman—he is already a great-grandfather—will continue in office long and his appointment is largely believed to be a stop-gap until the wedding of His Imperial Highness the Prince Regent with the talented and beautiful daughter of Field-Marshal Prince Kuni has been solemnized.

FROM POVERTY TO PROMINENCE.

Like so may other important figures in Japan, Viscount Kiyoura worked his way upwards and was born in the Meiji era, an epoch that gave Japan some wonderfully-far-sighted and capable statesmen. He has known the bitterness of poverty having once been a teacher with a monthly wage of seven yen. In consequence, he is a strong opponent of any habits that approximate on luxury.

Viscount Kiyoura lives in Omori, a delightful suburb of Tokio about ten to fifteen minutes' distance by elevated car from the capital. He revels in talking with the common folk and is said to be one of the greatest friends of the local fishmongers, often going thither to purchase his particular favourite fish himself, and then taking the opportunity of exchanging good-humoured banter with the people of the local Billingsgate. Although he has the means to possess a motor car—and although as President of the Privy Council he has a Government-owned machine for his personal use—he prefers to come to Tokio almost daily in the electric car, however crowded it may be—and these are terribly over-crowded these days.

EXTREMES MEET.

The Japanese press, generally speaking, goes to extremes in discussing the capabilities of the new Premier. One section dubs him a "hero in a comic drama" and says it is "sheer madness" for him to have accepted the Imperial invitation to form a Cabinet, recalling the futile attempt made by him some years ago to form a Cabinet. The other section regards him as the ideal statesman to "end the abuse of power by the existing political parties" and declares that if he just does this, his determination to head a Ministry will be more than justified.

JAPANESE CABINET

Opposition Preparing to Give it the Quietus

Tokio, Jan. 15.

A meeting of the Seiyukai party, who are in the majority in the Lower House, to-day decided to support a resolution of lack of confidence in the new Government immediately after the Diet convenes.

It is believed that the near approach of the Imperial wedding will be regarded as sufficient reason to order a recess over the occasion, after which, unless a compromise can be reached, Viscount Kiyoura may decide to go to the country.

As a general election in the regular course of events is due this spring, a dissolution would be regarded as sound policy on the part of the Government in order to avoid defeat while the Diet is in session.

A NEW PARTY FORMING.

Tokio, Jan. 17.

A new situation in the political crisis has developed as the result of a split in the Seiyukai Party, five of the leaders of which announce that they are in disagreement with the President, Viscount Takahashi, and will organize a new party which, it is understood, will support Viscount Kiyoura.—Reuter's Pacicc Service.

NO WAR CLOUDS AT HANGCHOW

Officials Entertain: Rumours of Strife Forgotten

From Our Own Correspondent.

Hangchow, Jan. 12.

Hangchow is quiet and there is little to report.

On Wednesday the Civil and Military Governnors gave their annual New Year's dinner to the representative foreigners and chief officials in the city. The Commissioner of Customs, the Postal Commissioner, Mr. and Mrs. Tanabi, the Japanese Consul and his wife, the Commissioner of Finance, Commissioner of Foreign Affairs, several high officials, Mr. and Mrs. McMullen and Dr. and Mrs. Main were present.

Nothing was said, of course, about the trouble in the country, but at the end of the dinner the hope was expressed that peace would be maintained in this province.

Yesterday was the 15th anniversary of the building of the Southern Presbyterian Church in Hangchow, when a special meeting was held for praise and thanksgiving. Representatives, foreign and Chinese, from all the churches were present, and laudatory speeches were made, and prayers were offered. It was interesting to see the grand-children of some of the early Christians of that church taking part in this service.

YUNNANESE FALLING OUT IN CANTON

Railway Buildings Wrecked

Canton, Jan. 13.

The Yunnanese Third Corps, under General Chiang Kuang-liang, destroyed the Canton-Samshui Railway Administration Building at Shekwaotong when forced to yield the control of the railway, the income of which was coveted by the Second Corps, under General Fah Shek-sang, who are now occupying the line. Traffic, however, has been suspended since January 10.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

DEATH OF DR. H. H. LOWRY

Missionary in China Since '67

Peking, Jan 14.

The death took place yesterday of Dr. Hiram Harrison Lowry, of the Methodist Episcopal Mission, one of the oldest residents of Peking, at the age of 80. Dr. Lowry came to China in 1867 when he was stationed at Foochow where he remained for two years, coming to Peking in 1869, and he has remained here ever since. The funeral takes place to-morrow afternoon.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

NEW YORK, Jan. 13. Switzerland has challenged for the Davis Cup. Reuter.

THE LAST CRIME OF AN EX-BANDIT OF YUNNAN

A Sinister Story of a Banquet: An Early Morning Call and A Double Revenge

From Our Own Correspondent.

Yunnanfu Dec. 26.

There has been quite a furore here during the past few days over the arrest of Pu Siao-hung, the ex-bandit chief who was responsible for the kidnapping of Dr. Taylor and many others who had the misfortune of being within his reach.

It has for a long time been rumoured that the government were pressing him to exert himself and work more vigorously and loyally with them in the tracking down of his former associates, and while he ostensibly has been manifesting some interest, he has, it is alleged, been secretly encouraging and assisting desperadoes who have been deaf both to the appeals and the threats of the government which has certainly been very patient and given these criminals time enough to repent and mend their ways.

Things were brought to a head about a month ago when a bandit leader named Tang was captured and executed by a Captain Li-kuen, one of Gen. Long Yun's men, who had formerly been a lieutenant under Pu in his bandit days, but who some time ago transferred his allegiance to Long, who has been appointed pacificator of the province.

It appears that when Captain Li brought in the head of the executed bandit he was féted by his brother officers and commended by Gen Long for his prowess in capturing Tang, who for a long time had been a thorn in the side of the government and was perhaps, one of the cleverest and most resourceful of the more recent bandit leaders. Pu Siao-hung, it appears, decided to get quits with his former lieutenant not only for executing one of his friends, but also for transferring his allegiance, and invited him to dine with him one evening giving him to understand that he also wished to show his appreciation of his prowess and loyalty.

A TREACHEROUS BANQUET.

On the fateful evening he went to General Pu's house—for that is now the ex-bandit's full title—escorted by two privates who acted as his bodyguard. The latter were immediately requested to withdraw as Captain Li intended to stay for a while and smoke opium and play mah-jongg, and the time of his departure was announced for 9 o'clock. What happened after that is mostly conjecture, for when the two privates called later in the evening they were informed that their master had already left for his home where they would undoubtedly find him on their arrival. The privates on reaching their master's home and finding that he was not there, suspected foul play and informed Gen. Long, who became highly incensed and ordered his secret service department to investigate the case. He strongly suspected Gen. Pu and lodged a complaint against him with Governor Tang Chi-yao, who was inclined to treat the matter as being of little importance.

For several weeks nothing more was heard of Li-kuen until one evening some dogs were attracted to a newly made disturbance of the earth in the vicinity of the cross roads tower, which is only about half a li distant from Pu Siao-hung's house, where it is supposed the murder was committed. Some of Gen. Long Yun's men who were on the case got to hear of this occurrence and had the earth dug up, when the body of an officer was discovered which was eventually recognized as that of Li-kuen, the missing captain. The matter was immediately reported to Gen Long, who ordered an inquest, while the widow was asked to identify the body, which she did.

PLANNING THE CAPTURE.

Everything was kept as quiet as possible and the soldiers were not allowed to mention the name of Gen Pu in connexion with matter while Gen. Long again brought the matter before the Governor Tang Chi-yao. He, it is asserted, was reluctant to destroy a man who had helped him back to power two years ago, and suggested that an indemnity of several thousand dollars paid by Pu to the widow would meet the case. But Gen. Long was insistent and threatened to resign if his determination to destroy Pu was frustrated by unwarranted interference, saying that it was little use expending so much wealth and energy on the suppression of brigands if the chief criminal were allowed to live in Yunnanfu in peace and security, while there were so many crimes laid to his door. Long carried his his point and Pu's arrest was decided upon.

Early in the morning of the 24th Gen. Long called for a squad of volunteers and they were instructed to enter Pu's dwelling which is a large Kong-kuan near the big East Gate and to take care to get Pu alive even though the left their own carcases there as a result. They were warned that they would be supported by another band of 100 men who had strict injunctions to shoot any of the band that tried to run away from any possible danger in conflict with Pu's bodyguard, as it was expected that these would put up a fight. If there was to be fighting, they were to do it inside Pu's house and die there if need be, but they must capture Pu. One of the band informed the writer afterwards that their hearts were palpitating vigorously while receiving these instructions, though, he added, that as soon as they entered Pu's house they felt no fear at all, while there was a prospect of loot which was to be the reward of the attackers.

THE VICTIM'S LAST BATH.

Reaching the house the band separated into two parts one ascending the stairs on the north side of the house, the other going up those on the south side. Both met on the balcony of the first floor where they found Gen. Pu performing his morning ablutions. The latter seeing so many soldiers coming towards him became incensed and informed them that they would pay dearly for their temerity in entering his presence without etiquette and unannounced. Some things are pardonable—he remarked—but breach of military etiquette cannot possibly be overlooked.

He was immediately informed that they had come to recover Captain Li-kuen who, they had reason to believe, was hidden in Pu's house. One of Pu's bodyguard grabbed a stick which he began to brandish at the soldiers thinking, apparently, that he could frighten them off, but the latter soon put him out of action as he was unarmed and his body was thrown over the balcony into the courtyard below. The ex-brigand seeing that something serious was afoot, immediately ran towards his bed where two loaded revolvers were peacefully reposing, but he was too late and the soldiers intercepted and very unceremoniously bound him with strong cords, telling him that as they could not find Li-kuen they would take in his place. Meanwhile Gen Long had been talking to the ex-brigand over the telephone which explains why Pu was washing, as Long had requested him to call round on a matter of business. This was done to occupy his attention while the soldiers negotiated the distance from their headquarters to Pu's house. Eventually the ex-brigand was forced to descend and bound and bleeding he presented a sorry spectacle to two foreigners who happened to be unwilling eyewitnesses of the proceedings. He is now safely lodged in the condemned cell in the military prison, which is also the headquarters of Gen. Long and it is reported that he is confined in the cell from which no one ever emerges except for execution.

COLDBLOODED MURDER.

Needless to say that rumours are rife as to the ultimate fate of this bandit chief, who has been responsible for so much lawlessness and the perpetrator of so many murders, the most notable of which are those of Gen. Ho Kan-chen and Lo Pei-chuin last year when they opposed Tang's return to power and were fleeing for their lives. After stripping them of all their possessions and promising them life and liberty for a large monetary consideration, and when he had got everything he could out of them, Tang murdered them in cold blood and their bodies left to rot on the road side. No wonder the people are saying that the spirits of these two men are at last going to get their revenge. The government most likely are not in a position to decide immediately what their ultimate intention is, as they are evidently trying to discover the amount and the whereabouts of Pu's reputed great wealth and proclamations are out instructing all and sundry, who are in a position to give information or who have suffered at the hands of the brigand chief, to come forward at once when those who are entitled to indemnification will be indemnified and the others will receive a reward for any information useful to the government.

Meanwhile strong measures are being adopted against Pu's followers, both bandits and soldiers, in the different parts of this prefecture and it is reported that hundreds have been slaughtered. At one place a band of them of about 50 in number, who were supposed to be working with the government, were induced to enter a temple where a meal was promised and when they had divested themselves of their equipment and sat down to eat they were immediately cut down and slain unarmed and crying for mercy. The general opinion is that so many of his followers have been slaughtered the government cannot but inflict the extreme penalty on the ex-chief whose cup of iniquity appears to be full to the brim. In spite of the fact that Pu has so many friends, who will make strenuous efforts to effect his release we believe he will shortly be called upon to expiate his crimes, which are many as well as unjustifiable.

CLEARING BEGGARS FROM NANKING

A Much Needed Reform: Merchants' Philanthropy

From Our Own Correspondent.

Nanking, Jan. 14.

An order has been given by the authorities by which Nanking City is to be rid of beggars. A settlement has been provided for them at Kwanyin Mên northeast of the city toward the river. There they are congregated under their several head men, each head man being responsible for 50. They are to be given something to do according to their ability, such as making shoes and socks, and some will do gardening. Those who are unable to do anything at all are given a bare sustenance to live on. This is a forward step indeed and if carried through will point the way to the solving of a very difficult problem. I am told by an astute observer that it will be very hard to clear the city of all beggars at once, as some find the beggar business a very lucrative trade, but the police will arrest any who are openly begging, and the move is certainly in the right direction.

The merchants are taking steps as last year to provide a soup kitchen for the feeding of the poor, giving to all comers as much gruel as they will eat while on the ground, for the nominal price of two coppers per bowl. Last year this piece of philanthropy was carried on for 100 days in three centres. It will be for a much shorter time this year and in one centre only. The reason given is the lesser suffering because of the mildness of the weather.

A welcome rain is falling after a drought lasting for months, many wells and cisterns having gone dry, and the people at large depending on water hauled in from the river.

MORE WEAPONS FOR TOKIO POLICE

Grim Gift to Viscount Goto: Public Anger at Attempt on Prince Regent

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tokio, Jan. 4.

In addition to their short sabres, Tokio policemen are soon to be further armed with American revolvers and some 400 of these weapons are soon to be imported from the United States. This is perhaps to make sure that when the civilian police take full authority and the gendarmerie—who are really policing Tokio since the withdrawal of martial law—are withdrawn, our blue-coated guardians of the law will be the better equipped to handle the thugs and rascals who are menacingly lurking in the background, and whose numbers have considerably increased as one of the results of the unemployment that followed in the wake of the city being smitten by the recent earthquake.

With this decision to afford the police further power of taking the offensive, it has also been decided to confer police rights on railway officials who will be invested with magisterial powers to try summarily offenders in trains and within railway precincts. Similar powers are also to be granted to forestry officials, riparian officials and customs officers.

COFFIN AS NEW YEAR GIFT.

The presentation of a coffin to Viscount Goto, Minister of Home Affairs in the now defunct Yamamoto Cabinet, is only one instance of how the public generally feels towards that official as a result of the senseless and criminal attempt made by a young man to assassinate the future ruler of the Japanese Empire, for to Viscount Goto's alleged encouragement of radicals and socialists is, rightly or wrongly, attributed the dastardly act.

On the afternoon of the day of the attempted assassination a score or more of young men drove up in motor-cars to the residence of the former Home Minister, tramped into the best rooms in their wooden clogs and, not finding the official they were presumedly in search of, proceeded to smash up all the furniture, pictures, statuary and fittings. Four policemen on guard attempted prevent the intrusion, but were severely set upon by the gang who wounded one rather severely. Police reinforcements arrived, but the young men were armed with revolvers and, although the policemen had sabres, their courage naturally evaporated when they looked into the small muzzles of 20 revolvers and the determined faces of the misguided young men. The young men are said to be members of an Anti-Bolshevik society.

PHILIPPINE INSURRECTOS

Manila, Jan. 11.

Eighty Colorums were killed by Constabulary at Surigao in a pitched battle on January 8.

Governor-General Wood will probably go to Surigao soon.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

As a result of fighting between rival Yunnanese forces in Kuangtung, the main station of the Canton-Samshui Railway was destroyed and damage was caused to the extent of several tens of thousands of dollars, reports the "Sinwanpao." Another report states that this happened at Fatshan.

BABY-STEALING BY BANDITS

Helpless Infants Murdered and Eaten by Curs: Bandit Terror in Kiangsu

By T. B. Grafton.

Haichow, Ku., Jan. 8.

We read with interest the recent statement by Gen. Chi Hsieh-yuan that north Kiangsu had been cleared of bandits. The declaration has a faint foundation in fact, for now and then the larger bands are chased by one general out of his bounds, but they are not even scattered and are back again in a few days.

There is on the other hand a by-product of banditry which is alarmingly on the increase against which the best of officials is helpless and that is the practice of baby-stealing. No organized band is needed for this despicable trade and not even is the ruffian armed. He merely sneaks into a house during the night, carries off a sleeping child, and a convenient middleman extorts a few hundred dollars for its redemption. If hard pressed or if the negotiations are unsatisfactorily slow, the child is easily disposed of with a convenient brick. No one pays any attention to the body of a dead child; anyhow in a few hours the roving curs have removed every trace. Such a case happened within the last few days only a few yards from the city wall. The kidnappers were after a little boy, but in the darkness took away a little girl instead. Realizing that she would not be so profitable a bargain they threw her out to freeze in the bitter night.

Only three days ago the keeper of a small likin station was arrested at the next city east on the information of an escaped child. The story is that this petty official had several children in durance and hid them in the hold of a small boat, not much bigger than a sampan. He kept the boat going back and forth a little distance to avoid suspicion until one of the older children got out and recognized a brother on a passing boat and the game was up. The constant repetition of such deeds everywhere is having a deadening effect on the minds and morals of the people that is beyond any realization to those who do not observe it first hand.

PROGRESS ON THE LUNGHAI RLY.

Three attractive buildings of the Lunghai Railway are just being completed outside the north gate of Haichow. Actual construction work on the embankments for the roadbed have been begun.

The chief engineering feature of this eastern section of the railway is the bridge over the Haichow River a mile north of the city. Pile-driving machinery for its construction has been landed. We understand that the bridge will be constructed on dry land at a sharp bend in the river and after its completion the river will be diverted to a made channel beneath it.

THE TAX COLLECTOR'S LITTLE JOKE.

The tax collector in presenting his annual bill for taxes on the land owned by the Presbyterian Mission here informed us of a 25 per cent. increase that has just been commanded from above. In response to our inquiries he declared that the extra amount was to cover the expenses of the election this year of a new Parliament! Being a fluent talker with the gift of continuance we paid the extra two dollars to him to get rid of him, but we are wondering who got up the bright idea. It strikes us that a 25 per cent increment in taxes for the election of a perfectly useless parliament is a new chapter in frenzied finance. Where will such a huge sum go!

ZANZIBAR, Jan. 12.—The Empire cruise battleships have arrived.—Reuter.

CHINESE SLAVE GIRLS' MISERIES

Shocking Revelation of Torture in Yunnan: Horrors That Cry for Vengeance

From Our Own Correspondent.

Yunnanfu, Dec. 26.

Incidents are constantly coming to light of terrible cruelty to little slave girls. Some months ago Mrs. Dymond and her daughter were constrained to attempt something to ameliorate the condition of this down-trodden class of humanity, whose only fault is that of being born in circumstances of poverty and loveless-ness, the only outlet found for them being a life of slavery and suffering.

Mrs. Dymond and her daughter have come across incidents of cruelty that are unbelievable, and it will not be out of place to attempt to expose one or two such. One little girl, because she had committed some minor offence, was suspended by wrists from a beam in the house and beaten until unconsciousness relieved her of her terrible sufferings and also put an end to her servants. She was left hanging until the weight of her body wrenched one hand completely from the wrist and has since died as a result of her unspeakable suffering.

Another little mite was held over a charcoal fire and beaten while a red hot iron was being held in front of her and eventually pushed through the ball of her eye, the little mite being now blinded for life.

YOUNG CHINA'S INDIFFERENCE

These are some of the things that are being perpetrated in this, one of the most modern of republics in point of time, and though no one for a moment suggests that such things are not abhorrent to the better class of people, yet there appears to be no place of appeal for the class of humanity mentioned; for Young China does not seem to realize its responsibility as it certainly has not yet attempted any reform in this matter of the ownership of human flesh. Most of the wealthy people—who are generally the only ones who can afford the luxury of slave girls—do not care to allow foreigners to become too intimate with their home life, and while we do not wish for a moment to suggest that all are alike cruel and guilty, yet the fact that these incidents have come to light makes one wonder how many other cases there are similar in every way, except that they have hitherto escaped the light of publicity.

A SLAVE POUND.

The ladies mentioned above have discovered a kind of slave-pound where the run-away girls may find a refuge and where they may be again recovered by their owners on payment of a small fine. The place is also a kind of reformatory, where refractory girls are taken for punishment, and though it is under government control yet we believe the place is run on a self supporting basis, consequently money has to be obtained by reselling the girls, who find their second estate worse than the first. For a girl only leaves the refuge with a more or less bad reputation, as buyers know that only refractory and uncontrollable girls are left unredeemed by their erstwhile owners. It is to the credit of these lady missionaries that they ferreted out the place and have begun to do something to ameliorate the conditions under which this downtrodden and miserable class of humanity exist.

THE Ministry of Finance has issued an order, reports the "Journal of Commerce," for a general 10 per cent. increase on all wines and tobacco.

SHANGHAI NEWS

GERMAN AEROPLANES FOR SALE

Strong Chinese Disapproval of New Temptation Offered to the Warlords

The "North-China Daily News" last week published an interesting letter, addressed by the representative of a German firm to a prominent Chinese Tuchun and leading military leader, offering German aeroplanes for sale. At the request of the military governor concerned, all names in connexion with the affairs were withheld, the object in asking us to publish the letter being to show that the Tuchun was not in the field of purchase.

Commenting on this article, the "Eastern Times" in an editorial under the heading of "Aeroplanes for Sale" says:—

"The greatest troubles of China at the present time are due to the fact that our military leaders are so obstinate and quarrelsome. The result is that there is no definite date for peace in view. Not only are the Chinese pained, but foreigners continually pity us in admonishing terms. There are some foreigners, however, who, when they realize that China is nearing the doors of peace, feel dissatisfied. This is so because once there is peace they will be unable to continue their sale of military supplies, such as arms and ammunition, to the various Chinese military leaders.

"During the last few months a number of arms cases have been brought to light involving several lawsuits, such as the Kearny case and others—and these were of the utmost importance, showing that until a settlement has been brought about in connexion with the internal troubles of China the foreign element can avoid sharing a large part of the responsibility for the keeping of peace and order.

WINGED TIGERS.

"A more important matter is that foreigners who sold arms and ammunition in the past were at least afraid and kept their dealings secret. Now it is reported in the "North-China Daily News" that a German has offered to sell aeroplanes to a certain military governor. Of all war materials, the aeroplanes are the most dangerous, and now at this time of internal trouble and unrest this German firm offers to sell them apparently for military purposes. This is like providing the militarists with winged tigers. The German firm therefore should be criticized and the Chinese people pitied.

"Fortunately the military governor concerned has refused to purchase the planes offered to him and no negotiations have taken place. If he did not take this stand, China's troubles would be multiplied and the damage could not be estimated.

"But every one of the Chihli leaders is not as good as the military governor concerned and we do not think that they would be able to resist the temptation placed in front of them. They would fall and purchase what came along to them. While this military leader may refuse to purchase the planes, we cannot guarantee that others will not purchase them, hence we citizens should not get the impression that simply because this military governor has refused to buy the aeroplanes our responsibility ceases and the matter may be dropped without a further thought. We should take action in seeing that no more offers of this nature take place.

"Strangest of all we learn that, while the Diplomatic Corps in Peking have passed a resolution by which none of their fellow-nationals will be permitted to sell or import arms and ammunition, or other military supplies, into this country, some foreigners approach our military leaders with a view to selling what they manufacture for the killing of many lives, the wounding of thousands of others, the destruction of property, and throw the people homeless. We would, therefore, like to know exactly how the Diplomatic Corps view this situation and what steps they will take with a view to suppressing the trafficking of arms."

MID-OCEAN RESCUE

Crew of Derelict Japanese Freighter Transferred to Pres. McKinley

Passengers arriving in Shanghai on Thursday in the Admiral Line str. President McKinley, gave particulars of the rescue of the crew of a Japanese freighter, which was in a supposed derelict condition several days out of Yokohama.

Another vessel, the R.M.S. Empress of Russia, also bound for Shanghai, responded to the wireless signals sent from the ship in distress, but finding that the McKinley was nearest the ship, the Empress's captain ordered the helm about and continued on to this port.

As the McKinley reached the Japanese ship, it is reported that another Japanese boat lay alongside, who requested the passenger boat to take the crew to Japan. Accordingly a boat was put down from both the Japanese vessel and the McKinley and the crew brought to the McKinley, which conveyed them to their home port.

The McKinley reached Shanghai nearly two days' late because of the deviation from the course round the Great Circle, which time in itself amounted to 33 hours. It is reported that the Japanese captain had ordered the sea chests opened so as to sink his vessel after all had been taken off, so that it would not float round in a derelict condition and be a menace to navigation. Whether this was necessary was doubted by some of the passengers who were of the opinion that a prize crew might have managed to bring the wreck into a port and claim a goodly bit of salvage money.

FRENCH MUNICIPAL ELECTIONS

Utter Lack of Interest at the Polls

The French Municipal and Land Commission elections passed off quietly, and under very unpropitious circumstances, for it rained most of Wednesday. With rain overhead and mud underfoot and with no vital problem for the candidates to fight the election on, it was hardly surprising that only 252 votes of a total of 1,411 were cast.

Of the four candidates who stood for the Municipal Council M. R. Fano and M. Le Bris were elected as French members of the Council, and Messrs. M. Speelman and H. J. Sheridan as foreign members.

M. Ch. Barrière carried the poll as French representative on the Land Commission with 231 votes, his opponent, M. F. Sallou receiving 227; while the foreign candidates, Mr. J. M. Tavares and Mr. Vyvyan Dent, received 232 and 223 votes, respectively.

As usual several electors had cast their votes for persons not up for election. A few of them, indeed are suspect as fanciful names originating in the brains of practical jokers, as an examination of the following list of spoilt votes will show, viz., Mailly 25, Charlot 4, Vandelet 2, Dr. Vallet 2, Stiebel 2, J. J. Chollot 2, Bersani 1, Neut 1, Beudin 1, Paturel 1, Hegesippe Simon 1, Verdier 1, Lulasne 1, Kiki 1.

THE UNION CLUB FELLOWSHIP

Mr. Hsu Yuan on British-American-Chinese Friendship: The Co-operation of Officials

There was a large attendance at the usual fellowship dinner of the Union Club Wednesday evening, with particularly strong delegations from the British and American Consulates. The principal guest was Mr. Hsu Yuan, the Commissioner for Foreign Affairs, who, in the course of an interesting address, remarked:—

"Let me first congratulate you on the praiseworthy aim and object of this club, which is to bring the British, American and Chinese business men and officials together in a social bond. I have thought that the differences and divergences of the East and the West are apt to be too much accentuated many a time and we forget that our sage Confucius said, 'All within the four seas are brethren.' We all are human mortals, love our drinks and food, arts and splendor, fair play and justice and peace and trade. Although our language may not be the same and we may write it in a different way, yet many of our thoughts and ideals fit in with one another. Your golden rule appears in all its essence in changed garbs in Confucius, in the saying, 'Do not do to others what you do not wish done to yourself.'

"True, there are peculiarities with each of us which seem inexplicable to the other, but if we would try to mingle and become acquainted with each other and to dive below the surface, we should soon begin to understand the meaning underlying every act of ours.

"Although established rather late in the day, the club fulfills two purposes. It not only assists in bringing closer the business men of the nations represented, but it achieves a result which in a large measure forms the foundation of the prosperity and success of this port, for without goodwill and mutual understanding, the peace and good order of the Settlements will not be ensured and business cannot be what it is. The second purpose of the club is that it brings the local officials in touch with the business community and this is a very sensible feature. Our American and British friends have always been in touch with their officials, but before Republican days in China our people were not able to meet our officials much. I am happy to say that there has been a change in this direction in Chinese officialdom and it will ever be my care to know the people and their wants and you gentlemen can regard me as your servant and approach me whenever I may be of any service to you."

THE PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.

No Foundation for Absorption Rumour

As the result of a report in Shanghai that the Pacific Mail Steamship Co. was about to be absorbed by the Robert Dollar Co., the local branch of the former concern telegraphed to its head office in the United States asking for information.

A reply was received on Thursday authorizing the local office to give an emphatic denial to the rumour that the Pacific Mail company was being taken over by the Robert Dollar Co.

The Pacific Mail has been in existence for over half a century, and it is considered most unlikely that it will cease to exist as a separate organization.

THE "Eastern Times" relates that one Ling Ching-hua was arrested at his home in Chapei on Sunday morning and sent immediately to Hangchow, it being alleged that he was stirring up the bandits in the Taichow district, Chêkiang, and was to assume command of them when they rose in opposition to the authorities.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS AND RUSSIANS

Dr. Greig of Manchuria Now in Shanghai in Connexion with the Refugee Question

Dr. James A. Greig of Kirin, Manchuria, delegate of the League of Nations, arrived in Shanghai with Mrs. Greig on Saturday evening, in pursuance of the instructions he has received from the League of Nations "to find a final solution for the Russian refugee problem in China."

During the tremendous influx of Russians into Kirin some months ago Dr. Greig was intimately and hourly concerned in the work of relief. He set himself then to interest the League of Nations in the question, feeling truly that it wholly transcends local handling, and, with the aid of the Diplomatic Body in Peking, he succeeded so well that, last October, the League appointed him its agent in the Far East, to find a final solution, as said above. His own Mission, the Presbyterian Church of Ireland, has lent him for the work. Dr. Greig comes now from Peking where he had a most cordial reception both from the Chinese Government and the Diplomatic Body and he is now in Shanghai to see what may be done.

The importance of the League of Nations' interesting itself in the Russian refugee problem cannot be overestimated. There are two main schools of thought as regards the League. One regards it as useless and fantastic: the other imagines it omnipotent. Neither is correct. Its resources depend on the extent to which it can influence the Governments it represents and no further. But it can put matters to those Governments as no other institution can do; and it can negotiate with the Soviet Government (in respect of repatriation etc.) as no other agency might. It is not to be forgotten that the League took a most practical interest in caring for the Russian refugees from Constantinople and was able to settle them where room could be found (some, for instance, went to Brazil) at an expenditure of £50,000.

The fact that the League has interested itself in the refugees in China, of whom there are roughly 50,000, though not all destitute, is the first real gleam of light we have seen in this dark problem.

One point may specially be emphasized in connexion with Dr. Greig's undertaking. He is neither "Red" nor "White"; he has no political sympathies whatever; his own personal interest and the motive of the work he has to do for the League, is bound up in Russians only as Russians, irrespective of what their political colour may be.

WIRELESS FOR HOUSEBOATS

The capabilities of the standard types of aerial were discussed at last week's meeting of the International Amateur Radio Association.

Mr. A. Bruce Puddicombe dwelt at some length upon the subject of aerials for houseboats, showing how it was easily possible for the holiday-maker on the Tahu or elsewhere to keep in touch by radio both with Shanghai and with the great commercial stations of the world.

Passing on to cage-antennæ and loop receivers he described a number of ingenious devices which could be fitted up by any amateur.

The feature of the lecture was a short dissertation on masts. Mr. Puddicombe exhibited a scale-model of a 50-ft. mast, strengthened on the cantilever principle, and showed how remarkable stability could be combined with lightness and simplicity.

China will probably be represented at the International Boy Scouts Rally in London in April, according to information received in Shanghai.

OUR HARBIN LETTER

Mongol Prince's First Glimpse of European Shops: Future of Racing in the Port

From Our Own Correspondent.

Harbin, Jan. 6.

Harbin has recently been visited by a Mongol Prince, the Amban of Barga and his suite, who spent a few days in the town. They were much interested in the splendours of the shops, which the Amban set eyes upon for the first time in his life, the Prince being yet a young man.

Apparently he took especial interest in the Race Course when visiting the sights of the town. He expressed his desire to participate in the racing next season stating that his father, uncle and brothers would also join in the sport. It has been arranged for a member of the Committee of the Harbin Race Club to go up to Hailar this spring and take honorary members' cards to the Barga Princes and make arrangements for the shipping of ponies for racing.

Hitherto racing in Harbin has been of rather a tame nature—mostly trotting by fullbred Russian horses. As the latter are getting fewer and are most expensive, it is likely that in a season or two the Mongolian pony will usurp the place now held by the Russian trotters and that Harbin will vie with other China ports in the racing of these ponies.

UP-TO-DATE WEAVING FACTORY.

There will shortly be opened in Harbin a wool-weaving factory on quite a large scale. A Chinese company was formed some two years ago when building began and the total cost of it is estimated at over two million dollars. Latest machinery for wool-cleaning and weaving will be installed and Chinese merchants look with much favour upon this new industry of north Manchuria, which will obtain its raw materials practically at its door.

According to Russian experts it is claimed that Mongolian wool is not of a high quality. Therefore the cloth which will be manufactured here will be of a far inferior quality to that which is imported from England and other countries.

The demand among the native population for woollen material is not large at present, but with a good, strong cheap quality being made there is a very good market in Eastern Siberia. The fact of the establishing of a woollen mill on modern lines by Chinese capitalists here in Northern Manchuria goes to show that industrial undertakings in these parts are not being neglected and that rapid expansion in industry and commerce during the next decade is sure to take place.

The editors of four local Russian newspapers in which had been published resolutions of the different Russian Workers. Unions for boycotting the newspaper "Zarya" on account of its reactionary tendency, were summoned to the Police Administration on Saturday. Here they were informed by a police official that the publication of these resolutions caused alarm among the residents. Therefore he requested them not to publish such resolutions.

The newspaper representatives replied that the notice only pointed out that no members of the Unions should buy the paper or advertise in it and therefore could give no cause for alarm to residents. If the "Zarya" considered its interests had been damaged or the other papers had broken the law relief could be sought in the courts.

SHANGHAI'S FIRMS ENTERPRISE.

Messrs. Frazar & Co., who are the pioneers of the motor-car business in Harbin and who introduced auto-busses into the town, have recently built and equipped an ambulance-car to the order of the Railway Administration. Before being handed over the car was open for inspection and all those who have seen it express their admiration for the efficient work of Frazar & Co., the car not only being elegantly finished, but also moderate in price, costing only Y. 2,000. It has a regular Ford touring car chassis, equipped with special springs and a body built on the latest European lines. It contains an upper and lower stretcher, which slide out and in on rollers, has long windows of the best plate glass on either side and two square windows at the end. At night time a strong electric light set high up at each end of the car and provided by reflectors throw a bright light. A leather covered seat is provided for the two attendants, and an extra electric hand lamp attached to the side of the car can be used to cast light on any particular spot and can also be inserted in a socket outside the car in case a strong light is needed outside. A cupboard in the fore-part of the car serves for medicaments and instruments. The whole of the interior is painted in white and curtains are provided. At the rear end of the car is a collapsible double-step easy to reach from the ground by one who is injured but yet able to walk, the lower step being folded out of the way when the car is moving.

The outward appearance of the car is particularly handsome the colour being dark blue and ornamented with the initials of the railway. Springs are provided which makes the car responsive to the slightest weight whilst special tyres are placed on the wheels.

When one reflects that the Harbin Municipality have recently purchased from abroad an ambulance car which has cost the ratepayers Y. 6,500—three times the price of Messrs. Frazar's car—the railway management is to be congratulated on its present purchase and for encouraging local industry.

WORK ON THE TRAMWAY SYSTEM.

The question whether the Harbin Tramways will start work this spring is likely to be shortly decided, for Mr. Bissell one of the partners of the San Fransico firm of Beckman & Linder, who secured the contract for the building some time back, is now in Harbin.

According to the terms of the agreement between the concessionaires—a Chinese company—and the contractors, the former have to make a cash deposit of one million dollars, whilst the later have to put up adequate cash guarantees that they will carry out their contract. The concessionaires have already in the bank $650,000. Though this is all the available money they have now (having been spending big sums for the past two years on the upkeep of a big office and an expensive staff including Russian engineers who have been receiving princely salaries) it is likely they will be able to borrow the remainder from some of the local Chinese banks.

OPIUM SMUGGLING OFFICIALS

Grave Scandal Exposed at Tsinanfu: Judicial Officers Alleged to be Involved

Peking, Jan. 14.

In connexion with the recent seizure in Tsingtao by the police of $80,000 worth of opium, the International Anti-Opium Association has just received the following telegram from its branch association in Tsinanfu:—

"Hsiao Hsia-yin, Secretary of the Shantung High Court, and Wang Tsen-wei, Chief of the Tsingtao Court of Procuration, whilst smuggling an enormous amount of opium into Tsingtao were arrested together with the opium by the Tsingtao Police. At this time whilst foreign Powers are protesting and the Central Government Mandates are repeatedly emphasizing opium prohibition Hsiao and Wang pay no attention to the law although they themselves are authorities of Justice. Their conduct has slandered the justice of China. Besides a petition lodged by our branch with the Minister of Justice asking for thorough investigation and strict punishment, we appeal to the parent Association to cooperate with us by making a similar protest."

(signed) President of Shantung Branch

International Anti-Opium Association.

COURT DOCUMENTS.

The facts of the case as stated in recent Chinese papers show that eight large boxes were sealed with the seals of the High Court of Shantung and sent from Tsinanfu to Tsingtao by rail in the charge of Hsiao Hsia-yin, secretary of the High Court. As the boxes were presumed to contain Court documents, no attention was paid to them by the railway police or Customs, but the small opium smugglers who hate those engaged in big official transactions appealed to the head of police, who with his police seized the boxes whilst in the Procuration motor car.

The "Ching Pao" states that the monthly sales of opium in Tsingtao amount to $200,000 and if so, it is a serious reflexion upon the present administration and confirms the belief that the registration of opium smokers and the restriction under licence enforced by the Japanese Administration has all vanished.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

TROOP MOVEMENTS IN CHEKIANG

Cruiser and 5,000 Men in Wenchow Last Week but No Fighting Yet

From Our Own Correspondent.

Wenchow Chê., Jan. 13.

Probably in all its history Wenchow has not seen so many steamship arrivals in one week or as many soldiers for many decades.

Yesterday there were 11 steamers in port, among them being the French gunboat Algol and four large Japanese steamers. The latter are buying up all the charcoal they can secure, and the demand has raised the price to such a figure that one hears that at least one of the four steamers is having to leave port without any cargo.

Last week a Chinese cruiser made its second visit to this port bringing another detachment of soldiers from Hangchow. No fewer than 5,000 soldiers are reported to have been in Wenchow, and hundreds of river boats have been engaged to take men and stores up to Chichowfu about 90 miles up the river where fighting has been expected for sometime past. So far, however, though there have been plenty of rumours yet no definite news has come of any actual fighting there.

Talk in the city here is to the effect that if Gen. Lu Yung-hsiang will go away from Chêkiang no one else will begin fighting—a somewhat different story from what has appeared in the "North-China Daily News" recently. Others say that there is no likelihood of fighting now peace has been declared, but that in the south of the province Gen. Sun has brought 10,000 men over the border from Fokien and will not retire until the local inhabitants have paid him $50,000 as payment for the troops for the time they have been there.

1,500 HOMELESS IN CITY FIRES.

The dry season here with its accompanying high winds, has brought an unusually large number of disasters in the way of fires. A fortnight ago the writer was in the small city of Tsingtien nearly 40 miles up the Wenchow river from this city and saw the ruins of a considerable section of the city caused by a fire about a month earlier which had rendered homeless about 500 families.

This beautiful little city by the side of a swiftly rushing, clear mountain stream, is set in a narrow valley by towering mountains which confine the winding river as in a series of long narrow lakes. But the confirming effect of the hills which enhances the beauty of its situation is the cause of its frequent undoing, for in the flood season the waters become pent up and submerge the entire city at time. Thus in 1912 in spite of its strong and towering walls it was washed out save for about 20 buildings and very many lives were lost, one girl of 15 being carried down the river among the wreckage for 50 miles down to the sea and washed up on an island out off the Coast several miles further away. In the big typhoon of 1922 the city again suffered badly again. The place where the writer's boat anchored under the city wall for the week-end used to have twice as great a depth of water as is necessary to float the great Atlantic liners. To-day the raftsmen pole their craft over its shallows, filled from time to time with the ever rolling stones which the recurring floods bring down in immeasureable quantities so filling the bed of the river as to cause the annual flooding of that city to the depth of several feet.

The village of Whuzoedin in the Suian prefecture, south of Wenchow, was also visited by fire about a month earlier, and reports say that at least about 1,000 families suffered grievously. Foreign oil and lamps are said to have been the cause of the fires.

$12,000 WORTH OF OPIUM BURNED.

A couple of days ago there was a public burning of from $10,000 to $12,000 worth of opium which had been recently seized. Before long there will be another burning of some two or more catties also seized.

ATTACK IN HUNAN ON FOREIGNERS

American Priests' Narrow Escape: Town Looted

Peking, Jan. 12.

Supu, Hunan, was looted on January 3 by soldiers of the first Hunan Division who alleged that they were acting under orders of Gen. Ho Yao-tsu to loot the Passionist Mission and to kill the foreign devils.

The American Consul at Changsha has received a letter from Father Flavian Mullins reporting that the looters fired at him, the shot passing through his clothes. They also fired on Father Arthur Bernard, shot through the American flag, tore up the flooring of the school and did other damage. The Mission is now guarded by troops under Gen. Chang Siang-ti. The American Consul has protested to the Governor.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

AMERICAN DEMAND FOR PROTECTION.

Peking, Jan. 14.

A protest has been lodged with the Waichiaopu by the American Legation in connexion with events that occurred during the looting of Supu, Hunan, by bandits on the 3rd instant, coupled with a demand for protection in the future of American citizens in that locality.—Reuter's Pacific Service

THE TOBACCO TAX

Szechuan Warned Off

Peking, Jan. 14.

In response to a protest from foreign legations the Government has telegraphed to the Civil Governor of Szechuan instructing him to stop the tax being imposed on foreign tobacco, as it is in direct conflict with treaty obligations.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

GEN. Sun Chuan-fang, Tuli of Fukien, is again reported by the "Sinwenpao" to be making preparations to attack Chêkiang, and has personally left for the border to direct operations.

NORTH KIANGSU NOTES

Farmers Anxious Over Poor Wheat Prospects: A Winter Drought

From Our Own Correspondent

Suchien, N. Ku., Jan. 11

Christmas has come and gone and no sign of snow yet. The farmers are beginning to be a little anxious over the wheat prospects. We have had rain about twice since September, and the roots are lying too loosely in the dry soil to give much promise of good crops this summer. January is usually our coldest month so we hope the snow will come yet.

Though the weather is sharp and cold at nights, the days are sunny and bright. They almost make one forget we are in midwinter. We had two days about the end of the year with hard frost, when the canal froze over, but it did not last.

The canal is to be dredged this month and in the meantime water from the lakes above has been freed to assist shipping. The canal presents a busy scene, boats everywhere, loading cargo, and large boats passing through Suchien, either going up or down laden with merchandise. Every one is getting in supplies of necessaries, but already prices are going up. Three months dredging operations will be necessary before boats will again be able to ply their trade. One is glad to hear the mud is to be used in banks to the canal, not dumped down as last time in the edges of the water, only to find its way back again, in time, into the bed of the canal.

The city gates are closed early these nights, and a good watch all night kept on the "neitsi" or mud wall, outside the city. Last week a place about 23 miles from here was reported looted for the fourth time, but this has been contradicted. Judging from the firing of rifles and the boom of cannon that breaks the stillness of most nights, some poor unfortunates are having a hard time of it.

DR. SUN'S POSITION IMPROVED

Adversaries Unable to Take Any Offensive

From Rodney Gilbert.

Peking, Jan. 17

The Northern agents in Canton telegraph that Dr. Sun Yat-sen's position is slightly stronger, while General Chen Chiung-ming, General Shen Hung-yin and the Kiangsi (? Kuangsi) troops are all unable to take the offensive.

Canton, Jan. 15.

The mutiny of the Third Corps of the Yunnanese Army has been quashed. General Chiang Kuang liang is expected to yield the control of the Canton-Samshui Railroad, which he has controlled since the occupation of the West River in January last year.

The Kuomingtang Party has postponed the National Convention at Canton owing to many delegates having failed to reach Canton from Shanghai by to-day.

Mr. C. C. Wu, Dr. Sun Yat-sen's Secretary for Foreign Affairs, has intimated that Dr. Sun will soon declare the Canton military administration an independent government.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE NEUTRALIZATION OF SHANGHAI

Nanking Mission to President

From Rodney Gilbert.

Peking, Jan. 17

The President to day received Wen Shih-chen, bearer of important documents from the Kiangsu Military and Civil Governors.

It is surmised that the mission is connected with the neutralization of Shanghai and the removal of all garrisons through the Chêkiang Kiangsu agreement.

DIXWELL RD. BEGGAR COLONY ABLAZE

At Least Three Lives Lost in Big Fire on Friday Morning

Fire swept over part of the Dixwell Road beggar colony early last Friday morning, consuming a large number of matsheds and resulting in the death of at least three of the inhabitants. According to latest reports there may have been altogether five fatal casualties. The area affected was about the size of the Administration Building compound, lying some 200 yards to the east of North Szechuen Road, near the Japanese School, and at about the centre of the apex formed by the convergence of Dixwell Road and North Szechuen Road at the Public School for Boys.

It proved an awkward place to reach, Engines, etc., approached from Dixwell Road and then had to get round to North Szechuen Road before it was possible to get at grips with IRRESISTIBLE FLAMES.

It seemed that the trouble originated well to the north of the section and toward Dixwell Road, but the flames spread so rapidly that this is uncertain. The buildings to the south were evidently of firmer construction for they withstood the onslaught for a long time. However, with the high wind and the flames soon bore through them in short order. It was necessary for the Brigade at least to permit the flames to consume their prey and content themselves with wetting down the foreign buildings on either side in order to save them, which purpose was fortunately realized. A peculiar feature of the evening lay in the complete saving of a terrace under construction which projected right within the area. In the southwest corner the brick walls and wooden rafters of the new building were surrounded on three sides by fire and the glare of the flames could be seen from the observer's point of vantage to the north, as they gleamed through the roofing, but the thorough wetting down prevented more than a scorching and the workmen were hard at work continuing the construction eight hours later.

SAD SCENES BY DAY.

Daylight brought an entirely different picture. Through the night before, squealing pigs, cackling chickens, hurrying coolies, frantic women, hurried men and crying children made known their wants or rushed to the safety zones outside. The light of day showed the firemen gone, and sad families slowly going back to the spots where their miserable huts had stood. Not realizing their loss a dozen women and children got near where they believed they had lived, but before they were aware of it one of them stumbled over the bones of their dead.

Over on the far side three coffins which had been awaiting burial had been burned until they barely held together while from the outside a small coffin was gingerly brought in. Over the entire area a thousand Chinese dug with fingers, sticks and knives to unearth any portions of such treasure as they might have had. The usual result of their search was limited to basketsfull of broken bottles and glass, or a bit of iron, or other goods non-flammable. One group had brought back their blankets and cotton quilts and as they sat rolled up in them, discussed their future, with one of their number slapping at a child as she nursed the youngest at the breast. Near the burned coffins were the remains of two long boats which had been raised on trestles, never again to be used for a home.

It was a most difficult fire to fight. The Brigade had to run lines of hose as long as 500 yards first to the pumps and then inside over the Settlement boundaries to the congested flames.

AN ANCIENT PLAGUE SPOT.

This district, full of cess-pools and a creek dammed-up into a pool a hundred feet wide and reeking with smells and disease, was the subject of much discussion in these columns last summer when it was urged that the beggars should be forced to move further out and the filth removed. Fire has purified what it could but the remainder is still as full of germs and vicious matter as ever. Three hours after sunrise carpenters were busy rebuilding a part. Shall this be tolerated by the Chinese authorities?

THE COLUMBIA COUNTRY CLUB

Work on New Scheme Formally Inaugurated

In the presence of a large gathering of members and their friends and the present board of Governors of the Columbia Country Club, Mr. W. A. Burns, the first President and one of the committee responsible for the ginal proposal, on Sunday turned the first sod of the club's new premises in Great Western Road.

Before actually taking the gilded shovel, Mr. Burns said that the growth of the Club had been a remarkable one along the lines laid down in the beginning. "It was the purpose of the founders to provide a family home for the community, a place where the Americans could meet and their wives and children could come and enjoy a happy afternoon or evening. The annual entertainments for the youngsters and their joyful parties clearly showed what success attended the efforts of the committee."

Continuing, the speaker was of opinion that the value of the past had amply demonstrated that a change in policy would not for the moment be tolerated but that the functions would be merely enlarged in scope.

With the motion picture machines grinding out the film and the still cameras clicking one after the other, he took the shovel and with a vigorous motion upturned the soil, emblematic of the work done and that still to come.

Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. Edwin S. Cunningham, Judge and Mrs. C. S. Lobingier, Mr. L. Everett, President of the Club, Dr. W. T. Findley, President of the American Association, Mr. E. C. Stocker Vice-president of the American Club, Mr. V. G. Lyman, Vice-president of the Chamber of Commerce (American), Mr. Stirling Fessenden, Chairman of the Municipal Council, and Messrs. C. F. Wolsiffer and R. T. Bryan of the Committee.

In introducing the guest of the occasion, Mr. L. Everett said in part:—

It is a big order to fill I can assure you, but I hope that every member here may feel that same measure of pride that I do that our Club could have so progressed for us to be able to meet here to-day on this wonderfully fine piece of property which is all our own and to take part in this ceremony which is the commencement of what is unquestionably to become one of the most attractive club homes in the Far East. I have to figuratively pinch myself on occasion to bring myself to a proper realization of our accomplishments and, if this is the case with me it must more readily be so with many of you. Our reason, therefore, for having this impromptu ceremony to-day is that we might get together and, in association with each other rejoice at our actual possession to date, and likewise join in the actual commencement of our new home which is not to be for any one of us, or for any few of us, but for all of us and many more who will join with us later.

We are most fortunate in still having with us our first president Mr. Burns.

Mr. Burns, I am sure that you little realized that your efforts could grow and result in what they have in the time that they have, and it is our hope that your acting for us to-day may be starting us upon another period off the same good fortune that your first efforts did. We are deeply indebted to you already but we want continuation of your interest and inspiration for our future, pledging ourselves that we will, in turn, carry on to the most commendable possible finish that which you so ably started.

On behalf of the Board of Governors and members I have pleasure in presenting you with this memento to commemorate this occasion and to remind you of our hearty good wishes for you and yours in your future life, but as it is hardly suitable, in proportion with our ideas as expressed by me, I also hand you this garden variety of spade and ask you to turn the first sod for our new home.

PRESENTATION TO MR. H. R. STURT

On his retirement from the joint management of the China Mutual and Shanghai Life Insurance Cos., a presentation was made to Mr. H. R. Sturt at the companies' offices last week.

Mr. J. C. Burgess, on behalf of the staff, after expressing their regret at his departure, thanked Mr. Sturt for the splendid manner in which he had looked after their interests during negotiations leading to the recent amalgamation of the companies with the Sun Life of Canada.

If was quite beyond him, said Mr. Burgess, to express in adequate terms the feelings of the staff on Mr. Sturt's retirement. They were as seldom exist between a staff and its officers. Any question submitted to him, whether of a business or personal nature, always received impartial consideration and a just decision at his hands.

Mr. S. D. Tsao, speaking for Chinese members of the staff, expressed heartfelt thanks to Mr. Sturt for the kindness he had shown them during the past ten years. He had helped them as a good mother helped her children.

Mr. Sturt, responding, said that as regards fair dealing, he could only explain this by the fact that he received his training in an office in a small street in the City of London, where a business had been carried on for 140 years on a basis of mutual confidence and good faith. He had endeavoured to be worthy of that tradition in the Far East. The China Mutual and the Shanghai Life companies had been pioneers in life insurance work in China, and in many other countries in Asia. Although the names of these two companies were now merged in that of one of the largest of our Colonial companies, he believed that when the history of life insurance came to be written the work done by the companies would be honourably recorded.

Mr. E. Leitao also spoke.

OBITUARY

Dr. L. Emmett Holt

Dr. L. Emmett Holt, the eminent American authority upon the care and diseases of children, died in Peking on January 14 from progressive myocarditis, according to information just received by Dr. W. W. Peter. Dr. Holt was a member of the board of directors and secretary of the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research, physician-in-chief to the Babies' Hospital in New York City and clinical professor in children's diseases at the College of Physicians and Surgeons. His book on the care and feeding of children is the most valued possession of most American mothers and his contribution to infant welfare can hardly be overestimated.

Col. Mallet, who as Captain Mallet will be remembered as Chief of the French Municipal Police here a few years ago, has arrived in Shanghai on his way Home. After resigning the French Police, Captain Mallet returned to the Colonial Infantry, and joined the garrison at Tientsin. He served in France and subsequently returned with the rank of Colonel to Tientsin. He left by the French mail yesterday.

SPORTS AND PASTIMES

THE LIGHT HORSE POINT-TO-POINT

A Win for Lieut. Trenchard Davis after a Hard Race

The Light Horse annual Point-to-Point Hanicap on Sunday morning was taken in too serious a mood to afford the delights usually associated with such events. The country was in a state to invite fast riding and evidently the competitors were in a mood to bring this about. Of 39 entrants 32 got into the saddle and they made a race of it from the very start, the winner covering the six-mile course in 20 minutes, which was three minutes better than last year's time. Starting from the Warren Line the course lay over Suez, Westward Ho platform, left handed to Slough of Despond water jump, Marah, Hungjao Road Bridge at the Octopus Tree, any route to Dallas Grave, Clear Water, Family Tree platform, Westward Ho platform, left handed taking 3 jumps to big dry cut (flagged), Drop and Crawl to a right handed taking all jumps to Barrier platform, Barrier Line, Bee Line, to a finish on Bee Line (about 6 miles).

The card read:—

1. Lieut. C. Trenchard Davis, M.C., Sweetheart, 178 lb., 3 min.
2. Tpr. L. Fernie, Poor Fish, 164 lb., 3 min.
3. Capt. L. R. Andreys, M.C., Salamander, 167 lb., 2½ min.
4. L/Cpl. W. Fiddes-Wilson, Pinmore, 180 lb., 3 min.
5. Sgt. J. C. Greig, Strathclyde, 146 lb., 1 min.
6. Major H. G. Robinson, Emerald Bay, 175 lb., 2 min.

THE PAPERHUNT CLUB

Excellent Sport In Wholly Unknown Country

The paperhunt on Saturday afternoon was the long expected event in the Tazang country, and the general verdict seemed to be that the jumping on the whole was good in that district, but that it was too inaccessible to be worth while so long as suitable country is to be had nearer home.

The trail was laid by Mr. G. Grayrigge, and minute instructions were issued as to how to pass through the interminable and unsalubrious native quarter of Chapei. It was noticed that the area bristles with native soldiers and police, while the often discussed beggar villages and squalid hovels of the poorer natives, resident on the outskirts of the Settlement, were much in evidence. It took a full hour to reach the start, which was just beyond the village of Tazang, and including slight delay at the toll gate where for some reason, money was exacted from some of the cars, but not from others. It will be interesting to note the development in China of this new system of paying tolls to use roads.

Promptly at 3 p.m. the riders assembled were addressed by Mr. E. S. Benbow Rowe, Steward in charge, with a few brief words, and were then despatched. The route at first lay towards the north, but riders soon disappeared in the dust, and little could be seen of their route then, or heard of it afterwards.

It was learned that the jumps, at first, consisted chiefly of dry ditches some of them rather big, and the jumping on the whole was very sticky. Later, came the district of waterjumps, and, though some of them were beautiful jumps, others were too big to be taken cleanly, and in crawling them in whole or in part, some of the ponies got bogged in very soft and slimy mud.

Mr. B L. Newbigging on Wiltshire, and Mr. M. O. Springfield on Harry M. were winners respectively of the light and heavyweight classes, and the card reads as follow:—

1.—B. L. Newbigging on Wiltshire.
2.—A. S. Withers on Night Raider.
3.—H. G. Elliot on Tussore.
4—M. O. Springfield on Harry M. (Heavyweight).
5.—Stang lund on Nordborg.
6.—E. C. Allen on California.

SATURDAY'S FOOTBALL

Results in Brief

FIRST LEAGUE.

Engineers 4, Police 2.
Recs 4, Public School 0.
Football Club a walk-over.

SECOND LEAGUE.

Football Club, 4, Maritime Co. 1
St. Xavier's 4, Customs 1.
Lusitano 11, Thos. Hanbury 1.
Police 7, Jewish R. C. 1.
Recs a walk-over.

The cancellation of games usually associated with football nowadays in Shanghai reduced Saturday's programme by two games, the Football Club having a walk-over in the First League owing to St. Xavier's scratching, whilst in the Second League the Recs 2nd XI also gained points without having to play for them, as the Navy team did not put in an appearance. However, there were sufficient games left to provide a good afternoon's sport and there was plenty of clever and exciting play. The most interesting game was that between the Marine Engineers and the Police, which was watched by a very large number of people. The Engineers, playing fine football throughout, thoroughly deserved their win. The Recs 1st XI had an easy time with the Public School. The Second League games were notable for the heavy scoring, two being won by 4 goals to one, one by 11 to one and one by 7 to one.

SWIMMING RECORD

Amazing Performance by 16-Yr.-Old Australian Boy

Sydney, Jan. 12.

In the New South Wales Swimming Championship, the 16-year old Alan Charlton won the 440 yards in 5 min. 11⅘ sec., defeating the Swede Arne Borg by 20 yards.

The time ties with Borg's world's record established in Stockholm in 1922.—Reuter.

CRICKET IN AUSTRALIA

Sydney, Jan. 14.

New South Wales beat South Australia at cricket to-day by an innings and 104 runs.

Scores:—South Australia 383 (V. Richardson 135) and 197 (Everett took 6 wickets for 54).

New South Wales 684 (Kippax 248).—Reuter.

SMALL WHITE PIMPLES ON CHIN

Burned and Spread Over Face. Cuticura Heals.

"My trouble started with small, white pimples which broke out all around my chin. Shortly after they began to run water and formed large scales, which burned and spread all over my face. The pimples itched and burned a lot when I got warm.

"I tried several different remedies but none seemed to help me. I began using Cuticura Soap and Ointment which I found most beneficial. I continued using them and within four weeks I was completely healed." (Signed) H. Morris, 42, Cross St., Wednesbury, Staffs., Eng.

These fragrant emollients are all you need for all toilet purposes. Soap to cleanse, Ointment to heal.

Soap 1s., Ointment 1s. 3d. and 2s. 6d. Sold throughout the Empire. For sample each free address "F. Newbery & Sons, Ltd., 27, Charterhouse Sq., London, E.C.1." Also for mail orders with price. Cuticura Soap shaves without mug.

THE RUSSIAN SHIPS AND ARMS

A Constant Menace to Peace: Chinese Government Willing to Act but Hampered by Political Dilemma: Case for Joint Action by Chinese and Foreigners

Great concern is being felt by the Chinese Government, we understand, in connexion with the Russian refugee problem (including the Russian vessels at Woosung) and the local arms situation. Steps are being taken to solve these two problems jointly and to send the vessels away from Shanghai as they are, in the opinion of the Chinese Government, a constant menace to the peace and safety of Shanghai and China in general

There are, it is estimated, some 8,000 to 10,000 refugees in Shanghai at the present time, of which number about 1,800 are on board the steamers Zachitknak, Montgovgay, Okhotsk and Eldorado. On board the last named ship were nearly 800 refugees who expected, but failed, to land in Chêkiang last summer when the arms on board were alleged to have been bought by Gen. Chang Tsai-yang, Civil Governor of that province. The other three boats, on which there are said to be no fewer than 1,500 refugees, arrived at Woosung in September, but the refugees, of whom the majority are uniformed men and boys in their teens, have been refused a landing by the local Chinese authorities, and are still on board.

A Chinese gunboat, the Yung-chi, was ordered to Woosung by the Commander of the "Independent" Navy, Admiral Lin Kien-chang, at the order of Gen. Ho Feng-ling, the local Military Governor, to prevent the refugees landing. This vessel is stationed well inside the Woosung Bar about three miles away from the four Russian vessels which are outside the Bar. With the exception of a single armed Chinese, (armed with a pistol and half-a-dozen cartridges), no attempt is made to cut off communication between the boats and shore, any or all persons desiring to do so being free to go aboard and refugees are able to land without restraint.

On board the Russian vessels are all kinds of of ammunition, ranging from grenades to field guns, from rifles to machine-guns, cartridges, four and six inch shells, field telephones, wireless equipment and so forth. These are for sale to any or all persons who come along for them. As stated, there is no restraint on the visitors, with the result that automatic pistols, cartridges and hand grenades are being brought ashore daily, many being "samples." Various attempts have been made to sell, and a buyer was found recently in Dr. Sun Yat-sen's local aide, who paid a deposit of $50,000 for the vessels and all that was on board, and agreed to engage a large number of those on board as army officers and instructors. The vessels, for some reason, failed to leave and the deposit was returned. At the present time the stores continue to be brought ashore and are daily falling into the hands of the most undesirable persons.

Various schemes have been proposed for sending the boats away from Shanghai, but so far none of these has borne fruit. The Central Government in Peking have consented to take action, but they are greatly handicapped as Woosung is within an "independent" jurisdiction. Then again there is the treaty between Shanghai, Nanking and Hangchow. Should either one of the signatories to this treaty take independent action, jealousy is sure to be aroused and misunderstandings ensue, which might in the end lead to an open breach. With the events of the past few months before us, the military and political situation is indeed a very delicate one and action on the part of one party, which the other might consider improper, could easily lead to hostilities, despite assurances of the generals concerned to the contrary. Hence, the Chinese Government is unable to send its gunboats to Woosung to disarm the vessels, because once this were done, the Woosung forts would probably open fire and fighting break out.

Now comes a report from Peking to the effect that M. Karakhan, the Soviet envoy, has informed the Chinese Government that, under no conditions may the Russians vessels be sold or transferred as they are the property of the Rusian Soviet Government and the present White possessors are in charge of them illegally. The Chinese Government, therefore, says M. Karakhan, should hand them over to Mr. J. R. Ellerder agent of the Russian Volunteer Fleet in Shanghai, who is the representative of the Soviet Government in Shanghai. The Chinese Government have, we understand, consented to do this, provided that Mr. Ellerder will guarantee to send the refugees back to Vladivostok and disarm the vessels, and on this point no reply has been forthcoming.

The matter thus rests, but there is an important factor that could assist the Chinese Government and that is the foreign element, as suggested by a correspondent in a letter to this paper several days ago. The foreign consuls might well take action in this matter. They are at least as anxious as the Chinese Government to have the vessels disarmed and the Russians sent away from Shanghai.

THE RUSSIAN SHIPS AT WOOSUNG

Last Remnants of a Great Army: No Gun-Running Here: Unfair Reports to Correct

By A. D. Bell.

People who read in the newspapers about "Gun-running at Woosung" not unnaturally get an idea of something sordid and disreputable. They are wrong. Something very fine indeed is being done on board the three small ships—Zachitknak, Montgovgay and Okhotsk—which hold the last remnant of the Tsar's army and navy. The writer spent last Sunday on board these ships and begs the Editor's leave to set down what he saw.

These three boats are lying at anchor off Woosung, quite near the notorious Eldorado. They are smaller than she is; they are crowded while she is almost empty; there are no dealings between her and them. The ill fated company which she brought from Gensan are now scattered about Shanghai and only a handful of guards remain on board. The men on the other ships look on the Eldorado as a deserter from their cause. There is no doubt, of course, that guns and ammunition have been sold out of the Eldorado.

DISCIPLINE AND GOOD ORDER.

The personnel of the three smaller ships have made no effort whatever to land in Shanghai. Their numbers are to-day equal to what they were when they came to Woosung six months ago. One or two may have left and one or two joined during this time, but the composition of the ships' companies to all intents remains unchanged. It is not men from these ships who are seen walking our streets or waiting at our soup-kitchens. Shore-leave is rarely given: very many of the officers have yet to pay their first visit to Shanghai. Discipline is strict. The main occupation is drill. The ships need paint and doubtless other repairs and they are uncomfortably crowded, but they are clean and neat inside, while the men look cheerful and in good physical condition. There are probably about 200 officers, a few of them naval men, but the great majority officers in the Russian army. The rank and file are mostly Cossacks, and number about 600.

Intoxicants are eschewed by officers and forbidden to the men. At the Russian Christmas permission to drink vodka was given and accepted, but the morale of the men is so high that even after six months of prohibition there was no drunkenness or disorder and since then officers and men alike have returned to their plan of total abstinence.

Hitherto the men on these ships have been fed and clothed by means of money which they brought here with them. Their funds are dwindling but they have enough for some time yet and they do not ask for financial help. They say they have sold no guns, or ammunition. Perhaps an odd revolver may have been smuggled ashore from time to time. It would be a miracle if this had not been done. But that any regular system of peddling goes on they absolutely deny. By-and-bye it may happen that they are forced by lack of funds to sell either guns or ships, but when that time comes the business will be done in a wholesale way to a regular Chinese authority, not underhand to thieves and robbers.

The plan of these men and of their leaders is to stay where they are until it is possible for them to go back to Russia and then to go back to Russia as they left it, a disciplined military force, fully armed, but in any event they are determined to stick together to the last.

OUR ALLIES.

Political refugees are often tiresome guests but these are surely giving less trouble than ever political refugees gave before. They have no chance of fighting for the country near which they are staying for the time. They cannot gain glory like the Irish exiles who, fighting for France against England, kept Fontenoy from being a Waterloo; or like the Scottish exiles who, fighting for France, gave their name to an island in the Rhine. But for all that some of the romance that clings to the Jacobites might be allowed to colour our view of the imperial Russian Army in three small ships at Woosung. After all, they are in the last resort our visitors because they were pro-ally soldiers in the Great War. Had they been pro-Germans they might now be commissars holding high office in their native country.

They have been hurt by the references to gun-running in the press and at the absolute lack of interest felt in them by British people who nine years ago were talking confidently about the "Russian steam-roller." It is a strange thing to think of that within a few miles of the Bund there have lived for months scores of officers who have fought on the German front and yet have never been invited to pay a visit to Shanghai. Very likely at the moment these lines are being written they are standing to attention while their band plays the Russian National Anthem—the very last remnant of a great army.

THE ITALIAN OPERA

"Fedora"

Giordano's "Fedora" was produced by the Italian Grand Opera Co. on Saturday night. A Fedora of very great charm and responsiveness to the music was found in Signorina Ambroso, but though vocally effective she seemed hardly calculated to inspire violent passion in the love scene. In the pathetic final scene, however, she rose to the occasion and added imagination to genuinely beautiful singing.

Signor Chiaia gave an immensely popular performance, but he, too, represented Count Loris as a more staid individual than the characteristic tenor of Italian opera. The same may be said of the other principals and the performance as a whole lacked that fire that should warm Giordano's melodies into life. The refinement and sweet tone of the voices of the principals were an insufficient substitute for the necessary dramatic fervour.

The conductor, Signor Costagnino, kept his forces fairly well under control.

WHAT TO DO FOR RUSSIAN REFUGEES

League of Nations Representative Outlines Scheme of Repatriation and Emigration: An International Problem: Can Further Influx be Prevented?

Dr. James A. Greig, the delegate appointed by the League of Nations to study the problem of the Russian refugee in China and if possible devise means of dealing with it in a comprehensive and effective manner, on Monday addressed a meeting held at the headquarters of the King's Daughters' Society in North Soochow Road. The meeting was small in number but representative of those keenly and very practically interested in the problem, and Dr. Greig was given questions and suggestions which should be helpful. The magnitude and the intricacy of the problem were clearly revealed, and the impression was gained that nothing but close cooperation between China, the Powers and the Soviet Government will secure a reasonable solution.

Dr. Greig, having been introduced by Mr. S. W. Wolfe and by him assured of Shanghai's complete sympathy and support in his important mission, began with a little personal history by way of credentials, mentioning that his associations with Russia go back some 35 years, the period of his work as a Medical Missionary in Kirin; and he went on to speak of the manner of his selection by the League of Nations for his present task, which is "to find a final solution of the refugee problem in China."

RUSSIANS UNWILLING TO RETURN.

Discussing the actual position of affairs, Dr. Greig said it was impossible to obtain reliable statistics from a central source, the Chinese Government having no complete register and little coordination, but he had formed a general estimate that in Manchuria there are about 35,000 refugees and in North China at least 15,000. Not all of these people were living entirely on charity, but the majority of them have no permanent means of support. How many of them would be willing, if safe guarantees were secured, to return to their own country? He was sorry to say, according to present information, that only about two per cent. had signified their willingness to return to Russia. He had received assurances at Peking that the Diplomatic Body was in full sympathy with the League of Nations taking up the work and would give it all possible support.

The League wished it to be clearly understood that no coercion would be used in getting people back to Russia. The system adopted in other countries was this: first they asked the Government of the country in which the refugee was living to give him a free passage to the frontier; then they asked the Soviet Government to promise safety and proper treatment upon his return, and to give the agents of the League in Russia permission to investigate the condition of the returned refugees and power to communicate without let or hindrance with Dr. Nansen at Geneva. This was the system adopted in regard to repatriation from Constantinople, and it appeared that the promises of the Soviet Government had on the whole been kept; and no doubt a similar promise of amnesty and safety could be secured on behalf of Russians returning from China. The difficulty would be to persuade the Russians that they could rely upon such a promise.

TWO POSSIBLE SOLUTIONS.

As far as Dr. Greig saw at present, there were only two ways of dealing with the problem: (1) Repatriation with an absolutely sure guarantee from the Soviet Government, this to be secured by the League of Nations which would act as sponsor for the Soviet in carrying out its promises; (2) Emigration to countries where a place could be found for white labour. There seemed to be no hope for any big scheme for the absorption of a certain amount of Russian labour in China. Dr. Greig went on to say that in the course of two or three weeks he hoped to have his scheme in general outline, and it would be submitted to the Chinese Government and the Diplomatic Body before going on to Geneva.

A lengthy discussion ensued, in the course of which various aspects of the problem were raised.

Mr. Gilbert Pett expressed the opinion that, unless special measures were taken to the contrary, as soon as any scheme of emigration began on a large scale there would be an tremendous influx of Russians, from the north, all anxious to be sent to America and Europe. The flood-gates would be opened upon Shanghai, the port of embarkation.

The Chairman pointed out that such a scheme would apply to the whole country, and therefore there would be no need for refugees to come to Shanghai in order to participate, except to embark.

TO CONCENTRATE ON REPATRIATIIN

Mr. J. K. Brand suggested that Dr. Greig should first concentrate on repatriation to Russia. A great many would return if funds could be found. Would the League of Nations assist financially, since the task was beyond private charity?

Dr. Greig said one of the first things to be done would be to ask the Chinese Government if they would provide free passes for those willing to return to Siberia, and in this respect the League would try to bring judicious pressure on the Government and the local authorities. Then, having interviewed the Japanese Minister and the Director of the South Manchurian Railway, he felt justified in saying that assistance would be given in the matter of transport over the railway, if some scheme were arranged for sending people right through in batches of 100 or 200. It might be possible to obtain financial assistance from the League, but no provision had been made at present.

Asked if he had seen the Soviet representative in Peking, Dr. Greig said that direct negotiations between Geneva and Moscow had been considered advisable, with a view to obtaining instructions which would be forwarded to Peking in due course.

Asked by Mr. Dolgoroukoff how the refugees in Shanghai were to be kept alive until the scheme materialized, Dr. Greig replied that this was a local problem which could not very well be referred to the League.

THE MOVEMENT FROM THE NORTH.

Dr. Peter asked if Dr. Greig knew what barrier there was between Siberia and Manchuria, and whether there were oppressive forces at work driving the people this way, to which Dr. Greig replied that his impression was that no great number was filtering through now. People in the North were no longer assisting refugees by giving them their passage to Shanghai. In this connexion, he proposed to see Chang Tso-lin and induce him to use his power in preventing the further movement of Russians in this way.

At this point, on the chairman's suggestion, the meeting passed a resolution requesting Dr. Greig to urge Chang Tso-lin absolutely to stop the deportation of refugees from Manchuria to Shanghai.

Dr. Greig next mentioned that the Chinese Government had made representations to the Japanese Government not to allow Russians at present in Korea to enter Manchuria or China.

Some time was spent in discussing the question whether or not the Soviet Government could be relied upon to honour its word as to the safety of the returning refugees, Mr. Dolgoroukoff in particular expressing grave doubts in the matter, and Dr. Greig could but reply that the word of the Soviet, given to the League—(the only body in a position to negotiate with it)—must be accepted; and they had Dr. Nansen's word that, on the whole, that word had been reliable in respect of other refugees.

COMMERCE AND FINANCE

Money and Exchange

OFFICIAL RATES.

Shanghai, Jan. 18.

Bank's demand selling rate for £1 at 3/3⅜=Tls. 6.09 at 71.7=$8.49

Bank's demand selling rate for G.$100 at 69¾=Tls. 143.37 at 71.7=$199.96.

Mex. Dollars, market rate	71.95
Native Interest	02
Copper Cash	250,000
Bar Silver	33½
Bank rate of Discount	4%
Paris on London	Frs. 90.40
New York on London	G.$4.25

BANK'S OPENING SELLING RATES.

	Per Tael
LONDON—
Telegraphic Transfer	3/3¼
Demand	3/3⅜
NEW YORK—
Telegraphic Transfer	69½
Demand	69¾
PARIS—
Demand	1498
INDIA—
Demand	227¾
HONGKONG—
Demand	72½
JAPAN—
Demand	63¼
BATAVIA—
Demand	193
SINGAPORE—
Demand	72

BANK'S OPENING SELLING RATES.

LONDON—
Demand	3/4
4 m/s. Credits	3/5⅛
4 m/s. Docs.	3/5⅜
6 m/s. Credits	3/5⅝
6 m/s. Docs.	3/6¼
NEW YORK—
Demand	70½
4 m/s. Credits	73
4 m/s. Docs.	73½
PARIS—
4 m/s. Docs.	1575
Closing business done at
London T.T.	3/3⅜
New York T.T.	69¾

CUSTOMS EXCHANGE RATES FOR JANUARY.

Hk Tl. 5.44 @ 3/3⅝	£1
,, 1 @ 1370½	Frs. 15.27
,, 1.24 @ 72⅛	Gold $1
,, 1 @ 66⅜	Yen 1.68
,, 1 @ 230½	Rupees 2.57
,, 1 @ 1.50	Mex. $1.50
,, 1 @ 16.40	It. Lire 18.27

Marks and Roubles no quotation

Sino-Italian Bank Quotations

Selling Rates Jan. 18.

It. Lire 15.80	Tl. 1
Swiss Frs. 4.01	Tl. 1
It. Lire 10.00	Y. 1

Bank of France Rate

Paris, Jan. 17.

The Bank of France has raised its discount rate one half per cent. to 6 per cent. This follows an increase of ½ per cent. on January 10.—Reuter.

Week's Exchange Notes

Jan. 19.

At the close of business on the 17th instant the stock of silver in Shanghai was Tls. 25,263,000 and $32,850,000.

These figures include Tls. 10,710,000 and $19,060,000 in Chinese banks in which there were 918 bars.

BAR SILVER.

Arrivals were:—

4,226 bars from London
379 ,, ,, America

4,605 bars

Shipments were:—

785 bars to Hangchow
941 ,, ,, Nanking
136 ,, ,, Foochow

1,862 bars

SYCEE.

Arrivals were:—
Nil.

Shipments were:—

Tls. 200,000 to Nanking
200,000 ,, Hankow
200,000 ,, Tientsin
50,000 ,, Dairen

Tls. 650,000

DOLLARS.

Arrivals were:—

$1,050,000 from Chinkiang
880,000 ,, Hangchow
160,000 ,, Kashing
100,000 ,, Wuhu
90,000 ,, Soochow
80,000 ,, Changchow
50,000 ,, Wusih

$2,410,000

Shipments were:—

$600,000 to Tsingtao
200,000 ,, Dairen
100,000 ,, Kiukiang
130,000 ,, Chefoo
80,000 ,, Tungchow

$1,110,000

SILVER.

London silver on Thursday was 33½d. for ready and 32⅞d. for forward delivery as against 33⅛d. spot and 32⅝d. forward a week ago. India is still a buyer, China sold a little. America seems more inclined to sell this week, especially for forward delivery. Stocks of sycee in Shanghai have increased by Tls. 19 lakhs during the week and stocks of dollars 13 lakhs. Shipments of dollars out of the place have been considerably smaller during the past few days, but the bulk of the bar silver arriving is still finding its way to the Mints. Money is easy with the native banks and interest is as low as ¾ per cent. p.a. The price of silver in New York on Thursday was 63½, delivery San Francisco: buyers but no sellers. The New York/London cross rate is 424 9/16.

EXCHANGE.

Business has been fairly brisk and a fair amount of export paper has been making. The quoted rate on Friday last week was 3/3d. after various fluctuations. The rate is now 3/3¼d. at which level the market is very firm, with some banks selling as high as 3/3⅜d. for cash. G.$ T.T. is quoted 69½, but there are possibly sellers at T.T. 69¾. For bills, 4 m/s. L/C could be placed at 3/4⅛d. January, 3/3⅜d. February, 3/3½d. March, 3/3¼d. April/June and 4 m/s. L/C G.$71½ January, 71¼ February/June.

Sterling Slightly Improved

London, Jan. 16.

Sterling on New York rallied to 4.26¼ to-day, French francs were quoted at 91.05 and Belgian francs at 101, due to the contemplated financial reforms by the French Government.—Reuter.

Stabilizing Japanese Exchange

Tokio, Jan. 16.

With a view to stabilizing the exchange, the Government has decided to release specie reserves held abroad for the importation of absolute necessities.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

The Rise in Hongkong Ropes

Hongkong. Jan. 15.

The proposal to capitalize the reserve fund, to distribute three bonus shares for every two old shares and to issue one new share at par for every three old shares and bonus shares explains the recent sensational rise in the shares of the Hongkong Rope Manufacturing Company.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Green Island Cement

Hongkong, Jan. 17.

Shareholders of the Green Island Cement Co. Ld., have petitioned Messrs. Shewan, Tomes & Co., the general managers, to requisition an extraordinary meeting to increase the capital by $3,000,000 by the issue of new shares at par, but not to call up more than $1 per share.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

LONDON BULLION

Messrs. Samuel Montagu & Co.'s Report

Reporting on the London bullion market on December 5 Messrs. Samuel Montagu & Co. state:—

The Bank of England gold reserve against its note issue on November 28 was £125,943,270, as compared with £125,940,915 on the previous Wednesday.

The Indian and Continental demand this week has been moderate, and the greater part of the fair amount of gold on offer will probably be shipped to the United States.

Gold valued at $7,906,000 has been received in New York from London.

The followfng extract is from the "Times of India" under date of November 17 last:—

GOLD IN CURRENCY RESERVE.

Information is now available regarding the operation, which the Government of India contemplate in connexion with the gold held in the Currency Reserve. There is to be no shipment to London, but £2,000,000 worth of gold is to be sold for delivery in India against payment in sterling in London. While public opinion would have opposed the shipping of any portion of the gold out of India, the present proposition is not open to the same objection. The convertibility of the note issue is assured with 99 crores in silver coin and bullion and 22½ crores in gold out of a total note circulation of 181 crores, and from that point of view tthe present action of the Government is not open to criticism. The objects of the operation are stated to be the conversion of a small part of the metallic holding into securities which will bring in an interest return to the Government, at the same time taking advantage for this purpose of the existing premium on gold as measured in sterling. It has also the incidental advantage that the remittance to London will be effected at the prevailing favourable rates of exchange. As a business proposition the transaction is a sound one, and on grounds of economy alone, the arrangement should meet generally with approval. The convertibility of the note issue is already ensured by the unprecedentedly large silver and gold holding, and there will be a profit to the Government both from the interest on investment and from the premium on gold. The holding of Indian securities in the Currency Reserve, viz: over 57 crores, is already beyond the limit of safety, and any further investments such as those now contemplated should be in short-term British sterling securities."

The following figures show the Indian net trade in gold and silver (on private and Government account) for the first seven months of the present financial year:—

1923.	Gold net imports lakhs of rupees.	Silver net imports. lakhs of rupees.
March	616	128
April	696	92
May	303	150
June	205	175
July	243	140
August	113	182
September	232	99
Total	2,408	966

SILVER.

The continued firmness of the China exchange and bear covering have well maintained prices this week. A very heavy shipment, expected to be at least 3,000 bars, mostly for China, will leave by the steamer on Friday. The withdrawal of this large amount has put some strain on London stocks, and buyers have had to pay for the privilege of shipping by this, the last steamer from London that can forward its cargo in comfortable time for the Chinese New Year. It also happens to be the Bombay settlement steamer week though fortunately for China, the Indian inquiry has not been keen. The Continent and America have fed the market, and India has at times been a seller for forward delivery. The tendency of the market seems flattening.

Under date of November 16, friends of our in Bombay have favoured us with the following interesting details touching the recent speculative accumulations in that city:—

"This total record surplus was taken up by the principal bull (not with a view to corner but as delivered to him against options). He succeeded in selling it off promptly just after the finish of the settlement. The highest rate in the October settlement was Rs. 83. The bazaar dealers, who had been continually bearing since the announcement during May that the American Government had suspended purchasing silver under the Pittman Act, covered their sales for the November settlement taking advantage of the principal bull sales, fearing that China would buy, and now that the Indian season would commence the up-country demand for the metal would also increase. Some heavy losses have been made by the bazaar in these operations running over about six months."

SHANGHAI MARKET REPORT

Increased Optimism in Piece Goods Coupled with Small Orders to Manchester

Jan. 19.

The most prominent feature of the Shanghai markets this week has been the increased optimism in piece goods circles. Advances have again been recorded at the auctions, and the drop in the price of American cotton has brought out a small business with Manchester.

Chinese cotton remains steady, but is expected to follow the downward movement of American cotton. Yarn is strong but with little business passing.

Exports generally have been dull during the week.

PIECE GOODS.

On account of easier money supported by good clearances of cargo, the piece goods market is altogether brighter. In certain lines it has been possible to do business with Manchester, but the volume has been of small extent, being confined principally to White Shirtings and a few specialities. Greater confidence has been induced among merchants by the disappearance of the recent alarming rumours respecting the local political situation, and the business outlook seems better than for some time.

The auctions have reflected the improved tone of the market, and a slight increase in prices has again been registered. In certain lines increased quantities have recently been offered, but the shortage of stocks is now so prominent a factor that the market has readily absorbed in all supplies. Greys have been in good demand, Ningpo being strongly in the market. For the best qualities of White Shirtings the demand this week was not so strong as recently, and as Changsha seems to have fallen out of the market this branch of business found itself largely in the hands of speculators. Still, as the best qualities of White Shirtings are now at a comparatively high level of price, it is only natural to expect fluctuations. For lower qualities the demand continues strong. This week's auctions were the second last to take place prior to China New Year, but the position revealed was satisfactory. While in some cases deliveries have fallen off, those to Korea have been large, and the situation seems to contain sufficient strength to preclude any possibility of a drop in tael values.

In woollen goods the situation is unchanged from last week Business is naturally quiet owing to the near approach of China New Year, and only small speculative sales have taken place. The position of merchants holding stocks is satisfactory, as indications from Home are that buyers will have to pay higher prices than hitherto for their autumn requirements.

COTTON AND YARN.

China Cotton—While the market for China cotton has remained unchanged throughout the week, the feeling is that it will follow the American staple in its downward tendency. This belief is emphasized by the fact of reduced consumption following the partial closing of many mills, and the uncertainty as to when a number of Chinese establishments will decide to re-open following the holiday recess. Recent prices quoted on the Chinese Cotton Goods Exchange are as follows:—Thursday afternoon closing—January 46.95; February 47.10; March 47.15; April 47.15; May 47.10; June 47.05. Yesterday morning's opening — January 46.75; February 46.85; March 46.90; April 46.85; May 46.85; June 46.65. Spot quotations are as follows:—Tungchow 47.50; Shanghai 45; Shensi 46; Hankow 43.

Yarn—While the yarn market has been steady during the week only a small amount of fresh business has been booked with the mills. The statistical position of yarn is to-day exceedingly strong, as all the mills are carrying exceedingly small stocks, and Indian yarn is many taels per bale higher than the Shanghai market can afford to pay. The latest Chinese Cotton Goods Exchange prices are as follows:—Thursday afternoon's closing—January 177.10; February 179.60; March 180.90; April 180.80; May 180.90; June 180.60. Yesterday morning's closing — January 176.60; February 179.10; March 180.20; April 180.40; May 180.40; June 180.30.

SILK.

After the activity of the last week the silk market has been quiet during the last few days. The higher prices asked by holders have driven buyers out of the market, but a fair demand is still prevailing. The very violent fluctuations of the franc rate, which have been particularly pronounced during the last few days, have made business with Lyons very difficult.

Tussah Native Extra and 1 Tls. 480/470.

PRODUCE.

There is nothing of interest to report in produce lines.

Business in China remains in a more or less inactive state. Prices, both here and in the Home market, in general continue steady with a firm undertone.

Negotiations with Europe are hindered by the Continental exchange rates

New Land Co. in Hongkong

Hongkong, Jan. 16.

A new company, the Hongkong & Territorial Estates, Ld., of which Messrs. Shewan, Tomes & Company are the General Managers, has been registered with a capital of $5,000,000.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Hongkong & Whampoa Dock's New Contract

Hongkong, Jan. 12.

The China Sugar Refining Company has awarded a contract to the Hongkong and Whampoa Dock Company for the construction of six steel-lighters and one steamlaunch.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

National Smelting Co. Issue a Failure

London, Jan. 11.

It is stated on the Stock Exchange that the underwriters of the National Smelting Company issue of £1,500,000 will have to take up 80 per cent. of the issue.—Reuter.

Cotton Control Scheme

London, Jan. 15.

A joint committee of Lancashire employers and employees of the cotton industry have agreed on a scheme of control in the section engaged in American cotton. Details will be published in a few days.—Reuter.

CORRESPONDENCE

NEW ROAD FREE OF COST.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—Whereas the trams from the Western District to Hongkew now travel by a very devious route: and

Whereas (quite apart from the present tramrail relaying) Nanking Road is already severely overtaxed as regards traffic, not to mention future increase: and

Whereas there is a large amount of traffic between Hongkew and the Western district, which will also tend to increase:

I venture to suggest that a new main trunk road be cut through from the "New World" (junction of Thibet and Nanking Roads) to the south end of the North Szechuan Road bridge over the Soochow Creek, and that this main road be continued by widening the South Soochow Road to the Garden Bridge, where there should be a proper quadrant approach. The Hongkew traffic would then pass along this new road (the trams passing over the North Szechuan Road bridge), and thus very materially relieving Nanking Road.

I would suggest that the new road be at least 100 feet wide: that the tramlines be about 10 feet from the curb, slow traffic being restricted to this 10 feet space.

This road can be built without any cost to the ratepayers by employing the following means. Instead of buying merely a 100 feet strip, a width of at least 300 feet should be bought—at the assessment rates plus 10 per cent. for compulsion. The sites on both sides of this fine road should remain the property of the Council, and be let on building lease. The rentals will eventually much more than cover the interest on the cost of the road. Even at high rentals the sites are certain to be all taken up, although possibly in their entirety not for 10 years so so.

The Council should fully exercise landowners' rights as regards description of building, none of the shoddy Nanking Road shacks being allowed. A panel of architects should approve the elevations, securing not only architectural excellence in the individual buildings, but harmony in the aggregate effect.

There should be a tunnel under the road to contain all pipes, cables, etc.—gas, water, electricity, steam, compressed air, etc., etc. It should be sufficiently large to allow of workmen creeping along to do any tinkering required, so that the road or pavements would never be disturbed.

I am, etc.,
ENGINEER.

Shanghai, Jan. 12, 1924.

CHINKIANG INDUSTRIAL ORPHANAGE.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—We gratefully acknowledge an anonymous gift of $10 Mex. from a friend in South China, sent to the Secretary of the Board of Trustees. This was in response to the statement of the urgent need which appeared in this paper under date of November 9, 1923.

The many friends of the orphanage will be pleased to learn that the shortage of $250 Mex. per month has been fully made up to date, and also the greater part of the deficit of $1,000 Mex. at the end of last August, so that at present there is only $400 to be made up. It is our fervent hope and prayer that all outstanding accounts may be cleared up at the end of the Chinese year, which comes this year on February 5.

With grateful thanks.

We are, etc.,
G. C. MARIOTT,
Secretary.
J. W. BOYER,
Superintendent.

Chinkiang, Ku., Jan. 12, 1924.

THE EXTREME PENALTY.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—Will you kindly bring to the notice of foreigners through the medium of your coloumns that four Russians are up for trial by the Chinese authorities for a murder recently committed on Chinese territory, this being, I think, the first case to be dealt with by the Chinese Court under the manifesto issued not long ago.

The course of justice should be watched keenly by all foreigners. Friends of the accused assure me that the real culprit is still at large. If such is the case the four men up for trial cannot suffer the extreme penalty of the law.

I am given to understand that there will be Russian and English interpreters at the court and that the accused will also have the support of Russian Counsel.

This is an appeal to the public to take an interest in this vital case and to be satisfied that justice is done.

I am, etc.,
SYMPATHIZER.

Shanghai, Jan. 14, 1924.

MME. DIETERICHS' ORPHANS

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

Sir,—In your issue of to-day a correspondent mentions the case of three of Madame Dieterichs' orphans who wish to join a relative in Russia but cannot do so owing to lack of funds.

It seems to me that this is a case to which some of the money raised by the recent refugee lotteries might well be devoted.

It would be interesting to know whether any of the money from this source has yet been applied to the purpose in view and I presume the Committee will shortly issue a statement showing how it has been allocated.

I am, etc.,
L. OTTERY

Shanghai, Jan. 14, 1924.

THE REFUGEES.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—In the wunters of 1918, 1919 and 1920 the large terminal railway station in Vladivostok was crowded to overflowing with refugees who slept on the floor at night. The same condition prevailed at the other important stations along the line of the Trans-Siberian. I had supposed that under Soviet authority the great migration eastward would cease, but an eye-witness assures me that the station at Irkutsk in the early part of this winter presented a repetition of the same scene. During the five years not only thousands but millions of destitute Slavs have been making the attempt to leave Russia. Where have they gone? There can be no doubt that a large percentage have reached that far country where all suffering ends.

The eye-witness at Irkutsk tells me that in the overflow outside the Irkutsk station, seeking shelter from the cold in an angle of the wall, he found a white-haired old man with three barefoot and half-clad daughters. The man was known to have been formerly an owner of several mines of which he had been relieved by the Soviet. In the attempt to get to China he had completely exhausted his funds. The eye-witness from his scanty means helped the family to a meal but where are they now? And even had they reached the promised Land of China what welcome would our Relief Committees have offered? The generous chance to return again to Russia, the offer to step back into the lion's den. After some 5,000 to 1,500,000 years of human development and some 20,000 years of civilization of a sort this is the degree of intelligence which mankind has achieved and the glory of charity which religion has instilled. Ye gods!

I am etc.,
AMERICUS.

Shanghai, Jan. 17, 1924.

P.S. Remember that there are Russian ships and others obtainable which can carry these refugees to Jugo-Slavia and to other countries bordering Russia. Remember also that Argentina and other countries welcome settlers. And another thing—if the League of Nations should arrange to pay China for land in the Chinese Eastern Railway zone for Russian farm settlements of these royalists, would it not be better than to risk the zone [illegible] the hands of Bolshevists?

THE CHINA PONY ISSUE.

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—I shall deem it a great favour if you will publish the following suggestions I have to make with regard to the elimination of half-bred ponies from racing and the abolition of private sales of griffins:—

The following is my suggestion towards the subject:—

The "Pony Inspection Committee" to be reformed and to be elected by the owners. The decision of the Committee to decide a China pony or halfbreds shall in all cases be final.

All ponies, started or not yet, have to be put up to the Pony Inspection Committee for inspection, then according to breeding to classify all ponies into two groups, China pony and halfbreds.

If the halfbreds exist in such a number that a race can be formed, the clubs shall provide special races for that class of animals only, just as we had Waler races at Kiangwan before.

There will be no rejection for halfbreds to race in future and when we see more halfbreds being imported than China ponies, then we can reduce the races provided for China ponies, and vice versa.

The height of a pony eligible for race is not of much importance for we know there are China ponies which stand over 14 while some Galloways are under 14 hands, the age, of course, is less important.

With reference to the public auction, I think the original idea was because we do not want the high cost of griffins so incurred without necessity, to prevent the dealers to stick the owners with worthless animals for high price and the owners to buy the griffins by themselves in Mongolia.

THE PRESENT HIGH PRICES.

What is the outcome of the present auction?

Although the price for griffins is increasing yearly, yet we never heard that a griffin was sold over Tls. 4,000 before, as it has been in the present auction. Besides one can fix up a sale before an auction takes place privately, even a wealthy man cannot get a griffin which pleases him, he can pay but he cannot buy something which has been already sold: the auction is more or less a matter of form in such cases.

According to the new By-laws a pony which is under age cannot be measured but can be sold at auction, supposing one bought it and after another year when the pony is aged but the measuring rod registers over 14 hands, he is, not eligible for race. Now what shall the owner do with him?

HOW TO MEET IT.

For the benefit of all members, rich or poor, to prevent the high cost of ponies, etc., I suggest the following:—

All griffins to be galloped and timed by a Committee elected by the owners, and to classify them into say 3 classes. Of course, I do not mean to gallop the griffins for one quarter of mile only, I think at least to take the time of 3/4 mile and a mile is still better, within certain time after the arrival of the griffins.

To provide say three classes of subscription griffins and the subscription fee say run from Tls. 1,000, Tls. 500, and Tls 200, for Class A. B. and C., respectively. Let all members subscribe to any class they prefer and to dispose of them by lotteries amongst the subscribers accordingly. To provide races for each class respectively but allow a lower class griffins to be entered in a higher class and not vice versa in the griffins races and to be handicapped afterwards, according to the stand of the ponies, after a certain period.

We will have in each class ponies which can do something for the money paid for then and have no bother with the dealers and to put the price of the griffins to a limit and every member will enjoy the privileges accordingly and equally.

In conclusion I hope that the above suggestions will be taken into consideration by members of the local turf.

I am, etc.,
WILLIAM HU.

Shanghai, Jan. 16, 1924.

"OUR OSTRICHES."

To the Editor of the
"NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—The above has no reference to the play by Dr. Marie Stopes, but I would suggest it as a suitable alternative title to the members of our local Moral Welfare League.

I am, etc.,
P. O. Q.

Shanghai, Jan. 17, 1924.

THE MORAL WELFARE LEAGUE

To the Editor of the
"NORTH CHINA DAILY NEWS."

SIR,—Your account of yesterday's meeting is noticeably incomplete in regard to the criticisms, and I fancy the members of the League would have been pleased had your two morning contemporaries dismissed us critics equally abruptly. As it was the Chairman, the Rev. C.M. Drury, with the able help of Mr. I. Mason, did their best, very effectively, to squash us.

They hate criticism. I do not blame them. So do I.

Most unpractised (seldom speakers (and some practised ones also) are apt from their vanity to magnify the importance of their oratorical inflictions and perhaps I am no exception; but vanity apart, I submit that the subject is of sufficient general interest to warrant on your part a treatment of the critics at least as generous as that accorded the criticized.

Mr. Nobleson suggested that the League ought to induce ladies to dress in the evenings in such a way as to lessen the chance of pneumonia. Those were not his exact words, but there in a bare possibility that some of your readers might, if you gave them the chance, like to discuss the ethics of high and low necks!

Take it by and large it was an amusing meeting. When Mr. Stanley Calder said the League should snatch, like brands from the burning, those Christians who as regular clients help to maintain this trade, Mr. Drury said that the gentlemen referred to were not Christians. Then what were they doing in Church, asks Mr. Calder, he, being a trusty Special and seeing lot, having spotted some of the concerned coming out—or going in, I forget which. In passing, this raises an interesting point. Has Mr Drury a mandate to deprive an evil-door of his status as a Christian? Or is it that any Christian that is found with the goods on him automatically ceases to be a Christian? A few lines from Mr. Drury throwing further light on this subject would be of great interest.

I wonder if Mr. Drury would mind my suggesting to him that he ought to keep his seat when not actually speaking? It is disconcerting—at least I found it so—to make a speech to a gentleman who remains perpendicular, as though he were waiting for you to stop.

It is possible judging from the notice calling the meeting that I was an intruder, as the notice distinctly said that the meeting was open to symapthizers. Very few are in symapthy with all the aims of the League. Education in sex matters, improvement in the economic position of women, and an honest endeavour to be temperate in all things will meet the approval and support of all decent men, but any attempt to force them to be good as though they were schoolboys will only meet with bitter opposition.

I called the League a set of hopeless idealists and they are if they think they can abolish or even suppress a state of affairs which flourished before the dawn of history and will continue as long as humanity endures.

I am, etc.,
ARTHUR AKEHURST.

Shanghai, Jan. 17, 1924.

SEVERAL Governmental changes, all of them of a temporary nature, in the heads of Government departments are likely to take place in the near future, it is announced at Hongkong. One has already been effected. The Hon. Mr. E. R. Hallifax, the Secretary for Chinese Affairs, sailed for Home last Tuesday and his place has been taken by Mr. A. E. Wood. The Attorney General (the Hon. Mr. J. H. Kemp, K.C.) and the Colonial Treasurer (the Hon. Mr. C. McI. Messer) are also due for leave shortly, but so far their positions have not been filled, though it is expected that Mr. D. W. Tratman, who has temporarily filled the office before, will become acting Colonial Treasurer. Mr. Fletcher himself is also due for leave this year. The Chief Justice, Sir William Rees Davis, also leaves for Home this year, on retirement and, it is understood, the Bishop of Victoria is also proceeding to England shortly.

OFFICIAL NOTICE

William Dalgliesh Little DECEASED.

PURSUANT to an Order of the Chambery Division of the High Court of Justice dated the 25th day of October, 1923, and made in an action in the Matter of the Estate of WILLIAM DALGLIESH LITTLE, Deceased, Little v. Dalgliesh and others 1922 L. No. 2974, the Creditors of William Dalgliesh Little late of 43 St. James' Place, St. James' Street, in the County of London, England, and of Shanghai in China who died on the 22nd day of March, 1920, are on or before the 28th day of March, 1924, to send by post prepaid to Cecil Brodrick of Ormond House, 63 Queen Victoria Street, in the City of London, England, their full Christian and surnames, addresses and descriptions, the full particulars of their claims, a statement of their accounts and the nature of the securities (if any) held by them or in default thereof they will be peremptorily excluded from the benefit of the said Order unless the Court or Judge on application otherwise orders. Every claimant holding any security is to produce the same before Master Keen at the Chambers of the Judge, Room No. 237, Royal Courts of Justice, Strand, London, England, on Friday, the 4th day of April, 1924, at 2.15 o'clock in the afternoon being the time appointed for adjudicating upon the claims.

A claimant not residing in England or Wales must send with particulars of his claim, the name and address of a person in England or Wales to whom notices to the claimant can be sent.

Dated this 10th day of December, 1923.

BELL, BRODRICK & GRAY,
63 Queen Victoria Street,
London, E.C.4, ENGLAND
Solicitors for the Plaintiff.

Jan./Mar.	...	...	49½ cents
Apr./June	...	...	50½ ,,
Market steady.

DEBENTURES.

LOANS	Term in years	Last business recorded		Loan Amt.		Int %	Payable
S'hai Municipal Council	1903	6 to 20	26-9-22	T98½	b	T490,500	6	June-Dec.
	1904	do.	11-1-23	T98½	c	314,500	6	do.
	1905	do.	12-5-22	T95½	d	320,000	6	do.
	1907	do.	24-4-22	T94		,,	6	do.
	1908	do.	6-12-22	T100		650,000	6	do.
	1909	do.	15-3-23	T99		300,000	6	do.
	1910	do.	11-5-23	T99		313,800	6	do.
	1911	10 to 30	8-1-23	T95		350,000	6	do.
	1912	do.	3-1-24	T99		340,000	6	do.
	1913	do.	3-3-23	T100		755,300	6	do.
	,,	10 to 50	8-5-22	T78		500,000	5½	do.
	1914	10 to 30	8-1-23	T91		900,000	5½	do.
	1915	do.	22-9-23	T91		800,000	5½	do.
	1916	do.	4-12-23	T99½		1,400,000	6	do.
	1918	10	18-10-23	T103		507,300	7	do.
	1919	10	4-12-23	T104		1,793,300	7	do.
	1920	10	17-11-23	T105½		2,240,000	7	do.
	,,	10 to 30	3-10-23	£105½		£750,000	6	do.
	1921	do.	9-9-23	$112		$1,000,000	8	do.
	1921	do.	15-1-24	T113		T5,096,400	8	do.
	1922	do.	9-1-24	T105½		T8,000,000	7	do.
	1923	do.	15-1-24	T99		T6,000,000	6	do.
French Municipal Council	1911	do.	8-10-23	T96		400,000	6	May-Nov.
	1914	do.	12-2-23	T88		500,000	5½	June-Dec.
	1915	do.				350,000	5½	do.
	1921	do.	20-11-23	T108½		2,000,000	8	do.
	1923	do.	17-12-23	T95	e	T800,000	6	May-Nov.
S'hai Waterworks Co., Ltd.	1921	10 to 30	2-10-23	T112		2,000,000	8	June-Dec.
	1922	do.	6-6-22	T108		T500,000	8	do.
	1922	do.	2-10-23	T105		T1,000,000	7	do.
S'hai Gas Co., Ltd.	1909	do.	29-11-23	T94	e	800,000	6	do.
S'hai Municipal Council	1905	5 to 20	31-8-22	T96½		T250,000	6	June-Dec.
	1909	do.	27-3-23	T98		750,000	6	do.
	1911	do.	26-9-22	T92		250,000	6	Mar.-Sept.
	,,	do.	27-3-23	T98		250,000	6	May-Nov.
	,,	do.				250,000	6	Jan-July
Shanghai Land Investment Co., Ltd.	1912	do.	3-4-23	T98		250,000	6	June-Dec.
	1913	do.	3-4-23	T98		250,000	6	May-Nov.
	,,	do.				250,000	6	April-Oct.
	1914	do.	22-3-23	T98		250,000	6	June-Dec.
	1916	5 to 25	21-8-22	T90	f	500,000	5½	do.
	1922	do.	12-2-23	T98		750,000	6	Mar.-Sept.
	1922	do.	10-1-24	T98		500,000	6	May-Nov.
Shanghai Club	1907	20				450,000	6	do.
Country Club	1901	Perpetual				130,000	6	June-Dec.
Lane, Crawford & Co., Ltd.	1914	5 to 20				130,000	6	May-Nov.
	1915	do.				110,000	6	Mar.-Sept.
Anglo-French Land Invest. Co., Ltd.	1906	do.				250,000	6	June-Dec.
	1911	do.	7-6-23	T98		300,000	6	do.
S'hai Hotels, Ltd.	1916	30	6-1-23	T88		865,000	6	do.
S'hai Mutual Tel. Co., Ltd.	1923	10 to 20	27-2-23	T95½	h	270,000	6	do.
S'hai Race Club	1923	25	15-1-24	T100		1,200,000	6½	Mar.-Sept.
Culty Dairy Co., Ltd.	1915	10				50,000	7	Feb.-Aug.
Hall & Holtz Ltd.	1914	5 to 20	14-10-22	$92	i	230,000	7	Jan.-July
Asia Realty Co., Inc.	1922	5 to 20	..	..		T500,000	7	Jan.-July

*Plus interest accrued since last half-yearly payment. †See also under section headed "Companies' Notices, etc."

a—Now Issuing; Redeemed or Unissued:—b—Tls.65,100; c—Tls.51,100; d—Tls.34,100; e—Tls.68,500; f—Tls.262,400; g—Tls.189,800; h—Tls.12,300; i—$18,900.

RUBBER OUTPUT STATISTICS.

Company	Authorized Capital	Financial yr. closes end of	Output last 2 fin. year: Year before	Output last 2 fin. year: Last year	Estimated output present fin. year	All in cost per lb.	Output from end last fin. year to 30-9-23	1923: Oct.	1923: Nov.	1923: Dec.	Total output this fin. yr. to date
			lb.	lb.	lb.	d.	lb.	lb.	lb.	lb.	lb.
Alma	Tls. 630,000	Sept.	292,500	259,100	246,648	8.87d.	..	22,000	21,000	25,000	68,000
Amberst (New)	,, 500,000	Oct.	72,382	81,440	80,500	*4.34d.			9,784	9,236	19,020
Anglo-Dutch	£200,000	Dec.	760,000	650,000	600,000	0/6.92d.	364,700	54,500	55,900	60,000	535,100
Anglo-Java	£250,000	Dec.	1,511,575	1,524,711	1,550,000	6.95d.	1,116,100	168,600	189,000	183,000	183,000
Ayer Tawah	Tls. 300,000	Sept.	369,447	58,042	360,000	†0.24.41
Batu Anam	,, 400,000	Dec.	221,030	258,510	185,793	0/7.34d.	142,092	..	12,450	8,200	162,742
Bukit Toh Alang	,, 500,000	Mar.	309,254	305,845	345,000	7.54d.	139,189	30,893	26,000	26,800	222,682
Bute	,, 300,000	Dec.	253,300	230,067	159,516	10.11d.	121,250	17,700	16,600	18,800	174,350
Chemor United	,, 360,000	Dec.	271,636	340,794	240,192	0/7.15d.	197,558	..	26,044	25,800	246,412
Chempedak	£35,000	Oct.	145,760	162,500	..	10.15d.	..	..	14,000	16,700	30,700
Cheng	Tls. 675,000	June	151,923	145,338	..	11.09d.	52,730	18,410	15,574	15,700	102,414
Consolidated (1914)	,, 375,000	Dec.	591,033	669,899	574,660	0/6.58d.	456,199	62,339	56,348	58,552	633,638
Dominion	,, 350,000	Dec.	203,042	271,150	306,867	11.04d.	241,506	28,111	25,596	27,928	323,140
Gula-Kalumpong	,, £500,000	Dec.	1,023,000	1,113,000	1,215,000	1/0 1/16d.	755,000	98,000	..	85,000	938,000
Java Consolidated	£85,000	Dec.	739,726	875,800	..	7.08d.	411,100	67,300	70,000	72,000	620,400
Kapayang	,, 150,000	Dec.	176,890	189,239	..	†26.90	116,653	11,782	11,648	12,597	146,710
Karan	,, 250,000	Mar.	114,879	104,783	84,000	8½d.	41,042	6,623	5,574	6,858	60,097
Kota Bahroe (1921)	,, 390,000	June	138,330	339,970	..	..	78,957	24,885	27,145	29,951	160,918
Kroewoek	£70,000	Dec.	493,730	449,000	520,000	0/7.24d.	366,800	61,000	62,000	59,000	549,800
Langkat	Gs. 2,500,000	Oct.	842,589	943,000	975,000	Gld8.0.28	..	..	..	86,800	92,500
Padang	Tls. 500,000	April	209,711	220,232	..	10½d.	66,300	17,200	17,000	20,000	120,500
Pengkalan (1921)	,, 150,000	Mar.	172,022	135,253	176,088	†40.19	..	..	..	..	..
Permata	,, 250,000	Oct.	98,303	87,290	..	0/8½d.	..	..	9,012	8,573	17,585
Repah	,, 275,000	Dec.	27,000	68,584	240,000	1/3½	153,578	23,886	19,521	20,200	217,185
Samegaga	,, 600,000	Sept.	361,816	250,813	..	..	..	..	..	..	..
See Kee (1918)	,, 100,000	June	179,065	142,000	115,183	11.37d.	97,613	..	10,896	12,000	120,509
Semambu	,, 300,000	Dec.	176,132	161,105	158,264	0/9.37d.	119,529	..	15,267	10,800	245,596
Senawang (1921)	,, 375,000	Jan.	106,500	279,500	..	*17.35d.	180,800	28,100	23,400	21,700	254,000
Shanghai Kedah	,, 400,000	Sept.	313,411	216,542	..	8.12d.	..	22,827	21,413	23,680	67,825
S'hai-Klebang	,, 445,000	Dec.	114,758	125,396	..	0/9.35d.	81,115	8,000	8,400	8,569	109,615
S'hai-Malay	,, 600,000	Dec.	413,635	373,011	392,000	..	223,731	23,850	20,336	21,439	289,356
S'hai Pahang	,, 200,000	June	209,881	188,016	..	9½d.	52,721	20,450	15,618	12,201	100,973
S'hai Seremban	,, 325,000	Dec.	176,588	174,213	..	0/8.87d.	103,486	13,998	15,650	15,900	147,034
S'hai-Sumatra	,, 600,000	Oct.	661,339	679,710	650,000	Gld8.0.38	..	..	50,239	61,102	111,341
Sua-Manggis	,, 220,000	Dec.	184,000	144,880	..	..	..	14,260	13,500	..	27,760
Sungala	,, 100,000	Mar.	59,279	165,757	..	†7.20	6,126	..	..	..	6,126
Sungei Duri	£40,000	June	208,073	206,563	220,000	11.61d.	61,560	23,302	18,774	19,773	126,409
Taiping (1913)	Tls. 200,000	Dec.	705,550	107,011	99,000	*†30	79,652	8,065	7,573	..	95,290
Tanah Merah	,, 750,000	Mar.	415,000	396,000	..	7.92d.	162,200	27,500	23,400	21,800	234,900
Tebong	,, 750,000	Jan.	534,590	639,838	717,725	0/7.66d.	450,500	66,500	67,000	72,000	656,000
Ziangbe	£150,000	Dec.	616,432	514,566	600,000	7.24d.	382,500	45,800	49,100	46,200	523,600

*Excluding Depreciation and Shanghai Expenses. † Straits 8 cents.

S'hai Kedah Plantations, Ltd.	T	1.10	1.05		34)	400,000		T1			Sept.	T0.05, 1919	2-5-19
S'hai Klebang Rubber Estates, Ltd.	T	0.60	0.50		14)	315,000		T1			Dec.	Ord. T0.06 for 9 months ended 31/12/20	2-5-21
S'hai Malay Rubber Estates, Ltd. ord.	T	4½			22)	30,000		T10	a	T7,112	Dec.	Pref. T0.40, for 6 months ended 31/12/23	31-10-23
,, 8% cum. part. pref.	T	9	8			30,000		T10	a	T19,124
S'hai Pahang Rubber Estates, Ld.	T	1				300,000
S'hai Seremban Rubber Estates, Ltd.	T	0.80	0.70			325,000		T1		(Loss) T1,213	Sept.	Final T0.05 (incr. T0.10, 1916-17)	12-10-17
S'hai-Sumatra Tobacco Co., Ltd	T	90			7)	30,000		T10	a	(Loss) T247	Dec.	T0.04 for 10 months, ended 31/12/22	31-3-17
Sua Manggis Rubber Co., Ld.	T	3½			30)	56,000		T5	a	(Loss) 230,791	Oct.	T2, 1918-19	1-4-20
Sungala Rubber Estate, Ld.	T	1½			15)	100,000		T1	c	T312,270	Dec.	T0.25, 1919	20-4-20
Sungei Duri Rubber Estate, Ld.	T	8½	7½			40,000	£1 at T8.50		a	T0,055
Taiping Rubber Estates (1913), Ld.	T	0.70				200,000		T1	c	T25,000	Mar.	T0.10, 1916-17	12-7-17
Tanah Merah Estates (1916), Ld.	T	0.75			32)	750,000		T1	a	T4,625
Tebong Rubber Estate, Ld.	T	1.32½			£54)	750,000		T1	a	T10,000	June	T0.58, 1922-23	12-10-23
Ziangbe Rubber Co., Ld.	T	3½	3½		12)	300,000		10s.	a	T22,766	Dec.	T0.08, 1919	20-5-20
									a	(Loss) T3,801	Mar.	Interim T0.05, 1916-17 (Final, Nil)	7-12-17
COTTONS, ETC.									c	T31,851
Ewo Cotton Mills, Ld. ord.	T	12.35	12.35	12½	43)	1,000,000		T5	a	T5,737	Jan.	....††	....
,, 8% cum. pref.	T	113	113½		43)	10,000		T100	a	(Loss)T20,482
Laou Kung Mow C. S. & W. Co., Ld.	T	10				20,000		T10	a	T38,757	Dec.	T0.50, 1919	28-4-20
Oriental C. S. & W. Co., Ld. ord.	T	5	4½		60)	500,000		T5	c	T5,239
pref.	T				3)	5,000		T100	a	T10,856	Dec.	Ord. T1.50, 1922	16-2-23
Shanghai Cotton Mfg. Co., Ld. (Shanghai Boshoku K.K.)	T	65 old 38 new	63 38					T50	b	T1,400,000		Pref. T3, 1922	16-2-23
INDUSTRIAL.									c	T2,361,356
British-American Tobacco Co., Ld. ord.	$			£5½	66)	13,000,000		£1	a	T5,134	Dec.	Final T2, (mkg. T4, 1921)	8-3-22
,, 5% cum. pref.						4,500,000		£1	b	T120,000
China Im. & Ex. Lumber Co., Ld.	T	350				5,000		T100	c	T97,612
China Sugar Refining Co., Ld.	H $	256½	255			20,000		H$100	a	(Loss) T31,043	Dec.	Final T0.50 (mkg. T1.50, 1921)	25-3-22
Green Island Cement Co., Ld.	H $	38	37½			400,000		H$37.50	b	T200,000
Maatschappij, &c., In Langkat	T	13½	(comb. T34)	13½ (comb. T34)		200,000		Gs.10	c	T2,050,000	June	T3.50 1922-23††	24-8-23
Shanghai Loan & Investment Co., Ld.	T	5.70	(comb. T34)	(comb. T36)		250,000		T5	a	T50,375
S'hai Exploration & Development Co., Ld.	T	14½		14.50		250,000		T5	c	T1,270,000
Major Brothers, Ld.	T	5			10)	6,000		T10	a	(Loss) T13,341	Dec.	....	....
John Richards & Co., Ld.	T	10			11)	25,000		T10	a	T9,016	Dec.	....	....
Shanghai Gas Co., Ld.	T	45	45		‡)	24,000		T50	c	T70,000		10%, 1921	24-6-22
Shanghai Waterworks Co., Ld.	T	140			‡9)	50,000		$20	a	T3,136	Dec.	T3.50, 1922	13-4-23
STORES.									c	T30,000
Hall & Holtz, Ld.	$	6.90	6.90		$16)	28,000		$20	a	T23,791
J. Llewellyn & Co., Ld.	$	30				1,200		$50	b	T50,000
S. Moutrie & Co., Ld.	$	50			17)	10,000		$50	c	T666,891
Weeks & Co., Ld.	$	11		11	$50)	30,000		$10	a	T29,595	Dec.	(Final 1923, 20s. at Exchg., 3/2½	6-4-23
									b	T75,000		(Interim 1923, 10s. at Exchg., 3/0½	31-7-23
Lane, Crawford & Co., Ld.	$	102	103½		‡)	2,500	$100		c	T1,680,295
MISCELLANEOUS.
Culty Dairy Co., Ld.	T	13				10,000		T10	a	Loss T20,956	Oct.	T0.60, 1921-22	30-12-22
S'hai Electric Construction Co., Ld., "B" London	T	170	165						c	T119,93
	£1		£2:11:9	£2:14:3		40,000	£10		a	£17,022	Dec.	Final 16s. (mkg. 40s., 1922, less I/T at 5s. 3d. in £) Coupon 22	1-6-23
S'hai Horse Bazaar & Motor Co., Ld.	T	50				5,400	T50		c	£114. 15		1st Int. 12/-, less I/T at 4/7½d. in £ Coupon No. 23
Shanghai Mercury, Ld.	T	25				3,000	T50		a	T18,518	Dec.	T5, 1922	1-10-23
Shanghai Mutual Telephone Co. Ld.	T	73	73½	74	$63)	40,000	T50		a	T215,257			20-4-23
											Apr.	T1.50, 1913-14	31-3-15
Oriental Press (L'Imprimerie Francaise)	$	100				940	$100		a	T10,285	Mar.	T4.50, 1922-23	31-5-23
									b	T70,000
									c	T929,014
									a	$109,51	Mar.	$10, 1922-23	5-7-23
									b	$4,000
									c	$21,101

For all Dollar shares quoted on the Shanghai Stock Exchange the Exchange rate is fixed at 73.

REFERENCES.

a Carried forward at last Ann. Genl. Meeting.
b Dividend Equalization Reserve.
c General and Other Reserves.
d Uncalled liability £6 per sh.
e ,, ,, £10 ,,
f ,, ,, H$150 ,,
g ,, ,, H$200 ,,
h ,, ,, H$ 80 ,,
i Working Account 1922
w Working Account 1921
x Working Account 1920
y Working Account 1919
z Working Account 1919 and former years.
† Registered; or Bearer (idem. "B").
†† See also overleaf under "Companies' Notices, etc."
 Issued Capital: 7% Cum. Pref. 21,461 shares; Ordinary, 16,270 shares.

$ Debentures Issues also.
§ Subject to Bonus of 20% on Contributory Marine Premium.
§§ Subject to Estate Managers' Commissions.
* Subject to E. P. D. and Corpn. Tax.
1—14,000 sh' unis'd.
2—70,411 ,,
3— 5,000 ,,
4— 4,000 ,,
5—19,182 ,,
7—10,761
8—10,000
9—16,470 sh. unis'd.
10—500 ,,
11—15,200 ,,
12—50,000 ,,
13—1,38[illegible] ,,
14—3,000 ,,
15—1,65[illegible] ,,
17—3,852 ,,
18—5,580 ,,
19—184,968 ,,
20—15,000 ,,
22—10,000 ,,
24—70,810 ,, 25—125,00 ,,
26—60,00[illegible] ,,
27—8,121 sh' unis'd.
29—4,633 ,,
30—2,000 ,,
31—5,121 ,,
32—50,000 ,,
33—50,000 ,,
34—102,570 ,,
35—200 ,,
36—180,000 ,,
39—7,695 ,,
41— ,,
43—1,000 ,,
46—71,522 ,,
(Net to be issued for less than 950 ea.)
47—3,000 sh. unis'd.
48—100,000 sh. unis'd,
50—8,178 ,,
54—40,000 ,,
55—89,000 ,,
56—10,634,850 ,,
57—5,000,000 ,,
59—100,550 ,,
60—280,080 ,,
61—240,000 ,,
62—401,055 ,,
63—15,000 ,,
64—500,000 ,,
65—200,000 ,,
66—1,884,253 ,,
67—66,057 ,,
68—5,641 ,,

In order to ensure accuracy of the above details, Agents and Secretaries of Companies are requested to notify Messrs. J. P. Bisset & Co. of any alterations, errors or omissions.

COMPANIES' NOTICES, MEETINGS, ETC.

The Hongkong & Shanghai Banking Corporation.—Subject to confirmation the Directors will recommend at the forthcoming meeting:—

To pay a final dividend for the year of £3 and bonus of £2 subject to deduction of Income Tax.

To add to Silver Reserve, 10 Lakhs.

To write off bank premises account, 10 Lakhs.

To carry forward to next year, 34 Lakhs.

The Tebong Rubber & Tapioca Estate, Ltd.—A General Meeting will be held at No. 10 Canton Road, Shanghai, on Tuesday, January 23, 1924, at 11.15 a.m.

The Gula Kalumpong Rubber Estates Ltd.—Holders of 5 — in the £ paid shares who have not paid the Call advertised by Call Letter dated October 15, 1923, are reminded that same is payable on or before January 15, 1924, and that all calls unpaid on that date will bear interest at the rate of 10% per annum from the date until the date of payment.

The Cheng Rubber Estates, Ltd.—An Extraordinary General Meeting will be held at No. 10 Canton Road, Shanghai, on Monday, January 21, 1924, at 4.30 p.m.

The Shanghai Cotton Manufacturing Co., Ltd.—The share certificates in New Issue in the above Company are now ready and will be handed over to the shareholders against the official receipt at the Company's Head Office, 49 Szechuen Road, Shanghai, on and after January 21, 1924.

The Kali Glidik Coffee Estates, Ltd.—The Statutory Meeting will be held at No. 10 Canton Road, Shanghai, on Tuesday, January 29, 1924, at 4 p.m.

The First Ordinary General Meeting will be held at the same place immediately after the Statutory Meeting.

The Transfer Books will be closed from January 25 to 29, 1924, both days inclusive.

Share Report for Week Ending January 18, 1924.

No. 243

J. P. BISSET & CO.

Telegraphic Address: "BISSET SHANGHAI"
Codes in use A1 Cable
A.B.C. 4th 5th and 6th Editions
B. Broomhall's Imperial Chinese Cable Code
Reuter's Universal Private Code
Telephone Cent. 171

Shares and General Brokers,
Land and Estate Agents
1 The Bund,
Post Office Box No. 244
Shanghai

[illegible] local market has been quiet throughout the week [illegible] and no transactions of importance are recorded. [illegible] stocks. All local bond investment issues are wanted but there is [illegible] for sound [illegible] stocks.

London market quotations have fluctuated very slightly throughout the week and the following are the latest to be offered to-day:—

Chinese Govt. 5% Reorg. Gold Loan 1913, B.I.	£ 71. 10. 0	(Mean)
" " " " " " " £ I	69. 0. 0	ex B I R S
" " " " " " " £ I	68. 10. 0	(sellers) cum "
" " " " " " " R.I.	64 10 0	" "
Chinese Engineering & Mining Co. "B"	3. 5. 0	(Mean)
Gula Kalumpong Rubber Estates, Ltd. (Fully)	1. 10. 9	"
Shanghai Electric Cons. Co., "B"	2 13. 0	"
Shell Transport & Trading Co., "B"	4. 1. 6	(Sellers) cum divd
British American Tobacco Co., "B"	5. 2. 6	(sellers) " "
Pekin Syndicate Ltd. (Ord) Shares	0 8.10½	"
Oriental Consolidated Mining Co.	0 11 9	(Mean)

Sterling Quotation.—The opening T.T. Rate on London to day is 3 3¼.

Shanghai, January 18, 1924.

Following is the official business recorded on the Shanghai Stock Exchange:—

JANUARY	12th		14th		15th		16th		17th		18th
	Cash	Mar.	Cash	Mar.	Cash	Mar.	Cash	Mar	Cash	Mar	Cash	Mar.
RUBBERS
Anglo-Java Est., Ltd. .. Tls.	6¼	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..
Sungei Duri Rub. Est., Ld. .. "	8½	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..
Permata Rub. Est. Ld. .. .. "	..	..	..	..	3	..	..	..	..	..	..	..
Bukit Toh Alang R. E. Ld "	..	..	..	..	..	1 12½	..	..	..	..	..	1 12½
Tebong Rub Co., Ld. .. "	..	..	..	..	..	..	1.52½	..	..	..	..	..
MISCELLANEOUS STOCKS
Langkats (single) .. .. .. Tls.	13½	14	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..
(Combined) .. .. .. "	34½	..	35	36½	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..
S'hai Loan & Invest. Co., Ld. "	..	..	6.70	..	21½	..	..	..	21	..	..	..
Chinese Eng. & Mng. Co. "B" "	..	..	..	..	..	..	6½	..	..	..	..	..
New Eng. & S. Wks. (Ord.) "	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	118	119	..	..
S'hai Land Invest. Co., Ld. "	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..
COTTONS
Ewo Cotton Mills, Ld. (Ord.) .. Tls.	..	..	12.35	..	..	..	..	..	..	12.80	..	..
S'hai Cottons (New.) .. .. .. "	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	..	38	..	..	..
DEBENTURES
S. M. C. 6% 1923 Debs. .. Tls.	..	..	..	..	99	..	..	..	99	..	..	..
S. M. C. 5% 1921 Debs. .. "	..	..	..	..	112	..	..	..	..	..	..	..

January Settlement

FORWARD SETTLEMENTS FOR 1924.

January 29, Tuesday. February 26, Tuesday. March 25, Tuesday.

CLOSING QUOTATIONS, JANUARY 18, 1924.

STOCK	Last business done.	Buyers	Sellers	No. of Shares	Paid-up Value	Reserve, etc.	Finan. year ended	Last Dividend, etc.	Paid or Due
BANKS.
London	£ 124
Hongkong & Shanghai Banking Corp.	$ 1,065	1,060		611 400,000	H $125	(a H $1,452,212	Dec.	Final [illegible] Bonus of $40, less I.T. $5,	24
						(c H $95,123,831	Dec.
Chartered Bank of I. A. & C. London	£ 194			600,000	£5	(a £5,[illegible]	Dec.	Final 5s. + Bonus 6s. 3d. (mkg. £1 0s. 3d.)
						(c £3,[illegible]		less I.T. 1922	5-4-24
INSURANCE
Union Insurance Society of Canton, Ltd.	H $ 232½			750 200,000	d $25	(ar [illegible]		150 [illegible] mkg. $75), ex 1921 Work a/c.
						(c [illegible]	Dec.	[illegible]	26-5-23
North China Insurance Co., Ltd.	T 138			10,000	£1	(ar £[illegible]	Dec.	Final 12s. (mkg. 4s.) ex 1921 Work a/c.
						(c T1,[illegible]		Certificates ex 1922 Work a/c.	30-6-23
Yangtsze Insurance Association, Ltd.	$ 25½	26½		480 250,000	$10	(ar $[illegible]
						(ap $2,[illegible]	Dec.	$2 on T1,457 ex 1922 Work a/c, payable in
						$1,[illegible]		Dollars at Exchg. 73	30-5-23
Far Eastern Insurance Co., Ltd.	T 22			50,000	T20	(ar T[illegible]
						(ap T[illegible]	Dec.	T1 2½ ex 1922 Work a/c	30-5-23
Canton Insurance Office, Ltd.	H $ 626	725		10,000	f H $100	(ar H $2,172,[illegible]	Dec.	Final H $32 (mkg. H $40 ex 1921 Work, a/c,
						(c H $[illegible]		and Interim H $8 ex 1922 Work a/c.	11-5-23
Hongkong Fire Insurance Co., Ltd.	H $ 550			5,000	g H $50	(ar H $[illegible]	Dec.	H $32 ex 1921 Working a/c	28-4-23
						(c H $[illegible]
China Fire Insurance Co., Ltd.	H $ 127	140		20,000	h H $20	(ar H $1,[illegible]	Dec.	H $7 and Bonus H $3 ex 1921 Work. a/c.	20-4-23
						(c H $[illegible]
Assurance Franco-Asiatique	F 560			14,000	F500	(a £[illegible]	Dec	None. Floated 1918	....
						(c £3,[illegible]
SHIPPING.
Indo China S.N. Co., Ltd. (6% cum. pref.	H $ 38	38½		2) 120,000	£5
(def. ord.	H $ 140			2) 120,000	£5	(a £2,167	Dec.	Prof. 6s. at Exchg. $2.4 London Warrants
Shell T'sport & Trading Co., Ltd. ('B' ord.	£			38) 30,000,000	£1	(c £2,193,182		less I.T. a/c, 1922. Def. Ord. Nil	15-6-23
(5% cum pref.	£			48) 300,000	£10	(a* £2,[illegible]	Dec	Interim 2s. (less of I.T. Coupon 42	5-1-24
(7½% cum 2nd pref	£			57) 10,000,000	£1	(c £5,[illegible]
Shanghai Tug & Lighter Co., Ltd. (ord.	T 75	71½		20,000	T25	(a T[illegible]		(Int. Ord. T2.50 a/c., 1923)
(pref.	T 53			10,000	T50	(c T170,000		(Int. Pref. T1 75 a/c., 1923)	9-7-23
DOCKS AND WHARVES.
Shanghai Dock & Engineering Co., Ld.	T 88			10) 55,700	T75	(a T102,535	Apr.	T7.50, 1922-23	27-7-23
						(c T1,[illegible]
Hongkong & W'poo Dock Co., Ld.	H $ 154½	171		60,000	H $50	(a H $[illegible]	Dec.	Interim H $1, 1922	11-10-22
New Eng. and Shipbuilding Works, Ld. (ord.	T 6½	6½		85) 500,000	T5	(c H $[illegible]		Final H $5 & Bon. H $5 (mkg. H $12, 1922)	27-3-23
(8% pref.	T 5.20	5.15	5.30	85) 500,000	T5	(a T[illegible]		Ord. T0.60, 1922	10-3-23
						(b T[illegible]	Dec.	Pref. T0.40, 1922	10-3-23
						(c T1,[illegible]
Shanghai & H'kow Wharf Co., Ld.	T 180	187½		¾4) 40,000	T100	(a T[illegible]
						(b T[illegible]	Dec.	Final T12 (mkg. T15, 1922)	13-3-23
H'kong & K'loon W. & G. Co., Ld.	H $ 155½	190		80,000	H $50	(c T1,041,794		Int. T3 a/c., 1923	30-8-23
						(a H $303,491
						(b H $250,000	Dec.	H $6 & Bonus H. $3 (mkg. H $9, 1922)	20-2-23
						(c H $100,000
MINING.
Oriental Consolidated Min. Co., Ld.	£ 12/-			24) 500,000	G $10		June	G $0.50, 1920-21	26-7-23
Chinese Eng. & Mining Co., Ld. (Boarer).	T 21			†164) 2,000,000	£1	——	June	Final 84% (Coupon No. 23) free of I/T,
London	2	£3:6:6	£3:9:3					1922-1923	11-12-23
Raub Australian Gold Min. Co., Ld.	H $ 5.20			200,000	£1	(a £23,613	Mar.	Int. 2d., 1909-10	21-5-10
						(c £4,873
LANDS AND HOTELS.
Shanghai Land Investment Co., Ld.	T 118		118	‡) 78,000	T50	(a T25,659
						(b T250,000	Dec.	(Final T3 & Bonus T2 (mkg. T8, 1922)	23-3-23
H'kong Land Invest. & Agcy. Co., Ld.	H $ 102	100		240,000	H $25	(c T2,186,583		(Interim 1923, T3	26-7-23
(New Reg.)						(a H $3,231,700	Dec.	Int. H $6 a/c., 1923	24-7-23
						(b H $250,000
Humphrey's Est. & Finance Co., Ld.	H $ 23.00	26		150,000	H $10	(a H $123,746
						(b H $50,000	Dec.	H $0.80 and Bonus H $0.70, 1922	10-2-23
						(c H $357,363
Weihaiwei L. & B. Co., Ld.	T 6			3,674	T20	(a T2,805	Dec.	T1.20, 1922	24-2-23
						(c T7,000
Anglo-French Land Invest. Co., Ld.	T 120	120		‡3) 18,000	T100	(a T7,848
						(b T20,000	Feb.	Int. Divid. T3½, 1923-24	21-9-23
						(c T350,000
The Shanghai Hotels, Ld.	$ 40	45		‡45) 150,123	$7.50	(a $475,121		$3 on 50,000 shs; Scrip Div. 199 new Ord. shs.
							Dec.	for os. 123 Founders shs., 1920
Carlton, Ld.	T 53			14) 10,000	T50	(c $2,465,534		Interim, $3.50 on 74,000 shs., 1921, Final, Nil	11-6-21
Asia Realty Co., Inc.	G $ 100			‡18) 10,000	G $100		Mar.	Floated April 1, 1922	....
							Dec.	Incorporated under the laws of Delaware Ord.
Raven Trust Co., Inc. (ord.	G $ 10			100,000	G $10			1922, 7%	4-1-23
(pref.	G $ 10				G $10			Pref. 1st gr. 1923, 1½%	4-1-23
PLANTATIONS.
Alma Estates, Ld.	T 6½		7	70,000	£1 at T2	(a T28,940	Sept.	T0.50, 1922-23	19-12-23
New Amherst Rubber Estate, Ld.	T 0.50			‡62) 500,000	T1		Oct.		....
Anglo-Dutch (Java) Plantations, Ld.	T 2.99			12) 400,000	10s.		Dec.	T0.50, 1919	7-4-20
Anglo-Java Estates, Ld.	T 6½			4) 500,000	10s.	T32,502	Dec.	Interim T0.25 a/c. 1923	14-9-23
						(a T129,151
						(c T378,570
Ayer Tawah Rubber Co., Ld.	T 21	24		27) 30,000	T10	(a T16,223
						(b T22,000	Sept.	T2.00, 1922-23	28-12-23
Batu Anam (Johore) Rub. Ests., Ld.	T 1			400,000	T1	(c T69,960
Bukit Toh Alang Rubber Ests., Ld.	T 1.12½	1.07½		500,000	T1	(a T30,789	Dec.	T0.05, 1919	10-4-20
Bute Plantation (1913), Ld.	T 0.75	0.82½		300,000	T1	(a T20,402	Mar.	Final T0.25 (mkg. T0.50, 1916-17)	25-7-17
Chemor United Rubber Co., Ld.	T 1.07½			400,000	T0.90	(a (Loss) T13,076	Dec.	Final T0.05 (mkg. T0.10, 1916)	29-3-17
Chempedak Rub. & G'bier Est., Ld.	T 6			39) 35,000	£1	(a T37,697	Dec.	Interim T0.05, 1923	6-11-23
Cheng Rubber Estates, Ld.	T 1.40			135,000	T5	(a	Oct.	2nd Interim, T0.50, (mkg. T1, 1916-17)	16-10-17
Consolidated Rubber Estates (1914), Ld.	T 2½			25) 500,000	28.—T0.75	(a T4,120	June	T0.20, 1916-17††	1-11-17
						(a T23,192	Dec.	T0.10, 1922	20-4-23
Dominion Rubber Co., Ld.	T 2			19) 350,000	T1	(c T30,000		Interim T0.06, 1923	15-10-23
Gula Kalumpong Rubber Ests., Ld.	T 9½			†48) 750,000	(21; 450,000	(a T13,813	Dec.	T0.40, 1919	18-5-20
					5s; 200,000	(a
Java-Consolidated Rubber & Coffee, Est., Ld.	T 14			8) 85,000	£1 at 2/3½	(a T54,465	Dec.	2s. less I/T at 5s. in £1922, "B" Coupon 20)††	28-3-23
Kapayang Rubber Estates Co., Ld.	T 12	12½		35) 15,000	T10	(c T650,113		Interim, T0.50, 1923	3-9-23
						(a T6,077		(T0.50, 1922	19-4-23
Karan Rubber Estate Co., Ld.	T 6			25,000	T10	(c T4,023	Dec.	(Interim 1923, T0.50	17-7-23
						(a T3,[illegible]
Kota Bahroe Rubber Estates (1921), Ld.	T 1.05			300,000	T1	(b T60,000	Mar.	T0.50, 1922-23	1-6-23
Kroewook Java Plantations, Ld.	T 11	13½		20) 70,000	£1 at T1.50	a (Loss) T[illegible]	June
						(a T3,[illegible]		(T0.60, 1922	17-4-23
Padang Rubber Co., Ld.	T 6½			50,000	T10	(c T[illegible]	Dec.	(Int. T0.50 a/c., 1923	7-9-23
Penghulian Durian Estates (1921), Ld.	T 5.10			201 100,000	25	(a T12,[illegible]
Permatang Rubber Estates, Ld.	T 5.10			201 100,000	25	(c T[illegible]	Apr.	T0.05, 1919-20	5-8-20

MUNICIPAL GAZETTE NEWS

Volunteer Corps

B. Company British.—C. S. M. W. C. Divers to be 2nd Lieutenant.

Shanghai War Memorial.

Letter from the Chairman of the War Memorial Committee in connexion with the unveiling ceremony arranged for February 16:

Shanghai, January 10, 1924.

DEAR SIRS,—On behalf of the War Memorial Committee I beg to inform you that at a Committee Meeting held on the 8th instant, it was arranged that the unveiling ceremony of the War Memorial Monument should take place on February 16 next.

I shall be glad to know if the Council will kindly permit the attendance of the Municipal Police, Volunteers and Fire Brigade to take part in the ceremony, in which event I should be glad if you could nominate a member from each force to consult with me as to the necessary arrangements and details.

I might mention that Monsieur Le Bris, Colonel Gordon, C.M.G., have been asked to form a sub-committee for the arrangements together with myself.

Yours faithfully,
E. C. PEARCE,
Chairman,
War Memorial Committee.

The Shanghai Municipal Council.

Council Chamber,
Shanghai, January 11, 1924.

SIR, I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of January 10, wherefrom it is noted that the ceremony of the unveiling of the Shanghai War Memorial Monument will take place on February 16 next.

In response to your enquiry, I have to inform you that the Council will be pleased to lend its cordial co-operation and support to the unveiling ceremony, and to this end will be gratified to permit the participation therein of the Municipal Police Force, the Volunteers and the Municipal Fire Brigade, whose commanding officers have been deputed to consult with yourself as to the detailed arrangements attendant upon the ceremony.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
E. S. B. ROWE,
Acting Secretary.

SIR EDWARD C. PEARCE,
Chairman,
War Memorial Committee.

Venereal Disease.

Letter from the Shanghai Medical Society on this subject. The matter is receiving consideration:—

Shanghai, December 10, 1923.

GENTLEMEN,—At the annual general meeting of the Shanghai Medical Society, held in March 1923, a special Committee of four members, Dr. Marsh, Dr. Bryson, Dr. Lagrange and Dr. Cumming, Secretary, was appointed to enquire into the entire question of venereal disease as it effects the public of Shanghai, and to draw up a report upon the subject containing whatever advice or practical suggestions seemed necessary for dealing with the matter.

As a result of the very painstaking deliberations of this Committee, the following opinions and suggestions have been formulated and voice the sentiments of the Shanghai Medical Society upon this important question, and it is considered desirable that they should be placed before you for whatever action you may deem expedient.

(1) It is the considered opinion that nothing is to be gained by the suppression of brothels, as it is a well-known fact that their owners move to a new location and start business afresh. It seems that in a number of cases the new location selected has been in a respectable residence district, a very objectionable consequence of the closure of these houses. In addition to this feature and as a direct result of the closing of houses, the foci of venereal disease are widely scattered and street soliciting is rendered much more prevalent, hence the source of venereal disease is difficult or impossible to trace, thus constituting a most serious menace through an increase in the number of cases of the disease.

(2) Licensing, or official regulation of houses of prostitution is considered undesirable.

(3) It is believed that in the interest of the prevention of venereal disease, well conducted houses of prostitution should be allowed to exist so long as they are operated in an orderly manner, and do not harbour foci of venereal disease. Houses which are disorderly or in which venereal disease is known to exist should be proceeded against by the police.

(4) Street soliciting and clandestine intercourse in parks, etc., the committee note have increased considerably in Shanghai during the last two years. These contribute very largely to the prevalence of venereal disease here through the absence of facilities for even ordinary cleanliness. They are considered matters for police attention, and should be rigidly suppressed so far as possible.

(5) Advertisements and literature both foreign and Chinese, issued by "quacks", and concerning nostrums for the treatment and cure of venereal disease, are flooding the Settlement, and are doing a considerable amount of harm to the gullible who are suffering from these diseases. This condition it is felt, should be rigorously dealt with and suppressed by the Shanghai Municipal Council or its agents, under the heading of "Noxious Publications."

(6) Prescribing for, or otherwise treating venereal disease by chemists should be discountenanced and condemned in the strongest term, since the results to patients are frequently disastrous and often delay proper medical or surgical treatment until the disease has made dangerous inroads, and renders cure difficult or impossible.

(7) The present venereal disease clinic at the Shanghai General Hospital is warmly endorsed. It is considered, however, that its facilities should be extended to include prophylaxis as well as curative treatment, and for this purpose the hours of service should include an early morning period as well as a period in the evening, when a qualified medical man or attendant should be present for the purpose of giving advice or instituting any necessary measures.

In addition to this the clinic should be made available for women sufferers, with a female nurse in attendance, and sufficient privacy to encourage its use.

Wasserman and other serological and bacteriological tests should be undertaken in this clinic, and be performed free of charge where necessary.

All of the latest methods for the treatment of venereal disease including the administration of neo-salvarsan, mercurial injections, etc., should be made available in this clinic without cost to the patient where necessary.

A record should be kept upon the card index system for all patients applying to the clinic for relief, and a duplicate card, including particulars as to past history, treatment, etc., should be supplied to patients upon leaving this port, so that continuous treatment along the same lines may be carried out. It should be the duty of the person taking the case history to elicit as far as possible, the source of the infection in order that this information may be used for the apprehension of the guilty party, and render possible their removal as a source of further dissemination of the disease.

(8) It is believed that a vigorous and continuous campaign of propaganda and advertisement is highly desirable, and that there should be no hesitancy in explaining to the members of this community the dangers of venereal disease. Information should be couched in simple direct language. This campaign of publicity should include the exhibition in conspicious places, such as public parks, wharves, urinals, etc., of notices in large type, and should give specific direction relative to the location of the clinic for prophylaxis and treatment of venereal disease, setting forth the hours of service, etc., in order that infected persons may clearly understand where and when aid may be secured. At night these notices should be made conspicious by a blue light with sufficient illumination to render them easily read. In addition to this the teaching of social hygiene in the Public Schools is a matter worthy of serious consideration.

(9) The desirability of securing voluntary service by local medical men in conducting venereal disease clinics, in addition to the Medical Officer provided by the Shanghai Municipal Council, is one that the Shanghai Medical Society will be glad to consider if desired to do so by the Council.

(10) It is believed that if various employers could be induced to deal more sympathetically and liberally with such of their employees as happen to suffer from venereal disease, and these latter be diplomatically advised to seek immediate and proper treatment, upon the slightest indication of having incurred infection, this would do much to limit the further spread of such disease, and employers would profit by a very material reduction in the period of incapacity of their employees from this cause.

(11) It is believed that statistics as to venereal disease and morbidity and mortality in general would be much improved in this settlement, if the Shanghai Municipal Council were to require all hospitals receiving grants in aid, to keep their records in accordance with a definite and accepted nomenclature, to be suggested jointly by the Commissioner of Health of the Shanghai Municipal Council, and the Executive Council of the Shanghai Medical Society.

I am, Gentlemen,
Your obedient servant,
H. LOVETT CUMMING,
Secretary,
Shanghai Medical Society

SHANGHAI MUNICIPAL COUNCIL.

Council Chamber,
Shanghai, January 10, 1924.

SIR,—I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of December 10, 1923, informing the Council that a Committee of the Shanghai Medical Society was appointed in March, 1923, to enquire into the question of venereal disease, as it affects the public of Shanghai, and forwarding the opinions and suggestions of that Committee, endorsed by the Shanghai Medical Society.

In reply, I am directed to thank you for your communication, and to inform you that the suggestions therein contained are receiving careful consideration.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
E. S. B. ROWE,
Acting Secretary.

H. LOVETT CUMMING, Esq., M.D.
Secretary,
Shanghai Medical Society.

Public Health Report for December.

The health of the community was satisfactory during the month, the death rate among both foreigners and Chinese being normal. Smallpox became more prevalent, the cases among foreigners being chiefly among Russian refugees and Asiatics other than Chinese. There were 20 foreign and 13 Chinese cases admitted to the Municipal Isolation Hospitals. Of the foreign cases 6 had never been vaccinated and the remainder had not been recently re-vaccinated. It has long been known that there are, throughout the world, two types of smallpox, the mild and the severe. An XVIIIth century writer declared that there was one sort of smallpox a doctor could not cure, and another which a nurse could not kill. The severe type was more common in past centuries including the XIXth century. In the Far East the type is usually severe.

In Hongkong during December there have been approximately 400 cases and 300 deaths. Smallpox may be prevented almost absolutely by efficient vaccination and re-vaccination, and in no other way. Insanitary conditions, such as overcrowding, will promote the spread of the disease, but no amount of sanitation will prevent smallpox. The well-vaccinated may defy smallpox; they can live in the same house with it, and remain safe. More than 3,500 free vaccinations were done during the month at the Branch Health Offices.

AMATEUR PHOTOGRAPHERS

In the outports can rely on fresh supplies of Films, Plates and Papers and all Photo Sundries by sending to

Mactavish & Co., Ld.

The Hongkew Medical Hall, Shanghai.

Developing and Printing by experienced operators.

FURLOUGH

Attention of intending travellers is drawn to the New Route Across Canada now available. Through most picturesque parts of the famous Rockies. New comfortable trains—specially constructed observation cars.

The Canadian National Railways operate from Coast to Coast in Canada—touch every principal city in the Dominion and many in the U.S.A.

SPECIAL FARES FOR MISSIONARIES

Through bookings—Any Steamship Line

Literature and full information furnished

The National Way

Canadian National Railways

GLEN LINE BUILDING

Shanghai Tel. C. 6973

A Mother says: "At three months my Baby was wasting. I tried Glaxo, and he gradually recovered and gained weight. Since then he has never looked back."

Why Baby cries

Baby cries to let you know that all is not well with him; the poor little fellow has no other way of telling you. Health and happiness go hand in hand in babyhood, and Baby's cries usually mean that his food does not agree with him.

No food suits every baby, but the food that suits most babies is Glaxo. The pure, rich milk of grass-fed dairy cows, it is so digestible that Baby assimilates it as easily as mother's milk. Prepared simply by adding hot, boiled water, Glaxo provides all the nourishment that Baby needs—it forms a complete food from birth.

Glaxo

The Super-Milk

"Builds Bonnie Babies"

the safest, purest form of milk for every milk purpose

Don't buy Baby's Feeder until you have seen the Glaxo Feeder

Write to The British Medical Imports Co., 432 Kiukiang Road, Shanghai for Free Sample of Glaxo and booklet.

Proprietors: Joseph Nathan & Co., Limited, London & New Zealand.

COMPANY MEETINGS

SENAWANG RUBBER ESTATES

Liquidator's Report to Shareholders

The final meeting of the Senawang Rubber Estates Co., Ld., (1906) in voluntary liquidation, took place on Monday afternoon at the offices of Messrs. J. A. Wattie & Co., Ld., 10 Canton Road, Mr. C. J. L. Stewart presiding. In his speech, Mr. Stewart said:—

I have called this final meeting as the liquidation of the company has now been completed. The title deeds of the company have now been transferred to the new company.

The delay in the transfer was partly caused through the documents in connexion with the transfer sent by me to the F.M.S. authorities having been with other documents suppressed or stolen, necessitating duplicates being sent.

As you are aware no actual property has come into my possession. The whole of the assets and effects of the company have been handed over to the new company, on the terms of the reconstruction agreement dated June 25, 1921.

To comply with Section 188 of the Companies Ordinances (Hongkong) 1911, the following resolutions must be passed at this meeting:—

"That the account submitted to this meeting and showing the manner in which the winding up has been conducted and the property of the company disposed of be received and adopted."

This was proposed by Mr. G Gravrigge and seconded by Mr. A. K. Craddock.

The second resolution is as follows:—

"That the books, accounts and documents of the company and of the liquidator thereof be handed over to the Senawang Rubber Estates Company (1921), Ld. (Incorporated in 1921) the purchaser of the company's property, business and undertaking."

This was also proposed by Mr. Gravrigge and seconded by Mr. A. K. Craddock.

There was no other business and the resolutions were carried unanimously.

CHEMPEDAK RUBBER ESTATE LD.

Annual Meeting

The annual meeting of the Chempedak Rubber and Gambier Estate, Ld. was held on Thursday afternoon at the offices of the Company, 10 Canton Road, when shareholders representing 3,993 shares were present. Mr. A. J. Welch presided and Mr. C. J. L. Stewart acted as Secretary.

The Chairman in his speech said:

The year's working has resulted in the very satisfactory profit of Tls. 31,317.31 which reduces the amount standing to the debit of Profit & Loss Account to Tls. 13,434.94, and if rubber only remains at its present price for another four or five months, this adverse balance will be completely wiped off.

The cost of production, including duty, which is a new charge, shows a reduction under every heading and at 9.16 pence is practically one penny per lb. cheaper than it was last year. This result reflects great credit on the management and shows conclusively, I think, that every effort is being made to economise wherever possible.

Sales during the year averaged 1.209 per lb. or exactly seven pence per lb. higher than was realised the previous year.

There was no capital expenditure during the period under review, the whole cost of upkeeping the planted area, both mature and immature, having been charged to Working Account.

The issued capital has been increased by £2,306 representing the proceeds of 2,306 shares that were taken up by shareholders in response to the circular issued to them last January. There still remain 7,694 shares unissued, but your directors do not propose to issue all or any of them until the Company has reached the stage where dividends are once more possible. It will then probably be considered desirable to have a reserve of liquid cash with which to meet any emergency that may arise, since the times of stress that we have been through so recently have proved to every one how essential it is for all rubber companies to acquire substantial reserves as early as possible.

The financial position of the Company, at the end of the year, showed an excess of liquid liabilities over the cash assets of Tls. 15,014.67 as compared with an adverse balance of Tls. 51,314.48 at the end of last year. The reduction of Tls. 36,299.81 in the deficit is accounted for by the issue of new shares which produced practically Tls. 15,000 and by the profit earned on the year's working. The position has improved still further since the close of the year and I hope that before long we shall be clear of all our debts.

Turning now to planting matters, the visiting agent, in his last report, states that the estate has been improved by the cultivation work done, by which he means the digging of silt pits in the older areas, and by the conservative tapping system and resting of the trees which allows of much improved bark conditions.

Silt pitting is being proceeded with gradually as funds permit, a definite allocation of one cent per lb. on the monthly output being set aside for this purpose.

The output has now reached a point where it is in excess of the quantity allowed under restriction and, as the purchase of export rights from other estates is prohibited, it will gradually be found possible to rest any further areas which will benefit from such treatment.

I was on the estate myself last July and saw the benefits that had already been derived from the work that had been done. The young areas, by which I mean the last 500 odd acres that were planted up gradually after the incorporation of the Company, are as fine a stand of rubber as I saw anywhere in the Straits.

At the close of the year 568 acres were in the tapping round, but should the time come when a larger output is called for, practically the whole planted area, except the 15 acres replanted in 1920, can be brought into tapping.

Pests and diseases gave very little trouble during the year, and the estate is very fortunate in having a healthy and contented labour force that is adequate for all its requirements.

Mr. Robertson has again managed the estate single handed throughout the year and our best thanks are due to him and to Messrs. Sime Darby & Co., Ld., the Malacca agents, for the very able manner in which they have looked after the affairs of the estate.

THE QUESTION OF AGENTS.

Whilst on this subject, I may tell you that for some considerable time past your directors have had in mind the desirability of having as our Straits agents some firm or individual who is more intimately connected with Shanghai in general and our interests in particular than our present agents are. An opportunity to achieve this end occurred during the year and arrangements were accordingly made to transfer the Straits agency to Messrs. Kennedy, Burkill & Co., Ld., on December 1, 1923.

I would like here to record the Board's warm appreciation of the services rendered to the Company by Messrs. Sime Darby & Co., who have acted as the Company's agents for many years and to emphasize the fact that your directors were in no wise dissatisfied with the manner in which they conducted the affairs of the Estate. The Board felt, however, that as Messrs. Kennedy Burkill & Co., Ld., now represent practically all of the Shanghai Rubber Companies and moreover have, in a senior position on their Staff, a gentleman who has lived in Shanghai for many years and who is very intimately acquainted with the affairs of the various companies, they will now receive that personnal interest and attention, which is so essential to the satisfactory conduct of business matters and which is unobtainable from more correspondence.

In conclusion, gentlemen, I must tell you as briefly as possible what has been done in connexion with a possible amalgamation with some contiguous estate that I mentioned in my speech last year.

To begin with I must explain that Chempedak Estate is situated right in the north east corner of Malacca territory with two Straits companies, one on either side of it.

The nearest Shanghai Estate to it is Cheng, some 12 miles away as the crow flies, but very considerably further by road. Both these estates are run by their managers, single handed, so that an amalgamation would not mean any economy as far as staff is concerned.

There are other Shanghai estates in Malacca or the vicinity but all too far off to tack Chempedak on to as a division.

In order to examine the question thoroughly, with the least possible expence to the Company, in April the secretaries, at their own cost, asked their Java visiting agent to visit Malacca and to report on all the Shanghai estates in the neighbourhood with a view to a possible amalgamation. His reports were not received here until after I had left Shanghai last May, but I obtained copies in Java and also looked into the matter myself whilst on the spot. The result of these investigations brought out very clearly that the present position of this Company bears no proper relation to its potentialities and, as any amalgamation would naturally have to be based very largely on the present value, it is extremely difficult, if not impossible, to evolve any scheme that would be likely to be agreed to by the shareholders of another company and which at the same time would be acceptable to and not penalise you.

As far as this Company is concerned this disability will remain as long as restriction lasts since the output per acre is steadily improving and we are already producing by most conservative tapping methods more than our restricted allowance from barely 70 per cent. of our planted area.

The distances separating all these properties preclude any saving being made on the estate staffs and thus the only benefit to be derived from any amalgamation would be a small saving in the Head Office expenses, which saving would probably be lost to you by the comparatively poor price at which the Company would be taken over. To illustrate my meaning, I need only point out to you that Chempedak £1 Shares now stand at Tls. 6 each which makes the market capitalisation Tls. 163,530, equal to Tls. 198 per planted acre, or barely £33 at the present high rate of Exchange. On this capital the profits for the year just behind us amount to a trifle over 13 per cent.

Such being the case, gentlemen, I feel that you would be well advised to stand on your own feet, working out your own salvation until such time as we are clear of debt and have wiped out the debit in Profit and Loss account. We can then issue some of the unissued Shares, I hope at a premium, so as to have some working capital in hand and the profits as they accrue will then become available for dividends.

There were no questions, and the formal resolutions were passed

CLUBS AND SOCIETIES

MORAL WELFARE LEAGUE

Critics at Annual Meeting: Mr. Mason's: Defence: S.M.C. Elimination Scheme

Between fifty and sixty people were present at the annual meeting of the Moral Welfare League, held on Wednesday evening at the Royal Asiatic Society hall and presided over by the Rev. C. M. Drury.

In presenting the annual report, Mr. I. Mason mentioned that there were 26 constituent societies in the League, including Chinese. It was disappointing that the latter did not take more active interest in the work. The accounts, presented by the Rev. J. W. Crofoot, showed that, while there was a balance of $375, the year's expenses had not been covered by income. The budget for 1924 requires $7,000, of which $3,000 will go to the Mixed Court Home.

Mr. Calder, criticizing the elimination scheme, asserted that it was doing nothing but drive the women to other places, particularly the French Concession, while the hotels along Nanking Road were simply haunted by them. Nothing was being done except to make life harder for the women, since they could not change their mode of life without assistance. In this respect, however, the Mixed Court Home was an effort for good.

Another critic observed that the league was "trying to drain a ditch with a sieve." He thought the League should pay attention to matters endangering the moral health of young people, particularly cinema pictures and advertisements, great agencies in spreading the germs of the disease the League was trying to cure. He was astounded that "rotten" cinema pictures had not been denounced by press and pulpit.

Mr. Arthur Akehurst expressed the view that suppression was undoubtedly a mistake and simply tended to drive vice from one place to another. He did not agree that the League was composed of fanatics and bigots, but they were hopelessly idealistic. If their activities continued in this way for a few years, he warned free men and women that it might be impossible for them to get a drink or a smoke without without the League's permission (laughter).

The report and accounts were adopted, and Mrs. M. Kwok then gave a short account of the work at the Mixed Court Home, to which girls were sent instead of going to gaol. Since the Home was opened in September, 51 girls were admitted, but the period they remained in the Home was too short to admit of their being trained for some occupation.

Mr. Isaac Mason then gave a review of the Municipal Council's "Elimination Scheme," under which over 800 licences have been withdrawn in four years. The League had never been under the delusion that withdrawal of the licence meant an end of the business, but they maintained that public prostitution and its accompaniments were less prominent than formerly and less of a public nuisance. The closing of well-known houses was bound to reduce temptation and to assist the moral welfare of the city. (A voice: Never).

It is said (continued Mr. Mason) that the S.M.C. policy is sending lots of girls to the French Settlement and to Chinese-controlled territory. If this is so, it is a proof of the success of the plan so far as this Settlement is concerned. But there are also those who tell us that things are worse in this Settlement. Which is correct—that things are no better but rather worse, or that there is considerable migration? Both cannot be equally correct. The truth may lie between the extremes. If I were speaking to those who believe that large numbers have gone to neighbouring territory I would ask—are you sorry they have gone? Would you rather retain them here? There is no desire to harry the unfortunate girls; but little sympathy will be felt for brothel keepers and the exploiters of helpless womanhood; it is these people who are being moved on, and I do not think any true citizen will regret their going, or will consider they are hardly dealt with.

Mr. Akehurst—Why not publish far and wide the names of the wealthy landlords of these places?

SHANGHAI'S NAME A BY-WORD IN CHINA.

Mr. Mason—We have to remember the law of libel. That prevents us from saying what we might say. Continuing, the speaker said: As regards Chinese territory; it was reported recently that a body of Chinese were going to approach the Council to try and have the elimination stopped, because so many undesirables went across the borders. But why not try to better conditions in Chinese territory instead of pleading to have undesirables kept in this Settlement? Shanghai has long been a by-word in inland China, as a most vicious place where unbridled passion could be indulged as in no Chinese city. If our Chinese friends want this reputation to be maintained they should be willing to let it be in Chinese territory. Over 90 per cent. of Shanghai's prostitutes are Chinese, and practically all who move into Chinese territory as well as their patrons, are subject to Chinese law, so that is the natural place for them. We do not look with toleration on other public vices because if we do not allow them here they will go elsewhere; we try to rid ourselves of them, and then let others do the same; and so it should be with prostitution.

In the absence of definite proofs that conditions are much worse in the neighbouring territories than they were three or four years ago, we conclude that most of the brothels which have been closed down in this Settlement have either moved to other cities, or have given up business; or else they are still operating here without licences. In the event of either of the former alternatives, the result may be considered satisfactory so far as this community is concerned, while in the last-named contingency, while it means continued effort to eradicate them, there has been gain in making them less public and attractive.

The meeting proceeded to deal with the election of officers and alterations in the rules. It was mentioned that the Rev. Frank Rawlinson, chairman, was about to leave Shanghai and had declined nomination for re-election as chairman.

ST. ANDREW'S SOCIETY

Excellent Results of the Ball: Over $2,000 to Charity

A meeting of the General Committee of St. Andrew's Society was held in the Shanghai Club on Tuesday evening, with Mr. C. H. Rutherford (President) in the chair.

Before the business of the meeting commenced and all present upstanding, the President in a few feeling words spoke of the death of Mr. A. V. Monk, which had taken place while the last meeting of the Committee was in session. He spoke of his good work as a Scot in Shanghai as well as his efforts while serving on the Committee. The Hon. Secretary was instructed to send this extract of the minutes to Miss Monk.

The accounts of the Caledonian Ball were then put before the meeting and passed. These show a surplus of $1,798.38 to which sum is added the amount $479.70 being special subscriptions so that the Charity Fund of the Society benefits to the extent of $2,278.08 which creates a record in the history of the Society.

on the platform before complainant tried to get on.

This was the case for complainant.

INSP. CASSIDY'S ACTION.

Mr. Ward, for the defence, contended that Inspector Cassidy was justified in taking action according to the by-law against riding on the footboard of a tram car. Seeing that this particular car was crowded, he stretched out his arms, holding to the rail on either side, and called out that no more people would be allowed to board the car. Instead of getting off the car when requested to, complainant held on all the more tightly, and therefore, counsel submitted, it was the duty of the inspector to remove him. In the circumstances, complainant was in the same position as a mere trespasser in anybody's house and the inspector had a right to remove him, using no more force than was necessary, and as a trespasser he would be committing a breach of the peace in resisting.

Defendant gave evidence that the incident occurred at the busiest hour of the day, this car being crowded and about 100 people waiting at Mohawk Road. There were passengers standing inside and on the platform, and witness at once took up a position on the third class platform, allowing three or four people to board the car and then calling out "No more passengers." Several Chinese got off, but complainant remained on the footboard, holding on tightly when witness tried to remove him. Witness did not strike complainant. This was the first case witness had known of a Chinese resisting when asked to leave a car, and that was the reason why he gave complainant in charge.

CONTRADICTORY TALES.

His Worship in going through the evidence—which, he said, made up two contradictory tales—said he was puzzled at the fact that a respectable Chinese like the complainant should have been the object of so much vigilance in enforcing a by-law which, the Court was informed on a former occasion, neither the Police nor the Tramway Company could enforce. It did not appear to his Worship on the evidence that a deliberate blow had been struck. The probable truth was that a blow was received by complainant in the struggle to get him off the footboard of the car and this being so, he must dismiss the charge.

FALSE PRETENCES OR TRICK?

Interesting Legal Point Raised in Charge against a Young Foreigner in Police Court

A young man named Richard William Campbell appeared in H. M. Police Court before Mr. G. W. King on Monday afternoon charged with having obtained a suit of clothes and an overcoat, valued at $73, from Henry the Tailor by false pretences with intent to defraud, and board and lodging to the amount of $13 at the Kalee Hotel by means of false pretences other than fraud.

Mr. E. T. Maitland, for the prosecution, stated that accused ordered the clothing at the shop of Henry the Tailor and gave instructions for the goods to be sent to the Kales Hotel, where payment would be made on delivery. A coolie was sent and handed over the clothes to accused who, in return, gave an envelope and said there was money inside. On leaving the room, the coolie opened the envelope and, finding there was no money in it, returned to accused, who then said that the money would be paid if the suit was sent round on number 15 day. The coolie went back with the this message, but was immediately sent back to the hotel for the money, and on arriving there found that accused had gone. Accused took a room at the hotel under a false name and left without paying his bill. He had booked a passage for Hongkong, and on the following day was arrested when about to go aboard the tender at the Customs Jetty. He told the police that the clothes were in his trunk on board the Hakone Maru and, there being no time to recover it then, arrangements were made for its return from Hongkong. Accused had been in the service of the B.-A. T., but was not satisfactory and had been dismissed.

Accused denied having told the coolie there was money in the envelope.

His Worship—Have you got any friends here?

Accused—No. I have only been in Shanghai since July. I intended going to Hongkong to look for a position. I have no excuse to offer for what I have done, but would like to point out that I was not in my sober senses all that day.

A FALSE NAME.

His Worship—What are the false pretences alleged?

Mr. Maitland—He represented that his name was Ronald MacAngus. The shopkeeper would never have given him credit had he known that was a fales name.

His Worship—Is that false pretences? Would you much mind if he did give a false name provided the money was paid?

Mr. Maitland—Certainly not.

His Worship—Well, where is the false pretence? He might call himself what he liked, but the mere fact of giving a wrong name is not a false pretence.

Mr. Maitland—That is the way he got credit.

His Worship—Did he get it on the false name alone?

Mr. Maitland—He also promised the money would be paid on delivery of the goods.

His Worship—A lie is not a false pretence.

Evidence was then called bearing out the facts stated by counsel, which were not denied by the accused.

GUESTS TO TIFFIN.

A representative of the Kalee Hotel stated that when the accused registered there he said his luggage was at the Customs House. He had two guests in to tiffin, and left without paying his bill.

In giving evidence of arrest, Det. Sub-Inspector Hunter stated he was informed on board the Hakone Maru that accused had no luggage. He had only a few cents in his pocket.

After amending the charges to larceny by means of a trick, and obtaining credit by fraud, his Worship adjourned the case until next day to give accused a chance of consulting any friends who might be in a position to help him out, Campbell saying that he thought he could get the money to pay Henry the Tailor and the Kalee.

Another Chance

The lack of means in Shanghai of dealing with first offenders under the Probation of Offenders' Act was referred to on Tuesday afternoon by Mr. G. W. King at H. M. Police Court, in reference to the case of R. W. Campbell, who appeared on remand from the previous day.

Campbell now stated that he had no intention of swindling, and intended to pay the money at the first opportunity.

His Worship decided to give accused another chance. Finding him guilty of both charges, he bound him over for 12 months, explaining that if he got into trouble again during the year he would have to come up for sentence for this as well as any further trouble. His Worship expressed regret that, owing to there being no probation officers in Shanghai, he could not apply the Probation of Offenders' Act. The question had been mooted in connexion with previous cases of a similar nature, but nothing had eventuated.

Mr. E. T. Maitland, Police Prosecutor, suggested that Campbell might be directed to report himself once a month to the Police.

The Magistrate declined to make any such order, saying it would be precisely contrary to the intention of the Probation of Offenders' Act, which was to keep first offenders away from the court and the police.

INDIAN PROPAGANDA CHARGE

A Presentation to Mr. Beatty Called into Account by Indian Newspaper

A crowd of Indians gathered at H. M. Police Court on Tuesday to hear proceedings against four of their number alleged to have engaged in propaganda against Jemadar Budda Singh. The accused, Harbaksh Singh, Sandar Dass, Kapur Singh and Abond Suntra, were charged, under article 83 of the Order in Council, with "certain acts and conduct likely to produce or incite a breach of the public peace." They appeared on remand, and when Harbaksh Singh, the only one of the four not granted bail, came along in charge of a warder, he was hailed by the crowd and a garland of flowers thrust over his head and shoulders. The court was packed with friends of the accused, and as most of them carried formidable sticks, these were discreetly taken from their possession for the time being.

At the first hearing on Friday last, it was stated that Harbaksh Singh was the editor of a newspaper called the "Hindu Jagauta," said to be published by the Hindustani Association, with offices in Rue du Consulat, where the other three defendants were found when Det.-Inspector Yorke visited the place and saw copies of the paper being turned out on a Roneo machine.

THE GURDWARA FUNDS.

Mr. E. T. Maitland, Police Prosecutor, now called a Sikh constable to prove translations of three issues of the paper. One of the articles translated was headed: "One who seeks the blood of his brethren for his own personal benefit," the writer stating:

"When Beatty was due to leave Shanghai for England all the police assembled and gave him a parting present. The Sirdar Sahib (Budda Singh) advised, proposed the resolution, and got it approved. When the presentation was made at Central Police Station Beatty met them with a smile. Putting the present to his eyes he said: 'You have presented me with a very good pair of binoculars to watch the Baba Akalis who have put to death the loyal and faithful servants (flatterers) of the Government. What answer the flatterers (Sirdar Singh and others) gave, you can guess for yourselves . . . Why should this traitor (Sirdar Singh) spend the Gurdwara funds on presents? It is not clear where the money came from, but we are tolerably certain the present was paid for from Gurdwara Committee funds. It is not the first time that Sirdar Singh has given presents from the funds of the Gurdwara with a view to making friends with the English. Outwardly he seems to love his people, but inwardly he is against them and on the side of the Government."

"MILK TO A SNAKE."

In another paragraph the Jemadar was described as a "traitor and nation killer," and it was said that "to love him is like giving milk to a poisonous snake."

Harbaksh Singh, who at the first hearing professed indifference and said he had no defence to make, now carefully read the translations and declared they were incorrect. He asked for an adjournment in order to obtain legal assistance.

Captain Barrett gave evidence that Sirdar Singh was the senior native officer of the Sikh Police. There was no truth in the statements made against him.

His Worship—What character would you give him?

Captain Barrett—As good a character as you could possibly give any man in his position.

Captain Barrett went on to say that, from 20 years' experience among the Sikhs, he thought the statements made by accused were certainly likely to cause dissension and disturbance among the Sikhs. About six weeks ago Abond Suntra went to witness and said he had information to give with regard to publication of a certain newspaper of which he did not approve, and that serious events might follow unless steps were taken to prevent its publication. After his arrest last week, Suntra again expressed a wish to see witness, and having been cautioned in the usual way, he made a statement and said that Harbaksh Singh was writing and publishing the paper.

Harbaksh Singh now stated that he had changed his mind with regard to defence, and wished for a remand in order to consult a lawyer.

He was remanded in custody until Friday, the other three accused being allowed bail as before.

There was a demonstration by the assembled Sikhs at the conclusion of the proceedings. Close upon 150 of them gathered outside the court and, as Harbaksh Singh left in the company of a warder en route for Amoy Road Gaol, they raised a great cheer, another attempt being made to sprinkle the accused with rose-water (as was done when he entered the court). The Sikhs then formed into some sort of marching order and went in a body to the Public Garden, where a short ceremony, the significance of which was best known to themselves, was gone through. Coppers were thrown into the air, to the accompaniment of a chant in which all joined. The proceedings were quite orderly, and the crowd dispersed quietly after having thus paid tribute to the chief actor in the day's performance.

WEST INDIAN'S STRANGE CONDUCT

Sequel in Police Court

A West Indian named A. E. Bolden appeared before Mr. G. W. King on Wednesday charged with assaulting Wang Mu chu an official messenger at the British Consulate.

Det.-Sub.-Inspector Hunter, who arrested the accused on a warrant, said Bolden explained that Wang, instead of directing him straight to the Wayport Rooms, kept running him round the town, and he therefore struck him.

Defendant—This man had my overcoat and a ricsha coolie some of my clothes and they were running ahead of me in the wrong direction, as I found on asking an Englishmen. I didn't know where they were going, and of course you can't trust these people.

His Worship—Was that why you hit complainant?

Defendant—No. I hit him because he shaped up at me.

His Worship—Does he look like a man of that sort?

Defendant—I know these people, sir. You can't trust a Chinaman. They had my clothes. The coolie was running ahead like a racehorse and the other man not far behind him. I am sorry I hit him, but I couldn't help it.

Mr. J. C. Hutchison, acting British Vice-Consul, stated that defendant had been a member of the crew of the str. Eastway, the master of which had reported that he was mentally affected. After going through the ship's log, witness was not satisfied as to this and had defendant medically examined, but Dr. Friedlander's certificate made no reference to his mental condition. While in hospital defendant struck one of the sisters. During an interview, Bolden told a coherent story, but was strange in his manner, and wept. He was signed off by mutual consent. The master explained that the rest of the crew had threatened they would not sail if Bolden was taken on the homeward journey, and he was so anxious not to have the man that he had paid all expenses of his maintenance and repatriation and full wages up to the time of his arrival in England.

Defendant went into a long story of an attack made upon him on the ship, stating that he had been knocked on the head with a hammer by a man who owed him some money.

His Worship—He paid the debt with a hammer?

Witness—Yes, knocked me unconscious. If I had seen the hammer coming you would have had me here on a charge of murder.

Defendant was remanded in custody for further examination as to his mental condition.

DELIBERATE TRAFFIC OBSTRUCTION

Unusual Case in Police Court Dismissed for Lack of a By-Law

Dismissal of an offender because the offence had deliberately been committed was the curious result of a case at H.M. Police Court on Thursday, when Mr. G. H. Willder was summoned by the French police for having obstructed traffic on the French Bund by placing his car across the tram lines and allowing it to remain there for seven minutes.

P. C. Pantrazi gave evidence that shortly after 9 o'clock on the night of the 6th instant he saw defendant's car standing across the tram lines opposite the Messageries Maritimes offices, defendant himself standing in the road and holding an altercation with the conductor of the tram car. He wanted to hit the conductor, but witness prevented him, and ordered him to move his car away, which he did.

WHEN THE MOTOR MAN SWORE.

Defendant explained that as he was drawing his car out from the pavement to take it to the garage the tram car came along and the motor man swore at him, twice. Having stopped at the end of Rue du Consulat, the tram car was about to proceed again when witness called out "man man." The driver started the tram car, however, and in order to prevent him going forward, witness turned his car on to the rails.

His Worship—You were taking a risk, weren't you?

Defendant—A little, but the tram car had scarcely moved when I did it. I held him up because I could not see his number in the dark.

Upon looking at the traffic regulation on which the summons was based, his Worship observed that it referred to any obstruction "caused by negligence," and pointed out to the French Inspector in charge of the case that this offence had been deliberately committed.

DEFENDANT NOT NEGLIGENT.

The Inspector—Yes. But there was an obstruction of traffic.

The Magistrate—Quite so. But your by-law says "by their negligence." You cannot say defendant in this case was "negligent." He was deliberate, not negligent. I think he was wrong, and if he had got his car damaged he would only have himself to blame.

Defendant — Yes, I understand that. Naturally, I would not have done it had the tram car been going at any speed.

His Worship—I cannot say the defendant has been negligent. Is there any other by-law which would cover this case?

The Inspector—This article, No. 6, is the only one we can apply.

His Worship—Are you quite certain there is no other article than Article 6, which says drivers of vehicles must avoid obstruction of traffic "by their negligence."

The Inspector—I did not understand the circumstances of the case when the report was made.

His Worship—Well, I am bound to follow the law, and however wrong defendant was, he has not brought himself within this regulation. I shall have to dismiss the case legally, but I must say defendant was in the wrong, and if the Police Inspector could have given me any other regulation under which I could enter a conviction I should do so.

The case was then dismissed.

LAW REPORTS

CREST HOTEL MANAGER'S CLAIM

Judgment in Supreme Court Action for Wrongful Dismissal: Responsibility for a Wife's Conduct on Part of an Employee: Plaintiff Loses

Giving judgment in the case of Lloyd E. Brown v. Frank H. [illegible] Hotel, his Honour Judge Grain on Wednesday found for the defendant, dismissing plaintiff's claim for damages for wrongful dismissal from the post of manager on the ground that his duties had not been properly performed and that his conduct had been prejudicial to the business.

Mr. Tycho Wing appeared for plaintiff and Mr. Reader Harris for defendant.

His Lordship said: In this case the plaintiff L. E. Brown claims damages for wrongful dismissal from the post of manager to F. H. Hyde, proprietor of the Crest Hotel in the Siccawei Road. An agreement was entered into by the parties on April 9, 1923, but the plaintiff and his wife had already entered into defendant's employ from February 1. The agreement was for six months from April 9, the plaintiff to receive $500 a month, with room and board for his wife and himself. Although not in the agreement, the wife of plaintiff also received for about two months $150 per month for acting as cashier and for the whole time she was at the Crest Hotel she received $50 a month for checking the laundry.

It is alleged by the plaintiff that on June 23, 1923, the defendant Hyde wrongfully dismissed the plaintiff, who now claims damages.

ALLEGED DISOBEDIENCE AND NEGLECT.

The defendant Hyde pleads that he was entitled to dismiss his manager on the grounds of misconduct in that he wilfully disobeyed his master's orders; that he neglected his work, was insulting, insubordinate, abusive and disorderly. The defendant also pleaded certain definite instances of misconduct, namely, that on April 20, 1923, Brown the plaintiff struck his wife, Mrs. Brown, while they were on the premises of the Crest Hotel, rendering her unconscious so she had to be carried to bed. That on June 13, 1923, he left the Crest Hotel when he ought to have been attending to his duties. That on June 15, the plaintiff returned late for his duties and went to his room instead of attending to his duties. That on June 17, 1923, the plaintiff was abusive towards him and wanted to fight him. That on that date Mrs. Brown the plaintiff's wife, who had been locked into her room by her husband, climbed out of the window by the sheet and counterpane. That she was abusive, drunk, and caused a disturbance at 11 o'clock at night and threw stones at a lady who is now the defendant's wife.

It has been urged on behalf of the plaintiff that he cannot be made responsible for his wife's behaviour and that whatever his wife may have done, it was no reason for his, the plaintiff's, dismissal.

FEW GUIDES TO A DECISION.

[illegible] cases to guide the Court in cases of wrongful dismissal, as to what constitutes sufficient misconduct to [illegible] servant, the reason [illegible] particular facts and [illegible] Lord Esher in [illegible] 17 Q.B.D. 788, in discussing the question of the duties of a servant says that one of the principles is "that the servant shall be in a position to perform his duty duly." He goes on to say: "What circumstances will put a servant into the position of not being able to perform in a due manner his duties or of not being able to perform his duty in a faithful manner it is impossible to enumerate. . . Innumerable circumstances have actually occurred which fall within that proposition and innumerable other circumstances which never have yet occurred will occur, which also will fall within that proposition."

PLAINTIFF'S WIFE INCLUDED.

It must be remembered in the present case that not only did the agreement deal with the plaintiff himself, but it included lodging and board for the plaintiff's wife, and consequently the wife does become a factor with regard to the circumstances in which the plaintiff is placed for duly and faithfully performing his duties. Besides the board and lodging, although not stated in the agreement the wife was receiving remuneration for doing the checking of the laundry.

In these cases it is not always one act alone that one has to consider, but the general tenor of the conduct of the servant while in his master's employment. Shortly after the agreement was entered into between the parties, there was a proposal that the plaintiff should purchase half the business and a price was agreed, and the plaintiff deposited $100 which was to be forfeited if the plaintiff did not take up the agreement to pay the purchase price. It appears that when the time arrived the plaintiff could not find the money for the purchase. He asked for 10 days' grace, which was granted, but in the end could not raise the money and the $100 was forfeited. This no doubt did cause some ill feeling, certainly on the part of the plaintiff and his wife, as they had lost their $100, but I see no reason why it should have done so as regards the defendant who one might assume would be grateful for receiving $100 for nothing.

A DISTURBING INFLUENCE.

Another disturbing influence seems to have been a certain Russian lady who became a member of defendant's household and has now become his wife. There is no doubt that Mrs. Brown and the Russian lady were not in accord, and some of the unpleasantness between the parties in this case seems to have arisen from the dislike of the two ladies for each other. And it may be, that with the feminine element absent, the plaintiff and defendant might have carried on satisfactorily to the end of the agreement.

The first serious incident that arose between the parties was on April 20, 1923, which arose out of what the plaintiff calls an "unpleasantness between Mrs. Brown and the Russian lady." They, the plaintiff says, "had an argument" his wife and the Russian lady, and Brown told his wife to go upstairs.

PREFERRED BRANDY.

She apparently was reluctant to obey and preferred having a glass of brandy in the bar and was wanting to have another one, but her husband considered one was enough for her and so forced her out of the bar, which not unnaturally caused Mrs. Brown to remonstrate. The defendant states that they became abusive to each other, and Mr. Brown admits that Mrs. Brown slapped him in the face which caused Mr. Brown to strike her [illegible] mouth to bleed and knocking her down. She was then either carried or supported up to her room and ice was applied to her wounded mouth to stop the bleeding. It is suggested that Hyde overlooked this incident and when Mrs. Brown said she was going [illegible] requested her to stay. That may be so, but a master is entitled to review questions of misconduct, when further acts of misconduct arise and place them all before the Court as a general statement of the reasons for dismissing a servant. The defendant further alleges that there were several other minor occasions in which he considered that the plaintiff was not properly discharging his duties and attending to his master's business.

OVER AT DEL MONTE.

He says that once or twice he had to send over to the Del Monte Hotel for Brown during business hours and Brown admits that Hyde on one occasion sent the boy to fetch him. On another occasion Hyde alleges that Brown and his wife came in late and went to their room and he had to send the boy up to fetch him down to attend to customers. Brown says he was only up in his room changing into evening dress and was only absent a few minutes. Hyde further complains that Mr. and Mrs. Brown came in late one evening and wanted a hot dinner about 10.45 p.m. There does appear to have been a disturbance of some sort. The native boys state that Mr. and Mrs. Brown started quarrelling about the question of a hot dinner and then Brown went down and was abusive to Hyde and wanted to to fight him. There was another occasion on which there was a disagreement about who should pay for the Browns' washing. The Browns apparently refused to pay for their washing and Hyde sent up a note to the effect: "Do I understand the messages the boy brings me that you refuse to pay for your and your wife's private washing?" Brown apparently, if one may use the term, tries to "bluff" Hyde by replying "What did you put in your contract." As a matter of fact, the contract which was in Brown's possession contains nothing about payment for private washing.

OUT OF THE BEDROOM WINDOWS.

The culminating disturbance arose on June 17, 1923. This was the same evening as a dispute about a hot dinner. On that night it appears that Mrs. Brown was intoxicated. She and her husband deny it, but Hyde and the French police officer who were called in say she was drunk. And her conduct later certainly supports the views of Hyde and the police. In any event according to Mr. Brown and one of the Chinese house boys, Brown locked his wife in her bedroom—this was after 11 p.m. Suddenly there was a pandemonium in the garden and it was discovered that Mrs. Brown had climbed out of her bedroom window, by tying the sheets and counterpane together and landed in the garden. Mrs. Brown talking very loud, making much noise, Brown trying to quiet her, then Mrs. Brown throwing stones at the Russian lady.

Hyde goes for the police and the French police officer says that he found Brown very excited, Mrs. Brown drunk and "making much noise and throwing stones." The police officer apparently managed to persuade Mrs. Brown to come away from the premises into Avenue Haig and they both, Mr. and Mrs. Brown, left in ricshas. The police officer warned Hyde that if there was any more trouble he stood a chance of losing his licence. The defendant also pleaded that on June 17, the plaintiff asked to be paid off and that the defendant understood that the plaintiff after his wife's escapade desired to terminate the agreement and leave his service.

Brown states that all he intended to imply was that he should leave and be paid in full under the contract and that all he said was that he wanted the contract "straightened up." Mrs. Brown says "I wanted to leave altogether." The French police officer says, "Brown claimed some wages." Hyde said. "You must finish your work first."

ASKING TO BE PAID OFF.

Hyde says that Brown that night twice asked to be paid off and leave, but Hyde had replied that he would do it before the American Consul, and corroborates his statement by a note he made at the time, and a chit he gave that night telling Brown to "stand off work that night" and a chit he sent the next morning to Brown to the effect "To-day being a holiday I am sorry to say nothing could be done to-day so please do not work but stand off till I can get advice," etc., etc.

Hyde also states that some time after Brown had left, the two men met one evening at Maxims and that Brown had said he was not going to do anything about the matter and had "taken his papers away from Holcombe" and that they had shaken hands. Brown admits that he did meet Hyde at Maxims and did shake hands with him and was quite friendly towards Hyde, but that he was not sober at the time.

One of the house boys says that Brown said before his wife climbed out of the window, "If you won't allow me a hot dinner, pay my wages and let me go away" and that Hyde had replied "If I want to pay you your money I will pay it at the Consulate." Another house boy says that Brown was very angry and said "Pay my wages" and that Hyde had replied "I will pay them at the proper place." On these facts there does seem to be some reason for Hyde coming to the conclusion that Brown himself was terminating the agreement on the basis of payment of wages up to date and departure from the premises.

A MAN'S TERMS WITH HIS WIFE.

The main point that I have to consider is whether the conduct of the plaintiff taken generally was such as to prejudice his master's business? Were the circumstances in which he was placed such that he was not in a position properly and satisfactorily to perform his duties as a manager under the agreement. No doubt in many cases a man cannot be held responsible for the conduct of his wife, but on the other hand if a man is on such terms with his wife that he knocks her down, locks her in her room, quarrels with his wife, etc., causing her to climb out of bedroom windows at night surely he has placed himself in such a position that he cannot duly and faithfully perform his duties as a manager of an hotel and that therefore his master is entitled to say that he has a right to dismiss him.

It must also be remembered that the wife also comes under the agreement as under it the defendant has not only to provide board and lodging for the plaintiff but also for the wife. Taking all the circumstances into consideration I am of opinion that the defendant had good cause to dismiss the plaintiff on the grounds of his conduct. It may be that it was the wife who was partly the cause of it, but nevertheless the result was that his conduct was such as to cause prejudice to his master's business and that he did not duly and properly perform his duties as a manager of his master's hotel.

Therefore my judgment must be for the defendant with costs.

A WIFE'S MAINTENANCE

Judgment for Arrears

Before his Honour Judge Grain in H.M. Supreme Court on Wednesday, H. A. Thompson was sued by his wife, Marie Thompson, and K. A. Neuborg, for $440 arrears of maintenance under a separation agreement dated July, 1921, under which agreement Mr. Neuborg acted as trustee.

Mr. K. E. Newman, for plaintiff, said the agreement was that defendant should pay his wife half his earnings when in employment. He had recently been employed by Sir Robert Ho-tung, earning $280 in October, $300 in November and $300 in December, half of these sums making up the present claim.

Defendant stated that in view of steps he was taking in another matter he had been advised to consent to judgment. He was, however, unable to pay and wished to make some arrangement for paying something towards the maintenance of the children pending the conclusion of the other matter, which would take some few months.

His Honour gave judgment for the amount claimed, with costs, and told defendant he must make what terms he could with plaintiff with regard to payment.

A NEW BARRISTER FOR SHANGHAI

Son of Sir Charles Addis

Mr. Thomas Addis, son of Sir Charles Addis, was on May [illegible] admitted to practice in H.M. Supreme Court, on application to his Honour Judge Sir Skinner Turner.

Mr. H. P. Wilkinson, Crown Advocate, in making the application, stated that after serving in the war, Mr. Addis went to Oxford and got his degree, with honours in History, and was called to the bar at the Temple on June 13, 1923, and he had come here to join the firm of White-Cooper, Master & Harris. Counsel had satisfied himself that Mr. Addis was a British subject, though it was hardly credible he had arrived here without a passport at [illegible] Affidavits had been filed [illegible] the identity of Mr. Addis.

His Lordship observed that in future all applications must contain a statement of nationality. Of course in this case it did not matter so much, Mr. Addis's name being so well-known in China, but the point would have to be borne in mind in future. He had much pleasure in admitting Mr. Addis to practice in the Court.

CROWDING UPON A TRAMCAR

Foreign Tram Inspector's Efforts to Stop it Results in Assault Charge

A case arising out of overcrowding on the trams was heard by Mr. G. W. King on Monday, when Mr. P. Cassidy, second assistant Traffic Superintendent of the Shanghai Tramway Co., was summoned for an assault upon a Chinese named Loh Yik-ts.

Mr. P. W. Goldring appeared for complainant and Mr. H. Lipson Ward for defendant.

In outlining the case, Mr. Goldring stated that at about 8.45 o'clock on the morning of the 5th instant, complainant, who was the Chinese insurance manager for Messrs. Scott, Harding & Co., boarded a car at Mohawk Road on his way to the office. He had one foot on the step of the car and was holding on with his left hand when defendant got hold of him and endeavoured to pull him off. At that moment the car started, and complainant had no option but to get on the platform, and he was followed by defendant who, in spite of the fact that the car was now gathering speed, tried to push him off, then striking him a blow on the neck or chin. Between Mohawk Road and Park Road complainant, who spoke excellent English, told defendant that if he would stop the car he would get off, and accordingly defendant rang the bell twice, but the car did not stop until Park Road was reached. Immediately then, defendant got hold of complainant by the collar and hustled him along to Loongfei Gate, where he gave him into the custody of a Sikh police constable.

WAS THE CAR CROWDED?

Complainant gave evidence bearing out counsel's statement. He said that three times he asked defendant to stop the car in order that he might alight. He struck witness on the jaw with his fist. He did not ask for witness's address before taking him to the police station. At the station witness was charged with an offence against the by-law and paid $1 bail, thinking this was a fine and accordingly not turning up at the Mixed Court next morning.

In answer to Mr. Ward, witness said he was aware there was a traffic regulation forbidding people to ride on the footboard of a tram car. There was plenty of room in this particular car.

A newspaper seller who witnessed the incident stated that the defendant first tried to pull complainant off the car and then struck him.

This witness stated in answer to Mr. Ward that the car was crowded, and there were people cleaner, who had knowledge of the robbery. On Monday night a further robbery of cargo took place. Three men were arrested, one having been caught in the act of theft by the police watchman. One of them was a cargo coolie.

The robberies which occurred on Monday were dealt with first.

A police watchman, stated that on January 7 at about 9 o'clock he was stationed at the fourth hold on the Kashgar when one of the three accused men came aboard. Witness asked one of them what he had come for and the accused replied that he was a coolie. When asked to produce his certificate the coolie refused to do so, making some excuse. At 4 a.m. after he had taken tea, he saw the first two accused in the fourth hold. Three men came to the ladder leading to the back of the ship and he found a piece of cloth on the first accused. He reported the matter to the third officer who arrested the man. The other two disappeared. At about 6 o'clock the second accused appeared bringing some food for the first. Witness caught hold of him and asked him if he knew the first accused to which he answered "No," stating that he had been told to bring the food by the third accused. Later the third accused made his appearance and all were placed under arrest.

A coolie employed at Messrs. Jardine, Matheson & Co's wharf, stated that he met Yang Yen-ling in a shop. The latter had some cloth and he (Tsang) asked him where he had obtained it. Yang replied that he got it from a P. & O. ship, and when he said he would like some too, Yang told him to go first and he he would meet him on the ship They got some cloth from one of the holds—he did not know which. He concealed the cloth on his body and got out of the hold. He was then arrested, but Yang got off for the time being.

Under examination, prisoner admitted that he knew Yang and had been associated with him in business. Regarding the third prisoner, the latter went home at 8 o'clock to sleep and did not go with them to get cloth.

Dep.-Supt. W. C. Woodfield at this point stated that, respecting the third accused, Tsang adhered to the statement he had already made. The night watchman, however, was very positive on the point that he had seen the third accused.

A Chinese detective then gave evidence respecting the Sunday night robbery, according to which it appeared that 10 men between 6 and 7 o'clock went on board the Kashgar, concealed themselves till night, forced open some cases and opened some doors at the side of the ship. On Monday Dzien, employed as boiler foreman, went to a tea-house where he met three men and asked for money from them for the things they had done. He was told not to be in a hurry as they would sell the things and give him the money.

Mr. Mansel Reece applied for a remand in order to get the evidence of the officer on the Kashgar, which was granted until the 25th instant.

SHIP'S OFFICER'S CLAIM FOR DAMAGES

Marine Superintendent's Evidence

Further evidence was heard by Mr. Ivanof (Senior Consul's Assessor) and Magistrate Tsang at the Mixed Court on Wednesday in the claim of A. M. Vinogradoff, former second officer of the China Merchants' S. N. Co.'s str. Hsinming, against his former employers in connexion with a fall sustained by him from a wooden ladder alleged to have been for use on board the steamer on January 2, 1923.

Mr. P. F. Faison and Dr. A. Fishman appeared or plaintiff; Mr. H. Lipson Ward for the defence.

The No. 2 bosun, called for plaintiff, denied having made a statement to Capt. Kirby, of the China Coast Officers' Guild, when that gentlemen made an inspection in September; neither had he asked him how long the ladder had been on the ship that "all time have got."

Captain Kirby stated that the previous witness had made this remark to him in reply to his question.

Captain MacKinnon, who said he had been Marine Superintendent of the defendant company for three years, stated, in reply to questions, that he had seen 40 years' service, 32 having been spent in the company's service. He had worked his way up from the bottom. Under maritime law, all accidents to seamen had to be entered in the ship's log. All ships had to be inspected prior to the time of their annual overhaul and every ship was inspected by him at this time. He had been on board the Hsinming many times while it was in port to make inspections when he received reports from the officers. He had inspected the Hsinming on December 27, 1922, seven days before the accident for the purpose of seeing what repairs were required at the Kiangnan Dock, whither she was being sent. It was his duty as Marine Superintendent to see that the ship was in a safe condition, but it was also the similar duty of the ship's officers. The chief officer had told him, stated witness, that plaintiff had reported to him that he had had a fall in the afterhold. There had been no investigation respecting the circumstances attending the accident by him or the chief officer, because plaintiff had told the chief officer how the accident happened. Questioned as to whether he knew plaintiff would die or not, witness said "Of course not."

WOULD NOT DIE.

Continuing, Capt. MacKinnon said that when the Court had made the inspection of the hatches, he had the ladder tied with ropes so that the Court would not break their necks, as untied ladders were unsafe.

Asked whether he warned the Court not to use the ladder because it was unsafe, witness said that the Court used it at their own discretion.

Mr. Ward reserved cross-examination, and mentioned that he was going to make an application for a dismissal of the case on behalf of the defendant company on the ground that the evidence submitted by plaintiff showed no case for them to answer. He thought that this would save everybody's time.

Dr. Fishman said that he would oppose the motion because it was against the rules of the Mixed Court, although it was the practice in the British Courts of Chancery, and would place plaintiff at a decided disadvantage.

The Assessor stated that the Court would hear the application and then decide.

THE STANDARD OF EXCELLENCE THROUGHOUT THE EAST

QUALITY FIRST W&C PAINT

Varnishes, Enamels, etc.

Large Stocks Kept in China

Wilkinson, Heywood & Clark

SHANGHAI—HONGKONG

OVER HALF A CENTURY REPUTATION
Dr. LE CLERC'S PILLS FOR THE LIVER & KIDNEYS
INVALUABLE for DISEASES of these IMPORTANT ORGANS, GRAVEL, BACKACHE, GOUT, RHEUMATISM
Price 5s., leading CHEMISTS, or Post Free Dr. LE CLERC Med. Co. Haverstock Rd. N.W.5, London
Dr. LE CLERC'S VEG. APERIENT PILLS. Price 3s.
Dr. LE CLERC'S PILLS FOR ANÆMIA. Price 3s.
SAFE & RELIABLE FOR LADIES AILMENTS
Dr. LE CLERC'S SOAP. 1s. or 6 Tablets 5s.
Sold by Boots, Timothy Whites and leading Stores.
TA 1/1924

ANNUAL STOCKTAKING

SALE

Commencing JANUARY 3rd, 1924.

25% Discount

STATIONERY—FICTION—BIOGRAPHY—GAMES—BOYS' AND GIRLS' BOOKS—CHILDREN'S TOY BOOKS—POETRY AND DRAMA—RELIGIOUS BOOKS

Watch the Special Dollar Counter

A special catalogue of Educational Books (price reduced 20-60%) will be forwarded on request.

EDWARD EVANS & SONS, LTD.

30 North Szechuen Road, Shanghai, 'Phones North 780-782

137 Victoria Road, Tientsin.

"BECHSTEIN"

Concert and Miniature Grands

USED BY THE GREAT ARTISTES

ROBINSON PIANO CO./LD.

A BROKEN CONTRACT

Belgian Trading Co. v. Neuss Hesslein & Co.: Judgment for Plaintiff

In the U. S. Court on Saturday judgment was given as follows by Judge Lobingier in favour of the Belgian Trading Company which sought to recover damages from Messrs. Neuss, Hesslein & Co. for failure to accept a quantity of goods under contract:

This is an action to recover damages for the failure to accept delivery of a quantity of goods under a contract resulting from negotiations between plaintiff and defendant, culminating in a verbal offer by the former accepted by the latter in a letter reading in part as follows:

We confirm our conversation of yesterday with your goodselves and beg to state, as you are already aware, we have bought from you as per our letters of January 16th and 25th respectively 75 tons Albumen, free of zinc at gold $1.22 per lb. net C. I. F. New York guaranteed not to contain more than 20 per cent. siftings shipment per steamer April to July 1920, 100 tons Spray Polk powder, quality as per your last shipments to N. Y. at gold 54 cents per lb. net C. I. F. New York, shipments per steamer April to June." (Ex. E. attached to petition as Ex. A.)

Stress is laid on the phrase used in defendant's cable of January 27, 1920, instructing its manager Hough to "make firm offer" and it is argued that this Ex E (A) was the "firm offer." But plaintiff's undisputed testimony makes it clear that negotiations following the cables to consist, resulted in a verbal agreement which was embodied and confirmed. We see no possible sense in which Ex. E (A) may be treated as an offer. It recites an acceptance, not an offer. Ex E (A) is signed by "W. P. Hough, Representing Neuss, Hesslein & Co." which is exactly the same phrase appearing on the sandboard of defendants' office in Shanghai. Hough is listed as "branch manager" at Shanghai in defendant's publication "Nehesco News" which is by it "distributed throughout the world." Moreover it appears that the letter was written in strict pursuance of a cablegram received by Hough from defendant on or about January 27, 1920. Much is sought to be made of Hough's alleged want of written authority. Apparently defendant contemplated giving him a power of attorney about the time when the contract was made, for about a week later it cabled "W. P. Hough must have power of attorney in order to act with regard to—until the end of the year." But of course neither written, nor other actual, authority was required. Hough's ostensible authority as branch manager, was ample.

Moreover all that Hough did in this connection was fully ratified by defendant. Thus on February 10, 1920, defendant cabled that credit has been telegraphed Asia Banking Corporation" thus carrying out one phase of the contract and instructed Hough to "increase April-June shipment to 60 tons." By February 28, which was one month after the contract was made, influenced evidently by the declining market, defendant cabled "we advise request Belgian Trading Company cancel." Cancel what? Clearly the contract which is this fully recognized by defendant. In what appears to be a reply to the foregoing from Hough, he says "Belgian Trading Co. have settled exchange on New York and have made advances to manufacturers in accordance with considering the circumstances cannot cancel." From then on Hough continues to write plaintiff regarding "the depressed state of the home market" and in the last named he embodies a cable from defendant reading:

"Find out what possibility is there of cancelling exchange contract how much penalty is likely to be demanded what is the estimated loss after deducting the proceeds of any telegraph the best that can be done are trying to make an arrangement for the following reason market remains very depressed."

This was on May 5, 1920 and it was not until more than three weeks later, and after failure to obtain the desired cancellation, that defendant finally cabled "Reject the entire transaction." Surely defendant is estopped to urge that it had a contract with plaintiff! Surely also it would be contrary to the evidence to find cancellation as requested by defendant.

THE SALE CONFIRMED.

On the day following the receipt of Ex E., plaintiff wrote defendant confirming the sale of goods to the firm on the understanding that "you shall have confirmed credit in our favour for the amount of goods purchased, for 90 days draft."

Much is sought to be made in defendant's various briefs, and in its request for special findings of the alleged discrepancies between this letter and Ex. E. We do not see that they are material so far as the terms of the contract are concrned, though there are differences in phraseology, and some passages in the second letter which do not affect the contract.

But even were it true that plaintiff's letter contains terms not found in defendant's it would not affect the rights of these parties. For, as we have seen, Ex. E. constituted an acceptance and acceptance turned defendant's offer into a contract. Thereafter, new terms could only have been imposed by joint consent — novation — and any attempt by plaintiff alone to do so would have been ineffective.

Nor is it material that plaintiff may have regarded his letter as also an acceptance and as part of the contract. The legal effect of his letter is to be determined not by what he thought but by the law which treats a contract as complete upon one acceptance and requires nothing more. Accordingly no legal significance attaches to plaintiff's closing remark in his letter, "we shall send you our contracts on Monday." It is admitted in defendant's brief that no contracts were sent. Plaintiff apparently refers to sales notes which were sent and afforded ample notice to defendant of the contract. But even had he supposed that further "contracts" were necessary it would not have altered that already made.

But it is quite wide of the mark to claim that the situation as outlined above results in a variance between pleading and proof. A contract once made needs no confirmation and while it is not invalidated by such an act, neither is it strengthened. The petition then proceeds to allege the modification just discussed.

The section relied upon by defendant requires merely "some note or memorandum" expressing the consideration "subscribed by the party to be charged or by his lawfully authorized agent." Clearly Ex. E. (A) meets the requirement.

REQUEST FOR SPECIAL FINDINGS.

Defendant has filed a "request for special findings" which is characterized by plaintiff's counsel as "not so much a request for specific findings of fact as it is a request for the Court to find conclusions of fact in negative form." It is rather a request to find that plaintiff's averments are not proved and that defendant's theories are, than a request to find what the evidence discloses. In at least one important particular the request fails to comply with the rules promulgated by our predecessor, Judge Thayer, which are still is force and which contain the following:

"Subjoined to each proposition must be references to the page of the record, if printed or typewritten, or if not printed or typewritten reference to the witness or particular evidence, relied on in its support." Italics are ours.

The necessity of such compliance is especially marked here because certain of defendant's requests (e. g. 4) involve, as plaintiff's counsel point out, "the whole testimony in the case." Having failed to comply with the rule defendant is not entitled, as a matter of right, to any of the special findings requested.

We are asked to find: "That the evidence does not sufficiently and satisfactorily establish" the first two paragraphs of the petition, relating to plaintiff's capacity to sue." Plaintiff testified on March 29, 1923, to requirements relating to the business and ownership.

He also produced a document whose signatures he identified, reciting a transfer by the former proprietors to himself. It is in French but plaintiff stated the substance of it and we accepted it, especially as defendant offers no contrary evidence and in fact avers that it "has not sufficient knowledge to form a belief." The findings requested would be contrary to the evidence.

PLAINTIFFS' STATUS.

Defendant also asks us to find that it was not "carrying on business in Shanghai under its corporate name." Besides its admission "that its salesmen have from time to time maintained an office for the purpose of displaying samples and receiving and forwarding mail and cables in the City of Shanghai, China" its representative, Hueglin, testified that he occupied the same office as his predecessor for defendant, that it kept a telephone there in its name, appeared in the hong (merchants') list, and in pamphlets published by it and "distributed throughout the world" it advertised a Shanghai branch with a manager. Letters emanating from this branch and signed by the advertised manager, treat of local purchases, prices, shipments, insurance, etc., and in one of them the said manager thanks plaintiff for his "kind co-operation in the handling of this business."

But this court's jurisdiction over defendant's person does not depend solely upon its maintenance of an office in Shanghai. As pointed out in our order overruling its plea to the jurisdiction, appearing generally and invoking the court's powers on other questions waives any such objection. Since that order was made defendant has continuously so appeared.

We are asked to find "that the evidence does not sufficiently and satisfactorily establish" plaintiff's averment of performance. The answer admits that defendant has neither accepted nor paid for the goods and it is undisputed that it sent plaintiff a cablegram announcing its decision to "reject the entire transaction." Clearly this absolved plaintiff from any further effort at performance.

Similar findings are requested regarding plaintiff's averment of damages. Plaintiff's testimony in support of his statement is not denied and the motion to exclude it is overruled. It shows a total contract price of $332,640. Plaintiff's measure of damages would be the difference between that sum and the market price at the time and place of delivery. But when these goods were due for delivery in New York, the testimony is that there was little or no market. The goods are conceded to have realized $124,460.11 upon sale in New York in 1921 leaving a difference from the purchase price of $208,179.89. In addition to this, plaintiff testified that he expended [illegible] as authorized by the contract:

[illegible]	1764.61
[illegible]	1295.60

THE JUDGMENT.

As the contract was "C. I. F." [illegible] was included and storage charges were made necessary by defendant's delay.

With [illegible] the total is $[illegible]. Plaintiff admits owing defendant "about $40,000" and we do not find that defendant has proved more nor that its Request 10 is supported by the evidence. In fact no evidence produced by defendant has been cited in brief or argument. Plaintiff has filed objections to certain depositions offered by defendant and these objections appear to be well taken and are sustained. The amount of plaintiff's recovery, therefore is $[illegible]. Less $40,000.00, leaving a balance of G. $171,239.49, for which balance together with costs, judgment is accordingly rendered in favour of plaintiff and against defendant, with interest from July 1, 1920, that being the limit for delivery under the contract and any delay having been sought by defendant.

THE CAFE FRACAS

A General Battle: French Police Give Evidence in the U. S. Court

The hearing was resumed by Mr. Lurton at the U. S. Commissioner's Court on Saturday of the charges against Carl Johnson, Ralph Libby and Jay Elmont of assaulting French constables in New Maxim's Café on the morning of the 1st. Three French police officers, N. Du Rocher, N. Pancrazi and M. Delimatski gave evidence as to the alleged assault and the hearing was again adjourned, at the request of the defending lawyer, Mr. F. J. Schuhl.

The first witness stated that he had gone with his family to the café. He was not on active duty, though at all times officers must feel themselves bound to serve for the peace. He was not in uniform. Asked by Mr. Lurton to tell just what happened, witness said that he was holding Johnson, when Libby struck him, whereupon he let go of Johnson. A general battle ensued. "I then saw Mr. Elmont who was wearing ladies' clothes, who struck me. I do not remember anything more. Later on, as I was recovering consciousness, I heard Elmont say, he is a French policeman so I will kick him, which he did."

Mr. Schuhl—You have a gun?—Yes

Mr. Schuhl—Where? In my pocket.

Mr. Schuhl—How did you lose it?—I don't know.

Witness was then directed by the attorney to look round the courtroom to try to identify the man who took the gun from him but he could not. This man, said Mr. Schuhl, took the weapon from witness. Further questions elicited the statement by witness that he did not actually see Libby strike him. He did not remember taking the gun from the holster, though he might have done it unconsciously.

The next witness said Johnson had struck him and that Elmont had twisted his finger and pushed him downstairs.

The Commissioner—You say that Elmont walked to the station. Why did you not take him there?—We were not numerous enough to take them all. He came by himself.

Mr. Schuhl—Did you have your gun?—Yes, I was on duty in uniform.

Mr. Schuhl—Did you draw it?—No.

Mr. Schuhl—Did you see this gentlemen, in the rear of the court-room, who stopped you from drawing it (Another gentlemen who had told the attorney that he had done so)?—No.

Witness then said that Libby was arrested as he was hindering the police and aiding Johnson though he had not seen him strke anyone.

The last of the three officers stated that Johnson also struck him.

The hearing was adjourned until January 22 at the request of Mr. Schuhl who said he wished to subpoena another witness.

Seven alleged robbers were stated by Det.-Sgt. Douglas, at the Mixed Court yesterday, to have visited a general store in Hochien Road armed with sticks. Upon entering, they jumped over the counter and so frightened the only woman occupant that she fainted. Another woman at the back door was struck on the head with an iron bar. The first woman and a boy had been able to identify several of the accused personally, while a search of the home of the sixth man revealed a large club. As [illegible] woman struck was still in hospital the officer applied for a remand which was granted by the Bench until Monday.

AFFAIRS OF STEWART CRANE, INC.

Objections to Payment of Receivership Expenses

At the U.S. Court on Monday, Judge Lobingier heard a motion by Mr. F. A. Bowen, receiver for the Stewart Crane Co., Inc., that payment of the receivership fees and expenses be allowed.

This was objected to by Mr. Chalaire on behalf of the creditors. He stated that the creditors had never been able to secure a full statement of the assets of the company and that the receivership fees had already been objected to.

Mr. Haskell also objected on the same grounds. He added that a shrinkage in assets had never been accounted for, while Mr. Franklin asked for a report of equity in the building operations.

Mr. Schuhl, representing the American Trading Co., said that representatives of that company were shortly leaving Shanghai and that their reports should be obtained before they sailed for America.

The Judge said he felt the delay had been due to a lack of clearness as to the precise accounting desired by the creditors and asked the lawyers representing the different creditors to hold an immediate conference with the receiver who would then use every effort to obtain the information desired.

Luk Hop Co. v. American Express Co.

The case of the Luk Hop Co. v. the American Express Co. came up on a motion to modify judgments. Mr. F. J. Schuhl, for the American Express Co., moved that judgment be modified because judgment had been rendered in favour of his client in the Mixed Court, and cited many instances when similar modifications of judgments had been made.

Mr. H. R. Snyder, for plaintiffs, opposed the motion on the ground that the Mixed Court judgment did not include the entire Luk Hop Co., and that the judgment submitted in evidence was not properly certified. He also cited legal authorities to for plaintiff, moved for judgment could not be properly granted.

The case was submitted, Judge Lobingier instructing Mr. Schuhl to secure certification of the judgment from the Mixed Court.

Abeles v. Cowen

In the case of A. Abeles v. J. L. Cowen, Mr. R. C. Faithfull for plaintiff moved for judgment by default. Mr. F. J. Schuhl was for the defendant.

As defendant's failure to present an answer was alleged to be due to the wording of the plaintiff's petition the Judge gave him till January 15 to amend the petition by interlineation and the defendant until January 25 to answer.

ALLEGED AUDACIOUS CARGO THEFTS

The Str. Kashgar Twice Raided: Five Men Before the Mixed Court

Serious alleged robberies on the P. & O. S. Kashgar were described at the Mixed Court last Friday, when Tsang Loo-yien, Yang Yen-ling, Dzien Sien-pau, Ting Kyu-tsung (alias Sian Kyu-tz) and Dzien Zung-san made their appearance in the dock. The evidence revealed the fact that the alleged robberies were the carefully planned work of two gangs.

Mr. C. Mancel Reece prosecuted.

It appears that on Sunday ten men boarded the vessel and broke open some cases of piece goods of considerable value. One of the robbers was arrested by the river police who also arrested Dzien Zung-san, a foreman boiler

r) Mr. Chamberlain said that ough the present reparations in nd were less than before the cupation of the Ruhr, it was s opinion in view of M. Poinre's assurances that no industal arrangement between French d German firms had up to the esent been made and the ritish Government would be ven the fullest chance of exessing their views if an arrangeent were proposed.

The French Debt.

Mr. Frederick George Penny Conservative Member for Kingon-upon-Thames) suggested that rance should be asked for an surance that she meant to nour her debt obligations to ritain and that she and others ould pay us something on acunt until a final adjustment as made.

The House then adjourned until morrow when the Labour endment of no confidence will moved.—Reuter.

Paris, Jan. 16.

The British Address from the hrone is considered by the Times," the "Morning Post" d the "Daily Telegraph" as a mple exposé of policy. The Daily News," emphasizing the iticisms of Mr. Lloyd George d Mr. Ramsay Macdonald, conders that the Labour amendment ms up the failure of the Baldin administration which no nger has the confidence of Parament.—French Wireless.

LABOUR EXPECTANCY OF OFFICE

Further Concessions to Indian Nationalists Forecast by Col. Josiah Wedgwood

London, Jan. 12.

Colonel Josiah Wedgwood, M.P., ho the Cabinet-makers in the iberal papers to-day declare will robably be Secretary of State r India, speaking at a confernce of the University Labour ederation at Toynbee Hall toy, said that the Labour Party which he is Second Vicehairman) would welcome the asmption by the self-governing ominions of further responsibily in foreign as well as domestic fairs.

Labour regarded immigration as invaluable outlet for the Brish people. They were only pposed to the assumption that would solve unemployment. hey did not wish immigration to utilized as a means for supplyg cheap labour to planters and anufacturers in the Colonies.

India would prove the test of e Labour Government. Mems of the Labour Party hoped overcome the difficulty by acelerating the conversion of India to a self-governing dominion. his depended not merely on atters of finance, defence and ternal order but on winning e Indian Nationalists to meet em half-way.

Self-government must be reained in the various Colonies ntil the people were fit for it. he question of developing trade d industries in these countries ust be regulated by knowledge. The aim of the Labour Party as a British Commonwealth of eople of various colours—a free ion of free peoples.—Reuter.

DREAD OF CAPITAL LEVY

Wild Fluctuation of Exchange in London: Everybody Buying Dollars

London, Jan. 14.

On the London Exchange arket to-day there were wild and traordinary movements in the aling currencies. Sterling on ew York dropped to 4.23 due the growing disposition to crease holdings of dollars and llar securities. French francs l to 87.40 which is attributed to rge expansion of French Govnment loans and currency. Saturday's rates were 4.26¾ for sterling on New Rork and 91 for francs.—Reuter.

Paris, Jan. 14.

The Government is drafting measures to terminate the fall of the franc. Parliamentary support is assured. The Commercial Exchange has decided not to issue quotations at present with a view to preventing disorganisation of the markets.—Reuter.

The Patriotism of Politicians.

London, Jan. 14.

The threat of mining trouble and the possibility of a railway strike are disquieting in Labour quarters but have not altered the decision of the Labour leaders to take office as soon as possible nor caused the Liberal leaders to reconsider their determination to assist in the defeat of the Government.

It is now anticipated that the fateful division will be on Monday owing to the eagerness of Members to participate in the debate.—Reuter.

SAUL AMONG PROPHETS

A "Conchy" Now Labourite and Exceeding Bellicose

London, Jan. 14.

Mr. Scott Duckers, who was a prominent "conscientious objector" in the war, in the course of a speech in London to-day said that the Labour foreign policy was settled. No more money would be voted for Singapore. The policy of the Labour Government would include exaction of the fullest possible reparations from Germany, and the establishment of a powerful Navy, a well-paid and efficient Army and, failing a satisfactory understanding with France, a largely increased Air Force.—Reuter.

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE COMPACTS

British Depression Urgently Calling for Ratification

London, Jan. 14.

The Assodiation of British Chambers of Commerce has sent letters to Mr. Baldwin, Mr. Asquith and Mr. Ramsay Macdonald expressing grave concern with regard to any delay in ratification of the economic and financial arrangements made by the Imperial Conference.

The Association believes that the resolutions of the Conference, if carried into effect, will assist the development of the trade of the Empire, and the relief of unemployment at home and therefore hopes that the addressees will assist in the ratification of the arrangements reached at the Conference.—Reuter.

BRITAIN'S HOPE IN THE EMPIRE

Australian Premier's Farewell: What the Dominions May Do for Motherland

London, Jan. 15.

A farewell dinner was given to-night by the Australian Natives' Association in honour of Mr. S. M. Bruce, the Commonwealth Prime Minister. Baron Denman, former Governor-General of Australia, presided.

Mr. Bruce in his speech, which was broadcast to half a million listeners, contended that the peace of the world or reduction of armaments would not be promoted by Britain alone disarming.

The speaker emphasized that the Dominions demanded a voice in the Empire's foreign policy but it was necessary also that the Dominions should shoulder the obligations entailed and contribute to the defence of the Empire. Australia was fully prepared to shoulder both the responsibilities and obligations. He hoped that the other Dominions would recognise a similar obligation. The time had arrived to determine whether we were going to draw closer the links binding the Empire or whether the Empire was gradually to break up into several independent nations. He laid stress on Australia's desire to continue an integral part of the Empire.

A Strong Definite Policy.

Mr. Bruce declared that Britain's grave problems in regard to Europe could only be solved if she undeviatingly and unhesitatingly followed a strong and definite policy. That policy could only succeed if the united Empire were behind it.

Britain might ultimately be obliged tto face the necessity of leaving Europe to her fate and concentrate on the Empire to ensure that at least the Empire should remain sane in a world which appeared to have gone mad.

The Empire was as essential to Britain as Britain was to the Empire. The strength of the Dominions was too often forgotten in Britain. The Australian Prime Minister recalled their achievements in the war which had been largely responsible for the victorious outcome.

The Disarmament Farce.

For one great nation to strip itself of its powers of defence and enforcement of its will was only encouraging other Powers to increase their armaments. We were running straight towards another heavy blunder, like the unreasoning reduction of the Air Force, by the hesitancy we were showing in the establishment of the Singapore base. The 5-5-3 ratio fixed by the Washington Conference was non-existent in the Pacific, where without the Singapore base Britain would not be able effectively to put a single capital-ship. Mr. Bruce declared emphatically that unless a base were built in the Pacific, Britain would have to abdicate her position as a great naval Power in the Pacific. He pointed out that the American, Japanese and British naval authorities held the capital-ship still to be the determining factor in naval war. The speaker contended that the maintenance of world peace depended on the construction of the Singapore base. It would also aid materially in the eventual reduction of armaments throughout the world.

The Economic Agreement.

Dealing with the economic troubles of Britain, the Commonwealth Premier declared that as a result of his recent tour he thought that the people of Britain did not realize the possibilities of the Empire. He laid stress on the necessity to stir their imagination and urged that the resolutions of the Economic Conference should be carried out in their entirety on the ground of practical expediency, good sense and Empire unity. Britain was not bound, but he was unable to believe that any Government of any shade of political opinion would hesitate to enforce them. If Britain did not like tariff preferences Australia would be prepared to discuss any other method of establishing closer Imperial trade relations. It was the duty of any Government coming into power to proceed with the constitution of the permanent economic committee recommended by the Economic Conference and to ensure that the personnel would carry the confidence of the people of Britain and of the empire and such matters should be submitted to it. Its decisions at this critical hour, Mr. Bruce declared, might determine the whole future of the Empire and the destinies of the world. (Applause.)—Reuter.

PARIS, Jan. 13.—the French international tennis player, who was awarded a prize of Frs. 10,000 by the Academie des Sports for crossing the Atlantic in a 10 ton cutter, intends to devote the money to refitting the boat preparatory to a long cruise to the Pacific Islands. He hopes to leave France in April.—Reuter.

THE LOSS OF SUBMARINE L-24

Desperate Efforts to Rescue but Weather Too Bad: Probably Lost in Rising to Discharge Dummy Torpedoes: 43 Men Aboard, 25 Married

London, Jan. 11.

It is officially stated that the L-24 has not yet been definitely located. She sank without leaving a sign and her whereabouts is only known approximately. Mine-sweepers resumed their search at daybreak. It is stated that an object has been touched which may be the submarine, but the weather is dead against the slightest hope of rescuing the crew, assuming that they are still alive. There is half a gale blowing and the rough sea makes it impossible for divers to descend 30 fathoms, about the maximum depth at which divers can work and then only under favourable conditions.

A private Admiralty court of inquiry into the disaster has opened on board H. M. S. Resolution.

It is learned that the difficulty of locating the submarine has been increased by the fact that the shock felt by the Resolution was so slight that it was not realized that a collision had occurred until the conclusion of the exercises when the submarine failed to appear, but the slightness of the impact is the principal reason for hoping that the crew may be alive.

According to one account the disaster occurred during a combined submarine attack on the Atlantic Fleet leaving port. The L-24 carried 14 live mines.

The King has despatched a message to the Admiralty saying that he is shocked and grieved to hear of the disaster and deploring the loss of gallant lives. His Majesty requested conveyance of his heartfelt sympathy with the families of the crew.

It transpires that there was quite a chapter of accidents at Portland, including the collision of two K submarines, smashing in the bows of one ond seriously damaging the other, while the battleship Ramillies struck the breakwater.

How the Accident Occurred.

Later.

The Admiralty states that a wreck believed to be that of the L-24 has been located 10 miles southwest of Portland Bill 30 fathoms deep. Divers and a salvage plant are ready to commence operations as soon as the weather permits.

An official of Portland Harbour interviewed to-day said that the L-24 and the L-25 preceded two battle-squadrons to begin the spring manœuvres. There was a slight fog and considerable choppiness. He believed that the L-24 was rising to discharge dummy torpedoes against a battleship in accordance with the programme when it came up under the keel of the Resolution.

Naval men in Portland are very doubtful as to whether the L-24 can be lifted but think that a mine-sweeper may enchain and work the submarine into shallow water. The L types are comfortable and safe and are supplied with air, oxygen and food for four days if the water-tight compartments are safe, which is doubtful.

One Officer from China.

The sea this afternoon is still too rough for divers to descend to attempt to salve the L-24.

A high naval authority has expressed the opinion that there is not a million to one chance of the safety of the crew of 43, of whom 25 are married.

One of the officers of the L-24 was Lieutenant D. J. Watkinson, who returned from the China Station a few months ago.

The most authoritative explanation of the disaster given up to to present is that the submarine rose close under the bows of the Resolution and dived but had not sufficient time to escape and was rammed.

The crew of the American warship Colorado now in Portsmouth have sent a message of sympathy to the British Navy and the sufferers in the disaster.

All Hope Abandoned.

Later.

It is authoritatively stated that there is no chance whatever of saving the crew of the L-24.

An examination of the Resolution shows that the submarine must have been struck with tremendous force and very badly holed. The L-24 was probably struck high up, which would account for the absence of oil rising to the surface from the tanks, situated at the bottom of the vessel. If this theory is correct the end of the crew was mercifully quick as the salt water pouring on all the batteries would create fast asphyxiating fumes. The opinion is expressed that if the crew lived any time, the sounds of their struggles must have been picked up by the hydrophones of "P" boats which were immediately rushed from Portland.

Divers have been sent out but the weather is so bad that it is extremely doubtful whether they will be able to work. In any case it would only be possible actually to work for an hour during the slack tide.

Later.

The weather and an increased gale ended the attempts to salve the L-24 to-night. No divers, consequently, will be sent down during the night as contemplated.

Jan. 12.

It is hoped that moderation of the heavy seas will enable divers to descend to inspect the wreckage of the L-24 this morning though the prospect of saving lives is very remote. It is estimated that the oxygen necessary for the preservation of life within the submarine will be exhausted about mid-day to-morrow. On the other hand the task of lifting the vessel even under very favourable circumstances will take several days.

Last Chance Gone.

Later.

Heavy seas throughout to-day rendered impossible further operations on the L-24 on which hope of saving life has been definitely abandoned by the Admiralty. It is understood that no attempt will be made to raise the submarine but it is hoped that the divers will report in due course and throw further light on the cause of the disaster.—Reuter.

London, Jan. 15.

The Admiralty announce that the wreck of the submarine L-24 has been definitely located but owing to its position salvage operations are impossible and have been abandoned.—Reuter.

THE SEPARATISTS IN GERMANY

France and Belgium Accused by Berlin of Encouraging the Movement

Berlin, Jan. 14.

The German diplomatic representatives at Paris and Brussels have been instructed to present a note declaring that the Rhineland High Commission has registered the ordinances of the so-called autonomous government in the Bavarian Palatinate and has done everything possible to recoguize the leaders of this treasonable undertaking as a legitimate administration.

The Note, in protesting against this procedure, asks that immediate steps be taken to remedy the state of affairs.—Reuter.

Paris, Jan. 11.

An encounter between anarchists and communists broke out at a meeting called to protest against the occupation of the Ruhr and the high cost of living. Shots were fired killing two per-

FOREIGN TELEGRAMS

BRILLIANT SCENES AT THE OPENING OF PARLIAMENT

The King's Speech: Extensive Programme of Social Legislation and Unemployment Relief

LABOUR AND LIBERALS JOINED TO DESTROY UNIONISTS

London, Jan. 15.

The intense interest in the State opening of this most momentous session of Parliament is shown by the fact that the first Member of the House of Commons arrived at the House at five o'clock this morning and also by the great crowds in Pall Mall and Whitehall who loudly cheered the King and Queen and the Prince of Wales as they drove in procession to Parliament, the King and Queen from Buckingham Palace and the Prince of Wales ffrom York House, in brilliant sunshine.

There was a splendid scene in the House of Lords. The red benches were packed with peeresses richly gowned and glittering with diamonds, and peers, robed in scarlet and ermine. The Labour Members watched the scene from the gallery.

There were the customary demonstrations of unemployed organised by the police.

Unemployed demonstrators on the Embankment with banners and a band were diverted from the vicinity of Parliament and escorted by police to the City temple, where Pastor Dr Norwood welcomed them on behalf of the Brotherhood Movement. In the course of an address, Dr. Norwood asked them "the ghosts of our social sins" and was proceeding with ladies and gentlemen, when a voice in the gallery shouted "Comrades!" "Yes, Comrades!" said Dr. Norwood, who expressed the hope that the meeting would impress the statesmen that unemployment was a national question. The leaders of the unemployed spoke upon resolution, which was adopted calling on the Government to take immediate measures with a view to reducing unemployment.

Foreign Relations.

The King's Speech declared that relations with foreign Powers were friendly and His Majesty was glad to record definite progress in the solution of questions which had hitherto barred the pathway to mutual understanding and retarded the recovery of the world.

A Bill would be introduced to give effect to the Lausanne Treaty. As soon as it had passed, the Treaty would be ratified and a new era of peaceful relations with Turkey would open.

The agreement between Britain and the United States with regard to illicit importation of liquor into the United Stacs was on the eve of conclusion and would strengthen the happy relations between the two countries.

"It will continue to be my object to support by every means in my power the steady growth of the influence of the League of Nations.

"The recent murders on the North West Frontier of India have caused me much concern. I earnestly trust that the criminals will be punished and more satisfactory relations established on the frontier soon."

Imperial Co operation

"The recent Imperial Conferences marked very definite progress in Imperial co-operation. More particularly, it was found possible without departure from the existing fiscal system in this country to meet the wishes of the Dominions by substantial extension of the principle of Imperial preference, established by the Conference in 1917 and enforced since 1919. Proposals to give effect to the conclusions of both Conferences will be submitted to you.

"I welcome the opportunity afforded by the British Empire Exhibition to increase knowledge of the varied resources of the Empire and to stimulate inter-Imperial trade."

The speech expresses very grave concern with regard to unemployment in view of the country's non-acceptance of the recent proposals which, in the judgment of the Ministers, would have materially contributed to the solution of the problem. The House of Commons would be invited to assent to extension and amendment of the trade facilities and export credit schemes, to the proposal of the Imperial Economic Conference for expediting and assisting the execution of certain public enterprises throughout the Empire by the grant of financial aid from public funds and the extension of contributions towards the cost of public utility works undertaken by local authorities or statutory and private corporations.

Grappling with Unemployment.

The House of Commons would be asked to assist in providing work in the shipbuilding industry by the immediate construction of cruisers and auxiliary craft in anticipation of the naval programme. Steps would be taken to develop the existing system of juvenile employment centres and to provide increased facilities for general and technical education.

The Ministers proposed to summon a Conference representing all interested in agriculture and the political parties with the object of arriving at an agreed policy whereby the acreage of arable land might be maintained and, if possible, increased, and at an adequate wage secured for the agricultural worker.

Social Measures.

Bills would be introduced to improve the position of pre-war pensioners. A deal of discouragement to thrift was involved in the present means of limitation to the grant of old-age pensions. The speech announced the Factory Acts, [illegible] for increased activity under the sections of the Housing Act enabling workers to become the owners of their homes, and measures to complete land purchase in North Ireland and to guarantee the principal and interest of the bonds issued by the Government of the Irish Free State under the Land Act recently passed there. The obligation to alleviate the hardship caused by the former disturbances in Ireland is recognized. Proposals will be submitted for the expansion of the Royal Air Force in connexion with Home Defence.

Labour's "No Confidence."

Mr. J.R. Clynes will move the Labour amendment to the Address from the Throne as follows: "It is, however, our duty respectfully to submit to Your Majesty that Your Majesty's present advisers do not have the confidence of this House." The date of the moving of the amendment has not been fixed.

IN THE COMMONS

Mr. Ramsay Macdonald's Plea for a New Policy

The House of Commons was crowded to-day.

Mr. Asquith, who has recovered from his chill, sat next to Mr. Ramsay Macdonald on the front Opposition bench.

The proceedings opened breezily. The Labourites, supported by the Liberals, opposed Mr Baldwin's motionn to appoint the Conservatives, Mr. James Hope and Captain E. A. Fitzroy, Deputy Speaker and Deputy Chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means respectively.

Mr. Macdonald said that it was impossible to pass the motion without a division, which would be regrettable as there would be difficulties enough otherwise for this Parliament. He suggested that during the debate on the Address these posts should not be filled but that the Speaker should adjourn lightly for dinner.

Colonel John Ward (Independent Labour) protested that party arrangements behind the scenes were responsible for Mr. Macdonald's attitude.

Mr Jack Jones shouted amid laughter that he objected to the spoils going to the victors.

Mr. Baldwin withdrew the motion pending the result of the debate on the Address.

Mr. Ramsay Macdonald announced that the proposals of the Imperial Conference would be submitted to free vote of the House.

Mr Reginald Mcleod Banks, moving the Address, expressed the opinion that the resolutions of the Imperial Conference did in some sort constitute an obligation towards the Dominions (Cries of "No!"). Lord Apsley seconded the motion.

Mr. Ramsay Macdonald described the King's Speech as a curious, miscellaneous collection of odds and ends, many of the items being borrowed from Labour.

The Danger in Europe

The Opposition leader said that the prospect of a change in the Government had done more to bring the influence of Britain into the minds of the dominating statesmen than 12 months of the last Government (Laughter and cheers) The state of Europe was far nearer what it was in 1914 than anyone cared to think about with rival armies, rival nationalist policies and policies that were always glaring at each other in only semi-concealed hostility. He urged the necessity of bringing the solemn influence of Britain to bear in order that a new lead might be turned. He advocated more skilful handling of diplomacy and at the same time a friendly, firm and emphatic assertion of our own interests.

Mr. Macdonald protested against the doctrine that Parliament was under an obligation to carry out the decisions of the Imperial Conference as subversive of the rights of self-Government which we should never surrender. Every pledge was given by the Ministers at the Imperial Conference that matters should be brought before the Commons and it should be fulfilled to the last letter. The fact that the Government told the Conference that they intended to submit the preference proposals to Parliament surely meant that Parliament was absolutely free to carry or reject these proposals. He contended that the Government's proposal to tax food for the purpose of Dominion preference was a very fundamental departure from the existing fiscal system, which constituted another reason for refusing the Government confidence.

An Appeal to Fair Play.

The speaker urged that in the present unparalleled political situation the House could not merely pursue old-fashioned party faction. He said that no party could take responsibility to-day without feeling that it would rather avoid it if it could, because the state of Europe and affairs at home were so bad, but the Government of the nation must be carried on. Whoever carried on the Government in these circumstances was entitled to appeal to the fair play and sportsmanlike instincts of Englishmen and the support of the House as long as it did its duty.

Mr. Lloyd George controverted the claim made in some quarters that Parliament was bound to ratify the proposals submitted by the Government at the Imperial Conference and accepted by the latter. He charged the French with furnishing money to foster the Separatist movement in the Rhineland and hoped that whatever Government came into power would assert the authority and influence the Empire was entitled to by its power and sacrifices.

Mr. Baldwin's Plea for Sanity.

Mr. Baldwin said that when the Conservatives went out of power they would not engage in factious opposition but would endeavour to help causes such as unemployment and agriculture. He threw out the suggestion that where none of the three parties could independently govern, a round table conference should be held, particularly as regards the agricultural problem, with a view to arriving at some common measure. Mr. Baldwin endorsed Mr. Lloyd George's view with regard to Parliament-ary adoption of the resolutions of the Imperial Conference.

The Conservative leader informed the House that the proposed American liquor treaty, on which the principal parties had agreed, was being examined by the Dominions. It provided that the United States would have the right of search to a certain distance outside the three-mile limit and British vessels would be permitted to carry sealed liquor into American harbours for use on the return voyage.

Mr. Baldwin dwelt optimistically on the appointment of the Allied committees of experts, which was the first progressive step made in Europe for a whole year owing to American participation and the means afforded to provide remedial measures for German finances.

The House then adjourned.

Certain of Defeat.

Jan. 16.

The moderation and essentially Liberal complexion of the Speech from the Throne has done nothing to modify the tacit Liberal and Labour agreement to eject the Government. A number of back-bench Liberals have lodged a separate amendment mentioning unemployment, Protection and the Government's international and domestic policy. The amendment, however, is very unlikely to be reached.

Conservative commentators now are resigned to the inevitable. Even the forlorn campaign in favour of Liberal and Conservative co-operation now has flickered out.

The Labour organ expresses impatience at the large number of Liberals who insist on talking on the amendment, thus delaying Mr. Macdonald's advent, but the Liberal papers unanimously embrace the Labour amendment as a suitable instrument for inflicting the quietus on Mr. Baldwin and dwell on the potentialities of a long life for a Labour Government, provided the national welfare is not subordinated to tactical niceties.

There is a suggestion of mutiny in the ranks of Labour in a separate amendment moved by five Clyde Labour Members, referring to the "millions of workers on the verge of starvation."

Lobby correspondents unanimously forecast the defeat of the Government on January 21 and the announcement of a Labour Ministry on January 22, to be followed by an adjournment of several weeks to enable the Cabinet to pick up the threads.—Reuter.

The Debate on the Address: The Government's Defence

London, Jan. 16.

The House of Commons was crowded to-day on the resumption of the debate on the Address from the Throne.

In the course of a lengthy statement on foreign affairs Mr. Ronald McNeill, the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, warmly replying to an indictment of the Government's foreign policy, pointed out that foreign policy was essentially continuous and that, if there had been gross mismanagement in the past five years, the Government's chief critics were most largely responsible. In his opinion Mr. Lloyd George would agree that, if Mr. Ramsay Macdonald was going to the Foreign Office with a broad foot and a big heel to [illegible] upon M. Poincaré with a view to establishing peace in Europe, he would find that he was in for a very heavy disillusionment (Ministerial cheers).

The speaker claimed that the Government had lost no opportunity to enlist the assistance of the United States or to take any means open to them to arrive at a solution of the reparations question.

The German Separatists.

With regard to separatism in the Rhineland the Government's attitude had been that they were unable to sanction any separatism amounting to a declaration of independence in the States forming part of the Reich, which would take them outside the Reich, because that would alter the whole situation with regard to the Treaty. However, if they wanted home rule inside the Reich, Britain would not interfere, provided there was sufficient demonstration that it was the will of the people themselves. Obviously in the greater part of the Rhineland the separatist movement was not spontaneous and, owing very largely to the influence of Britain supported by Belgium, it had come to a natural end, but in the Palatinate it had assumed graver proportions. At first it appeared that it might be genuine, but latterly the Government had concluded that it was not now genuine and believed that if it was left to itself, it would very soon collapse. The Government had sent Mr. R. H. Clive to the Palatinate to ascertain the facts. This had caused a certain amount of additional friction between Britain and France, but Mr. McNeill greatly hoped that the friction would soon be smoothed over and that Mr. Clive's report would enable the Government clearly to determine their action.

Britain's High Standing.

Mr. McNeill defended the Government's policy with regard to the Ruhr. He claimed that those criticizing the Government on the ground that British prestige had been lost were wrong. Lieutenant-General Sir Charles Harington, lately the British Commander-in-Chief at Constantinople, said that British prestige in the Near East had never been higher. Field Marshal Lord Allenby, the High Commissioner for Egypt, said the same about Egypt. One of the Dominion leaders at the Imperial Conference had told him that wherever he went, he found that the one country whose moral approval or disapproval counted was Britain.

In conclusion Mr. McNeill said that, according to all reports, Mr. Macdonald was himself going to the Foreign Office. He confidently predicted that before many months Mr. Macdonald would tell the House of Commons that he was completely disillusioned.

Germany's Steel.

Replying to Mr. Lloyd George, Mr. Neville Chamberlain, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, said that Germany had now agreed to give an undertaking for the eventual reimbursement of German exporters in connexion with our Reparations Recovery Act and a German representative was on the way to England to discuss the method. He detailed the steps taken to ensure that the big stocks of steel accumulated in the occupied territories, estimated at 2,000,000 to 3,500,000 tons, should not be disposed of in a way likely to dislocate world markets. A British mission was proceeding thither and Britain had suggested the establishment of an Inter Allied Disposals Board. The French had arranged not to license exports exceeding the average rate of export in 1922.

Replying to Sir John Simon (Liberal Member for Spen Val

...porting the matter to a ...ecial conference.
...view of the determination ... the National Union of ...omotive Engineers and Fire... ... to strike importance is ... to an unexpected visit ... headquarters to-day of ... Arthur Henderson, the ... of the Labour Party. ... is believed to be connected with ...forts at mediation.

Preparing for a Fight.

Jan. 17.

Bicycles and motorcycles are undergoing overhaul in anticipation of the beginning of the railway strike on Sunday at midnight. The railway companies express confidence of their ability to run a good service with drivers not beonging to the affected union. —Reuter.

FACTORY DISASTER AT BRADFORD

Many Employees in Collapse of Roof of Spinning Mill Building

London, Jan. 10.

Over 30 employees of the Zetand spinning mills at Bradford were buried this morning owing to the collapse of the roof of the building, which brought down a lot of heavy machinery from the top floor on the workers beneath. Twenty persons have up to the present been extricated more or less severely injured. Twelve are believed to be still buried, of whom six answered to their names, showing that they are still alive.

Later.

Two dead bodies have hitherto been recovered.

Later.

The bodies of three men and one woman have been recovered. Fifteen others have been taken to hospital. Those buried included a number of girls. It is believed that all the missing are now out of the wreckage though the search is continuing.—Reuter.

CALCUTTA OUTRAGE

European Murdered Apparently in Mistake for High Police Official

Calcutta, Jan. 13.

An armed Bengalee to-day shot and mortally wounded a European, Mr. Ernest Day, and then ran off and shot and seriously injured a taxi-driver who had joined in the pursuit. The Bengalee ran a quarter of a mile firing indiscriminately. He then fired and slightly wounded the driver of a private car who refused to take him up. The assailant was subsequently arrested.

It was at first thought that the Bengalee had run amok but, according to the newspapers, investigations point to the conclusion that Mr. Day had been shot in mistake for a high police official.

There is very strong evidence that the crime was committed by a prominent member of the Bengali revolutionary party. The cartridges used were of a Continental type, which cannot be purchased in India, but were the same as those used in the murder in Calcutta of a sub-postmaster in August.—Reuter.

Admission by the Murderer

Calcutta, Jan. 15.

Gopinathsaha, the Bengalee arrested in connexion with the murder of Mr. Ernest Day, made a statement in court that he intended to kill Mr. Tegart, the Commissioner of Police, but unfortunately killed an innocent man. He hoped that some patriot would complete his unfinished task.—Reuter.

Note.—Mr. Ernest Day was shot and mortally wouded by a Bengalee in Calcutta on January 13. His assailant in endeavouring to escape ran for a quarter of a mile, firing indiscriminately. He seriously wounded a taxi-cab driver and slightly wounded a driver of a private car before he was arrested. The crime is believed to be the work of a prominent member of the Bengal Revolutionary Party.—Reuter.

WHITE AUSTRALIA

Lord Leverhulme's Criticism of Policy which Is Retarding Commonwealth's Advance

Newcastle, N.S.W., Jan. 11.

Lord Leverhulme, in an interview, expressed the opinion that the "white Australia" policy was retarding development of the Commonwealth and declared that it would be impossible to develop the Northern Territory while such a policy was maintained.—Reuter.

London, Jan. 11.

Mr. S. M. Bruce, the Australian Prime Minister, in a statement with regard to Lord Leverhulme's view of the "white Australia" policy, says that those with lifelong experience of conditions in North Australia emphatically dissent from Lord Leverhulme's view that it is impossible to develop that part of the continent by "white" labour. The people of Australia are unanimously determined to maintain the "white Australia" policy and to avoid in its development those problems of mixed races which have been found insoluble in other countries.—Reuter.

Melbourne, Jan. 11.

The captain of a Japanese lugger has been sentenced to six months' imprisonment for secretly landing six Japanese in Queensland.—Reuter.

THE LITTLE ENTENTE AND RUSSIA

Waiting on Great Powers in Question of Recognition

Belgrade, Jan. 14.

The Little Entente will subordinate its action with regard to the re-establishment of relations with Soviet Russia to the attitude of the principal Allies and in the event of recognition of Russia by Britain and Italy it will leave each of its members free to act as special circumstances warrant.

It was emphasized at the Conference that the Little Entente was not seeking in any way to form a Continental barrier against the policy of Britain.

The exchange of views at the Conference with regard to the Hungarian loan has paved the way for the final deliberations in London on January 16.—Reuter.

Belgrade, Jan. 12.

The Little Entente conference has resulted in complete agreement to continue the policy of peace in foreign affairs. It is noted with satisfaction that the difficulties between Yugo-Slavia and Italy are being overcome and that an amicable solution is likely.—Reuter.

RUSSO-GERMAN TRADE

Agreement Under Discussion at Moscow: Political Issues Also to Be Settled

Riga, Jan. 15.

Discussions between Russia and Germany with regard to a settlement of commercial relations between the two countries, based on the Treaty of Rapallo, which began in Berlin in June last year, have been resumed in Moscow.

Besides a detailed trade agreement it will be necessary to work out a scheme of Consular representation and also to decide questions only remotely connected with trade. Several agreements have already been concluded but will not be enforced until the final settlement of all the subjects now being discussed.

M. Drodovsky is chief of the Russian delegation and Herr von Koerner head of the German representatives.—Reuter.

OBITUARY

Mr. G. Clapperton

New York, Jan. 12.

Mr. George Clapperton, Vice-President of the Commercial Cable Company, died to-day.—Reuter's American Service.

Sir R. D. Muir

London, Jan. 14.

The death is announced of Sir Richard David Muir at the age of 66. He had been a Bencher of the Middle Temple since 1909 and Recorder of Colchester since 1911.

Sir Richard Muir began his career on the Parliamentary staff of the "Times." He was called to the Bar in 1884 and became Senior Treasury Counsel at the Central Criminal Court in 1908.—Reuter.

EARTHQUAKE PROPHET

Surprising Predictions of an Italian Sculptor

Rome, Jan. 11.

The "Messagero" publishes an interview with the sculptor, Signor Raphael Bendani, whose recent surprisingly accurate earthquake forecasts have astonished scientists.

Signor Bendandi devotes his whole spare time to the study of seismography and has reached conclusions which seem likely to revolutionize all previous theories with regard to the forecasting of seismic phenomena. He foretold on December 20 earthquake shocks in America on December 21 and in the Ægean Sea, on January 2. He also predicts slight shocks in America on the night of January 15 and the morning of January 20.

Signor Bendandi proposes to reveal his theory as soon as his researches are sufficiently advanced.—Reuter.

SOVIET AND AMERICA

Inquiry to Be Opened of Red Propaganda in the U. S.

Washington, Jan. 12.

The Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate have finally decided to conduct an investigation into the State Department's allegations of the complicity of the Soviet Government in revolutionary propaganda in the United States, which Senator Borah's resolution proposing recognition of the Soviet has made necessary. The hearings will be public and will be conducted by a subcommittee of which Senator Borah is likely to be Chairman.—Reuter's American Service.

AMERICA'S SHUT DOOR

Immigration Restriction to Be Drawn Still Tighter

Washington, Jan. 12.

The House of Representatives Immigration Committee, drafting the new Bill, has voted in favour of restriction of immigration to two per cent. of the number of each country's nationals resident in the United States in 1890, instead of the present law of three per cent. of those residing in the United States in 1910, with an annual minimum quota of 200 from each nation. The clause for admission of blood relatives of foreign citizens now in America up to two per cent. was deleted, but it was agreed to allow unrestricted entry of wives and husbands of citizens and their children under 16 years of age and their parents if over 55 years of age.—Reuter's American Service.

PARIS, Jan. 16.—France has declined the Spanish request to modify the Tangiers Convention, but is willing to consider the granting of concessions elsewhere in Morocco.—Reuter.

AMERICAN AIRSHIP IN A GALE

Dirigible Destined for Pole Broken Away in Tempest at 55 Miles an Hour

Lakehurst, N. J., Jan. 16.

The naval dirigible Shenandoah, which is earmarked for the naval aerial expedition to the North Pole in the summer, broke away from its mooring mast in the course of a gale today. The airship carried a crew of 20.

The dirigible was undergoing a test. It has apparently been damaged, for fragments of the outer rigging flattered to the ground. The wind was blowing at the rate of 55 miles an hour.

Captain McCrary, who was on board when the vessel broke away, was confident, however, that she would hold.

The dirigible was last seen drifting towards the northwest in heavy wind and rain.—Reuter.

Westfield, N. J., Jan. 16.

The Shenandoah passed here at a considerable speed, flying low with engines roaring. The crew were apparently trying to turn the airship against the wind.—Reuter's American Service.

New York, Jan. 17.

The Captain of the Shenandoah has wirelessed saying: "All O. K. Will outride storm. Holding our own."—Reuter.

Shenandoah Safe.

Lakehurst, N.J., Jan. 16.

The Shenandoah has ridden out of the storm and is returning home. A wireless message from the Commander when over Keyport says that all six engines are working against a thirty-mile gale.

Later.

The Shenandoah has been brought to ground.

The airship was safely housed at 4,10 this morning. All on board are well. The vessel is not damaged except for rents in the outer bag.—Reuter's American Service.

THE GROUNDING OF THE LEVIATHAN

Narrow and Tortuous Channel and Erratic Tides

New York, Jan. 10.

Sir Bertram Hayes, Captain of the Majestic, commenting on the recent grounding of the Leviathan, agreed with the testimony of Captain Hartley, of the Leviathan, before the Commission of Inquiry that the stranding of the Leviathan was due to the narrowness and tortuousness of the channel and the erratic tides. He said that the channel had too little water for such unwieldy craft as the Majestic and the Leviathan. "It is terrible," he said, "to have to wind one's way up the bay against winds, tides and currents and continually to dodge small craft which dart across a steamer's path without restriction. — Reuter's American Service.

CHANGE OF CONSTITUTION IN GREECE

Venizelos as Premier

Athens, Jan. 10.

M. Venizelos to-day stated that he would resume the portfolio of Foreign Affairs with a view to re-establishing cordial relations with foreign Powers. He would personally superintend the organization of the plebiscite on the question of the change in the Constitution.—Reuter.

Athens, Jan. 11.

M. Venizelos has accepted the Premiership.

M. Roussos will be Minister of Foreign Affairs.—Reuter.

London, January 11.—The Dutch steamer Holendrecht was sunk in collision with the British str. Orea to-day off Woolwich Dockyard.—Reuter.

BRITISH TRADE RETURNS

Increases over Estimates

London, Jan. 10.

The Board of Trade figures for the year 1923 are as follows:—

	1922.	1923.
	£	£
Imports	1,003,000,000	1,093,000,000
Exports	719,000,000	767,000,000
Re-exports	103,000,000	118,000,000

Allowing for the changed basis due to the fact that South Ireland in April became a Free State, the Board of Trade estimates for imports for 1923 have actually increased by £25,000,000, exports by £20,000,000 and re-exports by £6,000,000.—Reuter.

GERMAN SHIPS AT SCAPA

A Kent Firm's Contract with Government to Raise them

London, Jan. 11.

A Queenborough (Kent) firm has entered into a contract with the Admiralty to raise the 68 German warships sunk at Scapa Flow.

Many of these vessels will be sold to shipbreakers while others will be used for target practice.—Reuter.

EGYPTIAN NATIONALISTS

The Demand for Independence

Cairo, Jan. 12.

In to-day's elections the Zaghlulists swept the board, 101 being elected out of 109 results. The remaining 105 results will be known to-morrow.

The Prime Minister has been defeated.

The elections passed off quietly. —Reuter.

Cairo, Jan. 14.

The official election results show that the Zaghlulists have obtained 150 seats, the Liberal-Constitutionalists 14, the Wafdanists 2 and the Independents 4. Forty-one constituencies will vote again on January 17 owing to the candidates failing to obtain the requisite majorities. The Zaghlulists expect to win most of these seats.

Zaghlul Pasha, in the course of a manifesto rejoicing over the "splendid victory of patriotic Egyptians," says although many chose a different course and acted wrongfully, he is prepared to welcome them back. He adds that externally Egypt is united in demanding complete independence. Internally Egyptians are free to differ.—Reuter.

THE MEXICAN REBELLION

Rebels' Claim to Have Blockaded Tampico

El Paso, Jan. 14.

According to wireless messages, the Mexican revolutionaries claim to have blockaded Tampico. They state that their "Navy" is outside prohibiting all entry into or departure from the port, while their military forces are threatening an early attack on the land side.—Reuter's American Sesrvice.

Government Claiming Success

London, Jan. 15.

The Mexican Legation in London states that as a result of the engagements at Jalisco and Vera Cruz the rebels have retired in disorder. Reuter.

Washington, Jan. 15.

It is understood that the Government will shortly inform General Huerta that proper American commerce with Tampico must not be interfered with.—Reuter's American Service.

New Orleans, Jan. 15.

The police authorities state that they have been requested by agents of the Department of Justice to assist in rounding up a force of 100 deserters from a Mexican gunboat at present being sons and seriously wounding two. Fifteen others were hit.

It is reported from Mayence that as a result of the assassination of Herr Heintz the representative of the Rhineland High Commission has prohibited entry into the Palatinate of non-residents from unoccupied Germany and has ordered the closing of the Rhine bridges, except at Ludwigshafen and Mannheim. A curfew has been imposed at Speyer and all meetings are forbidden.—Reuter.

Berlin, Jan. 11.

The death of one of those wounded at Speyer makes the number of the victims six.—Reuter.

London, Jan. 11.

A telegram from Coblenz states that the occupation authorities, owing to the imminent danger of a fresh separatist revolt, have again armed the German police. The separatists have strengthened their garrison in the castle at Coblenz.—Reuter.

The Heintz Murder.

Paris, Jan. 12.

It is stated that an inquiry revealed that from 15 to 20 persons participated in the Speyer outrage. One was accidentally killed by his companions.

A message from Speyer says that a representative of the Rhineland High Commission has received a letter from Frankfort declaring that the five signatories after the assassination of Herr Heintz have succeeded in regaining unoccupied territory safe and sound and expressing satisfaction at the murder, adding that other traitors will not escape them.—Reuter.

Germany's Search for Compromise

Brussels, Jan. 11.

The Belgian reply to the German memorandum of December 24 regarding the administration of the occupied territories says that discussion of [illegible] vivendi must be restricted to details of the régime of pledges and rejects certain administrative proposals sought to be introduced by Germany.—Reuter.

Paris, Jan. 11.

The [illegible] Note in reply to the German memorandum regarding the administration of the occupied territories was handed today to the [illegible] d'Affaires, who [illegible] that the door remained open for further conversations.—Reuter.

A Hitch in Franco-British Negotiations Regarding Inquiry

Paris, Jan. 1[illegible].

That a hitch has occurred in the negotiations between the British and French Governments on the [illegible] inquiry into the separatist movement in the Palatinate is manifested by the [illegible] visits to the Quai d'Orsay.

It appears that Britain suggested an independent inquiry on the spot, but France insists that the inquiry must be inter-Allied and declares that any British investigator must be accompanied by a French officer.—Reuter

British Conditions

London, Jan. 14.

Reuter's Agency understands that the British Government has informed the French Government that it does not object to the despatch of two French officials to Coblenz to inquire into conditions there provided the same facilities are given to Mr. R. H. Clive, the British Consul-General at Munich, for a similar mission in the Palatinate, but it is pointed out that there are already a score of French officials in the British area fully free to study and report on the situation.

The British view is that the Rhineland High Commission has no power to recognize the Separatist movement in the Palatinate and that the people of the Palatinate, if they wish to break away from Germany, have machinery in the Weimar Constitution whereby only a one-third vote is necessary for holding a plebiscite in that connexion.—Reuter.

Paris, Jan. 14.

It is understood that M. Tirard, the President of the Inter-Allied High Commission, has chosen his secretary, M. Filliol, to accompany Mr. Clive and has also asked Lieutenant-Colonel Richier to proceed to Cologne to inquire with regard to secret organizations whose activities, the French allege, led to bloodshed in the French zone, particularly in teh Bonn district.—Reuter.

French Accused of Deliberate Encouragiugenent

Mannheim, Jan. 16.

In the course of conversations between Mr. Clive, the British Consul-General at Munich, and representatives of all the political parties in the Palatinate and also the heads of the Catholic and Evangelist Churches, it was asserted that it was only by the protection of the French General de Metz and the French district authorities that the separatists were able to occupy the Palatinate.

The delegates handed Mr. Clive a manifesto declaring that the Palatinate would never submit to the despotism of the so-called Separatist Government.—Reuter.

GERMAN DEBTS RE-CONSIDERED

First Meeting of Committee of Experts: American View of Europe's Danger

Paris, Jan. 14.

The first expert committee, that dealing with German currency, met at 11 this morning in the presence of the Reparations Commission. M. Barthou, the President of the Commission, delivered a speech of welcome.

General Charles G. Dawes, the American delegate, replying on [illegible] of the committee, of which [illegible] The success of the committee depends chiefly on whether, in the public mind and in the conscience of the Allies and of the world, there is adequate conception of the great disaster facing each Ally and Europe unless common-sense is crowned king."

[illegible] that the Reparations Commission [illegible] of the experts all the necessary documents. The experts would control their method of procedure and would hear Germany in the form which appeared the most useful to them. "We eagerly wish, for the common good, that her Government shall facilitate your arduous and complex task."—Reuter.

RUHR COAL OUTPUT

Complete Success for Regie Claimed by France

Paris, Jan. 12.

Replying to a question on the [illegible] occupation of the Ruhr, the Minister of Public Works, M. Le Trocquer declared that the occupation could be divided into [illegible] that of the exploitation by the Regie, and that of agreements. It could now be considered that the Regie of Railways and Mines had gained the day.

Owing to the agreements in force since October 23, production in the Ruhr had increased during the last week of December to 166,013 tons of coke and 131,000 tons of coal, which had been despatched to the French frontiers. These figures, moreover, had now been exceeded, the lats week having been one of festivals.—French Wireless through Reuter.

MALTA, Jan. 14.—Admiral Sir Percy Scott, who was seriously ill in hospital at Bighi, has recovered.—Reuter.

FRENCH FINANCIAL STRINGENCY

Emergency Measures to Meet Expenditure and Stay Decline of Franc

Paris, Jan. 15.

A meeting of the Cabinet, presided over by President Millerand, to-day decided to submit to the Chamber on Thursday Bills to improve the financial situation, to balance the Budget, and to solve the exchange crisis by suppressing tax evasion, effecting economies in public services, postponing all further expenditure and increasing all taxes from May 1.

The Chamber will be asked to vote on the Bills immediately and make their passage a question of confidence.

The Government will take immediate measures to prevent speculation in regard to the franc and Government securities.

Expenditure which has hitherto figured as recoverable would be henceforth covered by corresponding revenue.

It is anticipated that the increase of all taxes by 20 per cent. would yield Frs. 5,000,000,000 and the other measures Frs. 3,000,000,000.

Later.

A section of the opposition having demanded an immediate debate on the financial situation, the Government insisted on postponement of the debate till January 17, making it a matter of confidence which resulted in a vote of 388 to 189 in favour of the Government.—Reuter.

Paris, Jan. 15.

Writing on the present fall of the franc, the "Matin" emphasizes that there is no material reason, no legitimate commercial operation which justifies the wild exchange.

The "Journal des Débats" states that the French people maintain complete confidence because they know the state of the wealth of the country and its vitality. A single figure is sufficient to indicate what are the real resources of France. The normal yield from the permanent revenue and the Budget recoveries in 1923 reached a figure higher by Frs. 3,000,000,000 than the revenue realized in 1922, namely, Frs. 21,520,836,000 for the past year.—French Wireless through Reuter.

ALLIES' WAR DEBTS TO BRITAIN

British Chambers of Commerce Pressing for Some Attempt to Obtain Payment

London, Jan. 14.

The Association of British Chambers of Commerce has sent letters to Mr. Baldwin, Marquess Curzon and Mr. Neville Chamberlain drawing their attention to the fact that France and Italy at present owe £1,139,000,000 to Britain, the interest on which at 5 per cent. is equal to over 1/- in the £ income-tax at present paid in Britain and that the repayment of the American loan to Britain of £856,000,000 will cost £36,000,000 a year, which is equal to 8½d. in the £ income tax.

The Council of the Association are of opinion, in view of the adverse effect of high taxation on the trade of the country, that the Government should consider whether steps should not be taken to approach the French and Italian Governments with a view to securing a payment on account pending the settlement of the debts on a fair basis with the object of relieving the British tax-payer.—Reuter.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—A Republican caucus of the House of Representatives has instructed the Ways and Means Committee to conclude its report on the Tax Reduction Bill for the consideration of the House before reporting on the Soldiers' Bonus Bill.—Reuter's American Service.

FRANCE'S WAR DEBTS TO AMERICA

Unpaid: While She Lends to Others: Senator Borah's Caustic Comment

Washington, Jan. 16.

Senator Borah referred in the Senate to-day to the French war debt. He called attention to the fact that France, while unwilling to come to a settlement with the United States, was lending large sums to European Governments.

Senator Borah characterized France as the greatest military power that Europe had ever known and declared that American taxpayers were meeting the cost of her army of 730,000 men as surely as if it was their own.

The speaker read extracts from the speeches of French and Italian statesmen and declared: "They are preparing their own consciences and the consciences of their people for repudiation of their debt." He acquitted the Italian and French peoples as a whole of entertaining such a proposition yet.—Reuter's American Service.

THE LOAN TO HUNGARY

Allies Meeting in London to Consider Methods

London, Jan. 16.

A sub-committee of the League of Nations, including Count Bethlen, the Hungarian Premier, and Dr. Benes, the Czecho-Slovak Premier, met in private to-day at St. James's Palace to consider the proposed international loan of £10,000,000 to Hungary.

It is understood that M. Claudel, the French representative, urged that the loan should be for a shorter period than 20 years as originally planned, but Lord Robert Cecil, the British representative, opposed this.—Reuter.

CONTROL OF TANGIER

International Bargain: British Interests Insufficiently Protected

London, Jan. 16.

In the House of Commons today Mr. Ronald McNeill made a long statement with regard to the Tangier Convention. He emphasized that agreement had been secured for the permanent neutralization of Tangier and the maintenance of the open door by establishing an international regime, which would effectually prevent any one Power from being predominant.

Mr. Lloyd George asked who controlled the port.

The Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs said that the share capital of the International Company would be distributed as follows: France 30 per cent. Britain and Spain 20 per cent. each, the Shereefian Government, the International Administration and the other countries 10 per cent. each. Consequently only 30 per cent. was in the hands of France (Opposition cries of "No!" and "What about the Shereefian Government?)

Replying to Mr. Lloyd George, Mr. McNeill said he was confident that the Commons would be given an opportunity of discussing the agreement if they desired.

In answer to a question from Mr. Carlyon Bellairs (Conservative member for Maidstone), Mr. McNeill said that he was unable to say whether the Committee of Defence had approved the Convention before its signature.

Colonel John Ward (Independent Labour member for Stoke-upon-Trent) declared that the agreement practically handed over the port to France.—Reuter.

LONDON, Jan. 13.—The Prince of Wales returned to London from Paris yesterday evening.—Reuter.

BRITISH RAILWAYS DISPUTE

Companies Uncompromising on Wages Award: Strike Likely to Begin at Any Moment

London, Jan. 12.

The railway companies having refused to make any concession and adopted an uncompromising attitude, the Associated Society of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen has officially announced that a strike is inevitable and may commence at any time. The union is perfecting arrangements for stoppage.

Jan. 12.

In connexion with the threatened railway strike, the secretary of the Associated Society of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen later announced that a strike cannot occur immediately. He asserted that it would stop all goods traffic into London and passenger traffic.

The Society comprises 39,000 drivers and firemen, but as the National Union of Railwaymen, which has accepted the Wages Board's award, claims to have a considerable number of drivers and firemen in its membership, the companies might be enabled to run modified services.

It is believed that, failing a settlement, the strike will synchronize with the coming into operation of the findings of the Wages Board, which the companies may decree at any time after January 19.—Reuter.

London, Jan. 13.

The General Council of the Trade Union Congress has intervened in the railway dispute and decided to appoint a committee to meet the railway managers and the executive of the Associated Society of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen, with a view to ending the deadlock or at least postponing the operation of the Railway Wages Board's award and the commencement of the strike pending negotiations.—Reuter.

London, Jan. 14.

The General Council of the Trades Union Congress to-day considered the railway trouble and adjourned pending further developments. It was decided to appoint an emergency committee if necessary.—Reuter.

Impending Mine Trouble

London, Jan. 14

A ballot of Yorkshire and Northumberland miners has resulted overwhelmingly in favour of termination of the National Wages Agreement. The result of a ballot to be taken throughout the country will be announced on Thursday and is expected to be similar.—Reuter.

Jan. 16.

Mr. J. H. Thomas, M.P., the General Secretary of the National Union of Railwaymen, in a statement yesterday emphasized that the members of the Union would remain at work in the event of a strike. He said that he stood by his signature of the award of the National Wages Board which the Union endorsed. Mr. Thomas expected the Union to honour the endorsement, regardless of the consequences, but the Associated Society of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen, in a manifesto last night, says that the official date and time for the cessation of work have been sent to all the branches in order to secure simultaneous stoppage throughout the country and exhorts the members to strike at the appointed hour.—Reuter.

Arthur Henderson's Significant Visit to Railwaymen

London, Jan. 16.

At the close of a conference of port employers and the Transport-workers' Union, on the latter's claim for an increase of dockers' wages throughout the country by two shillings a day, it was announced that the employers had informed the Union that they were unable in the present condition of trade to concede any increase in wages. The Union is

SATURDAY'S TELEGRAMS

BRITAIN'S POLITICAL DILEMMA

A Triangular Parliament: Labour Vote of Non-Confidence in the Government: Mr. Asquith's Indictment of the Government: The Dangers of Socialism

London, Jan. 17.

In the House of Commons this afternoon Mr. J. R. Clynes moved the Labour vote of non-confidence in the Government. Mr. Asquith advised all Liberals to support the motion.

The Prince of Wales and the Duke of York entered the Peers' Gallery as Mr. Clynes was speaking.

The momentous debate opened quietly and there were many vacant seats owing to the fact that the division is arranged for Monday night.

Mr Clynes's indictment of the Government's foreign policy did not raise a single Labour cheer. The first sign of life was when he aroused general cheers by references to the Dominions. He said that Mr. Ramsay Macdonald on Tuesday gave assurance that the pledges, so far as they had been made, would be carried out and the House given a full opportunity of deciding the important issues raised. Mr. Clynes's own view was that Dominions trade showed substantial opportunities and prospects of improvement.

Our Duty to the Dominions.

The speaker emphasized the necessity of not neglecting European markets but, when we had done our best with our neighbours, he agreed that some sense of special duty remained in relation to the Dominions. The question was how far we could stimulate Dominions trade without increasing taxation and disturbing the foundations of the fiscal system. We must inquire into alternatives. Transport improvement constituted one line of policy and perhaps substantial encouragement to our Dominions fellow-workers might be found in revealing, by inquiry or otherwise, the facts concerning where went the enormous difference between what the Dominions producer of food got for his labour and what the consumer here paid for it. Such avenues of exploration should receive purely non-partisan attention (Cheers). All conferences up to the present had been a close Government preserve (cheers), ignoring the growing interest of Labour. If we were to lift Dominions considerations to a non-Party level, there must be far more conferences on non-Party lines.

Voluntary Emigration.

The question of emigration was involved. The consequences of voluntary transference of population must be seriously considered. Anything of the sort must be carried out on agreed terms. He was satisfied that such terms would benefit Labour both here and in the Dominions. The terms must include adequate training and technical and general education for the new duties, satisfactory remuneration and security of employment for the worker, before the latter would agree to emigrate.

In conclusion Mr. Clynes disclaimed any desire on the part of the Labour party to foster class strife.

Mr. Asquith's Indictment.

Mr. Asquith roused Opposition enthusiasm by advising his supporters to vote in favour of the motion to eject the Government, which had been guilty of vacillation and impotence at home and abroad. He said that he had not known an administration which had done more actual mischief. There had been recently an epidemic of political hysteria. He had been cajoled, wheedled, almost caressed, threatened, browbeaten and all but blackmailed to be the saviour of society (Opposition laughter), but he declined to believe that the sun was going to set on the prosperity of Britain even by Mr. Macdonald coming into office. Translated into plain prose, saving society meant Liberals and Conservatives combining to keep Labour out (Cries of "No." and laughter).

The Liberal leader continued that there could be no question of coalition between or fusion of Liberals and Labour because it was impossible to bridge their differences on fundamental issues of national policy, but on many social and national questions there was room for cooperation not only of Liberals and Labour but of many Conservatives.

Sir W. Joynson-Hicks, the Minister of Health, stressed the country's emphatic rejection of any Socialist Government in the elections. He declared that the action of the Liberals in putting the Socialists into office would prevent the Liberal Party from coming into office for a hundred years (loud Ministerial cheers).

Major-General J. E. B. Seely (Liberal) suggested a conference of the leaders of the parties with high judicial authority to consider the political situation.

Mr. Frank Hodges (Labour Member for Lichfield), in a maiden speech, dealt in an abstract form with Labour's political aspirations. He referred deprecatingly to the sympathetic attitude of the Liberals towards Labour, recalling in this connexion recent Liberal associations with Labour. He declared that the scientific organization of industry was the crying political need.

A Recalcitrant Conservative.

A significant speech by the Conservative Member for Cardiff, Mr. James Childs Gould, who severely criticized the Government's advisers, indicated that some Conservatives would support the amendment. The speaker assured Mr. Baldwin that he would not be silent when the matter of holding an election was thrashed out elsewhere.

Sir Philip Lloyd-Greame, the President of the Board of Trade, expressed delight at Mr. Clynes's speech about Empire development and emigration.

Lieut.-Comdr. A. Cooper Rawson, Conservative Member for Brighton, gave notice of an amendment that, before any Ministry founded on principles of Socialism was formed, a general election on the issue of Socialism should be held.

Winston Churchill's Gloom.

Mr. Winston Churchill is evidently among the Liberals who do not relish the idea of supporting Labour. He has published a letter in which he declares that the enthronement of a Socialist Government in office would be a serious national misfortune comparable with defeat in war. The writer contends that the exhortation, "Give a chance to Labour," only really means giving a fair chance to a faction and a manoeuvre. He paints a dark picture of the result of any Socialist minority rule and suggests that after Mr. Clynes's amendment to the Address has been carried, the House of Commons should further record its repudiation of Socialism and its distrust of the advocates of the capital levy and nationalization.

Britain's Trade in the Balance.

Sir Eric Geddes, in his speech at the annual meeting of the Federation of British Industries in London to-day, expressed the hope that the Labour Government, if it came into power, would seek the advice of the Federation, as its predecessors had done, but to an even greater degree because the Labour Party anyhow could not claim at present to have within their ranks the experience, which the older parties had, of superior direction of great industrial undertakings or experience in governing.

A serious problem would face any Government which did anything to throw more men out of employment by upsetting the confidence on which British trade flourished in the world. The trade and prosperity of Britain were at present balanced on a knife edge and very little might turn the balance either way.

Capital Leaving the Country.

Undoubtedly the advent of a Labour Government had caused uneasiness. There had been nothing like a panic, but a lot of investment was being done abroad, probably to a great extent foreign investment, still capital was leaving the country, and industry and employment would suffer, and the purchasing power of the home market would decrease.

The position was a very delicate one. It was a time for careful and cautious statesmanship, not panicmongering or wild talk. We must keep our heads and consider only the country's good.

L-24, Singapore, Persian Oil.

In the House of Commons today, replying to a question, Mr. Amery, the First Lord of the Admiralty, stated that there was no reasonable doubt that the flooding of the L-24 and the death of her crew immediately followed the collision.

Replying to questions relative to the Singapore scheme, Mr. Amery said that preliminary work had been begun. The actual expenditure up to the present was not great, but liabilities of about £150,000 had been incurred. The land had been provided free of cost by the Colony. It was proposed to carry out the principal works by contract.

Asked whether anything had been done with a view to the sale of the Government holdings of Anglo-Persian Oil shares, Mr. Neville Chamberlain, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, said that 18 months ago the proposal to sell the shares had been rejected on the recommendation of a Cabinet committee. Recently further proposals by various oil interests had been submitted, but the Government had had no time to reach a final decision and intended to refer the matter to a Cabinet committee.—Reuter.

IMPENDING STRIKES IN BRITAIN

No Further Hope of Settlement of Railwaymen's Dispute: Managers Adamant

London, Jan. 17.

The situation in regard to the threatened railway strike is naturally embarrassing to the political division of the Labour party on the eve of their taking over the Government.

This explains Mr. Arthur Henderson's activities yesterday, which, it is understood, were in the nature of sounding opinion as to the possibility of calling a meeting of the Labour Joint Council, but the non-success of his efforts is indicated by a subsequent statement by Mr. J. Bromley, the secretary of the Associated Society of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen, that he "did not see a ray of hope."

Party leaders are urging their followers if possible to remain in London for the week-end so as to ensure their presence in the House of Commons for the division on Monday in the event of the threatened railway strike materializing.

Later.

In spite of the official announcement that Sunday midnight has been fixed for the strike of the locomotive engineers and firemen, industrial circles are optimistic that trouble will yet be averted as a result of unofficial conversations now proceeding. It is believed that the companies will reconsider their attitude.

Railway Managers' Attitude.

Later.

"This is the finish," indicating that the strike preparations would go forward, said the secretary of the Associated Society of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen to-night on learning that a statement had been issued by the railway managers, wherein they recapitulated their position and said that they had no alternative but to apply the decision of the National Wages Board. He suggested that the managers had been influenced by the attitude of Mr. J. H. Thomas, M.P., the secretary of the rival National Union of Railwaymen. —Reuter.

The Miner's Ballot

London, Jan. 17.

It it officially announced that the ballot of miners has resulted in 510,000 to 114,000 votes against giving three months' notice to terminate the National Wages Agreement.

The miners' executive will meet the mine-owners this afternoon. They are expected to endeavour to negotiate a revision of the agreement.

In the event of failure of the negotiations a further ballot and a two-thirds majority of the voters are necessary before a strike is possible.—Reuter.

FINANCIAL STATUS OF FRANCE

Government Measures to Restore Stability of the Franc: M. Poincare's Optimism

Paris, Jan. 18.

The Cabinet has decided, with a view to the restoration of the franc, to introduce a bill authorizing the suspension of the importation of commodities not corresponding to national necessities.

M. Poincaré, in the course of a speech in connexion with the introduction of the Government's financial proposals, designed to remedy the position of France, declared that, in spite of appearances, France's position was increasingly flourishing. He stated that the note circulation and the war budget had been substantially reduced as compared with the 1920 figures.

The Chamber of Deputies, by 360 votes to 215, subsequently postponed interpellation on the Pensions Act as the outcome of the Government stating that they would regard discussion in the light of a question of confidence. —Reuter.

U. S. AIRSHIP'S PROOF OF STABILITY

Severely Tested in a Gale

Washington, Jan. 17.

Secretary of the Navy Denby is delighted with the Shenandoah's exploit. He has telegraphed his congratulations to the crew and issued a statement that "from all our information it may positively be asserted that there is hardly a possibility that this ship will encounter in her Arctic expedition such a severe test as she has already met successfully." — Reuter's American Service.

HIMROD'S

Asthma Cure

GIVES INSTANT RELIEF.
No matter what your respiratory organs may be suffering from—whether ASTHMA, INFLUENZA, NASAL CATARRH OR ORDINARY COUGH you will find in this famous remedy a restorative power that is simply unequalled.

FAMED FOR FIFTY YEARS.
Sold in tins by all Chemists and Stores throughout the Country.
BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.

Dr. J. Collis Browne's
CHLORODYNE

The ORIGINAL and ONLY GENUINE

Acts like a charm in DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY AND CHOLERA

The Best Remedy known for COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS.

The Most Valuable Remedy ever discovered.
Effectually cuts short all attacks of SPASMS. Checks and arrests these too often fatal diseases :—
FEVER, CROUP, AGUE.
The only Palliative in NEURALGIA, GOUT, RHEUMATISM, TOOTHACHE.

Convincing Medical Testimony with each Bottle.
Sold in bottles by all Chemists

Prices in England 1/3 and 3/-

Always ask for a "Dr. COLLIS BROWNE"
Sole Manufacturers:
J. T. DAVENPORT, LTD., LONDON, S.E.

The China Mutual Life Insurance Co., Ld.

A BRITISH COMPANY

Registered under the Hongkong Ordinances and with the Board of Trade (England)

With Assets totalling Taels 10,165,190.33

AGENCIES THROUGHOUT ASIA

Policies free from all unnecessary conditions and restrictions. Reduction of Premiums for Home Residences repaired in port. Combined forces of police and Federal agents are proceeding to a house in the city where the deserters have barricaded themselves.—Reuter's American Service.

HEAD OFFICE: SHANGHAI

U. S. Cruisers Sent to Protect American Interests

Mexico City, Jan. 16.

The American Chargé d'Affaires has obtained the Obregon Government's permission for two United States warships to visit Vera Cruz and Tuxpam. The United States cruiser Tacoma is now en route to Vera Cruz.

It is [illegible] the representatives of three American banks are en route to Mexico City to negotiate a loan of 25,000,000 pesos to the Obregon Government.—Reuter's American Service.

U.S.S. Tacoma Aground.

Galveston, Jan. 16.

The United States cruiser Tacoma, on its way to Vera Cruz, went aground to-day on the Bantauillas Reefs, 16 miles from Vera Cruz. The cruiser has sent a wireless despatch to the American Consul at Vera Cruz that unless two strong tugs arrive within two hours it may be too late to pull off the warship.

Later

The United States light-cruise Richmond is standing by the cruiser Tacoma aground on the Bantauillas Reefs. The Government is sending naval tugs to the scene.—Reuter's American Service.

Engligh Lady Killed.

Mexico City, Jan. 16.

Mrs. Norman Brown Cave, the wife of a British mining engineer, was killed by a stray bullet during the fighting at Tapachuca.—Reuter's American Service.

GERMAN SEAMEN'S STRIKE

Demand for Same Rate of Pay as Given to British Sailors: Engineers Uneasy

London, Jan. 10.

A temporary settlement of the shipping dispute has been reached after a meeting of the British trade unions concerned and also the Captain of the Frankenwald, the agents of the company and the German Consul.

It has been decided to resume work pending the convocation of a conference in London which German shipowners will be requested to attend.—Reuter.

London, Jan. 13.

The German seamen's strike has been considerably extended following a conference of delegates from every ship affected at the London Docks, presided over by Mr. Havelock Wilson, which unanimously adopted a resolution pledging the men to stand firm.

Orders have been sent to all ports calling on seamen of German ships to cease work.—Reuter.

London, Jan. 15.

Five German crews, totalling 100 persons, have struck at Cardiff in response to a message from the London strike committee calling on all German seamen at British ports to strike unless the owners are prepared to give them the British seamen's rate of wages in British currency.

A crew sent from Germany to man the steamer Cardiff, sold to a German company, refused to travel from London to Newport, where the ship is berthed, until the owners had complied with the strike committee's order.

Owners Deaf to Men's Demands

London, Jan. 16.

Reuter's Agency learns that, replying to the proposal that a conference of German shipowners and the German seamen on strike should be held in London under the auspices of the British National Sailors' and Firemen's Union, German shipowners declare that [illegible] with British [illegible] about German [illegible] of the [illegible]. If British and German [illegible] are to be discussed, [illegible] must be taken by the total difference in the situation of the United Kingdom and Germany. Since November 1 German seamen's wages have been fully paid in gold currency based on the dollar and are therefore independent of all currency fluctuations.—Reuter.

DUTCH CABINET CRISIS

Government Carrying on But Naval Defence Scheme Postponed

The Hague, Jan. 15.

In the Second Chamber to-day, the Premier, Jkhr. de Beerenbrouck, declared that as no alternative Ministry had been formed since the defeat of his Government on October 26 over the question of building a fleet and as continuation of the Ministerial crisis was not in the interests of the country, he had decided to accept the decision of the Chamber as given on October 26 and to carry on the Government.

He therefore intended that measures for naval defence would not be enacted until steps had been taken to effect financial equilibrium, and concluded by appealing to the House to co-operate to solve the pending questions.—Reuter.

PILGRIMS' FAREWELL TO SIR A. GEDDES

Ambassador of Anglo-American Cooperation

New York, Jan. 16.

The Pilgrims' Club gave a farewell banquet in honour of Sir Auckland Geddes, the retiring British Ambassador, who made a speech pleading for a better understanding between America and Britain.

Loud applause greeted Sir Auckland Geddes's remark that he would return to England as a "kind of deputy assistant American Ambassador" to help to increase knowledge of the United States in Britain. Anglo-American cooperation would come, he said, not through Governmental agencies but through the people themselves.—Reuter's American Service.

U. S. WAR CLAIMS

The Debt-Funding Commiseion

Washington, Jan. 16.

President Coolidge has nominated Mr. Edward Nash Hurley, former Chairman of the United States Shipping Board, to the Democratic vacancy on the Debt-Funding Commission.

The President has sent to Congress the agreement for the funding of the Finnish War Debt to the United States of $9,000,000. Payments have already been begun.—Reuter's American Service.

A PARLIAMENT FOR INDO-CHINA

Governor's Important Declaration

Paris, Jan. 16.

The Indo-China newspapers publish reports of the session of the Government of Indo-China, opened by M. Martial Merlin, the new Governor-General, who in his opening speech announced [illegible] Parliament. It was becoming necessary that besides the Governor-General there should be an independent Assmbly with executive power. Deriving in a reasonable measure its authority from all the elements of wealth and labour in the country, this Assembly would be qualified [illegible] to the Governor-General the wishes of local public opinion and to support the defence at the metropolis of the primordial interests of Indo-China. Consequently it might gradually take on the true character not only of a financial assembly which fixes taxes and discusses budgets, but of a legislative council called upon to assist the Governor in all matters affecting the whole of the Indo-Chinese union.—French Wireless through Reuter.

ANGLO-FRENCH ENTENTE

Paris, Jan. 11.

The French newspapers emphasize the words spoken in the Chamber of Deputies yesterday by the President, M. Raoul Peret, on his re-election, "if the hour of rapprochements must soon sound, we must greet it with alacrity. No one hopes more than France that conflicts shall cease."

M. Doubergue, who was re-elected President of the Senate, declared in his speech to-day: "We have just heard said by a voice amongst our British friends which is at the moment a particularly authoritative one that everything that had occurred between them and us arose from misunderstandings which must quickly be dissipated. It is not France certainly who will oppose it if really there have only been misunderstandings." — French Wireless through Reuter.

JAPANESE NAVAL VISIT TO AUSTRALIA

Melbourne, Jan. 11.

The visiting Japanese Squadron was to-day given a very friendly official and popular welcome.

The Minister of Defence, Mr. Bowden, speaking at a civic reception emphasized Australia's special obligations to Japan in 1914 and in later years, adding: "In the war Japan and Britain were faithful allies. We trust that they will remain so in times of peace."

Vice-Admiral Saito said that Australia had given a splendid demonstration of her friendship on the occasion of the earthquake disaster.—Reuter.

Melbourne, Jan. 14.

Very cordial speeches were exchanged at a banquet given by the Federal Ministry to-day in honour of Vice-Admiral Saito and the officers of the visiting Japanese squadron.

Vice-Admiral Saito at the suggestion of the Treasurer, Dr. Earle Page, has requested Japan to send to the Australian War Museum a souvenir of the scrapped warship Abuki, which convoyed the first Australian troops to the front during the war.—Reuter.

Secret Marriage of an American Heiress

New York, Jan. 10.

Society has been surprised by a newspaper announcement of the marriage of Millicent, the 20-year old daughter of Colonel Huddleston Rogers and heiress to the $40,000,000 estate which her father inherited from the Standard Oil magnate, Mr. Rogers, to the 40-year old Austrian tennis-player, Count Ludgvig Salm von Hoogstraten.

The bride's parents, on learning of the marriage, cancelled passages for themselves and their daughter to Europe on January 12.—Reuter's American Service.

Aircraft Surveys

London, Jan. 11.

A number of Air Force officers will be attached to the air station at Plymouth for the purpose of organizing a development flight in connexion with the aircraft carrier, H. M. S. Pegasus, which is going to the East Indies in February for survey work. It is believed that a certain amount of survey work at Singapore will be carried out and aircraft will be used to assist photographic and other surveying from the air for the proposed naval base.—Reuter.

Disabled Dutch Steamer

Brest, Jan. 11.

During an unsuccessful attempt to tow the Dutch steamer, Rondo, which is disabled with a broken propeller-shaft, the captain and a member of the crew of a Dutch tug were injured and a seaman washed overboard. Two more Dutch tugs have gone to the assistance of the Rondo. The vessel was bound for Batavia.—Reuter.

French Trade Improving

Paris, Jan. 11.

The total of French imports for the first 11 months of last year amounted to 26,042,897,000 francs as against 18,905,540,000 francs for the same period in 1922, an increase of about 7,137,000,000 francs.

Exports for the period from January 1 to November 30, 1923, totalled 23,690,030,000 francs as against 16,377,930,000 for the corresponding period last year, an increase of 7,312,000,000.—French Wireless through Reuter.

Britain's Silk Industry

London, Jan. 12.

The final report of the Board of Trade Silk Industries Committee shows that the members are equally divided, two favouring the imposition of a duty on imported silk, and two, including the Chairman, Sir George Barnes, opposing it.—Reuter.

U. S. Presidency

Parkersburg, West Virginia, Jan. 11.

The State Democratic Executive Committee has endorsed the candidature of Mr. John W. Davis, the former Ambassador in London, for the Presidency.—Reuter's American Service.

British Trade Returns for December

London, Jan. 11.

The Board of Trade returns for December show that imports totalled £109,189,000 an increase of £7,604,000 as compared with November and British exports £1,652,000.—Reuter.

British Exhibition Opened in Holland

Amsterdam, Jan. 10.

The British Exhibition, organized under influential auspices, was opened to-day by Dr. Treub, former Minister of Finance and President of the Anglo-Dutch Society. All branches of British industry and many Dutch export firms are represented.—Reuter.

Canadian Ambassador to U.S

Toronto, Jan. 11.

The Minister of Defence, Mr. George P. Graham, in a speech here to-day stated that a Canadian Ambassador would shortly be appointed to Washington.—Reuter's American Service.

British Naval Cruise of the Empire

Zanzibar, Jan. 14.

The Sultan and crowds of Europeans and natives watched the arrival to-day of the battle-cruisers engaged in the Empire cruise. A detachment from each ship marched through the streets, which were gaily bedecked with flags and palms. Thousands of natives witnessed the march-past at which the Sultan took the salute. The natives who were allowed to visit the ships were speechless with amazement at the magnitude of the cruisers and the size of the guns.—Reuter.

Dollar Co.'s Purchase of "President" Ships

New York, Jan. 10.

Mr. Farley, on behalf of the Shipping Board, has sold seven "President" ships to the Dollar Steamship Company for $3,650,000 as compared with their original cost of $30,000,000.—Reuter's American Service.

Anglo-Greek Relations

London, Jan. 15.

Normal Anglo-Greek diplomatic relations have been resumed.

Marquess Curzon, communicating the fact, says that the British Government has every confidence in M. Venizelos's Ministry.—Reuter.

The Leviathan Seriously Damaged

New York, Jan. 16.

The liner Leviathan, which went aground in New York Harbour on December 21, sustained $250,000 damage. Repairs will not be completed before April 1.—Reuter's American Service.

ITEMS

LONDON, Jan. 15.—The death is announced of the Earl of Warwick, at the age of 70.—Reuter.

PESHAWAR, Jan. 14.—News has been received at the frontier that the gang responsible for the murders of British officers has surrendered to the Afghan Government.—Reuter.

MEXICO City, Jan. 11.—The War Office admits that the rebels have captured Pachuca but says that a large force of Federal troops is proceeding thither.—Reuter's American Service.

LONDON, Jan. 15.—Mr. Herbert James Stanuley, C.M.G., Imperial Secretary for South Africa, Has been appointed Governor of North Rhodesia as from April 1, when the Chartered Company's administration will terminate.—Reuter.

PARIS, Jan. 16.—From January 17 the wireless communications between France and Saigon, which up to the present have only functioned from France, will be utilized in both directions for the despatch of telegrams.—French Wireless through Reuter.

DELHI, Jan. 14.—It is understood that the forthcoming Indian budget for the current year will probably show a balance. This is important in view of the trouble over the last budget deficit which necessitated the Viceroy's certification of the salt tax.—Reuter.

LONDON, Jan. 11.—A body has been found at Rye, which is believed to be that of the American airman, Mr. Laurence Sperry, who crashed in the sea off Hastings on December 13 whilst on his way to Amsterdam. Mr. Sperry placed himself and his acroplane at the disposal of the Liberals during the election.—Reuter.

HAMBURG, Jan. 13.—The communist leader, Herr Urbahns, was arrested to-day at a meeting organized by communists in commemoration of Herr Wilhelm Liebknecht, the social democrat. The crowd threatened the police who used their firearms, resulting in one person being killed and two injured.—Reuter.

PARIS, Jan. 16.—It is reported that the 25th pontifical anniversary of the Maronite Patriarch has concluded with a general festival at which eminent representatives of the majority of the religious rites of the Grand Lebanon were represented. General Weygand drew a lesson from this fine example of union and recalled the part played by the Patriarch Hoyeck when in 1919 he came in the name of the Lebanon to ask the Powers for a French mandate over the country.—French Wireless through Reuter.

MUSSOLINI'S AVERSION TO PARLIAMENTS

A Hint of Their Succession by Congress of Experts

The Italian Chamber was re-opened at the end of November for the business of the session, and to expedite some urgent measures proposed by the Government of Signor Mussolini, states the "Daily Telegraph's" Rome correspondent. The sitting opened without any particular commotion in Rome or without exciting any great interest in the country generally, although among the measures proposed for immediate adoption is the renewal of dictatorial power for another year. The only persons opposed to this measure are some Republicans who together hardly muster 75 votes, whilst all the rest of the Chamber are disposed to vote for the measure, not only expeditiously but enthusiastically. Such is the change which has come over Italy in the last 12 months when even measures implying a complete break with Parliamentary traditions, and a suspension of the Constitution itself, hardly create a ripple on the placid surface of Italian political life. Five ex-Premiers, Signori Salandra, Giolitti, Orlando, Bonomi, and Facta will take part in the sitting, and there was even talk of Signor Nitti making his reappearance and voting for giving full powers to the Fascisti Government.

Signor Mussolini meanwhile is seriously considering the idea of abolishing Parliaments altogether. He expressed this view in the presence of a delegation of labour experts and industrial syndicates. A congress of experts with legislative powers might, according to him, be more useful than a mere elective political body, which appeals only to the vast masses, pandering to their ignorance, their cupidity, or their vices. Governments should be for the benefit of the greater number, but not by the greater number, is the principle on which Signor Mussolini bases his policy, and his profound conviction is that Parliaments representing only misguided, ignorant, and capricious masses are obsolete and no longer have any useful function in a modern State.

SECRET OF THE BUTTERFLIES

Millionaire's Papers to be Burned

Everyone knows the story of the farmer who, on seeing a white blackbird, raised his gun and shot it dead, saying: "I'll larn ye to be a rare bird!"

The Hon. Nathaniel Charles Rothschild included a paragraph in his will which will do much to prevent unscrupulous and greedy collectors "larning" the rarer species of butterflies to be rare. He gave directions for the destruction of papers and letters relating to entomological information, and requested the executors to insert in the "Entomologist," the "Entomologist's Monthly Magazine," and the "Entomologist's Record" the following advertisement:

"The executors of the will of the late Hon. Nathaniel Rothschild in accordance with a direction to that effect contained in his said will, hereby notify that they have burned unopened all the letters, books, maps and papers in his possession directly or indirectly giving the localities of British lepidoptera received by him from his various entomological friends and acquaintances."

The explanation of this curious clause in the will is the prevalence of butterfly collectors, who if they knew where to find them would soon "larn" the "Large Blue," for example, to be a rare butterfly.

"If this information were generally known," said an official of the Entomological Section of the Natural History Museum, "the rarer species of butterflies would soon be collected out of existence. The natural cupidity of collectors—whether they collect matchboxes or butterflies—is well known.

Mr. Rothschild was an enthusiastic collector, and the British Museum benefits under his will to the tune of many thousands of fleas, every one in its little bottle of spirit. All important expeditions to foreign parts were commissioned by Mr. Rothschild to bring home fleas of particular animals, and his collection, which was housed in the museum at Tring was unrivalled. The collection will probably remain at Triny for some time. In the will there is also provision for the salary of a proper custodian for the collection, £10,000 being set aside for the British Museum for this purpose.

Mr. Rothschild's estate was provisionally valued for probate at £2,250,000. Duties will amount to about £915,000.

SAVED BRITAIN FROM WAR

Marquis Curzon Praises General Harington

Tributes to Lieut.-Gen. Sir Charles Harington for having saved this country from war with Turkey were paid at the Royal Colonial Institute, where he was entertained to luncheon the other day.

Sir Charles McLeod, who presided, said the nation owed it very largely to Gen. Harington that they had not been at war with Turkey on several occasions during the past two years.

Marquis Curzon said Gen. Harington's operations at Constantinople were the greatest tribute to his integrity, sincerity and foresight. His position was that of a hair-trigger—a false movement might have plunged this country into war.

While he was Commander-in-Chief of the Forces at Constantinople he was also having to deal day by day with circumstances which required the utmost gift of diplomatic skill.

Gen. Harington, in reply, said the only way to gain the respect of the Greeks and the Turks was by being exactly the same to both of them, and that he thought he had been.

At the first conference he made great friends with Ismet Pasha, who had never let him down in anything or gone back on his word having once given it. The last thing that he received when the evacuation was complete was a letter from Ismet Pasha, in which he said that what the Turks really wanted was the friendship of England.

Gen. Harington added that he had no fear for the cemeteries at Gallipoli. There was no danger of them from the Turks, for we had gained their respect, and gained it by not fraternizing with them while negotiations were proceeding. The Turk respected us for that. "Also," said General Harington, "he is the finest judge of honesty I know—in others."

DECLINE OF THE MUSIC HALLS

Rival Attraction of the Films

Why are music-halls doing so badly, while cinemas all over the country are crowded nightly?

This question has been asked for some time by music-hall artists and business men associated with entertainment concerns, and in some quarters it is now suggested that the way of salvation for the music-halls lies in a fusion with the films.

Mr. Albert Voyce, chairman of the Variety Artistes' Federation, in conversation with a Press representative recently, blamed the licensing restrictions, which pressed more severely on music-halls than on any other place of entertainment. "Managers," he said, "are putting on revues instead of variety shows, because the Lord Chamberlain's licence carries with it the excise licence. Picture theatres," he declared, "did not take away the music-hall public because they catered for a different class."

LITTLE TICH'S VIEW.

"Music halls are not what they were, but it is not the fault of the artists," said Little Tich. "I have found that whenever there is a good variety programme there's a full house and an appreciative one. In my opinion it is bad bookings on the part of the management, and too few genuine variety turns that accounts for the bad business reported.

"Variety artists are being hardly hit by the importation of foreigners and intruders from the theatrical stage.

"There are plenty of clever variety artists, men and women: who have proved their ability, but cannot get work in the West End, and there is plenty of talent in the country which is never given a chance."

"If the picture houses were proving rivals to the music-halls it was," said Little Tich, "only in their appeal to audiences who wanted to be amused for a short time at a small outlay."

OLD LONDON

How Burgundy Grapes Were Grown at Rotherhithe

There is talk of a new bridge over Father Thames at Lambeth, and experimental borings have begun at Rotherhithe, where it is hoped to construct a new carriageway under the river. Rotherhithe, "Redriff," "Rethereth," call it what you will, is one of those places down the river which is better explored in the daylight than in the dark. Men of history and men of romance have lived there, none better known than Demuel Gulliver, who, as Swift assures us, was long an inhabitant of the place.

"It was as true as if Mr. Gulliver had spoken it," was a sort of proverb among his neighbours at Redriff.

Of seamen it had plenty; the brave old Admiral Benbow was born in Wintershull-Street, and master mariners and their men made Rotherhithe their home. It will be remembered that Gay mentions the place in "The Beggar's Opera":

Filch—These seven handkerchiefs, madam.

Mrs. Peachum—Coloured ones, I see. They are of sure sale, from our warehouse at Redriff, among the seamen.

Market gardens and fields once abounded in the neighbourhood, and nearly 200 years ago an attempt was made to cultivate the vine.

A gentleman named Warner, observing that the Burgundy grapes ripened early, and conceiving that they might be grown in England, obtained some cuttings, which he planted here as standards; . . . though the soil was not particularly suited, yet, by care and skill. . . his crop was so ample that it afforded him upwards of 100 gallons annually, and he was able to supply cuttings of his vines for cultivation in many other parts of this island.

No visitor to Rotherhithe must miss the church, where may be seen a monument to the memory of Prince Lee Boo, a native of the Pelew Islands, who died in London of smallpox. He was the son of the King of Goo-rooraa, who befriended Captain Wilson, of the Antelope, when that frigate was wrecked off the island. So great was the kindness of the King that Captain Wilson brought his son to England to be educated. But Lee Boo never went back, and an inscription on his tomb bears testimony to his father's kindness to distressed British sailors.

PARIS, Jan. 13.—The Communist Deputy, M. Cachin, and the managers of the newspapers, "Humanité" and "Internationale," were yesterday charged with inciting military disobedience by means of anarchist articles published in December.—Reuter.

ARMISTICE DAY PHANTOM

Mysterious Vision of a Roadside Cenotaph

A strange story of Armistice Day reaches the "Daily News" from Glastonbury.

A party of visitors were driving along the deserted road between Glastonbury and Taunton on the morning of November 11. At 11 o'clock they shut off the engine of their car.

Close by the place where they stopped was a great white stone, 30 or 40 feet in height, rising from a tier of steps, bearing laurel wreaths embossed in gold on either side near the flat-topped summit. The inscription—in luminous silvery blue handwriting—read:

If ye break faith with us who died,
We shall not sleep.
Tho' poppies bloom in Flanders fields,
We who have passed.

An eye-witness says:

The words "We who have passed" seemed to be intended as a signature. It was not until later that we realised there is no stone bearing this inscription in the neighbourhood. There are several monuments in the district, but all at a distance of some miles.

The place where we saw the phantom Cenotaph is an ancient earthwork, presumably British, known as Greyland Fosse. It remains a mystery, the most sceptical of the very few people who saw it being startled into silence.

It has been suggested that the district in which the memorial was seen is the reputed Avalon of the ancient British legends to which passed the soul of the warriors who fell in battle.

A fragmentary phrase in Welsh was also seen in the inscription.

CITY OF DAVID

Jebusite Wall and Tower Discovered

Professor R. A. S. Macalister, leader of the joint expedition of the Palestine Exploration Fund and the "Daily Telegraph," believes that the expedition has come upon the remains of the mysterious Millo stronghold, on the site of the ancient City of David.

The Hebrew word "Millo" is generally taken to mean a solid tower or an earth embankment between stone walls.

In 11. Samuel, chap. v., verse 9, it is stated: "So David dwelt in the fort and called it the city of David. And David built round about from Millo and inward."

According to Dr. E. W. G. Masterman, honorary secretary of the Palestine Exploration Fund, the historical evidence all points to the fact that the Millo existed as a strong tower or fort at the time of the conquest by David, a thousand years before Christ.

It may have been the holy "high place" of the Jebusites, who for several centuries had resisted all the attempts of the Hebrews against their little stronghold.

GODSTOW NUNNERY

Presentation to Oxford University

Oxford, Nov. 20—Godstow Nunnery, which stands beside the upper Thames two miles above Oxford, has been offered to the University of Oxford by Mr. Raymond William Hennell, of Wytham, Bucks, with about 20 acres of land adjoining, on condition that the Nunnery and land shall be held for ever by the University, and that the net income derived from the land shall be applied to the preservation of the ruins.

All that remains of the Benedictine Nunnery of SS. Mary and John the Baptist, founded by Edith, the wife (it is supposed) of Robert d'Oyley, of Oxford Castle, is a yard formed by the south and east boundary walls and the roofless chapel, which, like most of the fragmentary remains, is perpendicular. The chapel was dedicated in December, 1196, by Alexander, Bishop of Lincoln, and, was consecrated in the presence of King Stephen, Queen Maude, and Prince Eustace.

In the Nunnery Rosamund, sister of Walter, Lord Clifford, sometime mistress of King Henry II., and popularly known as Fair Rosamund, passed her last years in penitence, and dying about 1175 was buried before the high altar. Here Henry erected a rich hearse, covered with white silk, and adorned with burning tapers and waving banners, but St. Hugh, Bishop of Lincoln, visiting the Nunnery in 1195, ordered the removal of the coffin to the nuns' chapter house or chapel.

In Convocation it will be proposed that the gift be accepted on the conditions laid down, and that the Hebdomadal Council shall appoint a Consultative Committee to advise the Curators of the University Chest on all preservation and maintenance of questions connected with the the ruins.

Let ZAM-BUK Soothe and Cure

ACTUAL skin disease which begins with just noticeable irritation, unpleasant itching or unsightly patches is too serious to experiment upon with crude, fatty ointments.

Such treatment may easily aggravate any minor eruption or soreness into a serious ulcer or an attack of fiery eczema, itch or poisoned sores.

When any itching or soreness suggests that you have contrasted skin disease, treat it from the first with Zam-Buk, the real skin-cure.

Didn't Experiment with fatty Salves and "Dressings" which are always liable to do your skin more harm than good. Zam-Buk contains no animal fat, but only the purest and most curative herbal extracts which Nature herself provides for the healing and regeneration of the human skin.

These refined herbal extracts are readily absorbed by the tiny pores and they extend their germicidal curative action far below the surface, soothing and purifying the whole tissue, quickly uprooting the most deep-seated disease.

Zam-Buk, which is essentially a real curative skin medicine, has proved successful in thousands of cases of eczema, psoriasis, ringworm, Dhobies' itch, ulcers, abscesses, heat sores, poisoned wounds, sore feet, piles, cuts, burns, scalds, etc. Zam-Buk which is is obtainable of chemists and dispensaries everywhere. Direct from agents:—Messrs. Wakefield & Co. (China), Ltd., S. Y. Sheng Building, Szechuen Road, Shanghai.

FREE FROM ALL ANIMAL FATS

FROM THE FOUR WINDS

CHINESE SECURITIES IN LONDON

Stock Exchange Refusal to Quote Issues in Arrears with Interest

From Our Own Correspondent.

London, Dec 13.

Chinese affairs have come much to the front within the last few days. Without apparently any warning, the Committee of the Stock Exchange has decided to take the drastic action in regard to foreign Governments who are in default of refusing to grant a quotation to their future loans, and of removing from the Official List the defaulted loans already quoted. The decision was conveyed in the following communiqué:

"The Committee of the Stock Exchange have had under consideration the question of the retention in the Official List of the securities of foreign Governments whom, without any arrangement with their bondholders, are, since the conclusion of peace, withholding payment of certain coupons. From notices which have been published in the Press the Committee have learned that unless certain special declarations have been signed by the presenter of the coupons and bonds, the Chinese Government declines to pay either interest or principal to the holders of bonds issued in Germany of the following Chinese Government Loans:

"Chinese 5 per cent. 1896 Loan,
"Chinese 4½ per cent., 1898 Loan and
"Chinese Hukuang 5 per cent., 1911 Loan.

"It also appears that the Rumanian Government has not yet fully resumed the coupon service in respect of the London issue of the Rumanian 4½ per cent. Gold Loan of 1903.

A THREAT OF REMOVAL.

"The Committee have informed the respective agents that unless the terms of the issue of the bonds in question are carried out in full they will not in future grant a quotation to any new issue of these Governments, and, further, that unless satisfactory answers are received they will take into consideration the removal from the Stock Exchange Daily Official List of such of the loans already quoted as contain bonds whose coupons have not been met in accordance with the terms of the issue."

This decision is very widely commented on by all the newspapers: "The Times" remarks, in its financial columns:—

"By thus seeking to enforce the due fulfilment of contracts made between State borrowers and the investing public the Committee is showing a very proper regard for its responsibilities. The removal of a loan from the Official List is not a thing which any State which is at all jealous of its credit can afford to see happen. It can only be hoped that events will not make such a step necessary."

A WARNING.

The "Financial Times" editorially remarks as follows:—

"This notification will be approved as conforming to the wishes of many members of the Stock Exchange who, for a long time past, have expressed dissatisfaction that bonds of foreign Governments who are not meeting their obligations should continue to enjoy the status conferred upon them by quotation in the Official List. The limitations of the decision should be noted. It is not suggested that all issues of the countries affected shall be excluded from the Official List, but only those on which default is taking place without the consent of the bondholders; nor, apparently, is it proposed to prohibit dealings. On the bulk of her loans China pays regularly, and the same applies to Russian 4 per cents.; such issues would remain unaffected by the ruling. Doubtless the move is designed to act in the first place as a warning. Stern it appears to be, but not more so than is warranted by the circumstances. There is a danger, of course, that bonds removed from the Official List will suffer some diminution of value as a consequence, but the Committee is bound to have regard to the greatest good of the greatest number of members and investors alike. All the Chinese loans specified above were issued wholly or partly abroad.

"A possible explanation of the attitude of China is to be found in the protracted delay which has occurred in settling the terms of the peace with Germany. She has published a list of bonds issued by Germany, interest on which she regards as non-payable for the time being, and these stand at lower levels in the market than others. Many of them have been bought by British investors since the war."

OUR PARIS LETTER

Huge German Purchases of Potential War Material: Remarkable Figures

From Our Own Correspondent.

Paris, Nov. 30.

Only a few days before the Ambassadors' Conference came to an agreement as to what Germany should be told about the return of the Crown Prince and the continuance of disarmament control, the French learnt from the London Press and Signor Mussolini's speeches that England and Italy were in full agreement. This was welcomed at the time, but it now seems that England and Italy are still acting together and, from the French point of view, are both disinclined to assist M. Poincaré's policy.

The British are represented as lukewarm about the disarmament of Germany and annoyed because the French have forced the Ruhr magnates to come to terms. Italy is showing in various ways that she wants to have a voice in everything. She began by trying to join in the conference about Tangier, and then claimed a right to participate in the Ruhr agreements. She was told that she could have her say when the time came for a new settlement, and she was reminded that, in the meantime, she had been allotted her share of the Ruhr coal.

Italy now shows a disposition to support Switzerland in the question of the free zones in Savoy.

FREE PORT FOR SWISS TRADE.

Italy has proposed that the small town of Vado, near Savone, should be a free port for Swiss overseas trade, and, according to the "Corriere della Sera," she thinks of pointing out that, when Savoyards carried out their popular vote in 1860, France promised them that the free zones would be maintained. The French reply is that this is a matter for the Savoyards themselves, and that in any case Italy has nothing to do with the free zones, as the Treaty of Versailles, which Italy signed, left it to France and Switzerland to settle the matter.

These pin-pricks should be considered in connexion with the Madrid and Rome newspaper articles on the occasion of the visit of the Spanish sovereigns to Italy. The Rome newspapers openly discuss Italian supremacy in the Mediterranean, and the elimination of France—sentiments which seem to clash with the ideas of union among the Latin races, which have long been a favourite theme of French, Italian and Spanish after-dinner speakers. It looks as if Italy and Spain were jealous of the prestige which France has acquired by refusing to be bluffed any longer by Germany, but the notion of Italy and Spain actively combining against France is too preposterous to be seriously entertained, at any rate for the next few years, or until the present balance is upset by the rapidly increasing population of Italy.

TOUJOURS LA REVANCHE.

In the meantime, the people of France, who are working hard and saving money just as they did before the war, find themselves surrounded by neighbours who are not over-friendly, and they have the threat of a German war of revenge constantly before them. Their military experts tell them to expect a sudden attack with countless aeroplanes. This view is put forward in a pamphlet with a preface by Gen. Maitrot, who, several years before the war, predicted a German advance through Belgium. Another pamphlet of the same kind is written by Gen. Estienne, formerly head of the air services of the 2nd Army. Both speak of a German offensive within the next few years, and both foreshadow that Germany's chief strength will be in the air. Fleets of aeroplanes, built in Russia and neutral countries, are pictured as attacking France, while the German army, backed by levies of trained reservists in quadruple lines of trenches, defends Germany from a surprise attack by the French troops on the Rhine.

M. André Tardieu says that Germany has made enormous purchases of potential war stores, such as cotton and copper. In the course of the present year Germany has been a larger buyer of cotton than any other country. From January to October her merchants bought $50,000,000 worth of cotton and copper in the United States, whereas in 1922, before the occupation of the Ruhr, their purchases came to only $13,000,000. It is obvious that this huge surplus cannot be intended to meet the ordinary peace requirements of the German people and German manufacturers, and the inference is that Germany is accumulating stocks of raw material for the manufacture of explosives.

GERMAN AEROPLANES FOR THE SOVIET.

The Fokker works are building great numbers of aeroplanes, ostensibly for Russia, and there would be nothing to prevent Germany from buying them back again. The Soviet Government would certainly not stand in the way of such a transaction if its interests pointed in that direction. Russia, who is perfectly secure from attack, does not need large quantities of up-to-date metal aeroplanes, and obviously the trade of the country does not call for them.

LOVE OF THE LAND.

A second list of French families to whom the decoration of the Mérite Agricole is awarded in recognition of their having farmed the same land for at least three centuries is published in the "Journal Officiel." It contains the names of no fewer than 750 families.

The longest history is that of the Lafargues, who can trace back their title to land at Molières (Tarn-et-Garonne) to the year 772, when Charlemagne was on the throne. The Reyers have been in possession at Colloubis, near Gap (Hautes Alpes) for 900 years. There have been Capdebosqs at Higuères-Souye (Basses-Pyrénées) since 1063; Duquesnes at Bevry (Pas-de-Calais) since 1100, Feuges at Haguetaubin (Basses Pyrénées) and Cousses at Crémaux (Loire) since 1146. Mme. Colrat, mother of the present Minister of Justice, is the head of a family successive generations of which have farmed the same land in the commune of Sarrazac (Lot) since 1523.

It will be observed that nearly all these instances of continuity of tenure have occurred in the south and southwest, which have been less exposed to wars and invasions than the historic battle-grounds of the north and east. The Duquesne, who settled near the storm centre of Flanders and have not been uprooted for over eight centuries, are extraordinary instance of that love of the land which has been the backbone of France for so many generations and remains one of the principal stabilizing influences in a disturbed Europe.

ACROSS THE SAHARA BY CAR

News of Estienne Expedition

The Mission under General Estienne, which, in caterpillar cars, is proceeding to Nigeria, has been heard of "all well" by wireless from Timi Moun, a desert post. The expedition comprises four Citroen cars and an aeroplane, the explorers altogether numbering twelve. General Estienne has with him his two sons. For a portion of the way he was accompanied by a Belgian, M. Haardt, who travelled last year from Algeria to Timbuctu and back, but after getting the expedition started the latter returned.

The expedition left Beni Urif on November 7 and is proceeding to Bouren in Nigeria for the purpose of ascertaining if it is not possible to save 400 miles over last year's survey for the trans-Saharan railway. If this be possible it will reduce the line to 1,100 miles. Last year the Citroen cars took 21 days to get to Timbuctu, but it is hoped that next year over the new route the trip will be accomplished in 7 days. It is not proposed to wait for the completion of the railway, but to establish an immediate caterpillar service for passengers and mails.

The expedition has taken stores for two months, but expects to be back at Beni Urif in six weeks. Six of the 12 explorers made the journey to Timbuctu last year.

TCHEHOV AND TOLSTOI

He always spoke of Tolstoi with a special, almost imperceptible, little smile of tenderness and anxiety in his eyes; he spoke with a lowered voice, as of something phantasmal, mysterious, which requires soft and wary words.

More than once he complained that there was no Eckermann near Tolstoi, to write down carefully the sharp, unexpected, and often contradictory ideas of the old wizard.

"You ought to do it"—he tried to persuade Sulerzhitsky—"Tolstoi is so fond of you, talks to you so much and so well."

Of Sulerzhitsky, Tchehov, said to me:

"He's a wise baby."

Very well said.

Once in my presence Tolstoi was in rapture over one of Tchehov's stories, I think it was "The Darling." He said:

"It is like a piece of lace worked by a chaste girl; there were such girls in olden times, lacemakers 'for ever'; they put all their lives, all their dreams of happiness into the pattern. They dreamt in their patterns of what was most dear to them; all their vague, pure love they knitted into the lace." Tolstoi spoke with much agitation, with tears in his eyes.

And Tchehov. . . sat with red spots on his cheeks and his head bent down, diligently rubbing his pince-nez. He was silent for a long while, at last, with a sigh, said in a soft bashful voice:

"There are misprints in it."—Maxim Gorky, in "The Adelphi."

NEW YORK, Nov. 15.—Each person in the United States would have $158 if the total deposits in the savings departments of banks and trust companies were distributed equally among the entire population, according to figures made public to-day by the savings' bank division of the Bankers' Association. Savings deposits, which were only $8,425,275,000 in 1912, increased to $17,331,479,000 in 1922. The number of savings accounts increased from 12,584,316 to 30,323,320.

LORD MORLEY'S WILL

No Papers to be Used for Biographies: Memoirs "Wholly Superfluous"

Viscount Morley of Blackburn, whose estate has been valued for probate at £59,765, with net personality £51,897, directed in his will that no one should have access to any of his papers for the purpose of writing memoirs of himself or anyone else. The passage in the will containing this direction reads:

I give to my nephew, Guy Estell Morley, all my correspondence, diaries, and written fragments to be dealt with as he may think fit in his own discretion, and as it is possible that some person may desire to write a memoir of my life, which I regard as wholly superfluous, I enjoin my executors, and each of them, to refuse to aid or encourage any such design, and not to allow any such person to have access to any of my papers, whether personal or acquired in the course of official duty, either for perusal or otherwise.

And I also desire that the same refusal of access to my papers shall be extended to persons writing memoirs or biographies of friends of mine or others.

After instructing that his ashes should be placed in some spot in Brookwood or other cemetery without ceremonial or spoken words, Lord Morley added:

I fain would trust a lingering memory of me to the silent hearts of such as have been, and still remain, my friends.

Subject to his wife's life interest, he left not less than 5,000 volumes from his library of Manchester University, "such volumes to be placed in the Ashburn Hall for the use of the women students."

Other bequests included, £3,000 to John Vining Elliott Taylor, of Wandsworth Common, and the Public Trustee, "to be held by them upon the terms of a certain deed of trust executed by him and dated May 8, 1916"; two years' wages to each indoor servant and a year's wages to the gardener; 100 guineas to Sir Frederick Orridge MacMillan, and a similar sum to Francis Wrigley Hirst, "in memory of a devoted friend and the champion of many good causes."

WHY A BIOGRAPHY WAS BARRED.

A word can be said with authority as to why Lord Morley, in his will, barred a biography of himself.

He felt that he had told his life-story in his Autobiography, including what, perhaps, he regarded as most important—his stewardship as Secretary for India at a vital time in the history of that country.

If anybody ever wants to write of him as an English author, and to assess his contribution to English literature and his place in it, there are his books for the material of assessment.

Similarly, if, in the future, he interests or provokes curiosity as a keen spirit in English politics and as a statesman who dwelt in great company and came by much experience the official documents lodged in various Government Departments will be available, as eventually official documents always are; and this meets the comment which has been made: "Lord Morley was perfectly entitled to inhibit a biography of himself, but not to keep back State papers."

He had not preserved any treasury of correspondence, for one reason because it never existed on any great scale, men who are writers by profession, and so dependent on their pens for a living, being, as a rule, niggard epistolarians; while as for diaries nothing of importance remained in them after the Autobiography had been written.

To sum up, everything Lord Morley thought worth publishing about himself, or by himself, for we have the new, complete edition of his writings, has been published, and there the matter ends, all the more that Lady Morley, who lived so briefly to carry on her husband's name and fame, has also passed away.

hought, were the source of trength of the big Powers. These ersons initiated the Revolution ut they did not win it and they id not make the Republic pos- ible. The commanders of the odern army asked the Manchus o step down from their high laces and took up Republicanism o soothe the radicals while they ere deciding among themselves hat to do next. Ninety per ent. of them did not understand Republicanism and did not be- eve it would work in China. But they could not make up their inds.

Propaganda and the success of he anti-Manchu revolt had made ings foreign exceedingly popul- r. The radicals who had set up he skeleton of a Republic still ad armies in the field which ould have to be conquered un- ess the northern army took up epublicanism. This would have een no great task but the army ommanders wanted to pull the ountry together under some sort f a régime and regain foreign onfidence and recognition. Fin- lly, all the foreigners in China eemed to rejoice over this re- ublican innovation. It was mulation of the liberal forms of overnment in their homelands nd therefore flattered them. anity bred of this flattery turn- d even the longest and wisest eads. Everyone patted the re- olutionaries on the back (Not ite everybody—Ed) and advised he reactionary militarists to ollow suit. Very few of us who ere in China at the time were uiltless of this folly. A wave of motionalism made heroes of all he half-baked young radicals nd carried inexperienced young evolutionary officers into high dministrative positions. The orthern military men hastened o step in line and conform; and he members of the old mandarin- te shed their robes and their omposity and acquired a re- ublican vocabulary. Foreigners n China greeted these signs of progress" with loud acclaim, heir Home Governments extend- d recognition and the Republic as an international fact.

A COLD AWAKENING.

Disillusionment for all concern- d, including the ardent foreign- , began almost at once. The ew Government was not efficient ecause it did not enjoy the au- hority of the old Imperial Court. his was partly because the re- olution had broken down res- ect for authority, partly because he new régime, not having as- umed the air of sanctity of the ourt, was not held in awe; but iefly because thousands of re- olutionary heroes had found re- ellion and the profession of the epublican faith surprisingly rofitable. Those who had not on office or influence or affluence uring the first revolution want- d to start another. A mediocre ock of republican cant, which very rogue in the country was uick to acquire, was made to over every manner of political fence. The original sponsors f the revolutionary movement ent wild with power and glee- lly tossed wrenches into the dministrative machinery to show ow completely they had it under heir control. Yuan Shih-kai's dministration was feeling about o see where it stood in relation o public feeling in China and s relation to the foreigner. By e time Yuan Shih-kai had con- dence enough to give China the rt of Government that was anted, a great percentage of the ficial classes, new and old, had ade up their minds that they id not want real government. emi-republicanism already ant quick promotion for the lf-baked agitator. It meant nheard of licence in the ex- otation of the people and ex- ptional freedom from check. isorder meant opportunity— omotion by leaps and bounds r those in office and openings r the ambitious who had not t got into office.

An appreciation of these facts eched the modern army and its isintegration commenced. Pro- cial military chiefs who would ve been happy beyond words to ggle into the Imperial Pre- nce on their stomachs took easure in finding that the head of the state depended upon them for support against his enemies. The army was still centralized but no longer a perfect unit. Discipline in all ranks weakened. So, when Yuan Shih-kai made his desperate effort to make himself Emperor and to whip order out of increasing chaos, the army failed him and he collapsed and died.

PROFITS OF REPUBLICANISM.

The subordinate northern commanders were beginning to "feel their oats" before Yuan Shih-kai's death. But after Tuan Chi-jui had called them together in 1916 and had asked for their advice and support all hope of controlling them except through anything but conquest or purchase was gone. The success of the Tsai Ao revolution against Yuan Shih-kai brought scores of new figures from the bottom to the top and made disorder all the more attractive to the ambitious. Centralization of power under any form was a distasteful prospect not only in the South but in the North as well. Every attempt to restore centralization upon which an efficient government might be built was therefore combatted in the name of republicanism and constitutionalism. This process of disintegration has gone on steadily ever since until now there is such a vast horde of persons—military and civil officials and their retainers, soldiers and bandits—enjoying complete liberty and independence in the persecution and robbery of the people of China, that China's brand of republicanism has more staunch supporters, now that the people enjoy no rights of any sort, than at any time since the revolution. Any movement to change the form of government would undoubtedly bring into the field more loyal defenders of the Republic than ever before. All of this the would-be restorer of the Empire must bear in mind when he lays his plans for a restoration. The man who wanted to make an Emperor, either of himself or of some other person, would meet less sincere opposition than the man who wanted to make himself a temporary dictator, but he would furnish his constitutional and republican enemies with a much more effective war cry. In any event, whether one wants to be Emperor or dictator, it is obvious that before he can sit in peace on his high throne he must first battle with and subdue the thousands of people who have learned how to profit from disorder, the breakdown of respect for authority and the collapse of both discipline and loyalty.

UTTERLY DEMORALIZED.

China is so thoroughly demoralized now that there is no such thing within the official caste as loyalty to an idea and no such thing as loyalty to a leader unless that leader can promise his subordinates distinct advantages to themselves in remaining loyal. It is this state of China's official morals which makes the restoration of order through force of arms seem so hopeless, whether for a Republic, a dictator, a restored Manchu Emperor or a new dynasty. China is geographically very big. Communications are poor and it is a slow and tedious business sending armies into the remoter provinces. Under these conditions an Imperial aspirant would have to delegate a great deal of power to lieutenants and put much confidence in them. With all traditions of fidelity broken down, it would be very hard now for a conqueror to pick men whom he could trust far from home.

Very few men competent to lead an army, would, after 12 years of republican schooling, take orders from a chief or an Emperor which were not to their personal advantage. If the chief insisted that they were not to loot, that they were not to exploit the people, that they were to handle public funds honestly and remit revenues to the capital, that were not to purchase arms or ammunition for their own account, that they were to use their troops to suppress banditry and that they were not to recruit troops without authority; and if the chief were to attempt to punish or remove them for breaches of these regulations, all such lieutenants as are now available would simply declare themselves independent and raise the banner of constitutionalism or provincial autonomy or something of the sort. There is no commander existing in China to-day who can give orders to a subordinate five hundred miles away and hope to have those orders executed unless they happen to fit in with the subordinate's plans for his own aggrandizement.

THE DESIRE FOR RESTORATION.

There can be no possible doubt that among the masses of the people, among all classes but the official classes, the yearning for a restoration is almost as intense as the general yearning for peace and order. The Republic has been a nightmare to them. So far as the people are concerned, republicanism has been weighed in the balance and found wanting. All adult Chinese have experienced two forms of administration—imperial and republican—and while neither is in their memories immaculate, the latter has been so infinitely worse than the former that they can conceive of no happier event than a reversion to the old régime.

This reactionary spirit is not confined to the merchants and farmers alone. It is beginning to pervade all officialdom as well. The official classes are beginning to be nervous about China's ultimate fate. They will sacrifice nothing to improve conditions for the benefit of a rival, but the complete collapse of China would bring them down with their country and they would all find themselves mired in the same bog with the chance that the toughest and hardiest would climb out over them. Rather than lose all they would be ready to concede something. A serious threat of foreign aggression might bring about a monarchy movement in the same way that it might bring about an armed truce among the militarists and a peace conference. A determined popular movement, or a determined expression of the public will might precipitate it. But it is not likely that any of the big military commanders, with the possible exception of Chang Tso-lin, will in the near future attempt either to restore the Manchus or to set up a new line on his own initiative, because they all have too keen an appreciation of the difficulties in the way which the writer has outlined.

BUT BY WHOM?

The restoration of a monarchy, like the establishment of a dictatorship, seems remote at this moment because, barring the stimulus of foreign aggression or a great popular rising (both very distant prospects), the re-establishment of an Empire depends upon the re-conquest of the greater part of China. There is no man commanding troops now who has the military capacity for conquering the greater part of China, nor the closely knit organization with which he could do it. Wu Pei-fu is undoubtedly China's ablest fighter but he has scattered and weakened his organization and has dissipated his resources by sending out expeditions of riff-raff under the command of notorious failures. His ablest generals have left his immediate command to be Tulis, Tuchuns, Civil Governors and Super-Tuchuns and he has lost his reputation as a disciplinarian by allowing hordes of bandits to cut their wildest capers on his very doorstep.

The reconquest of China by a small compact force of well disciplined and well trained men is not impossible; but it is not possible to any of the leaders or any of the organizations now operating in China. Under these conditions it is not worth while discussing the relative merits of a Manchu restoration and the erection of a new dynasty. One need neither hope nor fear that either is imminent or even possible in the immediate future. As means of restoring peace and order they are remote means, if they are really means at all. And what we are vitally interested in is not a far away cure of China's ills but some immediate solution, if there is one.

THE FOUR FISHES

Of course a country which can still support the Alligator is capable of almost any phenomenon, and one must school oneself to treat apathetically things which, elsewhere, would create a profound impression! In China, a kite attacks a canary in a cage hung on a verandah in the busiest part of a busy city, and no one is astonished! A decoy of captive fish to lure other fish over and into a net leaves one unmoved; but the phenomenon of what may be called "the four fishes" requires explanation.

At Tsingyangkong, some 30 miles west of Shanghai, there lies a broad creek. For the most part barren two-paths borded each side, and beyond them are the endless rice-fields. For one short stretch, however, there lies a garden, and willows and peach trees grow where once the boat-coolies toiled. It is early January in the garden, and the trees are bare, shivering before the northwest wind. The ground is hard as iron, and the shallow pools, which lie below the bank, carry a persistent coating of ice. Even the sedge-grass is withered and cemented to the ground! A bleak and barren prospect!

Around one of the trees in the garden a group of persons is gathered, gazing in amazement at a fish, neatly impaled upon a sharp twig. The tree is perhaps 20 feet from the bank and about four feet from the ground. The fish is just over an inch in length and a cat-fish, and it is the fourth fish that has been found, similarly impaled upon trees in the garden: all the fish are about the same size and about the same distance from the water, and from each other, and all are a trifle mummified in appearance." The other three are culters.

"Flying fish," murmurs the Frivolous One, ecstatically. "Flying fish"! And then they fall to devising theories to account for so unsual a spectacle.

"Mr. G. K. Chesterton," said the Scientist, "would unravel the tangle in this way:—

A sudden gleam illumined the thoughtful face of Father Brown and with rapid strides he marched down the garden-path, obviously measuring the distance between each dried fish. As he returned the watching detectives saw in his eyes the rapt vacancy of the mystic. "Can't you see it, Flambeau?" he said, timidly. "Is not this place also called Henli, and are there not houseboats here in the summer time?" His tall friend nodded, leaping up and down from the verandah in order to keep himself warm! "I see a houseboat," continued the little Priest, "leaving the bridge by the Station and coming North. It is propelled by six coolies working two yulohs, and is proceeding at about three miles an hour. The boy is serving the cocktails, which invariably precede luncheon in this country, and has opened a box, labelled "sardines," which he has himself purchased in the native city at Shanghai. The box looks like a box of sardines and it has a foreign label, but, in fact, it is a local product! Possibly it is the boy's intention to cheat his master as to the price of that box, but I cannot be certain." His face took on the puzzled expression of a child and then cleared again. "As the bows of the boat arrive here," he said, tapping the bank impatiently with his stick, the Boy offers the shining delicacies to his master, who takes one at random upon a fork and is about to pass it to a friend when he observes to his horror that it is not a sardine but a catfish! He surreptitiously hurls it from the fork, in disgust, on to the bank where it is caught by this twig. Next he discards a culter, and then two more, and finally the entire tin is hurled at the Boy's head! Here, Flambeau, take back this grass, analize it and you will find traces of salad oil, or some Chinese substitute, and if you, gentlemen, will drag the Creek just there, you will find the tin!"

"Dolt," said the Fisherman, angrily interrupting! "The explanation is obvious! Some poor fellow has been fishing from this bank. He fears the scorn and incredulity of his friends and therefore hangs his catch on the trees as proof! These four fish probably represent a day's hard work!"

The group moves off to tea, and the place is silent again! A kingfisher flies up in a shimmer of blue and hangs, swaying, on a slender willow branch.

Now this is a true story, and the question still remains: "How came the four fishes upon the twigs?" and perhaps only the king-fisher can answer it!

PISCATOR.

THE FATE OF MIGNON

Mignon, Mignon,
Quaint little elf!
Childishly prattling,
Formless the self—
Liquescent as moonshine
Through the dark mountain pine
Tenderly stealing—
Cerulean pelf!

Aping her elders'
Professional loves,
Unwitting, she murmurs
The language of doves—
The drowsy, soft cooing of doves.

Mignon, Mignon,
From heaven now riven,
Passing to earth
Art earthwards still driven?
The child of Night's Heaven
Remorselessly driven
Through the pitiless night—
Ah, whither?

A. ALBAN PARKER.

HSUAN TUNG, the ex-Emperor, has issued a decree appointing Cheng Hsiao-jui Minister of the Imperial Household and granting him permission to ride on horseback in the Forbidden City.

COLD EPIDEMIC ARRIVES

Take Peps and Keep Away Chest and Lung Dangers

The present widespread epidemic of coughs and colds is being caused by certain mischevious living germs entering the throat and bronchial tubes through the nose and mouth. These "cold germs" are practically invisible and, as yet, there is no means of keeping them out altogether. But by promptly taking Peps, you can kill them off before they have time to provoke mischief.

When a Peps tablet is taken from its preserving silver wrapper and dissolved in the mouth, it gives off powerful medicinal fumes which, as they circulate with the breath through the air-passages, quickly destroy any harmful germs lodged in nostrils or throat. At the same time the sore, inflamed membrane lining of the air-tubes is soothed, heated and protected by the Peps medicine; phlegm is softened and released, breathing is made easy, and that distressing cough and throat soreness disappears.

By their direct breatheable action, Peps so strengthen and fortify throat, chest and lungs that the worst of the cold weather can be faced without fear of evil consequences. It is a safe precaution to always carry a few Peps loose in the pocket. Peps occasionally dissolved in the mouth quickly arrest any sudden cold or chill, influenza or throat soreness, they keep the breathing organs thoroughly healthy and prevent the onset of bronchitis, asthma, or other chronic chest weakness.

Peps, the great breatheable remedy in tablet form, are now obtainable of chemists and dispensaries everywhere. Direct from agents:—Messrs. Wakefield & Co. (China), Ltd., S. Y. Sheng Building, Szechuen Road, Shanghai.

SPECIAL ARTICLES

"THE PAVEMENT, BUT IN HEBREW GABBATHA"

A Sermon Preached by the Rev. C. E. Darwent at Union Church, Tientsin, on Nov. 24, 1924

"When Pilate heard these words he brought Jesus out, and sat down on the judgment-seat at a place called the pavement, but in Hebrew Gabbatha."—St. John XIV. 13.

What words! In their madness the Jews had yelled at him, that Jesus had let Himself be called King, and that that was a seditious utterance that would get to the ears of the emperor, and then, where would Pilate be, if he were reported to have listened to treason like that and had taken no action in regard to it? With a jealous monster like Tiberius on the imperial throne it would go badly with any governor who had let that pass: it would be a case of "a short shrift and a long rope" with him: "If thou let this man go, thou art not Cæsar's friend: whosoever maketh himself a king speaketh against Cæsar." That was the cry of the rulers in their frenzied hatred of Christ. They knew they had Pilate. Now Pilate had been impressed by Jesus. He was a great deal better man than any in this mob of priests. Pilate had summed them up. There is no mind more tricky than the priestly mind, and he saw as clearly as daylight, that they had delivered Him up out of envy: "I find no crime in Him." But here was a new feature in the case, that made his cheeks blanch; to be accused to the odious jealous Tiberius of disloyalty, of letting a claim to regal rank pass unnoticed! This altered the case. Pilate took alarm. And it is what he did, and the place to which he called Jesus that is our subject to-night. It is full of teaching.

We read that "Pilate sat down on the judgment-seat, at a place called the Pavement, but in Hebrew Gabbatha." Now, what was this "Pavement?" It was this. It was the official Pavement. Pilate was a very high Roman official. Now, one of the privileges and signs of high office under the Roman government, was to have the right to an official pavement on which his judgment-seat was placed. They were cunningly put together of small pieces of marble or other stone. The pieces were called tesseræ. The art has been revived for flooring. I think you can see one in the Kailan Mining Administration's building here. Every general on foreign service had one. The tesseræ were packed in panniers and carried along on mule or horseback. When camp was pitched they were immediately put together, for courts-martial were held on them. These pavements have been found all over the Roman world, either these military ones or civil ones; in England at Bognor in Sussex, at Brading in the Isle of Wight and at many other places.

Now, we come to another fact—that Sir Quiller-Couch, the novelist and poet, points out, as quoted in the "Expository Times." We shall get to the main issue by degrees. This fact is, that these pavements were made in beautiful designs, of flowers and mythological scenes. It is true that a man like Pilate who exclaimed "What is Truth?" may not have had any faith in the popular gods; but he was a high official. The word had gone round in ruling circles, that the popular religion must have at least outward attention paid to it. The government had recognized the need of religion of some sort. So it is extremely likely that the official "Pavement" of Pilate had for its decorative scheme scenes from the stories of the gods of Rome, of Jupiter and Juno, Venus and all the rest. So much then for the Pavement, at least for the present.

STANDING UPON THE PAGAN GODS.

The next thing that brings us to the climax of interest and the essential teaching of the passage is the It of the new version of verse thirteen in Dr Moffatt's translation of the New Testament. It gives a most dramatic intensity to the whole tragic situation. On hearing this threat of the Jews, Pilate brought Jesus out and seated Him on the tribunal at a spot called the "mosaic pavement—the Hebrew name is Gabbatha." That makes all the difference. Pilate seated Him that is, Jesus, on the pavement. Picture the scene! We have a description of the palace where this central tragedy of history took place; it had two wings of white marble, called the Cæsareum and Agrippeum. Commanding a magnificent view over Jerusalem, there was an open court with columns of white, green and rose-coloured marble. It was paved with mosaics and adorned with fountains and flowers. Here was the "Pavement." On it stood the carpenter's son, Jesus of Nazareth. He had passed one trial or two, and now He faces another. He had had sleepless night; He had been mocked and crowned with thorns, and badgered and lied about. His friends had forsaken Him. As far as human foresight could discern, there never was any man in a more hopeless condition, as regards His prospects of becoming the greatest of world-figures, and to be passionately loved by millions as the divinely appointed Saviour of the world. Yet forsaken as He was, weak and lonely and undefended, with no possibility of escape but in the unlikely event of Pilate defying the Jewish threats to report him to the emperor, there was in His apparently hopeless position a prophecy of triumph. Here it is: "Pilate brought Jesus and seated Him on the Pavement." That Pavement may have been decorated with scenes from the stories of the gods of Rome and Greece; perhaps Bacchus the god of wine and drinkers; of Jupiter, the king of the gods warring against the Titans, and of Venus, the mother of love, the queen of laughter, rising from the foam of the sea.

Literally Jesus is standing on the old gods of Rome. This haggard friendless prisoner has the gods of Rome actually under His feet. In the end, terror-stricken, Pilate handed Him over to death. All seemed lost to His bewildered disciples; but it was not so. All the powers antagonistic to Him, were under His feet; on the floor, while He stood in such moral majesty, that Pilate said, "Behold the man!"

PROPHECY AND A PARABLE.

May we not then take this as a prophecy and a parable, as to the real truth of the Gospel? It is sometimes asked, how it is that Christian people can be so happy as they are in a world so full of sin as this. The answer is that the powers of evil are still under His feet, as the gods of Rome and Greece were as He stood on the "Pavement," which is called in Hebrew "Gabbatha." He came to "destroy the works of the devil," and He has. It was prophesied, that He should "bear away the sins of the world," and He has. That is the Christian belief, its glorious faith. He has conquered sin and all sins. Christians, if they understand the tremendous things done for them, when this prisoner was hung on the crosses, and died crying "It is finished," cannot be pessimists, cannot be overawed by the prevalence, the popularity, the power of any form of evil, by the most daring and outrageous form of sin. They know, that all the beastings of sin and all its power, to use a colloquial expression are "sheer bluff," because as it is said "all things" not only "shall be" but "are put under His feet." This scene on "The Pavement" with Jesus Christ standing on the pictures of the gods of the old world is a true representation of what has actually happened. Every influence, of whatever nature, that fills the world with misery; every influence that rots and corrupts the soul; everything that separates man from his God, every principle and power of evil that lies on human nature as a blight; every thing that degrades man in body, soul or spirit, making him less than man, had its power, its sting taken away, when this majestic and yet worn and tired prisoner was taken from the "Pavement" and crucified. This poor weak man, crowned with thorns, mocked at His trial, and still mocked as if He were no more than a windy philosopher, who had preached moral platitudes only, and not the "Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world," has now "all things under His feet." He was really a conqueror, as He stood there before Pilate. He is so yet, in spite of all appearances.

MASTER OF SIN.

Let us just look into this, for so many will say, "How can that be? See what a hold sin has on the world! There are pious people, who, to their shame say that they have no hope of the salvation of the world from sin, except for a few; they take the most dismal view of the state of the world. And there are the well-meaning people, who would like to reform all sin away, but have given up all faith that Jesus Christ ever did anything, that has made Him Master of every form of sin, and has put it away. On the surface, things do look bad, but they are not so bad as they look since He died. Something tremendous happened in the moral and spiritual world when He died.

We call it the atonement. We must call it something. Something happened that made sin a beaten force. There is plenty of it left; we Christians never commit the folly of minimizing sin, of treating it lightly, but we know that it is not a part of the constitution of the world; it is a burglar that has got into man, and gets in again and again, but is not going to stay there. It is really already cast out of everyone of us, if we will let the Saviour take the work in hand. There are people who make all the blessings of the Gospel present and future blessings, and as it were, in the making only. They say, it is a power that will gradually moralize and spiritualize the world of man; it will sanctify all who accept it. That is no doubt gloriously true. We all need it in that aspect and form of its divine energy. But that is not the whole of the truth about it. No. Something was done, finished, that never needs doing again. It is a huge relief to the mind and conscience to think of that. It is wearying and discouraging to view the Gospel as everlastingly toiling at a job and task, that never gets completed. The soul gets sick when a work is never done. The soul craves for some finality. And we have it. He died for sin; He "condemned sin in the flesh;" He gave it a mortal blow when He cried. "It is finished." Christianity is not just a promise, nice as promises are. It is an achievement as well. And its promises all go for naught unless its achievement stands: unless Jesus effected something in that mysterious dying on the cross, that never needs doing again. That is the cause of the Christian sense of victory. Here is a clear illustration. You remember the war. It now appears that Germany was really defeated at the Marne in the beginning of the war. She kept on fighting for years, but she fought a losing battle. She fought hard, but she was already defeated. That is what I understand happened on the cross of Christ. Sin has kept up a big fight for dominance over man: it has mighty power yet, but it was defeated on the cross. It is now fighting a losing battle; it was defeated in the crucial grapple on the cross, when the Son of God yielded up His spirit and cried, "It is finished." Since then He has had His feet on all sin and sins; "All things shall be put under His feet." They are. That is why Christians ought to be and are optimists. They refuse to accept evil as in the nature of things, as part of nature, as unbelievers must do. The grand drama of the moral and spiritual history of the world was there when Jesus Christ stood with Pilate on the Pavement.

"SIN EXCEEDING SINFUL."

It will be asked, Are there any signs that sin is under His feet, a defeated power? Yes, plenty, to anyone who has eyes to see and understand the course of history. First, in ancient times every sin had its god, as they still have in paganism. Therefore a sinner, who committed any sin, could say, he was worshipping that god. A drunkard could say, he was only shewing reverence to Bacchus; a vicious liver need only say, he was worshipping Venus. And that is just what they did say. But all that is gone. The cross threw an intense light on the moral world. Men still sin these sins, but they do not identify them with religion. Christ has made "sin exceeding sinful." That is a clear gain. Sinners know they are sinners now.

Again, some sins that were looked on with a lenient eye in ancient times are practically extinct. Unnatural vice is one; suicide is another. In Rome it was honourable. Now it is wickedness of the extremist kind, when done in a man's full senses. Again, there are other sins, which have less and less to say for themselves. They are on sufferance, condemned already. Take heavy drinking once more. No one, however "wet," defends that. Not so long ago they did. There can be no doubt, that alcohol, as a beverage, will disappear some day. Further one can point out sins in non-Christian countries, such as infanticide, which are disappearing, though the countries concerned are not Christian. The tide of Christian truth and purity has swept into their borders and destroyed these sins. I might go on to shew, that it just the same in regard to sins of the soul as well as to those of virtue. The Stoic superman was chokeful of pride, that he was "not as other men." That kind of pride has been utterly discredited. No one defends it now. So we might go on and show, that in fact sin is not as virulent as it was. Its Marne was the "Pavement" on which the Saviour of the world was tried, was Calvary on which He died, shedding His blood for the sins of the world. Christianity is not an everlasting, wearying hopeless fight against a foe as fresh as ever. No. It is a fight against a beaten foe. Much remains to be done: you and all the rest of us and all mankind need much sanctifying no doubt: but the grand battle has been fought and won. He said as he died, "It is finished." And so it was.

CHINA'S SEARCH FOR PEACE

III.—The Republic a Milch Cow for Every Adventurer: What are the Chances of another Monarchy?

From Rodney Gilbert.

Peking, Jan. 5.

At the time of the Revolution in 1911 a very fair proportion of the Chinese people were able to understand why the Manchu dynasty should be attacked and overthrown. In the first place the Manchus were aliens. Then the rulers of the last few generations had all suffered defeat and humiliation at the hands of foreign aggressors while their suppression of native rebellions could in every case be credited to Chinese commanders and not to the Manchu military organization. After the death of the Empress Dowager it was patent to all China that the force of the Dynasty had spent itself, that prestige was gone and that the princes who were handling public affairs were sacrificing their right to rule as cultural high priests. The modern army, which promised to give China some prestige in the sight of the world, had been suggested in the first place by Chinese viceroys, had been organized throughout by Chinese and was officered almost exclusively by Chinese. There was no Manchu in the Government who had the ability to direct its growth or control its movements. There was indeed no excuse left for the Manchus at all. Collapse was inevitable and everyone realized it, so that very few Chinese were either chagrined or surprised when, after a revolution of sorts, Yuan Shih-kai and the other controllers of the modern army invited the Manchus to abdicate.

What the great mass of the Chinese people did not understand, and do not yet understand, was the substitution of this new thing called a Republic for the Empire. All that was understood, except in a very limited circle, was that it was something new, imported from abroad, and therefore probably efficient. The unseating of the Manchus was a good thing. The unseating of the Manchus was achieved by the modern army, built entirely upon imported standards. All foreign institutions therefore came in for a share of the popularity which the overthrow of the dynasty and the modern army enjoyed. Foreign learning, foreign religious teaching, foreign medicine, machinery and science, even foreign clothes and manners (or an approximation of them) were all on the crest of the wave for a few years after the revolution. The people, even in the remote provinces, fell over themselves in accepting what they did not understand and it was in this spirit that the Republic was accepted. There was not the slightest thought in the minds of one in ten thousand of participating in this new régime which had been set up. The masses had no idea that under a republic it was not only their privilege but their duty to participate intelligently.

As it transpired later the men who had made the republic possible, and who paid it lip service, had no intention that the masses should entertain any such ideas. These leaders were free moreover to interpret republicanism, democracy, constitutionalism and such terms as they pleased. All Chinese history and tradition gave them this right. The man in Chinese history bold, strong and efficient enough to overthrow a dynasty, has a perfect right in the sight of both the people and the historians to set up another where, when and how he pleases. The modern army had overthrown the Manchus and if the modern army saw fit to borrow one more new idea from the efficient West and foist it upon China, that was the modern army's privilege. Any dispassionate student of Chinese history and the temper of the Chinese people will see clearly enough that if the modern army had set up a new Emperor at the time of the Revolution, the masses of the people would have been no less complacent. In fact they would have felt more at ease to have known that there was some one in Peking on the dragon throne with authority to act as middleman between themselves and the Deity.

A FARCE FROM THE OUTSET.

From the beginning the Republic was a farce; and more and more burlesque features have been introduced into it from year to year until now, like all horse play which ends in a riot, it is a tragedy. The only men who understood clearly what republicanism meant, or who thought they understood it, were the returned students and other radicals who had been reformers or anti-dynastic agitators under the Manchus, had been exiled to foreign countries and had been there inoculated with various Occidental "isms" which, they

THE WOMAN'S PAGE

THAT TIME OF YEAR

Two Views of the Matter

By Elizabeth Pepys.

"Yes, anybody could tell the exact date of the calendar by looking at my wardrobe," said she. "This is the in-between time, when your early winter clothes are beginning to lose their new gloss, when acquaintances recognize you by your hats, and when one is torn between the economical desire to make things last out the season and the equally laudable ambition not to look like a frump."

"True," assented an optimistic acquaintance, "but I have found that my wardrobe has taken on a different aspect, a sense of novelty and that almost without my knowing it, certainly without my knowledge or consent."

"How?" queried her friend.

"You see this beaded tunic?"

"Yes—er—but is that the same one you had?

"It is and it isn't and this is just the point of my tale. You remember that it was almost covered with beads at one time. Now it has a charmingly vague and indefinite pattern. Something undefinable, but I elect to term it charming. Of course I could say that its glory has departed with the beads that were lost when their retaining threads snapped; but why not call it a novelty. You'll note that the fashion notes bear me out. And then there are always the Sales, a mid-way course twixt extravagance and parsimony. I like this season."

But all her friend murmured was "You certainly are an optimist!"

SOME SKIRT!

Bewildering Variety in Season's Gowns

By Elizabeth Pepys.

No, we are not adopting the reprehensible habit of referring to feminines as "skirts." We are truly literal as we wind our way about through the delightfully varied collection of winter models and advance spring styles.

The pleated skirt persists. Age cannot wither it appears for no less an authority than Vionnet is still using the all round pleated skirt for jeune fille models and Harry Lichtenstein is adapting the same idea for simple theatre frocks. Pleated panels and inserts in numerous designs break the monotony of the skirt and often provide the necessary fulness.

THE BOUFFANT ALWAYS WELCOME.

As in Russian grammar, one starts with a rule and ends with four paragraphs of exceptions. The fundamental premise is that the skirt is straight and fairly narrow. Immediately up jumps the period frock to assert its claim to distinction and we have to say that the bouffant is its own excuse for being and will always be received in picturesque society. However, in nine cases out of ten the general effect will be found to be pillar-like, no matter what extraneous concessions are introduced.

Consider, for example the skirt which seems to have all its fulness collected in the front, and to be positively voluminous. Possibly so, probably not. The close observer will detect the fact that the fulness does not belong to the skirt at all, but is merely a continuation of the fulness of the bodice, which is drawn into a great bow tied squarely in the middle of the front, with floating ends which almost reach the hem. Another interesting, not to say exciting, treatment of the skirt is to use an arrow-shaped insert of fine tucks in the front and inverted pleats to give a convenient fulness at the side.

THE UBIQUITOUS GODET.

Two skirts of similar design are exhibited by Harry Lichtenstein, the first having a full godet like a jabot attached to the centre of the girdle which carries out the effect of the jabot which springs from the pointed neck line. The second skirt has a single pointed panel resembling a jabot and forms an appropriate conclusion to the monk's cowl effect worn in front. The godet is used in every sort of way and takes care of the requisite fulness.

Some of the more fanciful skirts are extreme in their novel expedients to look different. One of Paquin's is pulled tight over the back and falls over the jewelled girdle (which is higher in front than in back) in a full front panel. Thin chiffon skirts are often made up of various layers of different fulness, and of course there are always varied dispositions of draperies at the side.

LITERARY DIFFICULTIES

Where the Pursuit of Realism in Style Leads

By Elizabeth Pepys.

There was once an ambitious young author who had great and noble ideas on the problems of Sin and Sorrow, not to mention Love, Spring and Death. She wrote very charming things on these subjects which all her friends called marvellous. They asked her why she didn't publish them, whereupon she smiled sadly and let it be understood that their content was quite too intimate to spread upon the unfeeling pages of journal or magazine. And all the time her collection of polite literature in the shape of "Declined with Thanks" slips kept steadily increasing.

ROWS OF PLEATS ACCENTUATE THE LONG LINE.

By taking a course in psycho-analysis, however, she learned that what she needed was to abandon repression and express her individuality, whereupon she began to experiment in sinning, sorrowing, loving, but left springing and dying for advanced study. Soon she came to look down upon her early attempts in literature and quite agreed with the unfeeling editors who would not publish them. She knew she could do better work now, but the trouble was she had no time to take the poetic pen in hand.

Having, however, on one occasion, henna-ed her hair not wisely but too red, in her enforced seclusion she began to write again, but still her efforts were returned. Absorbed in the pursuit of experience she had not noticed the turn of the tide and missed the train of popular writing by a season or two. Now she is trying to dove-tail experience and expression and it may be that we shall yet hear of her as the world's best seller.

MEN'S PARTY CLOTHES

The Tremendous Importance of Buttons

By Elizabeth Pepys.

To enjoy an evening's entertainment one must, of course, be properly dressed, and no matter how much a man grumbles over getting into broadcloth and fine linen he will be the first to turn upon his wife if she has allowed him to be the only man in a dinner jacket among a multitude of tails. That, naturally is a great distinction, and one which the feminine mind can quite comprehand, as being similar to the distinction between a "dinner frock" and full evening costume.

It is, however, more difficult for the untrained womanly eye to differentiate 'twixt the braid covered and the shiny button of a man's dress coat when she is trying to note the materials, colours, styles, and designers of all the gowns worn by the ladies present; but she really owes it to herself to do so, for how otherwise may she be sure that he is really a proper person for her to meet socially. The other evening while on one side the discussion of free verse waxed warm, and across the table some racy personalities were being indulged in, we had to lend an unwilling ear to a dissertation on buttons.

THE TOUCH THAT COUNTS.

Buttons make the man; wrong use of them, the bounder, we were led to believe. After learning their significance as marking an evening outfit as belonging to the Well-Dressed Man or merely to the Indifferent Male we shuddered at our former lack of sensitiveness to this detail. When at comparatively small expense an evening jacket or tail-coat may be brought up to date it is tragic to think that the would-be Beau Brummels of Shanghai are remiss through ignorance. We haste, therefore to publish the glad tidings of the button.

To be essentially correct the evening button should not be covered with braid. It has no rim nor can one see any holes through which the attaching thread runs. The really modish button is very black, very shiny, and stitched to the coat by a hole at the back. King George of England has sponsored this pattern so it would hardly be patriotic to refrain from imitation.

We had progressed through several courses on the subject of buttons and before the sweets appeared we were informed of some of the lines of beauty which distinguish the newest white waistcoat. If memory serves us properly it should have two buttons on either side or was it three? Horrors, why didn't we make notes on our serviette? But we think we shall not be wrong in advising two, while we are certain that there should be two stud holes in the front of the shirt front. As for ties—but that is quite another story.

THE YOUNG CONVALESCENT

Feeding up the Sick Child

Unlike that of a grown-up, the appetite of a child cannot be tempted by the rarity, the out-of-seasonness of the fare provided, nor by the piquancy of its sauces. But there are other things to which the normal unsophisticated child responds. For instance, there is the element of surprise. A new cup and saucer or mug with gay little pictures of animals on them help down many a drink of milk; the contents of the new bowl will often be speedily eaten up so that the bright flowerspray painted inside down at the bottom may reveal itself. Then, too, the child's love of the miniature must be remembered. A plateful sent up from the family dish is dull compared with a pudding in its own tiny dish to which the child, if old enough and well enough, can help itself. A couple of French fireproof casseroles, brown or green with a white lining and measuring some five inches in diameter, are most useful in preparing food for the little invalid, and a small-sized hot-water plate is invaluable, for a sick child loiters over its meals, and, even to the healthy, half-cold food is unappetising. White enamelled trays with rims all round and with pictures on them are now sold at quite reasonable prices, and these are a boon when serving bed-meals, where accidents are so easy. Everything on the tray should be bright and dainty, with nothing heavy and tiring to hold.

A very light but most nourishing little meal may take the form of savoury custard.

SAVOURY CUSTARD.

Warm up, but do not boil, five ounces of beef-tea or chicken-tea (Two tablespoonfuls of liquid equal one ounce.) Pour this on a well-beaten fresh egg, strain it into a buttered breakfast-cup, and cover with a piece of buttered paper. Steam in a pan of boiling water—the water should come half-way up the side of the cup—until just set. The heat should be gentle. The cooking will take about fifteen minutes. Turn out on the hot-water plate, and serve at once with some "fingers" of bread and butter, for butter is the most digestible form of fat, and a good deal can be got down in the form of thin bread and butter.

Here are two very simple and light fish dishes.

STEAMED FILLETS OF SOLE.

Roll up each of the four fillets of a small sole, the skin side inside, which prevents their coming unrolled in the cooking. Stand them up in the buttered casserole, with a tiny bit of butter on each roll and a little salt. Steam till tender—about fifteen or twenty minutes according to the size of the rolls. If potato may be eaten, mash up some with boiling milk, beat lightly with a fork, and serve in the second caserole.

THE BELL-SHAPED SKIRT.

FISH CREAM.

Two ounces uncooked white fish—weighed after scraping.
Quarter ounce breadcrumbs.
Quarter ounce butter.
Three tablespoonfuls of milk.

Put the milk, butter and breadcrumbs in a little pan, and cook till the crumbs have swelled nicely. Then add the fish you have scraped, salt to taste, and half of the well-beaten white of an egg stirred in very lightly. Pour the mixture into a buttered cup, cover with buttered paper, and steam for fifteen or twenty minutes. Turn out and serve with a little white sauce poured over.

If the child has boiled chicken one day slices can be served up very temptingly next day.

JELLIED CHICKEN.

Cut a few nice slices off the breast and arrange in a small oval dish, such as a potted meat dish. Heat three or four ounces of the broth in which the fowl was boiled, and melt it in a heaped tablespoonful of isinglass. Bring it to the boil—for isinglass, unlike gelatine, is improved with boiling,—and when somewhat cooled pour over the slices of chicken. This must, of course, be made overnight so that it can be turned out for the child's luncheon, garnished with a sprig of parsley.

For the second course of the meal a cup custard can be made, just like the savoury custard, with five ounces of milk, slightly sweetened, substituted for the broth.

If fruit is allowed a dish much appreciated is apple snow.

APPLE SNOW.

Stew some apples, with sugar to taste; rub through a hair sieve and leave to get cold. Well whisk the white of an egg, and stir lightly but thoroughly into the apple. Pile some on a little dish, and decorate with red currant jelly. Serve sponge fingers with this.

Milk jellies made with isinglass are very nourishing, but thought must be given to prevent the monotony of milk dishes. Vary the flavouring by using sometimes a drop of vanilla, sometimes a little grated chocolate dissolved in the milk. Vary even the colour, for a pale pink milk mould with dice of red currant jelly ornamenting it has before now drawn from a child the remark that "it looks like a grown-up party."

If the child is able to feed itself watch the meal's progress out of the corner of your eye only. Take it for granted that the food is going to be enjoyed and eaten up, for a sick child is wonderfully sensitive to the power of suggestion.

"Manchester Guardian."

PAST AND PRESENT

With Apologies to Thomas Hood

I remember, I remember
The little hat I wore,
The little feather smartly set,
The buckle that it bore.
All said it was a charming toque,
They seemed to like the sight,
But though it's not yet worn out
It looks a perfect fright.

I remember, I remember
Last winter's stylish coat.
It bloused where all chic coats should blouse,
It struck a stylish note.
It had expensive linings,
Was trimmed with fur quite dear;
But now it is a refugee's—
I hope she's not too queer!

I remember, I remember
The dress I bought last spring
I used to think its lengthy skirt
Was the most modish thing.
It was a frumpish ignorance;
But it's no joy to know
I'll never reach the heights of style.
The fashions alter so!

E. P.

CURRENT FANCIES

Rhinestone bars are the mode of the moment in milinery. A small turban draped with satin ribbon and this drawn out in a loop to one side is caught with a rhinestone bar. Or a bar peeks out from under a soft beret crown with a small brim fitting the head snugly. For evening we have a wrapped turban of colourful tissue and diagonally across the front, as though holding these folds in place, glitters a single row of rhinestones.

∴

Ribbons feature in the trimming mode for millinery and gowns. New styles are the duvetyn faced in silver or velvet faced in silver and then there are those of half velvet and half moire or a faille band on either side of the velvet. A ribbon that works in for bindings and girdles and is well adapted to negligees is a satin faced with a shirred effect of faille. When in black and white combination, it is an excellent trimming for a black felt or satin hat as a bow fashioned of this has considerable body.

∴

Rhinestones and lustrous white satin with the addition of pearls in the unusual hair ornament combine to make an extremely attractive evening costume to grace the most formal occasion.

THE BOOK PAGE

BOOK NOTES AND NEWS

One gathers from the booksellers of London that there is a certain revival in the popularity of Wilkie Collins. He had a great sale in the days of the "yellow back," especially his "The Woman in White" and "The Moonstone." He did not do nearly so well, however, when the sevenpenny reprint came along, and that may be the reason why the present reading generation knows little about Wilkie Collins. It looks, however, as if there were curiosity somewhere to know about him, and people may discover that no other man of our day has written better "shockers."

∴

Mr. Alfred Noyes is engaged upon the second volume of his long poem, "The Torch-Bearers," and he may have it ready for the spring. Possibly we know him best for his short poems, as, for example, that melodious one about lilac-time at Kew. His "Torch-Bearers" is in the fuller strain of narrative and epic.

∴

Madame Selma Lagerlöf, the Scandinavian writer, has a novel appearing in English with the house of Gyldendal. It is called "Herr Arne's Hoard," and the scene of it is in the south of Sweden at the end of the sixteenth century. We are assured that "the story has furnished the material for a film scarcely matched for picturesque effect. This would show that it has calling colour, but then Selma Lagerlöf has a quite particular gift for transporting us to another age and a strange environment, and making us feel the emotions of her characters and see their world with our eyes. All that characterises her "Gosta Berling's Saga," her "Outcast," and even her "Jerusalem."

∴

Mr. Frank Fox's book on "The English, 1909-1922" (Murray, 9s.) is described as "a gossip," and it does partake of many of the better qualities of that commodity. Coming from Australia, Mr. Fox found the English climate to be, instead of the expected martyrdom, "pleasant on the average in comparison with most places that I know well except Sydney." He found himself also rid by degrees of some hesitant prepossessions with regard to the English people —getting nearer to the root of the matter by tramping a considerable part of their country. Mr. Fox was not altogether unprepared, therefore, for some of the idiosyncrasies which in war-time took portions of the world by surprise. The author's matured verdict is that the English character "is the most admirable in the world for dealing with savage and simple peoples. It is very aggravating, on a first acquaintance, to peoples of a more sophisticated type. On a better acquaintance, it generally wins its way to the approval, if not the affection, of reasonable men."

∴

Not everybody is old enough to recall the great controversy which happened in the nineties about Madame Blavatsky and the Mahatmas. Mrs Annie Besant was in it and so was Mr. A. P. Sinnett, and now Fisher Unwin promises us a volume of "Mahatma Letters," written to him. They came, we are told, from the Trans-Himalayan fastnesses of Tibet, and their authors were two members of an Occult Brotherhood. It was to them and their epistles that Madame Blavatsky testified when she first said "Mahatma" and caused the storm. We are now to see what was behind her faith and actions.

∴

It is pleasant to hear from the Blackwoods that their popular edition of the novels of Dr Neil Munro has been a high success. He is so busy as a newspaper editor in Glasgow that he has not for a long time been able to give us a new romance. It is all to the credit of the public that they should remember his old stories, because they have the quality of literature and buy them in a new dress. During the war Dr. Munro wrote some capital "Bagpipe Ballads," and one day, perhaps, he will be writing more and gathering then all into a volume.

∴

Countess Roberts has written an interesting little account of the Roberts family and its associations with India. It will appear as preface to her eminent father's "Letters Written In the Indian Mutiny," which Macmillan is about to publish. There are 30 letters set down in the years 1857-58 by Fred Roberts, of the Bengal Artillery, as he then was, to his family at home. The opening epistle tells how the earliest news of the disturbances at Meerut and Delhi reached Peshawar, where young Roberts was stationed. Of the subsequent letters, one or two are missing, but they tell the tale of the Mutiny very completely.

SENTIMENTAL SKETCHES

"LIFE AND I." By C. Lewis Hind, Lane. 6s.

Mr. Hind tells us, in one of his little sketches, how a friend of his called him "a man of sentiment," and how he not only did not deny the charge, but gloried in it. And a man of sentiment he certainly is, and his book is nothing if not a sentimental journey, naked and unashamed. Thus, to take only two examples, he tells us how he can never think of Charles the First without having "a lump in his throat." Nor could he see that horrible melange about Old Bill at the Lyceum without having a little orgy of sentiment. And then there is Julius Cæsar. Julius is a little boy of three or four that Mr. Hind has adopted, and though he seems to be a very bright, intelligent and amusing little boy, we should like him better if Mr. Hind did not use him as a peg upon which to hang all manner of over-luscious sentimental musings. There are plenty of good ideas and quite a number of entertaining little adventures in these sketches, but unless the reader happens to like dining off turtle soup and éclairs, washed down with draughts of sherbet, he will certainly find this book a little too sweet and luscious for his taste. For people who cannot have too much sentiment it should, however, make an ideal birthday present.

SHANGHAI LIFE

A New Edition of Jay Denby's Letters

"LETTERS OF A SHANGHAI GRIFFIN." Jay Denby. Illus: by H. W. G. Hayter. Messrs. Kelly & Walsh, Limited.

Mr. Jay Denby's "Letters of a Shanghai Griffin", although written in 1911, are still extraordinarily true to the life and spirit of Shanghai in 1924, and Messrs. Kelly & Walsh, in producing a third edition at the present time, can count upon an enthusiastic reception on the part of the post-War population of the Settlement. The work was reviewed favourably by the leading newspapers at home, which commented particularly upon the extremely witty manner in which the writer had summed up every little phase of Shanghai life.

Starting with letters written on the voyage from England, Mr. Denby goes on to describe his first impressions of Shanghai—the chit system, Chinese chow, the servants' squeeze, "Society", etc., etc. Foremost among his impressions is the multitude of smells and he refers to a village whose chief occupation was the "manufacture of smells from fish", while he alludes to the chief products of agriculture as "smells, graves and rice, in the order named." Another subject to which frequent reference is made is the Heat, and he enlarges upon the paucity of clothing worn by ladies in the Summer, expressing abhorrence at the "openwork" of the dresses. Now that the "openwork" has given place to low necks and sleeveless gowns, it is certain that if the book had been written 13 years later, the author would have had even more to say on that subject.

In spite of the fact that the majority of comments are as true to-day as they were in 1911, a few of them are essentially out of date. For instance, while there are allusions to skating, nothing is heard about dancing or of the Carlton, French Club, etc., which would figure in such letters to-day. Moreover, no one would dream of suggesting at the present time that the Customs Surplus will be used for building up a big Chinese Navy!

The second half of the volume consists of a score or so of short stories written in the same entertaining style as the "Letters."

The book is copiously illustrated by Mr. H. W. G. Hayter, whose amusing sketches of the Chinese give it an added interest, especially for those readers who have not been to China and seen for themselves "The Cook", "The Shroff" and the Chinese damsels "all beautifully dressed." It can be thoroughly recommended to all who enjoy a hearty laugh and especially to those who would like to place in the hands of their friends and relatives at home a really amusing account of the features of our daily life out here.

A.M.B.-S.

LOGIC WITH A LIMP

"FABRIC OF THOUGHT." By G. F. M. Ennis. London: Effingham Wilson.

People who have amused themselves with the Baconian cipher "discovered" and "interpreted" by the late Sir Edward Durning Lawrence should obtain "Fabric of Thought" as a companion volume in the art of driving a theory to a ridiculous extreme. The theme is the old and delightful nursery catch:—

ENA DENA DINA DO
CATCH A NIGGER BY THE TOE
IF HE HOLLERS LET HIM GO
INA MENA MINA MO.

in which rhyme Mr. Ennis professes to have discovered an ancient alphabet of 16 letters, known tradionally in Ireland, in Greece, and in Egypt, the foundation of all alphabets, and a veritable arcana of secret doctrine, actually providing a code to the Riddle of the Sphinx. It is incredible that the author should invite serious attention to his fantastic development of the theory, but such is the case and, with logical limps and wild bounds of "probability," Mr. Ennis arrives at the Truth and nothing but the Truth of human destiny. It is an amazing performance, but not one upon which time need be wasted in criticism.

It would be just as profitable to write a book on the old catch: "Fee Fi Fo Fum, I smell the blood of an Englishman;" in which case, following the Ennis method, one might proceed:—

> "Fee Fi Fo Fum:" in this line we see that the leading letter is F. Now, assuming that 'F' stands for Father, the probability is that the key word indicated is "Fatherland," showing the German origin of the phrase, obviously a piece of propaganda. Observe the subtlety with which all mention of sauerkraut and sausage has been omitted from the line, etc., etc."

Absurd; but scarcely less so than our industrious and enthusiastic author's "Fabric of Thought."

H.L.P.

"THE MAN ABOUT TOWN"

"THE MAN ABOUT TOWN." By A. P. Herbert. (Heinemann. 6s. net.)

Readers of "Punch" are well acquainted with Mr. Herbert's friend George, whose attention to the serious business of life, as lived by the man about town, is so admirable and unfailing. Here is George all at once, so to say, instead of George once a week, and we stand the encounter quite well. He is an excellent companion, and his habit of leaving the narrator in the lurch is almost endearing. There is a simplicity about George, a regard for his own comfort, a readiness to experience just so much of the latest thing as will not disturb his superb though artless selfishness. George, at one of the Sunday performances of the Society for the Resuscitation of Extinct Plays, is an example of Mr. Herbert's gift for light satire. It was "a refined audience, yet an audience English to the core, for nearly all the ladies wore Russian dresses almost entirely concealed by Spanish shawls, with shoes of some quaint Turkish design, and perhaps a simple Chinese ornament hanging from the throat." And every member of the audience observed to his or her neighbour. "What a lot of highbrows!" The play was "Come, Fill the Cup," first acted in the Tithe Barn, Smithfield, in 1621, and the characters were called Slutt, Stagger, Mistress Slowly, Nose, Prickle, and Dogg. The first scene—inevitably —was a tavern. The highbrow audience and George were equally delighted—"Jolly good show," said George, "sort of revue, really." It is hard to say whether this or the description of George at the Dome of Dance is the better, and the fact that we have read them before is no bar to enjoying them again.

There are other stories—of golfers, of lizards and frogs (exceedingly pleasant, this), of the courts, of sailor men. A foreigner would not see much in them, perhaps. They are purely English in their humour, and for English readers entirely understandable.

THE MODERN HISTORY OF CHINA

An Interesting and Valuable Outline

MODERN CHINESE HISTORY: SELECTED READINGS. A collection of extracts from various sources chosen to illustrate some of the chief phases of China international relations during the past 100 years. By Harley Farnsworth MacNair, PH.D., Professor of History and Government in St. John's University.—The Commercial Press, Shanghai.

Professor MacNair has rendered a service useful to the general public no less than to the student in compiling this admirable selection from the best authorities on the modern history of China. The volume covers a very wide range of reading, and for those whose interest is sufficiently stimulated there is given at the close of each section a list of books relative to each period. The "selections" make a volume of over 900 pages, substantial but not a page too many, for a mass of most interesting information and comment is here conveniently placed at the reader's disposal, and we know of no volume which gives a better survey of the century. The earlier chapters, giving first Chinese and foreign impressions of the Western impact on China, are of particular interest, especially the Emperor Ch'ien Lung's Mandates to King George III, given in full, and clearly revealing the deep apprehension with which the monarch and his advisers regarded the advance-guard of modernism. The old Emperor, "swaying the wide world," politely told the importunate traders, precariously encamped at Canton, to depart hence and take their merchandize with them, since China, rich in natural resources and prospering under the sun of benevolence, had no need of foreign manufactures; and it was naively added that, however much the foreigner might covet Chinese civilization and wish to adopt it, the attempt to transplant the manners and customs of the country to an alien soil must prove a failure: therefore the foreigner, having nothing useful to bring or take away, would appease reason and the fitness of things by going Home. But the barbarian was uncomfortably persistent, and the ensuing chapters show the slow but steady manner in which barriers of obstruction and prejudice were broken down. The conditions of intercourse at Canton prior to 1842, with the system of co-hongs and factories, is of special interest by way of comparison with present day conditions. The principal phases of history from that period to the present day are touched upon with sufficient fullness to give an adequate and intelligible outline upon which further study may be based. The volume can be recommended in particular to those whose interest in the past is out of proportion with the time at their disposal for study

SOME NEW ESSAYS BY LAFCADIO HEARN

"ESSAYS ON EUROPEAN LITERATURE." By Lafcadio Hearn. Arranged and Edited by Albert Mordell. Heinemann. 8s 6d.

Lafcadio Hearn, before he went to Japan, was on the staff of the New Orleans "Times-Democrat," and was in the habit of contributing to its columns editorials on literary topics. Many of these articles were unsigned, but Mr. Mordell, who has gone through the files of the paper very carefully, has been able to identify a number of them as Hearn's and has made a collection of such things in this new book. The greater number of the papers are on French, Russian and Oriental literature, and only a few English writers are treated. There is, however, one essay on English literature that should not be missed by those who are interested in the humours of criticism. It is a paper, written in 1884, entitled "Not Without Honour, Save In His Own Country," and its subject is the two Arnolds, Matthew and Sir Edwin.

Hearn relates, with some show of indignation, how a certain Eads, an American lover of poetry on a visit to England, discovered that most of the literary people and the bookstall assistants only knew one Arnold as a poet. When he recited the verses of the other, everybody was astonished, and said how good they were. "And Captain Eads could not refrain from expressing astonishment that a poet whose works were for sale in every American book-store, should be utterly ignored in London." By this time the learned reader will have jumped to the conclusion that by some extraordinary chance the fame of Matthew Arnold as a poet had spread to America, while we in this country were content with Sir Edwin and his "Light of Asia."

This would certainly justify Hearn's indignation. But actually, the very opposite of this is meant, for it was Matthew Arnold that everyone knew here, and it was Sir Edwin who was so admired in America, by Captain Eads and Hearn and everyone else, and who was "Not without honour save in his own country." The fact is that Lafcadio Hearn, while he was on the New Orleans paper in the distant early 80 was not a particularly admirable critic of literature at all, and was certainly a third or fourth-rate critic of poetry. However, he has enough admirers now to make this book worth doing, and Mr. Mordell has done his work very well.

ACCOUNTING

JOHNSON'S BOOK-KEEPING AND ACCOUNTS, by George Johnson, F.L.A.A., F.A.I.S. Effingham Wilson, London, 1923.

This is a well-known text-book on the above subject, which was first printed some ten or more years ago has now been entirely reprinted. It contains all the information necessary for the trader, partner or limited liability company to carry on its business according to modern office methods, and will also be found invaluable as a text book.

The North-China Herald

AND SUPREME COURT AND CONSULAR GAZETTE

WEEKLY EDITION OF THE NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS

Registered at the Chinese P. O. for transmission as mail matter under Class B.

(Tsz-ling-sing-chi-chow-kan 字林星期週刊)

VOL. CL. No. 2946. SHANGHAI, SATURDAY, JANUARY 26, 1924. TAELS 12 PER ANNUM.

CONTENTS

CHINESE POLITICS—
Peking's Fight for Finance Ministry ... 117
Tsao Jui Exiled from Peking 117
Wild Story About Sir F. Aglen 118
Dr. Sun's Attack on the Customs ... 118
Shantung Railway and Wu Pei fu ... 118

LEADING ARTICLES—
China and its Constitution ... 119
Libel on Mr. Churchill, The ... 119
Dog with the Bad Name, The 119
First Labour Cabinet, The ... 120
Lenin ... 120
Position of the Franc, The ... 120
Japanese Wedding, The... ... 121
State of the Upper Yangtze 121
NOTES AND COMMENTS 121

NEWS FROM THE OUTPORTS—
Captivity of Mrs. Kilen, The 118
In the Bandits' Midst 122
Dastardly Outrage by Pirates 122
Another Foreign Priest Taken 122
Tsingtao's Huge Beef Export... 122
Shantung Railway Disaster ... 122
Outrage on the Tzeshui, The... 122
Province Under Bandit Sway 123
Kiangsu and Chekiang 123
Life in Kueichow 123
Kueichow Governor in Mourning 123
Hangchow Still Quiet 123
Another New Sect 123
Fighting Famine in China ... 124
Dame Anderson at Ningpo ... 124
Yang Sen's Advance on Chengtu 12
Bandits' Head Brought to Kaifengfu 124
Lamaism's Rounds 125
Unloved Soldiers of Japan ... 125
Japanese Ministry Tottering ... 125
Communist's Christmas, The ... 126
Yokohama After the Earth-quake 126
Pneumonic Plague at Chita ... 126
American Fleet and Chefoo ... 126
Yoshwara Evil of Japan, The 127
Tang Chi-yao Not Fled from Yunnan 127
Levy of Taxes in Kuangtung 127
Opium Monopoly in Canton ... 127
Fukien's Fruit Industry... ... 128
Soochow University 128
Bandits in N. Kiangsu 128

SHANGHAI NEWS—
Retirement of Mr. W. A. H. Moule 129
Sensational Scene in Nanking Road 129
Obituary—
Mr. John Blechynden 129
Mr. Joseph E. O'Mahony ... 129
Bubbling Well Road Building Scheme 129
Paper Hunt Club for Ladies 130
U. S. Consular Invoices... ... 130
Fire in Lumber Ship 130
Foreign Press Association, The 130
Mr. Rowland and Union Church 130

LAW REPORTS—
H. M. Supreme Court—
Empire Optical Co. 130
Companies' Ordinances ... 131
Unhappy Newspaper Venture 131
Compradore, The 131
H. M. Police Court—
Indian Propaganda Charge ... 132
Man Who Found a Watch 132
Foreigner Shot in Avenue Joffre 132
U. S. Court for China—
U. S. Shipping Board Sued 132
Jewellery or Junk? 132
New Year Café Fracas ... 133
Alleged Assault on a Chauffeur 133
Engineering Concern in Difficulties 133
Mixed Court—
Serious Affray at Kaiyosha Wharf 13
Ex-Labour Leader Charged... 134

COMMERCE AND FINANCE 135

COMPANY MEETING—
Cheng Rubber Estates, Ld. ... 138

CLUBS AND SOCIETIES—
Columbia Country Club 138
Harding Memorial 138

CORRESPONDENCE—
Bandits, the People's Defiance 139
China's Salt and its Revenue 139
Editor's Reward, The 139

SPORTS AND PASTIMES—
Paper Hunt Club 139
Swimming Record 139
Billiards, Football, etc. 139
MUNICIPAL GAZETTE NEWS ... 140
FOREIGN TELEGRAMS... ... 141—146
FROM THE FOUR WINDS ... 147—149

SPECIAL ARTICLES—
Pillars of Cloud and Fire ... 150
China's Search for Peace ... 150
Lao Yang-jen the Terror of Honan 152
Personal Memory of Lenin ... 152
BOOK PAGE 153
WOMAN'S PAGE 154

MR. RAMSAY MACDONALD TAKES THE WHEEL

PEKING'S FIGHT FOR FINANCE MINISTRY

Wang Ko-ming Forced Out by Hostility of Parliament: President Gives in: Gold Franc Settlement Now Expected

Peking, Jan. 13.

Mr. Sun Pao-chi requests that the following brief outline of his policy may be transmitted to the foreign correspondents: He is in favour of the unification of the country by peaceful measures and not by force. He respects public opinion and will do nothing contrary to the expressed wishes of the people. He adheres to the national constitution. He hopes to submit plans for the disbandment of superfluous troops.

It is stated that the Premier, realizing that there are many documents to be read, will take up his quarters in the Cabinet offices in order to be near to his work. He has appointed five co-directors to the Secretary's office to assist him.—Reuter.

Peking, Jan. 18.

At a meeting of Parliament last Tuesday the Administrative Committee of the House of Representatives resolved to appoint Col. Pao Tao-cheng as Chief of the Parliamentary Guards, in succession to Gen. Chang Yu-lin, who was recently appointed to that post by the Metropolitan Police. Up to the present, however, Gen. Chang has not handed over to Col. Pao. Gen. Chang argues that an order from the Ministry of the Interior is necessary. Parliament, therefore, sent in a dispatch to the Cabinet asking for the withdrawal not only of Gen. Chang, but of all the police guards. At the last meeting of the Cabinet this matter was brought forward, but no decision was reached, owing to the absence of Mr. Chang Ko, Minister of the Interior, and further consideration was postponed until to-morrow's meeting of the Cabinet.

Reuter's Agency is authoritatively informed that there is no truth in the reports of disagreement among members of the Diplomatic Body representing the eight signatories of the Protocol of 1901, with regard to payment of the indemnity in gold. It was unanimously decided at the last meeting to reply to the Note of the Chinese Minister of Foreign Affairs, but there was no hitch in the discussions.

Mr. Liu Ching-jen, former Minister at Petrograd, was put on the waiting list for appointment as Minister abroad last January. As no suitable appointment has fallen vacant his term of waiting has been extended for another year.

Another candidate for appointment abroad is Mr. Chen Chieh, formerly Commissioner for Foriegn Affairs in Hupeh, who has been recommended by Marshal Hsiao Yao-man.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

From Rodney Gilbert.

Peking, Jan. 19.

Parliament's implacable hostility has moved Wang Ko-ming, the Finance Minister designate, to abandon hope of reassuming office, which he now definitely refuses. President Tsao Kun is resigned to this decision and is likely now to approve the suggestion of the Premier, Sun Pao-chi, that Yen Hui-ching should be given the Ministry of Finance, in which event Dr. Wang Cheng-ting will have strong support for the Ministry of Agriculture thus vacated by Yen.

Politicians believe that, if Yen goes to the Ministry of Finance, the gold franc question will quickly be settled, because the Cabinet are still willing to meet the French terms and the majority of the legislators realize the weakness of their position and are ready to withdraw their opposition when Wang Ko-ming's appointment has been cancelled.

Prominent officials say that Dr. Wellington Koo's Note to the Diplomatic Body on the gold franc question was designedly weak in order to give the Powers an opportunity to refute its claims and impress Parliament and the Chinese Press with the weakness of China's position.

Peking, Jan. 20.

The House of Representatives has forwarded a despatch to the Cabinet requesting that facilities be given to eight delegates from the special investigation committee to examine the records and documents of the Waichiaopu and Ministry of Finance respecting the issue of $5,000,000 Treasury Bonds and also the gold franc question in connexion with the proposed impeachment of Mr. Wang Ko-ming.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Peking, Jan. 21.

Marshal Wu Pei-fu has telegraphed to the Government urging that efforts should be made to persuade Mr. Wang Ko-ming to take up the post of Minister of Finance and there are indications that Mr. Wang may yet accept.

Peking, Jan. 21.

It is semi-officially reported that an agreement was reached this afternoon between Mr. Sun Pao-Chi and Mr. Wang Ko-ming whereby the latter will assume the post of Minister of Finance to-morrow.

The other vacancy is also in process of being filled as Mr. Sun Pao-chi has decided to appoint Mr. Chang Kuo-kan Minister of Education. The mandate accepting the resignation of Mr. Fan Yuan-lin and appointing Mr. Chang is expected this evening.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

MR. QUO TAI-CHI, Vice-Minister of Foreign Affairs in Dr. Sun Yat-sen's Administration in Canton, in a letter to a friend in Shanghai, states that letters urging Dr. Sun to seize the Customs Surplus continue to pour in daily. There only remain ten of 17 foreign gunboats which arrived off Canton a month ago, the others having already left. "Our government," states Mr. Quo, "is not afraid of military strength. Foreign governments realize that demonstrations are of no use, hence they are withdrawing their gunboats. When the American Minister was here he offered to mediate, and now we are awaiting developments from the north. If there is no solution or action, we will have to proceed a step further and take whatever action we consider necessary."

TSAO JUI EXILED FROM PEKING

Alleged Gigantic Financial Intrigue over Japanese Loans

NEW YEAR FINANCES

From Rodney Gilbert.

Peking, Jan. 22.

Cabinet circles say that President Tsao Kun's renewed insistence that Wang Ko-ming shall assume office again as Minister of Finance is due to the influence of Wang Yu-chih and the Paoting leaders, who have persuaded President Tsao Kun that no other Minister could possibly raise the necessary New Year funds in the time remaining.

Wang Ko-ming yesterday accepted on the assurance of the President's strong support if Parliament impeached him. The Premier Sun Pao-chi complacently agreed because thereby he would be relieved of all financial responsibility and because Parliament would thereby be bound to see a challenge in the appointment to proceed with its impeachments and "Chapans", thereby forcing Wang Ko-ming and others from the Cabinet and making room for the Premier's appointees.

The most prominent Tientsin leaders Tsao Jui, Pien Shou-ching and Civil Governor Wang Chengping are now excommunicated from President Tsao Kun's immediate following and are conspiring against the Paoting group with Wu Chirg-lien (ex-Speaker of the Lower House), because of the breach between the President and his brother Tsao Jui.

Shortly after his birthday celebration the President ordered Tsao Jui to be ejected from the palace, warning him not again to come to Peking. The Cabinet members belonging to the Paoting group allege that Tsao Jui, acting as agent for Japanese banks, undertook to persuade the President to confirm the Nishihara loans as part of the bonâ fide Chinese National Debt. The President, being unfamiliar with the history of these loans agreed, but the Treasurer, Lian Ching, enlightened the President, alleging that Tsao Jui hoped to make two millions out of the intrigue, whereupon the President accused the Tientsin party leaders of an attempt to discredit and ruin him and exiled Tsao Jui to Tientsin.

CABINET COMPLETED

Offices of Ministries of Finance and Education Filled: Premier's Policy

Peking, Jan. 23.

It is tolerably certain that Mr. Wang Ko-ming will respond to the persuasion of the President and the Premier to take up the portfolio of finance to-morrow, while Mr. Chang Kuo-kan has agreed to accept the post of Minister of Education contingent upon the Government undertaking to meet the expenses of the eight Government colleges. Thus the Cabinet will be complete.

The Premier will attend Parliament this afternoon to make a statement on policy.

Mr. Sun Pao-chi attended the Senate this afternoon and made a statement on policy which was to maintain the Constitution, to respect Parliament and to endeavour to work out reunification by constitutional and peaceful methods.

Replying to questions, Mr. Sun Pao-chi stated that there was no

MAIL NOTICES

INWARD

[illegible] N.Y.K.S. [illegible] Mar. Jan. 19
[illegible] P.M.S. [illegible] ,, 21
P.C. P.K.K.S. [illegible] ,, 24
For A.L.S. President Jackson ,, 26
For P. & O. S. Karmala ... ,, 30

OUTWARD

FOR MARSEILLES, LONDON, ETC.—
Per P. & O. S. Macedonia ...Jan. 22
Per P.F.S. Lyacon ... ... ,, 24
Per N.Y.K.S. Suwa Maru ... ,, 26
Per N.Y.K.S. Kashima Maru ,, 29

FOR JAPAN, CANADA, U.S.S. & EUROPE:
Per A.L.S. President Madison Jan. 19
Per T.K.K.S. Korea Maru ... ,, 26
Per A.L.S. Pres. McKinley Feb. 1
Per N.Y.K.S. Iyo Maru ... ,, 1
Per O.S.K.S. Alabama Maru ,, 2
Per P.M.S. President Lincoln ,, 4

FOR MANILA, AUSTRALIA AND NEW ZEALAND VIA HONGKONG:—
Per T.K.K.S. Shinyo Maru ...Jan. 21
Per P. & O. S. Macedonia ... ,, 22
Per B.F.S. Lyacon ... ... ,, 24

PASSENGERS

INWARD.

Per N.Y.K.S. Nagasaki Maru, January 10. From Japan. Mr. J. Harris, Mr. J. H. Hayees, Mrs. K. J. Kwesejave and child, Mr. H. A. Kales, Mr. J. [illegible] Mr. H. Yamashita.

Per N.Y.K.S. Kaga Maru, January 11. From Japan. Mr. MacMillan.

Per str. Mentor, January 11. From Liverpool. Mr. F. D. Bingham, Mr. J. Dymond, Mrs. J. Dymond, Capt. W. R. Wallace, Miss C. Harness, Mrs. G. Lelas, Mrs. S. Timmis, Miss M. M. Timmis, Master P. Timmis, Miss E. Wood, Mrs. R. Woolley. From Hongkong. Mr. and Mrs. E. Barraclough and two children, Mr. R. H. Medlin, Mr. J. E. Simons.

Per str. Kingping, January 12. From Tientsin. Mr. A. P. Pattison, Mr. F. P. Dormady, Sgt. W. Turner, Major and Mrs. E. A. Penny. From Chefoo. Mr. Albert Ronse.

Per str. Kungwo, January 13. From River Ports. Miss Gilliam, Mr. E. Monks.

Per R.M.S. Empress of Asia, January 12. From Hongkong. Mr. H. F. Arnhold, Mr. G. H. Brooke, Mrs. F. Barber, Miss F. Craig, Capt. Foyn, Mr. J. E. L. Greensill, Mr. T. Goenawal, Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Hicks, Mr. N. E. Kent, Mr. E. Landau, Mr. and Mrs. N. and Miss I. Lund, Master I. Murray, Mr. G. D. Nicholl, Mr. N. F. Nissim, Mr. S. E. Pavol, Mrs. E. Pomeroy, Mr. and Mrs. G. B. Rea, Mr. D. O. Russell, Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Shand, Misses E. M. and E. B. Shand, Mr. D. Timmins, Mr. C. H. Tinsley, Misses M. and L. Costa, Mrs. E. and Misses (4) Gonsalves, Master L. Laver, Mr. T. Y. Lee, Mr. Y. L. Lee.

Per str. Chenan, January 13. From Chefoo. Mr. Medlenka, Mr. Kifron. From Tientsin. Mr. Chestham.

Per str. Hsinchi, January 14. From Foochow. Miss G. Townsend, Mrs. Richards, Mr. and Mrs. W. D. L. Parker, Capt. A. W. Scott, Mr. Y. W. P. Marsh, Master D. Marsh, Mr. E. T. Peorge, Mr. A. Shekury.

Per str. Luenyi, January 15. From River Ports. Messrs. F. G. Ingram, P. Kruger, T. Jespersen and J. M. Larsen.

Per str. Hsin Kiangteen, January 15. From Ningpo. Miss A. Harrison, Mr. Hardwellin, Mr. A. E. Fitzimmons, Capt. A. Steinberg.

Per str. Chengtu, January 15. From Chefoo. Mr. Smith, Mr. G. Balton.

Per R.M.S. Empress of Russia, January 15. From Vancouver, etc. Mr. H. B. Donaldson, Mr. N. George, Mr. F. Guaita, Mr. W. E. Hodgson, Mrs. M. Marchant, Mr. Y. Patzak, Mr. J. J. Paterson, Mr. M. B. Obias, Mrs. H. Reiss, Mr. F. Rittmeadles, Mr. W. S. Watson, Mrs. M. Bruge, Mr. W. F. Norris, Capt. R. M. Olsen, Mr. and Mrs. Berliner and [illegible], Mr. J. A. Dixon, Mr. J. R. [illegible], Mr. S. H. Hiscike, Lady Howard, Lord Latham, Mr. H. A. McMeen, Lady Seymour, Mr. F. B. Sorensen, Mr. Shigeoka, Miss Sederholm, Mr. G. F. Tobler, Mr. W. H. Whigham, Mrs. R. Deitch, Mr. J. D. Find, Rev. W. Hagguist, Mr. B. Jay, Dr. R. B. McClure, Miss M. A. Smith, Miss R. E. Smith, Mr. C. D. Sze, Mr. Lang C. Sze, Master Y. J. Turner, Master A. R. Turner, Miss T. Miss E. Swanson, Miss M. Westerud, Mr. S. Idler, Mr. Y. Kiyosawa, Mr. S. Kurliandsky, Mr. K. Maeda, Mr. C. E. Monsel, Mr. M. [illegible]

Per str. Sinkiang, January 16. From Hongkong. Captain and Mrs. McDonald, Miss Rowlingson.

Per str. Suiwo, January 16. From River Ports. Mrs. N. Donegan, Mr. W. N. P. Cox, Miss M. Cox.

Per str. Hsin Peking, January 16. From Ningpo. Miss M. Donegan, Mr. [illegible]

Per str. Kiangpo, January 16. From River Ports. Mrs. [illegible], Miss [illegible], Mr. [illegible], Mrs. Thompson and child, Mrs. Butler-O'Brien, Mr. J. Hart, Mr. W. Sharp, Mr. R. Kirk, Miss H. Hoppe, Mr. J. Middleton, Mr. W. Kermode, Mr. W. Warner, Mrs. E. Millward, Mr. R. Bolster, Mrs. N. W. Clarke. From Marseilles. Captain and Mrs. W. Hetherington and child, Mr. and Mrs. A. Carey, Mr. and Mrs. A. Clements, Mrs. F. Gibbings and child, Mr. F. De'Ath, Mr. Van Goethem, Mr. A. T. Gomery, Mr. R. E. Gregson, Mr. F. Odem. From Bombay. Mr. J. D. Belnan, Mr. J. P. Mehta. From Singapore. Mr. A. E. Hindson, Mr. Wedderburn. From Hongkong. Major C. Dundas, Mr. C. M. Wilson, Captain G. Oxspring, Mr. and Mrs E. R. Vandervort, Mr. N. W. Clarke, Mr. R. C. Savage, Mr. L. Seitzinger, Mr. F. Seitzinger, Mr. R. G. Gillespie, Mr. J. Miller, Mr. and Mrs. J. Thompson and three children, Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Fleishman, Master Fleishman, Miss C. McQuire, Miss B. Webster, Miss A. Garland, Miss S. Garland.

Per str. Tungting, January 17. From River Ports. Mrs. Nelson, Rev. F. Perez.

Per str. Hsin Kiangteen, January 17. From Ningpo. Mr. E. [illegible] Mr. Schneeker.

Per str. Tuckwo, January 17. From River Ports. Mr. K. Pappie, Mr. H. N. Jackern.

OUTWARD.

Per str. Wenchow, January 12.—For Wuhu—Mr. R. Young.

Per str. Luchow, January 13.—For Hongkong—Mr. G. W. Swire, Mr. R. A. Brown, Mr. F. J. Raven, Mr. Ireland.

Per R.M.S. Empress of Asia, January 13.—For Vancouver, etc.—Mrs. L. Greenstone, Dr. E. H. Hume, Mr. W. G. Higgins, Mr. F. L. Morgan, Mr. C. J. Nahas, Miss C. L. Nau, Mr. R. Phillippe, Mr. and Mrs. H. R. Sweetman and child, Master D. Sweetman, Miss J. Sweetman, Master W. Sweetman, Mr. E. Terunger, Mr. T. Toledano, Mr. R. D. Weil, Mr. C. G. Balcomb, Mr. G. A. Drairseldt, Mr. and Mrs. W. Lehtimaki and child, Miss V. V. Miller, Mr. W. McDavid, Dr. J. Maguire, Miss H. MacGregor, Mr. H. MacAuliffe, Mrs. J. F. Newman, Miss R. Nugent, Mr. and Mrs. C. A. O. Ohlson, Miss V. M. Ohlson, Mr. H. Plutat, Miss R. Raphaelson, Miss M. Schafer, Mr. N. Vasic, Mr. S. Yamamoto, Mr. W. Zelger.

Per str. Kaiping, January 14.—For Chinwangtao—Mr. A. M. Spence.

Per str. Hsin Peking, January 14.—For Ningpo—Miss Hareic, Mr. E. Charlot, Mr. Powell.

Per str. Poyang, January 14.—For River Ports.—Miss A. Gonsalves, Miss L. Gonsalves, Miss M. Gonsalves.

Per str. Wuchang, January 15.—For River Ports—Mr. J. A. Barton.

Per str. Hsin Peking, January 16.—For Ningpo—Miss E. Spurling, Miss Torbet.

Per str. Luenyi, January 16.—For River Ports—Mr. and Mrs. Skarastad and four children, Captain Ajhby, Mr. and Mrs. R. Olsen and two children, Miss Roghild, Mr. P. Kriger, Mr. Knstoffen, Mr. de O. Olsen.

BIRTHS

BURN.—On January 16, 1924, at Dr. Fearn's Sanatorium, Shanghai, to Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Burn, a son.

DAVIS.—On January 19, 1924, at the Victoria Nursing Home, Shanghai, to Mr. and Mrs. Robert Wallace Davis, a daughter.

FRANKLIN.—On Sunday, January 6, 1924, at the Peak, Hongkong, to Mr. and Mrs. G. G. Franklin, a son.

LEVINE.—On January 16, 1924, at the Victoria Nursing Home, Shanghai, to Captain and Mrs. J. F. Levine, a son. Hongkong papers please copy.

MASON.—On January 13, 1924, at the Victoria Nursing Home, Shanghai, to Mr. and Mrs. Wm. M. Mason, a son. (Hongkong papers please copy).

MARRIAGE

PORTARIA—FREITAG.—On Thursday, January 10, 1924, at the Church of the Sacred Heart of Jesus, Hongkew, by the Rev. Father Jacquinet de Besange, S.J., Leonia M. Freitag to José M. Portaria.

DEATHS

[illegible]—At the Kulang Sanatorium, Kukong, Miss Virginia Earl, [illegible] nurse of Van[illegible], China, in her 28th year.

BOYAL.—On January 14, 1924, Mrs. Catherine Anna Boyal, aged 65 years.

DE RAGO.—On January 11, 1924, at B-1084 Sinza Road, Shanghai, George Philip, the dearly beloved son of Mr. and Mrs. A. S. de Rago, aged 5 years.

HILLIER.—On December 30, 1923, at Swatow, Lilian, wife of R. J. Hillier, C. M. Customs, aged 31 years.

LEPISSIER.—On December 10, 1923, at Villa Petit-Sejour, Saint Jean de Braye, France, Emilie Laurent Lepissier, former Commissioner of the Chinese Imperial Customs, aged 74 years. Funeral services were held on December 15, interment in the family vault at Loury.

MANN—On January 10, 1924, at the General Hospital, Shanghai, Phyllis May, beloved wife of Gotha H. Mann, of Shanghai.

MATHIESEN.—On January 14, 1924, at the Isolation Hospital, Shanghai, Oluf Chr. Mathiesen, Norwegian engineer, aged 54 years.

STELLINGWERFF.—On January 15, 1924, at 1 Route Voyron, Shanghai, Herbert John, the dearly beloved son of Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Stellingwerff, aged two years.

IN MEMORIAM

WHITE.—In memory of David White who died at the Islands of Kohsichang, January 16, 1923. Buried at Bangkok.

"Where to Stay in England"

GLORIOUS DEVON

MR. AND MRS. GOODACRE,
(LATE TIENTSIN)

Tembani Private Hotel,
Sea Front, Paignton,
Near Torquay.

EAST ASIATIC Co., Ld.
(Aktieselskabet Det Ostasiatiske Kompagni)
COPENHAGEN
TO THE EAST.

Japan Line:
Sailings from COPENHAGEN, GOTHENBURG, CHRISTIANIA, HAMBURG and ANTWERP to HONGKONG, SHANGHAI, KOBE, YOKOHAMA, DALNY and VLADIVOSTOCK.
Bangkok Line:
Sailings from COPENHAGEN, GOTHENBURG, CHRISTIANIA, HAMBURG, MIDDLESBROUGH and ANTWERP to PORT SAID, COLOMBO, PENANG, SINGAPORE and BANGKOK.
Java Line:
Sailings from COPENHAGEN, GOTHENBURG, CHRISTIANIA and HAMBURG to BATAVIA, SAMARANG and SOERABAYA.

TO SOUTH AFRICA.
Sailings from DENMARK, NORWAY, SWEDEN and BALTIC PORTS to CAPE TOWN, ALGOA BAY, EAST LONDON, DURBAN, DELAGOA BAY and BEIRA.

TO AUSTRALIA.
Sailings from DENMARK, NORWAY, SWEDEN, HAMBURG and LISBON to FREMANTLE, ADELAIDE, MELBOURNE, SYDNEY and BRISBANE.

TO NORTH PACIFIC.
Sailings from COPENHAGEN, GOTHENBURG, CHRISTIANIA, HAMBURG and ANTWERP to ST. THOMAS (with transhipment to the GREATER and LESSER ANTILLES), CRISTOBAL (with transhipment to CENTRAL AMERICAN PORTS), LOS ANGELES HARBOUR, SAN FRANCISCO, PORTLAND (Ore.), SEATTLE, TACOMA and VANCOUVER (with transhipment to other NORTH PACIFIC PORTS).

TO SOUTH PACIFIC.
Sailings from COPENHAGEN, GOTHENBURG, CHRISTIANIA, HAMBURG and ANTWERP to ST. THOMAS with transhipment to the GREATER and LESSER ANTILLES), CRISTOBAL (with transhipment to CENTRAL AMERICAN PORTS), GUAYAQUIL, CALLAO, MOLLENDO, IQUIQUE, ANTOFAGASTA, VALPARAISO, TALCRUANO and CORRAL (with transhipment to other SOUTH PACIFIC PORTS)
For further particulars apply to—
THE EAST ASIATIC CO., LTD., COPENHAGEN
Telegrams: "Orient."
UNITED KINGDOM—JAPAN and BANGKOK LINES: Escombe, McGrath & Co., London, Glasgow, Birmingham, Liverpool, Manchester, Grimsby, Middlesbrough, Greenock, Immingham and Southampton.
JAVA, SOUTH AFRICA and AUSTRALIA LINES: J. E. HYDE & Co., London.
PACIFIC LINES: United Baltic Corporation, Ltd., 153 Fenchurch Street, London. Tel.: "Orientasko."
SHANGHAI. The East Asiatic Co., Ltd.

SICCAWEI METEOROLOGICAL REPORT

Day of Month	Barometer 9 A.M.	Barometer Att'ed Therm	Wind Direction 9 a.m.	Wind Force (1-12)	Hygrometer 9 a.m. Dry	Hygrometer 9 a.m. Wet	Thermometer in Shade Max.	Thermometer in Shade Min.	Weather conditions
Jan. 11	30.31	47.9	S E	2	46.8	42.5	54.7	37.1
,, 12	30.16	48.6	S	0	48.8	46.2	60.6	45.0	O.
,, 13	30.13	49.1	E N E	0	49.1	46.6	58.3	44.8	O. M.
,, 14	30.04	50.0	E	2	49.1	48.8	59.7	39.9	O. M.
,, 15	30.30	50.0	N N E	3	43.4	42.2	46.2	42.4	O. D.
,, 16	30.29	49.0	N N E	2	43.0	41.2	46.1	41.5	O. M.
,, 17	30.37	48.2	N W	2	38.3	37.3	48.4	36.5	O. M.
									O.

Explanation

B—blue sky D—drizzle H—hail M—misty (hazy) R—rain T—thunder
C—clouds F—fog L—lightning O—overcast (dull) S—snow Z—calm

SHANGHAI THERMOMETER READINGS FOR THE WEEK

In the open air in a shaded situation in the Foreign Settlement

Date	Thermometer (Fahr.) Minimum 1924	Minimum 1923	Maximum 1924	Maximum 1923	Rainfall Inches 1924	Rainfall Inches 1923
Jan. 11	40 0	36.8	54.0	56.0
,, 12	47.0	42.0	58.6	55.0	Trace	Nil.
,, 13	48.0	42.0	59 0	49.2	0.04	Nil.
,, 14	43.2	41.0	58.0	57.0	Nil.	Nil.
,, 15	43.0	36.0	52.0	55.0	0.09	Nil.
,, 16	41.0	30 0	45.0	40.8	0.24	Nil.
,, 17	33.0	26.0	47.8	42.2	0.14	Nil.
					0.12	Nil.

SOUTHERN RHODESIA

SOUTHERN Rhodesia which was inaugurated as the youngest self governing Colony of the British Empire on October 1, 1923, and which had previously for 33 years been ably administered by the British South Africa Company possesses one of the finest climates in the world with long hours of sunshine, breezy temperate days and cool nights. For those who wish to take up farming or ranching in order to make the most they can of their capital, energy and technical knowledge, or for those who wish to retire from strenuous business or professional life and make a home, Rhodesia offers many advantages unequalled elsewhere. The business, social, sporting, educational and medical facilities bear favourable comparison with those of other countries. Native labour is plentiful and when properly managed is cheap and efficient. Taxation is light. Good land in healthy surroundings and amidst fine scenery is plentiful and not expensive.

Full information is obtainable on application to The Secretary, Southern Rhodesia Settlers' Board (attached to the Government of Southern Rhodesia), P. O. Box 372, Salisbury S., Rhodesia.

The giving of advice to prospective settlers will be facilitated if applicants will advise the Board in detail of their circumstances and the amount of capital they would be prepared to invest in a suitable venture.

THE SMALL INVESTORS, LTD.

41 SZECHUEN ROAD, Shanghai

Phone: C. 977 and 761

NOTE

CAPITAL INVESTED, with dividends or Interest payable every six months.

At 7 per cent. Doubles itself in 10 years
At 8 per cent. Doubles itself in 9 years
At 9 per cent. Doubles itself in 8 years
At 10 per cent. Doubles itself in 7 years

START TO-DAY TO DOUBLE YOUR CAPITAL

We are holders of large stocks of sound companies whose shares will yield
7 per cent. to 14 per cent. per annum

THE SMALL INVESTORS, LIMITED

Telegraphic Address: "Safeinvest"

DOUGLAS FLEMING,
Managing Director.

Printed and Published for the Proprietors of the NORTH CHINA DAILY NEWS & HERALD, LIMITED, at the office of the Company, 17 The Bund, Shanghai, China.

LEADING ARTICLES

The North-China Herald

Published every Saturday evening.

PREPAID SUBSCRIPTION (INCLUDING DELIVERY):

Shanghai ... ... Tls. 12 per annum
Other parts of China „ 13 „

All communications should be addressed to the Secretary, NORTH-CHINA DAILY NEWS & HERALD LD., to whom all remittances should be made payable

CHINA AND ITS CONSTITUTION

Jan. 21.

CHINA has a written constitution which is supposed to embody the principles of its government and the fundamental rules and principles for the conduct of its affairs. As otherwise defined, a constitution is a body of rules and maxims in accordance with which the powers of sovereignty are habitually exercised. The Chinese Constitution declares that "The Sovereignty of the Republic of China is rested in the whole body of the People." It follows that the people of China should be familiar with the Constitution in order properly to exercise their powers of sovereignty. Yet it is extremely probable that among the 400 millions of Chinese not one in ten thousand has ever heard of the Constitution or has the remotest conception of the meaning of the word. Very few really understand the system of government it defines, or have the slightest intention of observing it except so far as it may serve their own personal interests. On October 10, 1923, the twelfth anniversary of the Chinese Revolution, a revision of this Constitution was promulgated to replace the Provisional Constitution of fifty-six articles promulgated at Nanking on March 11, 1912. It is evident that the compilers of the original and revised Constitutions considered the similar documents of other republics, as there are many resemblances. But there is no slavish adherence. The Constitution of the United States was no doubt studied most closely, and the variations from it, particularly those concerning the Presidency, throw no little light on the state and trend of politics in China.

It is a common remark that the powers of the President of the United States exceed those of any constitutional monarch. The powers and immunities granted to the President of China are greater still. In the United States all voters take part in the election of the President and Vice-President at an election specially held for the purpose. In China, the President is elected by the members of Parliament and the vast majority of the people may be completely ignorant of what is happening. There may be several candidates for the Presidency and when the parliamentary electors are venial—as those certainly were at the last election who received $5,000 each for their votes—it is the judicious distribution of money or other substantial gifts which decides the issue. The will of the people finds no expression and the personal qualities of the candidates, their political ability and integrity, are very minor considerations. Of course the presidency, apart from the honour, is a prize well worth contending for. It has immense patronage. "The President shall appoint and dismiss (all) civil and military officials, with the exception of those provided by the Constitution or other laws, which shall be duly observed." The civil and military officials "provided" by the Constitution are very few, and as there is no Civil Service Law the President is well able to reward his followers and others when it is worth his while. In this connexion, a comparison of the sections relating to the official monetary compensation of the respective Presidents deserves notice.

In the United States—"The President shall at stated times, receive for his services a compensation which shall be neither increased nor diminished during the period for which he shall have been elected, and he shall not receive within that period any other emolument from the United States or any of them."

In China—"The salaries of the President and Vice-President shall be fixed by law."

Indicative of the dubious state of Chinese politics is the article relating to the grounds of impeachment of the President and other officials.

In the United States.—"The President, Vice-President, and all civil officers of the United States shall be removed from office on impeachment for and conviction of treason, bribery, or other high crimes and misdemeanours."

In China—"With the exception of high treason, no criminal charges shall be brought against the President before he vacates his post."

Here is no mention of "bribery or other high crimes and misdemeanours." The President may be guilty of bribery, and everyone be aware of it, but during his term of office he has only to "sit tight" and he can safely laugh at his accusers, the more so as their own hands are not likely to be very clean. The omission of any reference to the impeachment of other guilty officials is also very significant.

Doubtless there are intelligent and patriotic Chinese ready to swear they will observe, protect and defend this Constitution of a republican government, but their number must be very small and steadily diminishing. Constitution or no Constitution, the republic is a failure. The bright hopes have vanished that were entertained when the Manchu dynasty was overthrown and it was thought the revolution betokened that the Chinese were "not degenerated, not drooping to a fatal decay, but were casting off the old and wrinel'd skin of corruption, to outlive these pangs, and wax young again, entring the glorious waies of truth and prosperous vertue, destin'd to become great and honourable in these latter ages." Is the expectation of a better day of good government and peace and prosperity for China nothing more than an iridescent dream? In any event, to make the dream come true, sterner measures will be required than the drafting of a Constitution which politically and socially is so alien to the best traditions and customs of the people.

THE LIBEL ON MR. CHURCHILL

Jan. 22.

MR. WINSTON CHURCHILL may have many admirers in Shanghai: he has certainly many unfriendly critics whose views are coloured by a dislike of his political career. These, however, now that reports of the case have reached Shanghai, must agree that Mr. Churchill came out of the recent libel action which he brought against Lord Alfred Douglas with credit. Atrocious allegations had been made by the latter against Mr. Churchill, and had they been in the least degree susceptible of proof the slur which would have been cast on the integrity of British public men of the rank of Cabinet Minister and so forth would not have been removed for years to come. It was not Mr. Churchill alone who would have been involved but the whole Cabinet, including Mr. Asquith and Mr. (now Lord) Balfour, while permanent Civil and Admiralty officials would certainly not have escaped. As it is, there does not seem to have been the remotest justification for the allegations and only Lord Alfred Douglas's typical passion for trouble can be held responsible for what in his different publications he succeeded in thrusting upon the public. The case is so important from the point of view of British public morality that certain of the salient facts emerging should be noted, and it will be seen from them that a request made to Mr. Churchill to call at the Admiralty immediately after the Battle of Jutland was turned to such account as finally to lead to the concoction of the libel. Readers will remember that the libel referred to the first unfortunate communiqué issued with respect to Jutland, and how that has been used in the present case is almost fascinating in its interest.

The facts which the Court had before it in reference to the Jutland communiqué may be summarized roughly as follows. On June 1, 1916, Mr. Balfour, as First Lord of the Admiralty, issued it, and not only was it one of the most depressing announcements of the war but also one of the most misleading. In the meantime he had telegraphed to Admiral Jellicoe for further information, and on the arrival of this about six hours after the original communiqué, a second was published. It was realized that the effect of the first communiqué coupled with the "mendacious communication from Germany" (to use Lord Balfour's own words) might create a false impression on the mind of the public, and the decision was adopted to issue an appreciation of the situation. Mr. Churchill was well-known to the public through his service at the Admiralty; it was equally known that he was not at that time friendly to the Government; and the Admiralty officials concluded that an appreciation issued under his name would be the best possible in the circumstances. Mr. Churchill was accordingly asked to call at the Admiralty and at the First Lord's request wrote the appreciation. These facts were proved by such witnesses as Lord Balfour in the course of the trial, and this was shown to be the sole connexion that Mr. Churchill had with the communiqué—one which started many hours after its issue. In Lord Alfred Douglas's hands, however, that visit by Mr. Churchill to the Admiralty was made the basis for an amazing set of accusations.

Here we come to the late Sir Ernest Cassel, a German by birth but a naturalized Englishman. Mr. Churchill had known him since the days of the Boer War, and Sir Ernest had invested for him the money he (Mr. Churchill) made from his lectures on that topic. Sir Ernest continued to invest and reinvest Mr. Churchill's money from time to time, and when Mr. Churchill married in 1908 gave him a wedding present of £500. There seems nothing out of the ordinary in all this, but it gave Lord Alfred Douglas the foundation on which he built his extraordinary libel. Before we come to the charge connecting Mr. Churchill with Sir Ernest Cassel we have to consider an even wilder allegation, this time against the Cabinet. Here was the Battle of Jutland, since proved one of the most far-reaching victories of the war, described as little better than a defeat, and why? Lord Alfred Douglas's suggestion was that the Treasury hoped to make a large amount by depressing British securities through this report and buying them in cheaply. The scheme, however, failed, for with the assistance of Mr. Churchill (so the libel ran) Sir Ernest Cassel got in ahead and made eighteen millions. Mr. Churchill's reward for his share in the work was at one time stated to be £40,000, at another that Sir Ernest Cassel had furnished an expensive house for him. The basis for this latter suggestion was that in 1905 Sir Ernest Cassel furnished his library for him on the suggestion of Lady Randolph Churchill. The whole libel seems to have been based on theories concocted by Lord Alfred Douglas's morbid brain, and only one attempt appears to have been made to prove them. This consisted of an alleged remark by Mr. Churchill while at Dundee to a Captain Harold Spencer that "we did it to get money out of the Yanks." Mr. Churchill denied this, and it transpired in cross-examination that Captain Spencer had spent six months in prison for libel and on another occasion had been fined for insulting behaviour. Obviously hardly one to be considered the most trustworthy of witnesses.

These are the outlines of the case. No proof was ever forthcoming that Sir Ernest Cassel had made the huge sum suggested as the result of the communiqué, and after considering the case it is hardly likely that even the most prejudiced will entertain any suspicion that he did. We have seen a good deal of mud-slinging in politics, but hardly any has been so outrageous as this, carrying as it does the suggestion that a man of Mr. Churchill's standing should have attempted to amass a fortune by the manipulation of news at a great crisis in the nation's affairs, especially as he had not been long returned from France where he had commanded an infantry battalion. The opinion may be well held that six months, the sentence on Lord Alfred Douglas, is somewhat too brief a period for the disappearance of such a mischief-maker.

THE DOG WITH THE BAD NAME

Jan. 23.

WHILE it is not too much to say that the whole world waits to see what British Labour, at last in office, will do with it, it is of interest to glance back over some of the speeches of Labour's chief exponents during and since the election and to note what they forecast. Of course those speeches may have been diabolically contrived to lull the country into a false security. But situated as the Labour party is in the House of Commons, if would be very bad policy to give the Opposition so easy a means of casting up its promises against it, if it prove false to them. Mr. Ramsay Macdonald's announcement at Aberavon on November 30 that the capital levy would be dropped, if found unworkable, has recently been noticed. His next important utterance dealt, immediately after the election, with the Allies' war debts to Great Britain, of which he said that, if no general settlement were reached, we could not go on paying to America and allowing France, industrially better off than we, to disregard her debts to us. Labour, said Mr. Macdonald "will never agree to anything which victimizes Great Britain in the interests of any other State."

On January 8 Mr. Macdonald addressed a Labour demonstration at the Albert Hall. This was the occasion of the "broad foot and big heel" phrase, with which, he said, they would "stamp on the embers existing in every capital, which a fresh glowing wind would scatter over the inflammable material of Europe and start a fresh war." The object may be difficult to attain, but it is certainly laudable. Mr. Macdonald added that "the pompous folly of standing aloof from the Russian Government will be ended"—there are certainly many outside Labour's ranks who think, rightly or wrongly, that it should be—and that the pinpricks and irritations between France and Britain were "absolutely deplorable and unworthy." For the rest,

"We are not going to take office in order to prepare for a general election but to do work. If capital flees from the country, when we come into power, the panic mongers will be responsible and not the Labour Party." They were a party of idealists who had built their habitations away on the horizon, but "we are not going to jump there; we are going to walk there. One step is enough for me, provided it leads to the next step."

In the House of Commons Mr. Macdonald was necessarily taken up to a large extent with criticizing the Speech from the Throne. But some general indications of policy were not wanting. We read that development in the gold franc issue and promised to keep Parliament informed in that connexion.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

He urged the necessity of bringing the solemn influence of Britain to bear in order that a new leaf might be turned. He advocated more skilful handling of diplomacy and at the same time a friendly, firm and emphatic assertion of our own interests. No party could take responsibility today, without feeling that it would rather avoid it if it could, because the state of Europe and affairs at Home were so bad. But the Government of the nation must be carried on. Whoever carried on the Government in these circumstances was entitled to appeal to the fairplay and sportsmanlike instincts of Englishmen and the support of the House so long as it did its duty.

Some Admirable Intentions: Suppression of Cultivation of and Traffic in Opium

Peking, Jan. 24.

Mr. Wang Ko-ming, the Minister of Finance, and Mr. Chang Kuo-kan, the Minister of Education, have assumed office. They attended the meeting of the Cabinet this morning at which its first real business was transacted.

The meeting resolved to draw up a mandate instructing the provinces and administrative areas to turn their attention seriously to suppression of opium cultivation and traffic and ordering the Ministries of Foreign Affairs, War and the Interior to co-operate in drawing up a definite workable plan for that purpose.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

WILD STORY ABOUT SIR F. AGLEN

Speculators Trying to Bring Down Bonds

From Rodney Gilbert.

Peking, Jan. 18.

It was rumoured throughout Peking, late in the evening after Parliament's ratification of Mr. Sun Pao-chi's appointment, that Sir Francis Aglen, Inspector-General of Customs, had suddenly died.

The following morning the Inspector-General made the most energetic denials of this report in person and he has since appeared frequently in both Chinese and foreign social circles, showing every evidence of exceptionally good health. The local native press nevertheless clung to the story of his demise with unusual tenacity and now inquiries are coming in from the South which indicate that local Chinese correspondents for southern papers have been sending out accounts of the "I.-G.'s" serious illness with the prospect of death just in the offing.

How and why these rumours were started was something of a puzzle at first, but it is clear enough now that they were circulated by domestic bond manipulators. Whoever these people were, they were gambling upon a fall in bond quotations. Mr. Sun Pao-chi's unexpected endorsement by Parliament as Premier threatened to push the bonds up a few points, so the manipulators resorted to the desperate measure of killing Sir Francis Aglen off in the press, hoping for a slump on the market.

DR. SUN'S ATTACK ON THE CUSTOMS

Sir F. Aglen Warned that Commissioner Must Take Orders from New Government

From Rodney Gilbert.

Peking, Jan. 19.

Sir Francis Aglen is in receipt of a telegram from Dr. Sun Yat-sen announcing the imminent proclamation of a full-fledged Government in Canton and advising the Inspector General of Customs that the Canton Commissioner will henceforth be expected to take the new Government's orders.

Sir Francis Aglen is not replying, since the only possible reply for him as a servant of the recognized Government is too obvious.

It is believed here that, lacking a reply, Canton will appoint its own commissioner, whereupon the gunboats will again be forced to proceed to Canton.

SHANTUNG RAILWAY AND WU PEI-FU

Warlord's Demand for Revenues to Finance Navy: General Indignation of Chinese

From a Correspondent.

Tsingtao, Jan. 15.

The Chinese of this city have been considerably agitated over the report, which has not been denied, that attempts are being made by the Chinese authorities to avail themselves of the earnings of the Kiaochow-Tsinan Railway for the purpose of assisting Wu Pei-fu in the maintenance of the squadron now in port. The squadron consists of six vessels, viz., Hai-To, Yung-Hsiang, Yuan-Hsiang, Chu-Yu, Hai-Tan and Chao-Ho, which are moored in the outer harbour, and the Tung-An, which is anchored in the inner harbour.

Mr. Liu, the head of the Railway Administration here, was recently called away by Marshal Wu Pei fu to negotiate with the latter the question of supplying funds for the maintenance of the warships taken over from the South, and is reported to have acquiesced to the demand of the Loyang War Lord for financial assistance. On the other hand, the Chief Cashier of the Railway, who is a Japanese, is determined not to part with a single cash for any purpose whatever, except for the maintenance of the railway itself, and the securing of the capital and interest owing to Japan, and very likely has express instructions from his own authorities to this effect.

Under the terms of the Sino-Japanese arrangement arrived at Washington, the Chinese undertook to refund to the Japanese the sum of Yen 40,000,000 for the return of the railway of the railway. Up till the present time the railway has only been able to meet the interest charged by the Japanese, namely six per cent. per annum. The Railway Administration has all along deposited to the credit of the Japanese Government with the Yokohama Specie Bank the sum of the monthly interest to which the Japanese Government are entitled.

Meantime, Chinese merchants and public bodies here are also showing their disapproval of the scheme to finance the Loyang War Lord's navy,—nobody for one moment considers it as belong to the Central Government,—at the expense of public revenues; and, fearing that the usual demand will be made of the Chamber of Commerce to supply at least a portion of the money required, some forty prominent Chinese traders have either already resignified their determination to resign as members of the Chamber. The whole matter is consequently a three-cornered fight, between Wu Pei-fu and his supporters, Chinese commercial interests and the Japanese.

DISAPPEARANCE OF REVENUES.

The amount required for the upkeep of the squadron now in port is $400,000 immediately and $100,000 monthly. The reason why they are anxious to get money from the Railway Administration here is because none can be obtained from the other utilities, such as the Wharf Administration and the Slaughter House. The revenues of these two utilities have somehow trickled away and the officials running them have salaries in arrear, some for two months and some for a longer period.

The reason why the Chinese object to having the earnings of the railway wasted on Wu Pei-fu's navy is that the railway needs all the money itself for its own development, the rolling stock at present available being insufficient to meet business requirements. Cargoes are held up all along the line from Tsinanfu on account of the present shortage of rolling stock and trade is consequently hampered, and native business men refuse to see the logic of having the earnings of the railway wasted over a useless venture before an attempt being first made to widen the scope of the railway's operations.

Just what will happen within the next few days is difficult to foretell but this much is certain, that there will be no end of trouble if the demand for money from the Railway Administration here is persisted in.

Foreign residents are surprised over the present state of affairs because, at a dinner given in their honour by Governor Hsiung Ping-chi at the end of December to local foreign officials, business men and journalists, he asked in a speech for the co-operation of foreign capitalists in an endeavour to conserve the revenues of public utilities for the benefit of the port's administration. "How can the Chinese authorities expect an influx of foreign capital" they ask, "if they themselves do not endeavour to conserve the revenues of public utilities for the development of Tsingtao?"

The Citizens' Association here have petitioned Governor Hsiung as well as Mr. Liu to withhold the railway's revenue from the fleet, maintaining that any diversion of the railway's earnings for purposes not compatible with its operations would further affect the trade of this province. The Association have also sent four petitions to the Tsingtao Administration, as follows:—

(1) Prevention of any use of the railway's income for the maintenance of the ships in port;

(2) Preservation of forests in this region;

(3) The use of Tsingtao as a naval base;

(4) Unpaid wages of local police.

THE NEW PREMIER'S "BAD PRESS"

Sun Pao-chi Denounced for Vacillation and Insincerity by Chinese Critic

The "Sinwanpao" criticizes Mr. Sun Pao-chi, the new Premier, for his vacillating attitude and lack of courage. Sun manifested no objection to President Tsao nominating him as Premier. Yet as soon as the Cabinet Ministers were appointed by Presidential Mandate, he refused to receive visitors and acted in a way that signified his unwillingness to accept office. Then, after making himself inaccessible for two days or so, he suddenly turned round and assumed office.

If he were unwilling to sacrifice his reputation for the sake of an unpopular government, why not refuse his own nomination at the outset? If he felt regret at vacating the very secure post of Director-General of the Customs in favour of Mr. Kao Ling-wei in order to take up the premiership, which is certainly notoriously insecure, he could not have expected, surely, to hold two such important posts simultaneously. As to the suggestion that he was dissatisfied with the appointment of the Minister of Finance, he could have insisted upon his right to appoint his own man if he had one in mind; but having countersigned the Mandate including that appointment without even a murmur, thanks to his own lack of courage, he had better preserve a discrete silence and proceed to serve his country in good grace.

SUN PAO-CHI'S POLICY.

The Premier Sun Pao-chi has announced his policy as follow:—(1) Reunification of the country according to the Constitution. (2) Readjustment of foreign and Chinese loans by increasing the Customs Tariff. (3) Abolition of extraterritoriality and elevating China's International position. (4) Effect the reconciliation of North and South, and reorganize the finances of the country.

Now comments the "Sinwanpao," Mr. Sun, being well aware of the unpopularity of the Peking Government, is evidently trying to overcome opposition by making utterances as agreeable to the people as he can. But as long as present conditions prevail, the reunification of North and South is quite out of the question, while the readjustment of finances is rapidly becoming a problem more and more difficult to tackle. The "Sinwanpao" can scarcely believe that Mr. Sun is ignorant of these home truths.

THE CAPTIVITY OF MRS. KILEN

A Woman's Wonderful Fortitude in Hands of Bandits: Strenuous March over Mountains and Valleys When Avoiding Troops

Peking, Jan. 21.

The outstanding feature of Mrs. Kilen's recent captivity was her wonderful fortitude in circumstances that would have been extremely trying to a robust man, said Major Magruder in speaking to representatives of the Press to-day.

In the march from Tsaoyang the bandits struck northward, avoiding the highways and populous centres where strong forces of soldiery might be expected to be lying in wait. Over mountains and valleys the ragged army pressed feverishly forward as though fleeing from hot pursuit. Yet there were no troops in their rear and their desire to rush to the north has not yet been explained.

The main bandit force of seasoned outlaws was divided into units that worked under Lao Yang-jen with military precision. Mrs. Kilen was handed over to one of these units and she remained with it until her release. Most of the force were on foot, but a mounted unit carried out advance, flank and rear guard duties with real efficiency, each guard having connecting files to pass information to Lao without denuding the guards of their strength or interfering with their formation.

A day ahead of the main body advance scouts searched the country continually for regular troops. On several occasions the bandits turned east with the intention of crossing the line, but they always came into contact with troops and veered again to the north. Once they resolved to turn to the west with the intention of entering Szechuan, but they had not gone far when their scouts were fired on by troops on a mountain and they once more turned back. On no occasion did they make any serious attempt to overcome the troops, which was probably due to the fact that they had very little ammunition, none of the small towns and villages sacked having yielded much ammunition.

BURNING AND LOOTING.

The bandits devastated a strip of country about a mile wide as they rushed away from the south. Any opposition was met with immediate death. Numbers of houses were burned and with them all the supplies of the inhabitants. The consequence was that the people thus ruined, faced with starvation, went along with the bandit horde, whose numbers were thus continually swelled. It is said to have totalled some 20,000 men, women and children when it was eventually beaten and dispersed. Of these about 8,000 men carried arms. Asked how many of the band escaped, Marshal Wu Pei-fu's officer said about a thousand, all men of Lao's old guard.

ENCIRCLED BY TROOPS.

With daily reports of the bandits' movements coming in Marshal Wu allowed them to come northward until they came into the loop of a line of troops spread north-west and south in the shape of a fish hook. There they turned first to the west, then south and then east, always finding troops ahead. They then began to ring like a mob of sheep with no outlet. There the soldiers made a general attack, in which a brigade of Wu Pei-fu's own 3rd Division took part. There Lao Yang-jen died. As far as can be ascertained he was mortally wounded by the troops, his head being afterwards brought in by some of his own men in the hope of thus buying freedom. When they saw that the column was doomed, Lao's old men endeavoured to get away in small bands, while the people who had joined from sheer necessity readily surrendered. What to do with these thousands is a problem for Marshal Wu.

At first Mrs. Kilen suffered acutely. Knowing Chinese, she heard her captors continually making offensive personal remarks. She was always under close personal supervision, and the strain told heavily for some days, but as time wore on she learned to take no notice of what was said. The march itself called for tremendous physical endurance. Her description of the bandit column on the march was interesting. The unit she was attached to occupied the middle of the force. Looking ahead once, she saw a stream of people wearing all sorts of dress, with a motley collection of arms and equipment, toiling up the side of a mountain, their faces eager and strained with anxiety to cover as much ground as possible as quickly as they could. In the rear, similar groups pushed forward as fast as human endurance would permit, each loaded with something of value either to the force or themselves. Yet the column covered approximately 100 li a day.

UNFULFILLED THREATS OF DEATH.

In a group of ruthless outlaws such as these it is surprising that no greater personal indignities were offered to the captive, but this seems to have been due principally to the impression Mrs Kilen gave these men of her simple faith. On three occasions, however, she was threatened with death, apparently because the troops were making the situation so hot that the bandits came to the conclusion that if they got rid of their captive, they could inform the soldiery that she was dead, and so the activities of the troops might cease.

On one occasion, as they were going down a steep hill, her captors resolved among themselves that she should be killed. They discussed the matter quite openly and told off an old man to perform the unwelcome task. When they reached the foot of the hill the old man led Mrs. Kilen into a pretty glade, where the sun shone on a clear rippling stream trickling down a narrow valley. The columns had halted. Mrs Kilen turned to the old man and said: "Why do you want to kill me? I am not afraid to die, but it will do you no good."

He replied: "You are a good woman. I cannot kill you."

Thereupon he took her back to the column and said to his comrades, "I cannot do this thing." Just then the column moved onward, and the incident was forgotten for the time. Two similar experiences occurred during the march.

Without being able to take off her shoes more than once, without a halt of more than six hours, poorly fed and roughly treated, few women could have survived such a journey.

RELEASE AT LAST.

Mrs. Kilen's freedom came about the time Lao was killed. She was then suffering severely from the hardships of the march. Thinking that her end had really come, she was taken into a small building and told to lie down with a woman and child. Shortly afterwards two Chinese gentlemen made their appearance and she was agreeably surprised to learn that they were trying to arrange for her release. Not being successful in arranging terms, the negotiators took her to two other places. At the third similar discussions ensued and at last she was informed that she was free. From there to Loyang she journeyed in comparative comfort. She has since gone to Hsuchow to rest before returning to Tsaoyang.

Major Magruder and Captain Woodbridge speak highly of the operations against these bandits carried out under the orders of General Wu Pei-fu.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE STATE OF THE UPPER YANGTZE

Jan. 26.

THE condition of the Upper Yangtze, glaringly illustrated by the recent murder of Captain Brandt and by daily indiscriminate firing on every steamer that passes through the Gorges, has long been a scandal and has now become intolerable. It is safe to say that nobody who is not absolutely compelled to do so travels in the Gorges; and there appears no redress, nor any solution. The attacks on the steamers whether by soldiers or pirates are due to nothing but the generally disordered state of the country. For the soldiers, the excuse for shooting is that the vessels may be carrying spies, soldiers, arms, for the party in opposition to whoever controls the locality where the outrage occurs, and such shooting frequently if not usually follows a demand that the vessel shall submit to be searched. Of this it may be said that the foreign owners can give all guarantees about arms and soldiers so long as the latter are in uniform; but they are at the mercy of the Chinese crew and cannot possibly guarantee the character of all their Chinese passengers. It is possible—we merely make a surmise—that the companies might not object to an orderly search, as it might be done in other countries. But they have no assurance, first that it would be orderly; second, that the people claiming to search the ships are bond fide soldiers and not pirates. The cases of the Alice Dollar and the Tzesui are ample justification of these doubts.

There then arises the question of naval guards. Of this it is to be said that the British Navy has not the available men and that the principle of doing what the Chinese authorities should do, of relieving them of a responsibility which devolves on them and no one else, is not lightly to be admitted. This attitude, we believe, British merchants on the Upper Yangtze appreciate and do not question. For this further consideration has to be remembered. Even if foreign guards were available and permissible, they might not be altogether welcome on board the ships, unless they could be put under the control of the master, which is manifestly impossible. With the ship under one command, the guard under another, it is easy to realize that in the difficult waters of the Gorges differences of opinion might arise. Firing from the bank occurs or is anticipated, and the guard may call upon the master to heave to or do something else, which he, with his knowledge of the river, knows to be impossible. In the main, therefore, the situation is accepted as it is. It is bad; but trade is done after a fashion; and every solution hitherto propounded seems to involve a danger of making matters worse instead of better.

Nevertheless, as said at the beginning, the situation is really intolerable. It is a disgrace to China and the almost unquestioned neglect of it by the Chinese authorities reacts far and wide on foreign interests and prestige. Moreover, lawlessness of the kind prevailing on the Upper Yangtze is specially mentioned and provided for in the Iancheng Note. In that the Powers emphatically say that they will not tolerate China's evading her responsibility to keep order; that if she persists in doing so, they will not hesitate to take the necessary steps to protect their nationals; and that they will make it their business to see that provincial officials guilty of failing to keep order are duly punished. It is this last clause which might surely be enforced in respect of the Gorges. It cannot be hard to find out who is directly responsible for the behaviour of the district in which Captain Brandt was murdered, and to insist on his being cashiered; not just allowed to resign and immediately afterwards be promoted as in the case of Tien Chung-yu, Military Governor of Shantung; but publicly castigated and dismissed by Presidential Mandate. Too readily, perhaps, do we accept the excuse that Peking's word carries no weight in the provinces. That plea has never properly been put to the test in respect of the complaints of brigandage. Even if the guilty official held his ground in defiance of Peking, and we doubt whether he would if the Powers showed that they meant what they said, both he and Peking would have lost face through the mandate, which would prove to other misdemeanants that their cynical neglect of responsibility was no longer to be tolerated. The public disgracing of one prominent and demonstrably guilty official would have a wonderfully stimulating effect throughout the country. And it involves no intervention nor repercussion on innocent country-folk, and it can be done.

THE JAPANESE WEDDING

Jan. 26.

TO-DAY the thoughts of Japanese all over the world will be centred upon two greatly beloved members of the Royal House, the Prince Regent and his bride, Princess Nagako Kuni. Scarcely any event is more calculated to stir the imagination of the Japanese than this royal wedding, for throughout the island kingdom the same atmosphere of divinity attends the Imperial family that there was in past centuries. In normal circumstances a wedding of this sort would be the occasion for almost unlimited pomp and splendour, of a kind which must be dear to the heart of the Japanese, but with great solicitude for their people Their Imperial Highnesses have resolved that the ceremony with its attendant public functions shall be as simple and inexpensive as can be. Their feeling is that the country has to face such a period of struggle to enable it to recover from the terrible disaster of the earthquake that the splendour of royalty must on this occasion be limited. The fact that the Prince Imperial has paid a visit to our homeland and that immediate relatives of Princess Nagako Kuni have also been there suggests that the Japanese people will have liberal-minded and progressive rulers in the future, and this must be a source of satisfaction to the friends of the country, which may find fitting expression in their rejoicings along with the Japanese to-day.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Famine Fighting

The work of the Chinese Foreign Famine Relief Committee, of whose report we give some extracts to-day, deserves equal attention and praise. Handling considerable sums of money they have spent them in a thoroughly practical way on actual repair work and on laying down plans for the future. The latter in particular deserve examination. Anybody with a few years' recollection can recall repeated occasions of agonized appeal from certain notorious districts, of which certainly none is worse than the Huai River. A glance at the map shows exactly why this region is so bad. Starting in the neighbourhood of the Han River, the Huai forms with it and the Yangtze an irregular triangle and discharges its waters into a chain of marshy lakes on the borders of Anhui and Kiangsu. In times of excessive rain, the country becomes waterlogged for months, as happened two years ago. It is most uneconomic to go on merely appealing for money to save the starving when famine occurs and hence the C.F.F.R. Committee's plan, in which we wish it all success, as also in the other work contemplated in Chêkiang, for which Mr. Carey's energy and Mr. von Heidenstam's efforts in survey work are greatly responsible. One point, however, may be noted. The Committee are hopeful that the United States will give some of the Boxer indemnity for their Huai River project. It will be very kind of America if she does. But why should not the Chinese Government find the money? With 60,000,000 mow of land to be kept in a perpetually good working condition and 50,000,000 more to be reclaimed and made to produce food, the scheme is so eminently a paying one that no Government worthy of the name would ever have the slightest difficulty in raising the necessary money. Imagine Britain or America borrowing for a similar purpose. The loan would be oversubscribed in an hour. But in China, a scheme which would bring inestimable benefit on millions of people—indirectly, on the whole country—cannot certainly be carried out unless some foreign nation pays for it. Will Young China kindly note?

Indian Patriots

The situation in the Indian Central Provinces Legislature is distinctly interesting. The elections at the end of December gave the Swarajists a majority and their leader, Dr. Moonje, was invited to form a Ministry, which, while thanking the Governor for his constitutional usage, Dr. Moonje refused to do—just as the Swarajists in Bengal declined a similar offer. Now, however, Dr. Moonje and his friends are doing their utmost to make government in the Central Provinces impossible, blocking all bills and informing the Governor that his Ministers do not enjoy the confidence of the House. Nobody, of course, will feel any surprise at the behaviour of Swarajists or any other breed of Indian Nationalist. But what is the Government of India going to do? It is responsible for the well being of millions and millions of defenceless peasants who "cannot tell their right hand from their left" as the Old Testament tersely puts it, and even the academicians at Westminster, who have been doing their best for years past to throw away the Indian Empire, hardly suggest that the British Raj should abdicate just yet. Inasmuch, then, as the Swarajists will not govern themselves and thwart everybody else who tries to do so, they must simply be over-ridden. The Central Provinces Government must carry on in defiance of the Legislature—which indeed would be an excellent lesson for that unnecessary and wasteful body. The question is whether the Government will have the courage to take the only practical, even if unconstitutional course, and whether the House of Commons would support it. With all that may be said against Labour, we do not somehow see hard-headed men like Mr. Ramsay Macdonald and Mr. Clynes, with their practical experience of the iron autocracy of trades unionism, truckling to impossible creatures like Moonje and his satellites.

The Fall of the Franc

With the franc now fluctuating wildly at over 90 to the £, Paris is trying the expedient, which has been favoured for years, of raising her bank rate, and it is now 6 per cent. The theory involved in raising a bank rate is that it brings money into the country, and in normal times this principle works admirably. Thus if London were short of money the bank rate could be raised by a fraction and, finding so much more profitable employment there than in other financial centres, money would flow to London from all over the world. As a result of the war, however, and the changed conditions of to-day, certain economists have openly expressed doubts as to whether this operation of manipulating the bank rate to suit the needs of the case is still sound, and whether the disadvantages it brings with it do not outweigh possible benefits. A high bank rate means that money is diverted from the industries of the country, and as these are invariably in need of money for their ordinary business operations we see the first disadvantage, and a serious one. Then comes the question whether after a point an increase in the bank rate will have the desired effect of attracting money from other countries. People with money in a stabilized currency become chary of venturing it in depreciated currencies, especially if these have recently been subject to violent fluctuation and heavy drops, and the more cautious their sentiment the less will the bank rate operate in the desired direction. In view of these considerations it is by no means certain that this last rise in the French bank rate will have the effect of stopping the fall of the franc.

The Arctic Icefields

The "New York World's" merry gibe to-day at the American annexationists who propose to conquer the Arctic icefields by means of the airship Shenandoah is a perfectly good piece of criticism. Judging by what happened to another spot in the Arctic circle the airship might proceed to plant the Stars and Stripes all over the place, but unless a physical occupation followed it is unlikely that future generations, if they wanted these icefields, would allow such a claim to annexation. The precedent is the case of Spitzbergen. In the reign of James I a party of Scotsmen proceeded thither and annexed the place, and then probably finding it too cold for their comfort, departed and nobody seems to have worried much about it until the war. Then, however, at certain seasons of the year the British Navy paid some attention to it in pursuit of the blockade, and certain historians raked up the story of its being a British possession. There are large deposits of coal there, and suggestions were heard of a company being formed to exploit them. When, however, it came to treaty making at the close of the war the fact that the Scandinavian countries had all the interests worth having at Spitzbergen proved too much for the annexation dating back to James I, and the place went either to Norway or Sweden. Nobody in Britain worried very much about its doing so, and the capital that was to have gone into the coal mines went into something else. In view of all this the probability is that unless there are these long-range guns to protect the Pole, which the "New Yorw World" suggests, by the time the Arctic icefields have a real commercial value somebody else will probably be in real possession.

Opium in Canton

The institution, by Dr. Sun Yat-sen's new Government in Canton, of an opium monopoly, will be watched with interest. From the strictest standpoint of morality, it is a retrograde step. If it is obnoxious to license houses of unfortunate women, merely for control and not for revenue, it is more obnoxious to license opium, when, in addition to control, you want the money it will bring in. On the other hand, from the point of view of practical politics, the avowed monopoly which Dr. Sun intends is far preferable to the enormous illicit trade in opium which has grown up since importation of foreign opium was stopped. Just a year ago Sir Francis Aglen advocated the Chin-Chinese Government's establishing a monopoly. He was at once howled down by all the good people of ostrich tendencies, who seem to think it is more creditable to China to pretend that she has abolished opium, while actually it is grown in nearly every province, than to confess frankly that the evil has got out of hand and can be coped with only in one way. It is significant now to see that the attitude of the International Anti-Opium Society has somewhat changed. What has yet to be proved is whether Dr. Sun will be able to make his monopoly good. He stands a better chance of doing so than Peking would have had, which cannot enforce its will in a single province. But Dr. Sun's power in Canton rests so largely on the Yunnanese troops that it is an open question whether he will be able to carry through a reform which is very unlikely to please them.

The Latest Piracy

Another has been added to the long list of piracies between Hongkong and Canton, and it may be hoped that now, in spite of their other pre-occupations, the Canton authorities will agree to cooperate with the British in dealing with the menace. There is a strong hope that they will, following the conference last week between the commander of H.M.S. Tarantula and the Chief of the Canton Police, but unless that cooperation is immediate and complete in every respect, the evil will not be eradicated. On the contrary it will grow, as it has already given signs of doing, an extension as far north as Amoy having been noted. This latest is a repetition of too many which have occurred in the past: the pirates travelled as passengers and at a pre-arranged moment flung themselves on the guard, murdered the captain and looted to their hearts' content. Not only so, but they took certain of the passengers away to be held to ransom, and it may be that this will be their undoing. It may disclose their lair, and an expedition energetically carried out might strike them such a severe blow as to disorganize them completely. All depends upon the attitude which Canton is prepared to adopt, and if Chinese officialdom there can for once overcome its wonted dilatoriness very important results may well ensue. A long time ago the Hongkong authorities took measures to safeguard steamers by insisting on guards and the examination of passengers, but the pirates have all along had facilities for their operations at the other end, and they will not be laid by the heels once and for all until Canton comes fully into line with Hongkong.

THE favourable treatment afforded the Boy Emperor by the Chinese Republic is in danger of being abolished, states a Northern paper, if a group in Parliament has its way. M.P.'s are rankled at the Manchu Emperor issuing public decrees conferring honours on Chinese who are citizens of the Republic. It is proposed that the favourable treatment clause in the Republic's treaty with the Manchu House should be invalidated. The present palaces in the Forbidden City would then be turned over to the Ministry of the Interior together with the Summer Palace.

Mr. Clynes, the next Labour chieftain to be fully reported in the telegrams, dwelt primarily on the necessity of improving markets in Europe, but, if they failed, with a special eye on the Dominions: there was not a word in his speech to arouse any fear that Labour would weaken the ties with the Dominions, but very much the reverse. And then came Mr. Thomas, beginning with the ideal which Labour sets before itself of bringing the peoples of the world together, but adding, it might almost seem incongruously, that the conditions of Central Europe necessitated Britain's spending money on her own defence. Then in conclusion a fine passage about France. Heaven forbid that the Labour party should in any way impair the good relationship with France, or even suggest by its attitude any lack of sympathy with her; but that was not to say that if it saw her heading for disaster, it should not tell her so frankly.

All these speeches, be it remembered, were delivered in the full consciousness that if Labour gets into power and proceeds to inordinate lengths, the Opposition can turn it out as soon as ever the country has had a sufficient experience of its folly to be trusted to elect wiser rulers. But there does not appear much to be frightened at in them. It may be objected that they do not represent the views of the rank and file. That, of course, has to be proved and one may well anticipate that the Labour Government's worst troubles will be among its own followers. On the other hand, we know that avowed Communists and candidates of pronouncedly Communist views trying to get in on the Labour ticket, failed conspicuously at the elections. Furthermore, we seldom hear of the wild silly things said at country meetings by subordinate members of the Conservative party, but when Labourites of similar importance or unimportance deliver a tirade, it echoes all round the world. Assuredly this is no time for rash experiment: but since the leading representatives of Labour found themselves actually [illegible] we have heard nothing from them yet to contradict belief that they fully share that opinion

THE FIRST LABOUR CABINET

Jan. 24.

The first Labour Cabinet of Great Britain cannot but evoke [illegible] What are the red neckties and the ex-[illegible] Three of the members cut by any means to the best imperial pose, but from the Grand Chamber. Another is a descendant of baronets. At least one was born in Park Lane. Those who are best known for "queer" ideas, Mr Sidney Webb and Mr. Trevelyan, are certainly anything but manual workers, while those born of working parents, as the phrase goes—do none really deserve to be called workers but they who wield the pickaxe and the crow?—are quite of the moderate wing in respect of Labour views. But, after all, why not peers in a Labour Cabinet? Was there not an Egalité Prince of the Blood in the French Revolution? And then Lenin, dictator of Russian Bolshevism owned a far more aristocratic name than that by which the world will ever remember him.

Nor will there be any real disposition to speak or think derisively of Mr. Macdonald's colleagues. On the contrary we believe the general verdict will be that they represent a high average of brains and soundness. Mr. Thomas and Mr. Clynes have long enjoyed the respect of all parties. Mr. Stephen Walsh has twice discharged secretarial duties of a kind to prepare him for his present task. Sir Sydney Olivier is an authority on colonial questions, with first hand experience of them, which is a much better preparation for the India Office than many of its occupants have boasted. Mr. Burton is an expert on farming, Mr. Trevelyan on education and Mr. Sidney Webb has at least no lack of theoretical qualification for the Board of Trade. Mr. Philip Snowden, apart from other possible equipment for the Chancellorship of the Exchequer, has one great recommendation: he has travelled in Russia during the height of Bolshevism. The three most interesting Ministries to watch, however, will be those of Labour, of Public Works and of Foreign Affairs. In the two former, whatever socialistic tendencies there may be in the new Administration will have most scope. As for the third, the state of the whole world is index of the intense interest with which Mr. Ramsay Macdonald's work will be watched. Already, we are told, the Chinese are paying far closer attention to British politics than they have ever done before.

The very qualities in the Cabinet which will tend to reassurance of the nation in general may cause grumbling among the Jack Jones's of its own side of the House. But their influence can be exaggerated. The House of Commons has been found to exert a wonderfully steadying influence on the extremists. Those who fail to submit to it like the egregious Sakletvala, soon find themselves outside. Moreover, be it remembered that every party that was ever in power has had its wild men whom the leaders, in order safely to disregard, were first obliged to study. In the main, the Labour Cabinet appears typically British. It is somewhat in the neighbour of a compromise, though with this recommendation that its leaders appear to know exactly what they want to do. "There's the respect must give us pause," or so the [illegible] will say. For some experimentation the nation must be prepared and no doubt it will have to pay for it: though whether, in the long run, it will have to pay more than it has, almost traditionally, done for the experimenting of bygone Governments, is a question which, perhaps, only the angels could answer. Two sentences from Labour leaders' speeches in the past few days may be recalled. From Mr. Thomas, that Labour has been trained in a hard school: and from Mr Macdonald that though Labour has built its ideals on the horizon, it would not jump, but walk, thither. Of both these sayings the new Cabinet seems typical.

LENIN

Jan. 24.

It is probable that, from the death of Lenin, history will date the collapse of Bolshevism. The All-Russian Congress of Soviets may sit to consider how best to carry on his work. But in spite of them all, the indications are that that work was done and over even before he died. A new aristocracy has arisen in Russia, growing out of the revolution as a century ago it grew out of the French, expressing its supremacy and pride in a wealth, luxury and extravagance hardly excelled by the wildest of the old nobility. Class shuts off class. Private trading is once more permissible. The shops vie with each other in display of beautiful and costly things. Money circulates. It is to be admitted that State control continues to exercise its benumbing influence. But the Communism of to-day in Russia is a pallid sham compared with that of three or four years ago and every month the irresistible instincts and practices of human nature must denounce and neutralize more and more of the transient artificiality of its disordered dreams.

On Lenin himself there is no man now capable of pronouncing judgment. Even those of his own race, who should by nature be able to find a key to much in his life and character which is incomprehensible to western peoples, may hesitate to offer a fixed opinion about him. Of the principles which he embodied, history has but one inexorable verdict, that wherever they have been tried they have proved an utter and most calamitous failure, because they are in flat contradiction of the whole constitution and governance of Nature. But of the man himself it is not so easy to be positive. No one who can so long and so irresistibly dominate a vast people like the Russians is to be measured by ordinary standards. None among his fellows came near him in dominance and ability, though they were certainly no fools. That he was a monster of ruthlessness there appears no question: the rivers of blood that had to flow for the accomplishment of his dreams proclaim him that, while, curiously, his physical appearance was wholly incongruous with all the associations that his name conjured up. And yet that he could so persist, in defiance of history, in despite of all the world, in contempt of the glaring misery and anguish that he and his fellows had brought upon Russia, argues something dæmonic in him, if not greatness. And in the long run, however execrated his memory, it may be that his rule will have proved for the betterment of his country. Attila must have been a thousand times more detestable than Lenin, but history calls him the Scourge of God. Had the rule of the Tsars been worth preserving, it must have been preserved: and for the growth of the nation itself, perhaps nothing nalder than the awful harrowing of the past seven years could ever have served. These are speculations which must be left to the future to decide: and with them the final word on the late Dictator and Bolshevist Tsar.

THE POSITION OF THE FRANC

Jan. 25.

Nobody has the prescience to enable him to say where the franc will ultimately stop, whether, as the majority hope, it will return to a normal rate of roughly twenty-five to the pound sterling, or will descend to unprecedented depths, for instance over the hundred mark. In the circumstances one of the world's principal gambles today is in francs, and all the great financial centres are engaged in buying and selling as the sentiment of the market suggests. The result is that in relation to sterling French currency has fluctuated as much as two francs a day, and the disorganization of business has been considerable. When we mention that for a short time past business between China and France in certain important lines has been done on a sterling and not on a franc basis, we realize that francs are now a commodity to be handled carefully. At the same time francs are one of the world's great currencies and bound to play an important part in trade operations, so it is necessary to give close attention to their country of origin, in other words to consider daily the political and financial conditions in which France finds herself. Admittedly this ought to open the largest question with which the world is faced to-day, but after mentioning it with its well-known possibilities and potentialities, we may usefully confine ourselves to effects, the sum total of which has been to bring the franc to its present low level.

In times of peace economists point to the balance of trade as an indication of a country's prosperity, and when favourable the conclusion is for strength in the country's currency. France last year had an adverse trade balance of 1,400,000,000 francs, but this was very small in comparison with 1920, when it was 23,000,000,000. Yet in 1920 the franc fluctuated only from forty-eight to fifty-nine to the pound sterling, as against practically ninety-four to-day. Since that time the pound sterling has improved considerably in relation to the gold dollar, yet the franc is barely more than half its 1920 value in relation to the pound, and is a cause of uneasiness such as even the advent of a Labour Government has failed to impart to British currency. In the meantime we know that France has been working hard and has been able to undersell British manufacturers in their own Home market in certain cases. Yet to-day the financiers and politicians of France have admittedly received a bad shock because the franc has gone so low. They have raised the bank rate by a half per cent., making it six and a half against the London rate of four, this to keep money in the country and to attract funds from elsewhere, but the effect on exchange has been negligible. Now, proposals for very greatly increased taxation have been placed before the Chamber and will doubtless be passed. They will not however come into force until June, but even so the present financial year should see a considerable advance on the amount for which the Government has budgeted in the past. This is all in favour of an improvement in the franc, and moreover it is not at all certain that the French financial position does not balance itself through the instrumentality of invisible imports. The trade balance against the country, as noted above, was 1,400,000,000 francs last year, but this probably does not take into consideration the amount of money brought into France by tourists and other visitors. It is believed that the amount from this source will equalize the deficit mentioned, and if so here is undoubtedly a condition making for the stabilizing of the franc.

If, as we see, economic conditions are equal, possibly actually favourable, we must turn to the political side of the case for the position to-day of the franc. Unhappily it stands out plainly that in the financial markets of the world there is distrust of French policy, and in the unsettled condition of Europe this is working havoc now with the franc and will undoubtedly exercise an influence on it until a settlement is reached. As far back as December 14 the "Financial News" commented upon the failure of the franc to improve on information of the decision to appoint a committee to inquire into Germany's capacity to pay, and in explanation it said:—

"The market appears to be distrustful as to the sincerity of French intentions, and in business circles it is feared that M. Poincaré will not hesitate to stop the inquiry as soon as it comes into collision with his policy. . . . The distrust, although justified by the past attitude of France, is anything but advantageous, as it means trouble half way. It ought not to be forgotten that the mere fact that Germany's capacity to pay is being discussed is well calculated to stimulate optimism and that it is highly essential that the conference of experts should be held in an optimistic atmosphere."

If the "Financial News" is correct M. Poincaré's policy has resulted in the depreciation of the franc to a great extent and the natural inclination of financial centres to speculate in currencies has brought it to its present level. These same business circles are apparently much more interested in the political than the economic position of France, and presumably the franc will now fluctuate more or less in relation to European political sentiment. In this connexion a further point may be noted. A New York banker has laid it down that sterling has to bear in large measure the brunt of falling European currencies and that this is always reflected in the London-New York rate of exchange, so that the future movements of the pound in relation to the dollar must not be considered merely from the point of view of a Labour or any other Government being in power, but almost as much from the condition of the franc.

According to the vernacular press the Shanghai Chinese Bankers' Association is protesting against a loan from certain foreign banks to the Shanghai Mint as, they state, they have made all arrangements for the loan themselves, but are now awaiting Peking's reply as to what will be the security for such a loan.

A PROVINCE UNDER BANDIT SWAY

Honan Completely at the Mercy of Brigands: Populace Terror-stricken

From Our Own Correspondent.

Fukow, Ho., Jan. 11.

That we should have been allowed or have been able to stay on here, in this bandit ridden province, is nothing short of a miracle.

In the spring, you may remember, we had to leave the city for a week, "Old Foreigner," the bandit leader, having passed through shortly after he and his hordes had re-enlisted in the army. It was this man and his followers who looted Fukow in June, 1922, and who carried off so many missionaries in Honan last autumn. After having been made an official. "Old Foreigner" and his gang remained quiet for six months. On refusing, however, to be transferred to another province, he was permitted to return to his evil ways. Soon he was abroad again for plunder. He passed quite close to us, the whole community being frightened out of the their wits.

This event took place just after another band of brigands had taken Sihza, only 20 miles from here, carrying off with them Miss Sharpe and Miss Darroch. As there were grave fears that Fukow would be attacked, we had to leave once again, it actually having been reported to the authorities that we had been taken.

When we were away in the summer, local bandits were very active. They carried off two of our schoolboys, who were not released for some months afterwards. On returning in the autumn all missionaries were again advised by the officials to seek a place of safety. The letter was addressed to all missionaries in Honan. But as no place is safer than another in this province, the missionaries stayed on. Then came the rescue of the Sihza lady missionaries after nearly two months' captivity.

LAO YANG-JEN'S RETURN.

Later.

Last week I was at Hsuchow. Most of the missionaries there had left for Hankow and Chikong. They were gathered in conference from Ruchow, Kiahsien and U-chow, when an official telegram was received saying that Kiahsien, 120 li west of Hsuchow, had been taken by Lao Yang-jen. This proved untrue, but it was a fact that he had returned to his old haunts in the west, so of course, all the neighbouring towns were terrified.

The officials and people here were also terrified. Hundreds of men are employed in digging out the city moat, the city gates have been kept shut, while a strong guard is mounted on the city wall every night. As there are no soldiers in the place and hardly any ammunition, it is pitiable to see the brickbats at each embrasure and pots of quick lime to hurl at any one attempting to climb the wall. Logs of wood and beams are also being placed all round the wall for the same purpose. Outer gates have been built outside each of the four main gates of the city, although it is hard to see what use they can be.

The other night there was considerable alarm, it being reported that the bandits were close at hand. A riderless horse proved to have been the cause of the scare. Yesterday we heard that "Old Foreigner" was near the railway at Linying, coming east so the city gates were shut all day.

Today we learnt from Sihza that that city had had a fright, brigands being quite close to it. On sifting the story it appears that the Shantung brigands under Fan, who carried off the Sihza ladies, have now left the main band under Lao Yang-jen and are returning to their homes in the east. They are only a small band of 300 or so and are taking the back roads, molesting nobody on the road.

Three ying of soldiers have been sent to Chowkiakow. One disquieting feature of the situation, however, is that the civil official cannot be found, as in the case of Sihza and Kiehshan, so the city is left to its self and is a prey to more fears than ever.

A new official has arrived here who seems efficient. He actually is abroad in the middle of the night to make sure that a proper watch is being kept.

It looks like snow to-day, which is much needed. It would do good to the land and also stop the bandits.

KIANGSU AND CHE-KIANG

More Peace Talk at Hangchow

From Our Own Correspondent.

Hangchow, Jan. 17.

The Fukien-Chêkiang agreement for the preservation of peace has not yet been signed, but we hear that will be shortly. Chêkiang and Kiangsu gentry are working hard for the preservation of peace between the two provinces, and we are told that success is assured.

Chang Tso-lin and Wu Pei-fu both have deputies here. At present they are talking over peace plans. Doubtless they have other business, too, of which we so far are ignorant.

At this season of the year when economic pressure is great, local arrangements are being made to see that too great an advantage is not taken of those who possess a little more than they actually need. Offices are being throughout the city for the examination of travellers to make sure that those who have no right to enter are dealt with, and to guard against those going out taking with them that to which they are not entitled.

The Treasury funds, we hear, are very low, and we are told there is nothing for it but to put an extra tax on wine and tobacco.

The Good Roads Association is still working out plans for the future, and we hear that the road from here by way of Tsintamen and the sea-wall as far as Sungkiang is to be undertaken shortly, and finished within two years. Strength to their elbow! We hope that their good intentions will be carried out. Next to peace throughout the country Chinese needs good roads.

ARMS SALES IN MANILA

Manila, Jan. 21.

The arrest of five American soldiers for the alleged theft and sale of Army revolvers has revealed a plot to export arms to Dr. Sun Yat-sen through local Chinese sympathisers.

These thefts have been an almost weekly occurrence for more than a month. Several hundred pistols and also a quantity of dynamite constitute the loot.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

INSECURITIES OF LIFE IN KUEICHOW

News of the Yihyang Maru's Officers: Will Japan Strike? Battle Royal with Bandits for a Country House

From Our Own Correspondent

Kueiyang, Kuei., Dec. 15.

Travelling is difficult and dangerous and some missionary friends who wanted to come into the province have been seriously delayed through the movements of soldiers and bandits. At one centre near the Kueichow border a foreign gentleman saw two Japanese dressed in Chinese garb and detained in prison. In answer to his inquiry he was told that they were from the Japanese steamer that was attacked at Foochow, Sze., and the Chinese officials are hoping that $1,000,000 will be paid for their release.

The same gentleman heard in another quarter that the representatives of the foreign Powers have already assured the Japanese Minister in Peking that if the Chinese show any treachery toward these two men and the Japanese Government want to inflict punishment on the Chinese, the foreign Powers will do nothing to hinder. It is to be hoped that there is some truth in this report, for surely it is high time for the foreign Powers to try and educate Chinese officials and populace alike that it pays better to live as peace-loving citizens with honest occupations, than to give themselves over to thieving in any form.

From the northwest corner of the province comes the news that the people are face to face with famine conditions again through not having sufficient grain for their supply. They are often called upon to leave their homes and belongings at almost a minute's notice and flee to the hills when the robber bands are about, and when they return they find little left, for, in addition to helping themselves, the unbidables destroy what they have no use for.

The following was received from the affected area a little while back and may be of interest to your readers.

"I have just returned from a strange errand. A letter came asking me to go and care for a wounded man some 75 li away. He had been hurt in a robber raid. I went and on the way heard that he had died. My guide informed me that there were others, and sure enough there were. We arrived at the home of a wealthy family about midnight and I soon set to work but did not finish my first round until about 3 a.m. This big house with two stone walls round it was dependent upon a guard of 100 soldiers for protection, and some 45 of them were in the compound when it was attacked at daybreak by a band of 1,000 brigands. The fight continued until noon and the death rate included three of the five sons, three soldiers and one woman. In addition another son was shot through the thigh bone, and 20 or more folk wounded. A reward of $2,000 was offered to the man who first made an entrance and the robbers tried hard to gain it, but they had to give in and leave without gaining their objective. I remained there several days and had to work hard. There were constant alarms that the robbers were returning with a larger band to wipe out their shame, and the members of the family fled into the city. One morning we were all hurried out on to the hillside to hide from band that was surely approaching but nothing happened and we returned. I returned to the city as soon as I could leave the wounded."

Since last writing the Rev. G. and Mrs. Cecil-Smith have returned to this city to resume their connexion with the China Inland Mission. Their friends and well-wishers are very glad to have them here again, and the desire has been expressed that this term of service may be better than former terms.

Communication with the outside world does not improve and the postal authorities are to be congratulated on the way they strive to maintain an efficient service in spite of so many hindrances and difficulties. In this connexion it may not be out of place to say that the report has come through that the Acting-Commissioner, Mr. Cheung Man-ling, has been promoted to the rank of Commissioner and there are very many who hope that the report will be confirmed, for Mr. Cheung is worthy of the promotion.

KUEICHOW GOVERNOR IN MOURNING

Unmannerly Schoolboys: The Case of Dr. Schmalzried: Veteran Missionaries

From Our Own Correspondent.

Kueiyang, Kuei., Dec 21.

The fact that Governor Tang's aged mother had passed away having become officially known, the Governor handed over the Administration to the now Acting-Governor Chang and thus freed himself to perform his duties of mourning. In accordance with custom the tablet supposed to contain the spirit was escorted out of the city by representatives from all classes. It was then that some waiting schoolboys showed their boorishness and lack of knowledge by failing to rise when their mourning Governor passed by. The Governor has formed the laudable project of sending $10,000 to the students in Japan who were sent by this province. So study there. Two pence might be added for manners.

The government of Kueichow is doing its utmost to secure the release of Dr. Schmalzried, recently captured by brigands in the northeast of Kueichow. The story goes that the brigands have a quarrel with some officials there, who, when they knew the brigands were to be enrolled in the army, failed to to give them full recognition. Dr. Schmalzried was devoting his life to the welfare of the inhabitants of that district, but by capturing him the brigands hope to revenge themselves by getting the officials into trouble.

The capture was made possible by the negligence of a military man named Yan Yu-tang who, though he had promised escort for a certain date, nevertheless failed to keep his promise. This man Yang is an ex-bandit chief. To save his own face in the matter he promptly concocted and sent to his superiors in Kueiyang a false report on the whole matter. Being very unpopular throughout the district he has since been removed. (Mr. Schmalzried has been liberated since their was written.—Ed).

Two veteran missionaries in the persons of Rev. and Mrs. G. Cecil-Smith have just returned to this capital city. Having laboured nearly 30 years in these parts people from all grades of society went out to welcome them back.

HANGCHOW STILL QUIET

Diplomas for Pharmacists at C. M. S. College

From Our Own Correspondent.

Hangchow, Jan. 22.

On Saturday there was an interesting ceremony in the Lecture Hall when four chemists received their diplomas from the Church Missionary Society's College of Pharmacy. Dr. Main, handing the diplomas to the graduates, gave them a little sound advice. He advised them, as they held the lives of patients in their hands as much as doctors and nurses, to be careful, faithful, magnanimous, to trust in the Lord and do good, and if they did that, said the Doctor, he would be satisfied and happy about them.

Mr. and Mrs. S. D. Moin and their charming little daughter have just returned after a short furlough in Bonnie Scotland. They look fine and fit. During their absence much executive work has fallen on the shoulders of the doctors, who rejoice at their return.

The sun is shining again and giving the contractors of the new Medical College a fine opportunity to get the roof on.

The city is quiet in spite of rumours that are anything but peaceful.

ANOTHER NEW SECT

Shansi's Long-haired Visionaries: To Effect a Change of Government

From Our Own Correspondent.

Taiku, Sha., Jan. 17.

The native newspapers have reported the growth of a strange "sect" in the southeast of this province. Its propagandists, several tens in number, came from Shantung in the spring of last year, wearing long hair and garments of an ancient pattern. They began preaching in Tunliu-hsien, about 100 miles south of this city. They demanded that their converts sell land and houses and turn the proceeds over to them for the support of "old father and old mother" in Shantung. Many have complied with this suggestion, some even in official and literary circles. High office was promised to the most liberal contributors, lower offices to those who gave less, these promises to be redeemed when a certain change in the government of China takes place.

Up to this time the number of followers gathered is said to be about 8,500. Because of its political character, and also because no accounting was given by the sect of the moneys received, officials in Hsiangyuanhsien and in Chinhsien have driven out the preachers and returned sums collected to the contributors.

The headquarters of the movement are at the village of Yuan-tsun in Tunliu Hsien. The head man, one Wang Sang-feng, is said to be living in rather lordly style in that village and conducting himself generally after the manner of an old-time official. The fact that the meetings of the sect are held in the evening should of itself lead to some suspicion. It is to be hoped the Shansi government will watch this thing carefully.

The Cheng Tai Railway has now altered the schedule of its daily trains so that the expresses connecting with the early afternoon train on the Kin-Han line at Shihchiachuang, the eastern terminus, now run each day instead of twice a week as formerly. This will be a great convenience to travellers.

DIPHTHERIA RIFE.

The scourge of dipatheria in this part of the province continues unchecked and unabated. An effort has been made by several mission hospitals, with the support of the Police Commissioner of the province, who is responsible for sanitary measures and the control of epidemics, to gather statistics as to the number of deaths from this disease, but so far the returns have been rather unsatisfactory. Anyone who is informed as to what is going on, however, knows that the total of deaths from this disease in the last two years in Shansi would reach a startling figure. Surely the time is approaching when the "model province" should undertake some quarantine measures, such as were used so effectively in stamping out the epidemic of pneumonic plague in 1918.

The Salvation Army has just opened a preaching hall in this city. They are now working in four of five of the more important cities of Shansi and are meeting with encouragement everywhere.

The long drought of two and a half months in this part of Shansi was broken by a light fall of snow last night. While the comment of the man in the street today is, "Not enough," this precipitation at least revives hope. Those of your readers who live in regions where rain and snow are frequent can hardly understand what it means here not to have had a drop of rain or snow since the end of October. However, this is unusual even for Shansi.

THE Commissioner of Foreign Affairs in Hunan has requested the Peking Government to forbid foreigners to travel in that province owing to its present chaotic state.

NEWS FROM THE OUTPORTS

IN THE BANDITS' MIDST

Miss Darroch and Miss Sharp Again in Hourly Peril of Being Captured

The following letter has just arrived from Miss Darroch who with Miss Sharp recently spent several days in the bandits' hands. Now, at Sihwa in Honan, they are again in like peril. The letter vividly reveals the intolerably disgraceful state of that province.

Sihuahsien, Jan. 13.

We are again at the bayonets' point. We were roused at 12 p.m. last night by a letter from Chowchiakow. Mr. Brock had a telegram from Mr. Lack that Lao Yang-jen, the robber chief, was near and trying to cross the railway line. To-day we hear he is over and looting near Fukow. Yenling 35 li from Fukow has fallen and some other places. Our people are very scared and say flee! But where? No place is safe. The brigands' great aim is to capture Chowchiakow, and they are very desperate men.

We are dressed ready to leave. If any word comes that they are travelling in this direction, we will simply try to hide in some village, at least that is our idea at present. It presupposes that we will get warning in time to flee.

We do not think we will stay in the city to-night, but sleep in one of the villages, probably about three li from here. It is a trying life, never knowing when these people will sweep down on one, and this Lao Yang-jen is such a terror.

Mr. and Mrs. Bird (C.I.M. missionaries) are in their path. I don't know if Mr. Bird is at home; the last news we heard he was not. I hope Mrs. Bird and Miss Fox will get away safely if they are attacked. One does feel so exasperated with the soldiers: they could do so much but; they would not. They are not anxious to get the robbers. What they want is the loot. One would think this Lao Yang-jen had made plenty of wealth by this time: he might retire now on his ill-gotten gains, but I suppose, as the Chinese proverb says, "Man's heart is never satisfied." And he dares not do anything else.

If he disbanded his bandits, the government would have him right away. The soldiers in this city have no chance to defend it. There are only about 100, and what is that number compared to those who come against us. Our hope is in God. He never fails and we know that "not a single shaft can hit, till the God of Love sees fit." We felt that this was so when we were in their hands before.

THOUGHTS OF DISGUISE.

Sunday evening.

We have arrived here in peace at this hour. I mean we are still in Sihwa. The Evangelist went to the Lieutenant and he says there is no danger and advises us not to flee. He fears if we go there will be a panic in the city. A good many have left already. He says they have not heard if Yenling has fallen. He has sent out spies to a distance of 20 miles but they have not yet returned, so we are staying and taking what fate the gods send us.

Our women have been busy planning disguises for us. If we flee Miss Sharp's is easy, as she is dark with eyes, like what clothes would ever disguise me? Some of them say "go away at the first sound: don't wait till they come. But if we run at every rumour, we would never be here. It is pathetic to see their anxiety that we should not be captured again. I think our own women felt rather bad because we were seized last time. They had saved themselves and left us to our fate, and they want to make up for it this time.

THE BRIGANDS DRAWING NEAR.

Monday, morning.

The news has come that the brigands are only eight li away. We were prepared for flight, but the soldiers would not let us out. So here we are. They hope either to defend the city or give the robbers money and prevent them from coming in. I will give this letter into a native's hand, so that they can post it if we are carried off. I do sincerely hope they won't come in. Of course the city is in terror; where to go for safety no one knows. They enter every single house, so there is no chance of hiding anywhere. I pity the poor Brocks (C.I.M. missionaries) with their three children at home. Chowchiakow is the robbers objective. There are 2,500 soldiers here, but Lao Yang-jen is a very determined man. They have left for Yanchen on the railway.

[A telegram and later letters state that the bandits have moved on and that the ladies are quite safe.—(Ed.)]

DASTARDLY OUTRAGE BY PIRATES

Attack on River Steamer Near Hongkong: Members of Crew Mortally Wounded

Hongkong, Jan. 22.

One of the most dastardly stories of piracy was reported with the arrival last night of the Chinese river-steamer Tailee, which travels between Hongkong and Kongmoon. The Tailee was attacked by pirates off Wangmoon on Sunday night. The No. 1 Chinese boatswain was mortally wounded by a revolver-shot. Captain Willox, whom the pirates dragged from the lavatory, was later found unconscious in a pool of blood.

The pirates, who travelled as first-class and deck passengers, simultaneously obtained control of the whole steamer, having overpowered the six Indian guards, one of whom was mortally wounded and two others seriously wounded. The two latter were taken to hospital on their arrival.

The pirates systematically looted the steamer and carried off a considerable booty in money and jewellery from the passengers, of whom there were about 300 on board, all Chinese.

At the point of revolvers the pirates ordered the Chief Engineer, Mr. Dwyer, off his bed and forced him to proceed to the wheel-house, where, with the Chief Officer, Mr. Fletcher, he was kept a prisoner.

CHINESE PASSENGERS KIDNAPPED.

On arriving at the coast off Tungsai Maling the pirates lowered three of the Tailee's lifeboats, in which they made off to the shore with a large number of the better-class Chinese passengers, whom they intend to hold for ransom.

Report of the occurrence was made at Pakkai on the West River, from which the British gunboat Robin made off to the scene of the outrage. The Robin found no trace of the pirates, but discovered one of the Tailee's empty lifeboats.

The bodies of Captain Willox and the Indian guard have been brought down to Hongkong and the police have taken charge of them.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

ANOTHER FOREIGN PRIEST TAKEN

The Belgian Fathers inform us that a telegram sent at 12.20 p.m. on Tuesday from Kweihsuting, in Shansi, announced that Rev. Frederic Van Peset had been taken by bandits, who carried him away to the surrounding [illegible] of Tolesu. As usual, their terms for his release are to be enrolled in the army.

This Belgian Father has his residence at Tolesu, at a distance of 20 miles from Tokoto (Suiyuan). He has been in China since 1908.

TSINGTAO'S HUGE BEEF EXPORT

More Than Double That of Year Before: Japan's Increasing Appetite

From a Correspondent.

Tsingtao, Jan. 15.

The total value of beef exported from Tsingtao during the year 1923 amounted to some $2,300,000, or an increase of $1,000,000 in comparison with the total value exported during the previous year. The demand resulting from the earthquake calamity of last September in Japan has been responsible for this increased total value to a large extent, with extensive speculations indulged in by Japanese beef dealers contributing a share. Nearly all the beef exported from this port goes to Japan with a very small percentage indeed destined to Shanghai and other points.

The Okura Company are the largest buyers of Shantung beef for Japan and supplied the earthquake area with an enormous amount after the earthquake disaster. This company also supplies beef to the Kure and Yokosuka naval stations.

BEEF REPLACING FISH.

The trade in beef is most brisk in winter as its transportation is easier during this season, the cold weather assisting in keeping the quality intact until the time of delivery in Japan. This winter, the importers in Japan are vying with each other in an endeavour to show an enlarged turnover. Since the earthquake in Japan, beef, especially that imported from Shantung through Tsingtao, has replaced fish as the principal commodity, there being hardly an eating house in Japan that does not use beef as its chief item at present. In view of this increased Japanese consumption, dealers in beef in Shantung have found it difficult to cope with this demand. In the meat markets in Moji and Shimonoseki, the chief Japanese ports importing beef, Shantung beef stands unchallenged. The poor fishing in the neighbouring waters of Shimonoseki, due to the cold weather, aids the marketing of Tsingtao beef in Japan.

From five to six hundred tons of beef are imported into Japan from Tsingtao on every steamer at the present time but the exporters are still clamouring for more space. In order to cope with the increased demand, a Japanese concern is starting to run a service of refrigerator ships, in addition to such well-known vessels engaged in the trade as the Hanamet, Nisshin Maru, Kaio Maru, Shikotan Maru and Hakuai Maru. The Neisei Maru, one of the regular liners, operating between Tsingtao and Japan, will shortly be replaced by a larger steamer, the Harada Maru, which has some refrigeration facilities to offer.

During the winter, the price of beef is higher than in summer time by some 10 to 15 per cent. In summer, some exporters ship live cattle to Japan.

SLAUGHTER HOUSE CHARGES.

The slaughter house here charges $3 per head for slaughtering cattle and $1.75 per head for pigs, which latter are not exported to Japan except in unnoticeable quantities because the Japanese, unlike the Chinese, do not show any preference for pork.

The slaughter house is a Sino-Japanese undertaking, with a capital of $100,000. 46 per cent. of which is Japanese money and the balance Chinese. It is proposed that three months from now the company shall be turned into a public liability company, giving those who are not directly interested in the beef business a chance to participate as shareholders. Of the net profit of the company, 10 per cent. goes to the Chinese authorities who likewise impose an export duty of $1.70 per head.

The Chinese authorities, following the indiscriminate killing of cattle, are now exercising strict control, in an endeavour to stabilize demand and supply.

Formerly, when the Japanese were in possession of the Kiaochow territory, Chinese dealers allowed one month's credit to Japanese exporters, but some unscrupulous Japanese traders did not hesitate to betray the confidence placed in them by the Chinese, with the result that the latter, especially after the Japanese withdrawal, have withdrawn the credit system and now do no business except for cash, with very special exceptions. The Japanese exporters on the other hand are compelled to allow their friends in Japan at least a month's credit. This makes the business very difficult in view of exchange fluctuations, especially at the present time when the value of the yen is so unsteady.

SHANTUNG RAILWAY DISASTER

Nine Burnt to Death: Forty-Seven Injured: $20,000 Damage Done

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tsinanfu, Jan. 19.

The death roll in connexion with the fire on the Shantung Railway, is not so high as was at first reported. At least nine people, however, were burnt to death and 47 were injured, some of these very severely. The injured are said to be in hospitals at Fangtzu, Weihsien and Tsinan. Two third class carriages and a goods waggon were burnt out, the damage being estimated at $20,000 Mex.

The cause of the outbreak, which was at first stated to be defective electric wires, is now said to be carelessness on the part of passengers. Someone threw a lighted match near a supply of methylated spirit. The fire occurred between two and 3 a.m., and witnesses state that they were roused from their sleep to find the carriage a mass of flames. The third class carriages were well-filled so that the panic and the struggles to escape the devouring element must have been frantic. Numbers of passengers climbed through the windows and were injured by their fall to the ground. The train could not be brought quickly to a standstill because there were no communication cords on the train. The train guards, hearing the noise, thought that bandits had boarded the train.

It is not more than two months since a serious fire occurred on a Tientsin-Pukow train. Perhaps this accident will rouse the railway authorities sufficiently to make them provide better fire-fighting apparatus and methods—perhaps not!

We wonder how many railway lines in this country lack that most necessary self-protective device, the communication cord.

BANDIT EXECUTIONS.

During the last few days several public executions of bandits have been held here. One day five miserable men were shot in a very public place. The crowd of sightseers was so great that the temporary execution ground would not hold them. Three spectators were killed through the collapse of a wall.

Evidently the officials think that these spectacles have a deterrent effect on would-be law-breakers. China is still in the dark ages, in spite of this being the 13th year of the Republic.

Peking, Jan. 19.

Five persons were killed and 40 injured in a fire on a train from Tsinan to Tsingtao. The train left Tsinan at 11 on the night of January 17. The fire occurred at two on Friday afternoon between Hutien and Chinglingchen. An accident to electric wires is said to have been the cause. No foreigners are reported to have been injured and no further details have been received.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE OUTRAGE ON THE TZESHUI

How Capt. Brandt Met His Death: Insecurities of Life on Upper Yangtze

From Our Own Correspondent

Chungking, Jan. 7

Last night the Chinese-owned steamer Tzeshui came into port with only the pilot in command and the Captain was missing. They reported that robbers had attacked the ship, murdered Captain Brandt, the steward and one of the compradores. They threw the captain's body into the river.

This morning your correspondent interviewed one of the Chinese passengers who had come up on the Tzeshui. There were no other foreigners on board. This passenger reported that 15 or 16 men armed with revolvers got on the steamer at Wanhsien. They were dressed as ordinary passengers and no one suspected them. Owing to the short days the steamer was not able to make the big city of Fengtu, which would be the usual anchorage and was compelled to anchor opposite the town of Gao Gia Djen which is about 40 li below Fengtu. The ship was anchored across the river from the town.

About 11 o'clock a whistle was heard on the bank and a shot was fired. Instantly the accomplices on board drew their revolvers and forbade anyone to move. Captain Brandt was on the upper deck and he rushed to the side of the boat. When he saw two small boats pushing off from the shore loaded with men he fired on them with his rifle, so this man says. At the same time some of the men already on board rushed on to the top deck, shot him dead, and then threw his body overboard. Sometime during the mêlée the steward was killed and one of the compradores and two other people were wounded.

After the captain had been killed the robbers held every passenger up at the point of the revolver and relieved them of all money and valuables. They went ashore with all they could get and disappeared. This passenger stat that he does not think that the whole affair took more than 20 minutes.

MORE BANDIT OUTRAGES.

Captain Brandt has many friends in this port and along the river as he was one of the captains who had been longest on this run, if not the longest. He was with Capt. Plant and took over the Shuhun from him and was her captain in the days when she was the Queen of the Upper River. He ran her on a regular timetable for a long time and one knew almost the exact time to expect her at any port.

This incident occurred some distance from any large city but things are no better here right under the noses of Yang Sen's army. On New Year's night we heard sounds of firing but did not know where it was. The next day we found out that a party of bandits had attacked the home of a well-to-do Chinese family just across the river from the city and right next door to the Canadian School for Foreign Children.

Several shots came close to the homes of foreigners in that vicinity. The bandits entered this home and took out one little lad but he was not the one wanted so they went back and took two more so as to be sure to get the right one. Later they left one boy by the road and he was found next morning. The boy carried off was a little chap, only nine years old and suffering from whooping cough. He is the only son of a widow and is heir to quite a large estate.

Gen. Ma Chi, a leading Kuangsi leader now giving his support to Marshal Wu Pei-fu in Hunan, is reported by the Kuo Wen News Agency to have sent one of his commanders, Lu Chen, to Shanghai to approach a foreign firm in connexion with the purchase of arms and ammunition for his army.

THE GOING ROUND AND ROUND OF LAMAISM

And the Tibetan's Trinity: The Art of Successful Meditation

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tachienlu, Sze., Dec. 17.

The biggest word in Lamaistic nomenclature is circumambulation the philosophy and simplicity of simply going round and round some inanimate holy object. Some religions are comparative, Lamaism is entirely and completely round. The devotee of this mystic system spends his life on earth going round something and turning round, and his life in Hades continues the unending movement the Wheel of Transmigration. The poor Tibetan, morning, noon, and night with hands and feet and brain is eternally going round and round. He walks round sepulchres, cenotaphs, and holy symbols: he walks round stone heaps, temples and mountains: he will patiently and laboriously and persistently circumambulate any and every holy object and while doing so manipulate his rosary in one hand and turn his prayer wheel in the other. Whoever invented and perpetuated this form of religion bequeathed to the inhabitants on the Roof of the World a system at once so simple and ingenious, so satisfying and accommodating, so free from hypothesis and argument that the Tibetan have adopted it en masse and now spend the greater part of their lives walking round some sacred edifice, firmly believing the more they go round in this life the less they will go round in the next.

Imagine Dean Inge spending 40 years walking round St. Paul's Cathedral, or Bishop Tucker passing his days circumambulating Lake Chad. If it were not so absolutely serious and so pathetically hopeless, this whole system would seem utterly ridiculous. There is a wealthy Tibetan temple in Tachienlu, situated quite near the river side. An old man nearly 70 and an old woman just about the same age, spend their days walking round this building. The old man's lips mumble "Omnipadmehum," the old man's hand turns "Omnipadmehum," and the old man's legs walk round "Omnipadmehum." We occasionally meet him and he smiles but keeps on forever going round and round. His rosary tells him how many times he has prayed and how often he has circumambulated the holy temple.

The Lama walks round the sacred building, the nomad goes round the venerable pile of stones, the merchant circumambulates the solemn mountain. Circumambulation is considered one of the most meritorious and indispenable duties in the Lamaistic religion and is performed sometime, somewhere by everybody in the Forbidden Land. The Lama has no more ardent wish than to be finally released from this perpetual going round or wandering of the soul, and to successfully escape from metempsychosis is to enter that state of pure bliss known as Nirvana. And the devotee firmly believes that by assiduously going round in this life he assuredly decreases the painful going round in the next.

CONTEMPLATION.

The next word in the Lamaistic nomenclature is contemplation. Circumambulation is a general exercise—contemplation is a particular devotion. Circumambulation is performed by the crowd—contemplation is the lonely vigil. Circumambulation calls for no concentration—contemplation demands intense cogitation. The nomad may circumambulate, only the Lama can contemplate. The simple meaning of the word is to "look" and involves an act of the mind or will. Apparently the Lama can look in different ways and contemplation is no doubt the "holy look." He has, however, a number of other "looks" enumerated as follows: the elephant's look, the lion's look, the magic look, the attracting look, the repulsive look, the precipitating look, the paralyzing look, the mild look, the powerful look, and the striding look. Contemplation implies none of these. It is the steady fixed look or gaze on some holy object, image or symbol. The Lama, within the confines of his own private apartment, sitting à la Buddha, places on a low table before him the image of some saint. In front of this and with his mind firmly fixed upon it he will sit in contemplation for hours, days, months, years. There is the story told of a Lama who for 34 years retained his vows as an anchorite. During that long time he sat with an image of Buddha in front of him. At the end of that long time, it is said his features became like unto the picture he gazed at.

MEDITATION.

The third word in this mystic system is meditation. This takes us a step higher than contemplation and involves separation from the world, friends and earthly pleasures. Meditation implies and demands a very high type of scholarship. If the Lama gives himself to meditation and presupposes, he has something to meditate upon. This form of devotion is indulged in only by the highly educated priest. The Lama who would meditate has in his stomach (the repertory of learning) a complete knowledge of all the sacred books and writings. With his extensive store of wisdom he devotes himself to intensive rumination and this, in its simplest form, is meditation. Contemplation demands the concentration of the eye on some holy object; meditation requires the determination of the mind on some sacred subject. To avoid mere wool-gathering, effective meditation assumes three things: first, clarity. If the Lama is to get anywhere in his meditation it must be characterized by clearness. Secondly, there must be firmness, there must be decision in thinking along certain lines, otherwise nothing will be accomplished. Thirdly, there must be absolute freedom from distraction. This is perhaps the most important thing in successful meditation. It may also account for the lonely situation of many of the Tibetan temples. In his sequestered cell, perhaps some cave along the mountains, far removed from the haunts of men, the gloomy Lama sits in silent, solitary, vigil. He may be daily and assiduously repeating the Omé formula or simply following Lord Riddell's advice on concentration. It is difficult to find out as the Lama generally sits alone in his secluded cell. His hands are clasped in prayer. In the intensity of the meditation he forgets food, comfort, cold, home, friends, everything but the theme that occupies his mind. Ecstacy or frenzy may now take possession of him, ecstasy because the mind has revelled in some satisfying soliloquy, frenzy, because the power of meditation has surrounded him with the object of his desire. When his soul is filled with sweetness and his cell with demons his weary vigil ends in the accomplishment so dear to the Lama, namely, "the grasping of the intangible." This appears to be the summum bonum of lamaism—the acquisition of the spiritual and the realization of Nirvana. To attain these he will labour, watch and pray.

THE SPIRITUAL SIDE OF LAMAISM.

Realization is the last word in lamaistic nomenclature. After long years of weary circumambulation, steady contemplation, holy meditation, the Lama believes that he has attained or accomplished something. In all these three forms of devotion he has applied himself persistently and patiently and what has he gained? By his own efforts he has triumphantly escaped the torments of Hades: by his own virtues he has successfully assured himself of the pleasures of heaven. In popular, every day Lama language, hades and heaven, reward and punishment, failure and attainment, play a very large and important part. This, however, touches lamaism closely on its temporal side. In its spiritual and philosophical aspect lamaism reaches very high. Successful circumambulation, contemplation and meditation end in the realization or appropriation of three things. First, there is the idea of rendering a god subject to human power, forcing him to perform the will of man. The coercion of a god is effected in two ways—the common people perform a vast amount of prayers and conjurations intended for the god that is to be made subject. Secondly, the ability after a long, arduous and painful process to change or transform oneself into something different. This is considered the highest acquisition of any man, that by his own efforts and holiness has assumed or attained divine nature. He is still, however, in the flesh and capable of eating, drinking and sleeping, and will continue to do so until he has been absorbed into that blessed state of nothingness. The third and last attainment, whether by circumambulation, contemplation or meditation, is the complete annihilation of every known and unknown enemy, spiritual, physical and temporal, past, present and future. Passion, pleasure, pain, as enemies obstructing the path to the realization of his highest aspirations have all been overcome and subdued and the Lama now sits in perfect bliss with one step between him and Nirvana—nothingness. Thus we find in popular lamaism these three forms of worship—circumambulation, contemplation and meditation, followed by three attainments, namely, coercion of the gods, acquisition of divine nature, and the subjugation of every hindering influence in the path that leads to the Lama's goal. And John answered him saying, "Master, we saw one casting out devils." So the devils besought him, saying, "If thou cast us out, suffer us to go away into the herd of swine."

"Rejoice not, that the spirits are subject unto you: but rather rejoice, because your names are written in heaven."

And the 70 returned again with joy, saying, "Lord, even the devils are subject unto us through thy name."

WHY?

In this dark, closed, forbidden land, the lonely Lama sits in solitude; in the mud-built gloomy temple, they sit in thousands; the solitary traveller wends his weary way across the snow bound mountain pass; the mendicant, encumbered with his charms and talismans, trudges day by day along the endless, barren plateau. And if you ask the simple question, "Why?" the artless answer is: "Devils confront me and surround me wherever I go, I want power to subdue and overcome them; lamaism tells me that hades is a place of torture and torment, from that I wish to escape; heaven, the Buddha's Elysium is a place of perfect rest and peace, I want to get there. If circumambulation or suffering, if contemplation or seclusion, if meditation or hardship can assist me in the accomplishment of my desires, I will endure anything and everything for them."

Y. M. C. A.'S NEW BUILDING AT KOWLOON

Hongkong, Jan. 22.

The Governor yesterday evening laid the foundation stone of the new Y.M.C.A. building at Kowloon. It is estimated that construction will cost $300,000.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

NEW HONGKONG COMPANY

Hongkong, Jan. 21.

A new company called the China Underwriters, Ld., with a capital of $5,000,000, has been incorporated under the management of Messrs. Shewan, Tomes and Company.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

THE Chinese press reports that there are at present in China more than 60,000 Russian refugees.

UNLOVED SOLDIERS OF JAPAN

Young Husbands Must be Civilians but Marriage Now Becoming a Romantic Adventure

From Our Own Correspondent.

Tokio, Jan. 10.

The marriage-desiring sons and daughters of Japan still continue to turn down the soldier and sailor, and the fascination of uniforms, shining brass buttons and gold braid still fails to have any extraordinary attraction for the younger generation as was the case in the few years immediately preceding the earthquake.

Time was when the soldier and the sailor were gods. Maidens hankered after young men belonging to the fighting professions, while young men who had decided to enter into the bonds of matrimony eagerly scanned the horizon of their acquaintance to discover a girl whose parents had some connexion with the Army or the Navy or at least some of her relatives.

Things have changed considerably. The earthquake and its aftermath, when uniformed men stepped into the limelight for a considerable period, it was hoped, would tend to veer the thoughts of the young folks once again towards the fighting professions when it came to seeking life partners. The expectation has proved a mirage. The soldier or sailor continues to be as unwelcome, as a husband, as in pre-earthquake days.

It is difficult to assign a reason offhand for this. Girls generally maintain that a husband of the Tommy Atkins or Jack Tar variety tries to maintain a species of discipline akin to the barrack-room or to the forecastle in the home and that, therefore, such men are very undesirable as home-building companions. Then, again, there is the very important matter of emoluments to be considered. The soldier and the sailor in Japan get a farcical wage, the private's monthly income being such as is insufficient to keep him in a decent brand of cigarettes for a fortnight. Patriotic considerations melt like dew before the morning sun when one has to consider the difficulties of running a household on a meagre salary, and this inelasticity in the pay envelopes of the Services, perhaps, has most to do with the young ladies of Japan turning up their noses at a naval or military man who does not happen to have a fair private income.

On the part of the young men who are not over-anxious to wed the daughters of soldiers of sailors, it is maintained that the reason for this dislike is because the parents-in-law are unduly strict on the son-in-law and that this generally leads to differences that mar domestic harmony and felicity.

OLD, LOVELESS MARRIAGE DOOMED.

The loveless marriages, in which go-betweens figure more than the principals, which is the generally accepted view of wedlock in Japan and in which ceremony and gaudy clothes mark the first chapter of married life and the end of romance in the greatest adventure of one's life, are becoming fast extinct in Japan to-day. Go-betweens still have their part to do, but the young man or the marriage-seeking lass gives the go-between sufficient knowledge to tell on whom affection has been centred. This is the case in the cities to a large extent, though in the countryside the prosaic and loveless "arranged marriages" system is still the vogue.

The sweep of Western customs in the cities has brought about the death of the system whereby children are betrothed in their infancy and parental and family commands compel them to obey the arrangements made by their elders. In fact, many a Japanese young lady staunchly refuses to enter into a marriage with the young man selected for her without her consent or her knowledge, and it needs considerable spunk and bravery for a Japanese maiden to thus set at defiance the cherished institutions of old.

One of the chief results brought about by the inrush of Occidental ideas into the realms of marriage and the heart has been the establishment of Marriage Bureaus fashioned on Western models. There have been quite a number of these marriage bureaus, but the majority of them, especially after the earthquake, have proved to be of a suspicious nature, thriving only on the sanctity of their signboards, and publicists, known to the public, have stepped into the breach to put affairs on a more satisfactory footing.

CONGENTIAL CONSIDERATIONS.

Accordingly, the Society of Social Education, a Japanese organization, has added to its many duties that of bringing love into a loveless life, and has just announced the opening of a marriage agency. The eligibility of a person for membership rests on he or she being single and of sound health without any malady or defect such as would mar married life. To back these requirements, the applicant, when seeking membership, must add to the application a doctor's certificate, a copy of the family connexions from the Registrar's office and the conditions under which he or she desires to marry.

The conditions demanded by would-be grooms and brides are chiefly interesting for two reasons: one, the patent disinclination to form an alliance with the fighting services; and the other, a desire to marry a person who belongs to an occupation that looks "respectable" in public. These occupations generally are that the person in question should be an employee of a shop or of a doctor's office. In this case the inelasticity of the pay envelope is not regarded as of much account, as the "respectability" of the job makes up for this defect. But as for marrying, say, a chauffeur or a skilled labourer who makes far more than the Western-style-tailored shop assistant, why, certainly not!

JAPANESE MINISTRY TOTTERING

Cabinet Unable to Survive Despite Seiyukai Split

Tokio, Jan. 22.

The reconvening of the Diet today after the holidays recess took place under unprecedented conditions. The attitude of the Lower House is hostile towards the new Cabinet, which appears to be doomed in advance to overwhelming defeat by a combination of the leading parties and factions. Exactly when the coup de grace will be delivered has not yet been decided, but a vote on a resolution of lack of confidence will be reached after the Imperial wedding on January 26.

Throughout the past week Viscount Kiyoura and his followers successfully split the Seiyukai Party, over 100 members of which seceded and organized a new party called the "Shinsei," which is expected to muster equal to the remaining Seiyukai strength. But the Kenseikai and other parties are able to muster about 170 which, it is confidently expected, will be the minimum majority on the vote of lack of confidence.

Some political wiseacres predict that the Premier will resort to dissolution before the vote is reached.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

Tokio, Jan. 23.

As a result of an emergency meeting to-day, the leaders of the Seiyukai Party have decided to resign en bloc and have tendered their resignation to Viscount Takahashi, President of the Party.—Eastern News Agency.

THE officer to succeed Major-Gen. Sir Neill Malcolm, when he retires from the command of the Straits Settlements early in the year, is Gen. James Ronald Edmonston Charles, C.B., C.M.G., D.S.O., R.E., says a Singapore paper.

FIGHTING FAMINE IN CHINA

Admirable Work of the Chinese-Foreign Relief Committee in Past Year

The Chinese-Foreign Famine Relief Committee has issued its report of money received and expended and work done between October 1, 1922, and September 30, 1923. In these 12 months the Committee handed over $1,983 and with every penny accounted for they have a vast amount of good work to their credit. They began their next financial year with a balance in hand of $205,986. The following are some of the most interesting items of the report.

CHINHAI SEA WALL.

Two years ago our Board granted the sum of $86,000 to our Ningpo Committee to assist in repairing this wall, which protects Ningpo and the surrounding districts from inroads of the sea with its attending loss of crops, and famine. The people of the district raised a further $64,000, and the work was efficiently carried out, although there is still a further stretch of earth-dike requiring attention. A ceremony to mark the completion of the repairs to this old historic and essentially practical stone-wall was held at Chinhai on August 5, 1923, and was attended by representatives from the Governors at Hangchow as well as other officials, by Taoyin Wong Yee-tse of Ningpo and Mr. F. W. Carey and others from our Ningpo Committee, and by Messrs. Wang I-ding, Yuan Li-tung, Chang Yie-tsing, Chen Liang-yu, W. E. Souter and F. C. Zung from our Board. Great credit must be given to the Chinhai Association and our Ningpo Committee on whose direct initiative this most effective bit of work was undertaken and in the carrying out of which our Board is glad to have had a large share.

PREVENTION-WORK IN CHEKIANG.

It is a sine qua non of famine distribution that, following such necessary work for the saving of life, there be the collection of data relating to possible constructional work to be undertaken, to, so far as possible, prevent a recurrence of famine in the same areas. In the case of this disastrous flood and famine in Chêkiang it is well-nigh impossible for our Board, with its limited resources, to do any more than initiate investigation work, and that only in a comparatively small part of the province. Yet the work we have done in the Tsao-ngo River covers a large area, and if the investigations conducted lead to constructive efforts by the people of Chêkiang, it will prove of lasting benefit to the whole province as well as preventing famine in the direct area affected. On the initative of Mr. F. W. Carey, Commissioner of Customs, Ningpo, and Taoyin Wong Yee-tse, the Chairman of our Ningpo Sub-Committee, and by the kindness of the Whangpoo Conservancy Board, Mr. H. von Heidenstam, engineer-in-chief of that Board, has undertaken surveys right along the Tsao-ngo River basin. Mr. von Heidenstam and his engineers and surveyors have put in an immense amount of work and have produced a full report, too long to give here, but it is a much-valued contribution to the study of famine prevention in that large area. Nor must we omit to mention the work undertaken by Mr. C. F. Rhodin, an expert on reafforestation who was specially engaged by the Ningpo sub-Committee to make a reconnaissance trip through the area. In a most interesting report which he has compiled, giving details of his journey, he urges most strongly the necessity for reafforestation of the denuded hills of the interior as a preventive measure. We hope to publish these reports in full and give them the widest publicity in both Chinese and English, with a view of obtaining a large measure of public support for these necessary prevention measures. The thanks of our Board is extended to our Ningpo Committee, and to Mr. Von Heidenstam and the Whangpoo Conservancy Board, for this very material help in our prevention-work.

OUTLINE OF PREVENTION WORK.

The prevention-work outlined by our Hangchow International Famine Relief Committee is a scheme for the deepening of the South Lake, Yuchang, a great reservoir built in ancient times to relieve the plains of North Chêkiang from the floods from the mountain streams. This work will materially benefit the following districts: Kashing, Tunghiang, Tehtsim, Tsongtch, Wukang, Wuhsin and Yuhang. Our Hangchow Committee has already interested the Government and gentry in the proposal and got their approval, the Military Governor having visited the reservoir and promised his full support. Our Hangchow International Famine Relief Committee propose that, in the joint Committee to be formed for this work representative of the Government, the provincial Conservancy Bureau, and the local gentry, together with our Hangchow International Famine Relief Committee, they be adequately represented and have power to audit all accounts. The whole scheme is expected to cost about $400,000 of which our International Famine Relief Committee will put in approximately $80,000.

Expert reports from competent conservancy engineers and others will be published giving the widest publicity to the suggested prevention measures for all Chêkiang.

We trust that not only the people of Chêkikang but others interested in work of such far-reaching consequences will join with us in promoting the skilled recommendations thus placed before us, the execution of which will go a long way towards making the Chêkiang province free from flood and famine.

This is one of the world's biggest conservancy schemes for prevention of famines, a large increase in the rice production of the world, greater trade prosperity, and the providing of educational facilities for the masses of China.

We have a special Board at work on this large and important prevention scheme, and estimates (covering a period of from 18 months to two years) for a competent engineering survey and investigation in the Hai Valley have been prepared; while we have collected plans and available data from the various governmental and other sources in the three affected provinces of Kiangsu, Anhui, and Honan, so that as much material as possible may be at disposal of the engineers undertaking the survey and investigation work.

The Pan-Pacific Commercial Conference in session at Honolulu on November 3, 1922, endorsed this Huai Valley Conservancy project as of "vital importance in the conserving and developing of the enormous potential food supplies of China with its bearing on the world rice situation," and the attention of the Government of China and all governments interested in Pacific problems was invited to the governmental authorities of the three provinces concerned, viz., Anhui, Kiangsu and Honan, headed by Marshal Chi Shih-yuan, Inspector-General for Kiangsu, Anhui and Kiangsi provinces, are strongly urging that this work be commenced without further delay.

The large financial and general interest taken by the government and people of the United States of America in famine relief work in China forms a natural relationship when it comes to a discussion of ways and means for financing a great famine prevention project like the Huai Conservancy scheme. Therefore, when a member of the U. S. A. Congress, on a visit to China, raised the question of the best use of the unexpended portion of the American Boxer Indemnity money, should the American Government remit this payment, there was given a strong expression of opinion from both influential Chinese and foreigners that our Huai Project afforded "the best opportunity of lasting service to the Chinese people;" and service of this kind would be in keeping with the spirit of the American people in remitting this money back to China. We have accordingly submitted a proposal for the use of the Boxer Indemnity in which we suggest that the money form a revolving fund, under sufficient guarantees, for the carrying through the Huai Conservancy Project and other similar prevention schemes in North and South China. In presenting this proposal to the U. S. A. Government at Washington we are fortunate in having as our personal representative there Mr. George A. Fitch, a member of our Huai Conservancy Board, who, in addition to many interviews at Washington and elsewhere, has also undertaken general publicity work for the projects in the U. S. A. Mr. Fitch has been ably assisted, for part of the time, by Mr. O. J. Todd, an engineer well known for his effective work in China and who is conversant with and very much interested in the Huai Valley Conservancy Scheme. Mr. Todd is now giving his whole time to our China International Famine Relief Commission as their engineering representative.

MILLIONS ON STARVATION'S EDGE.

In the three provinces of Kiangsu, Anhui and Honan there are millions of people just living or existing from hand to mouth; and great sufferings oof the people from ever-recurring floods and famines are too well known: indeed, we have almost got so accustomed to hearing of intense suffering and deaths from famine that now famine-relief appeals are not meeting with much response. It will, however, always be necessary in times of emergency to call for help for famine-relief, and we know that there is always a heart of the general public of all lands responsive to help in drawing men, women, and children "out of the jaws of death." Yet it would be to allow these preventable famine conditions in the Huai Valley to continue without exerting every effort to regulate and control the Huai River. In the last famine of two years ago 62,000,000 mow of land was inundated in the Huai River area, resulting in a loss of rice-production amounting to over $613,000,000 (Mex.). Furthermore this reclamation scheme in the Huai Valley would bring under cultivation an additional 50,000,000 mow of land, capable of producing rice to the value of $375,000,000 (Mex.).

The Annual Meeting

The International Famine Relief Commission has just completed its annual sessions, adjourning on Wednesday evening, after having been continued through Monday and Tuesday. Officers for the ensuing year were elected, as follows:—President—H. E. M. T. Liang, Vice-President—Dr. Gray, Treasurers—Admiral Tsai Ting-kan and Mr. J. E. Baker of the Ministry of Communications. The Secretary is Mr. W. H. Mallory and the office of the Commission is in Peking.

Detailed reports of the societies and their activities and work done during the year were brought in and introduced into record. The main business of the meeting just concluded was, however, the formation and adoption of amendments to the constitution, all of which were designed to add to the cooperation of its members and to speed up facilities for relief work where most urgently needed.

JAPANESE CAPTIVES FROM YIYANG MARU

Peking, Jan. 21.

According to Chinese reports the Japanese Minister has again made representations to the Waichiaopu urging that delegates be sent to Szechuan to procure the release of the two Japanese officers belonging to the Yiyang Maru who were captured by the Szechuan Army.—Reuter's Pacific Service.

DAME ANDERSON AT NINGPO

The Difficult Problem of the Welfare Worker in China

From Our Own Correspondent.

Ningpo, Jan. 16.

